This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

[a] (U. S. 1887) The United States circuit court in one district has power, under rule 78 in equity, regulating the summoning of witnesses, to issue a subpœna requiring a person living in that district to appear and testify before an examiner, or before a master appointed in another circuit, and who is discharging the duties of his office in the former district, and may also, under that rule, punish the witness for refusing to obey the subpœna.—In re Steward (C. C.) 29 Fed. 813.

[b] (U. S. 1888) The power of a United States district court cannot be invoked to secure, by its subpœna, the attendance of a witness before a special examiner of the pension bureau in the matter of a pension claim.—In re McLean (D. C.) 37 Fed. 648.

[c] (Cal. 1887) The supreme court of California will not issue a writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the superior court to issue a subpœna to a witness to appear, and testify before a register and receiver of the United States land-office, as Code Civ. Proc. § 1986, subd. 3, regulating the issuing of subpœnas to a witness to appear before a commissioner appointed by a court of a foreign country or another state, does not apply to a United States land-office, located and doing business in California.—Boom v. De Haven, 72 Cal. 280, 13 Pac. 694.

[d] (Mass. 1886) The supreme court or a justice thereof under St. 1883, c. 195, has a discretionary power to compel a witness to testify before a committee of city councils, but will not make such an order where the witness has become defendant in an action brought against him by the city in the same matter.—In re Osborne, 141 Mass. 307, 4 N. E. 618.

[e] (Mo. 1894) Under Rev. St. § 8927, a justice of the peace has authority to issue a subpœna for the attendance of a witness at a trial in a court of record in his county.—McHoney v. Kerwin, 56 Mo. App. 459.

[f] (N. Y. 1878) Laws 1844, c. 152, provided for the construction of a penitentiary in the county of Albany, and that the management thereof should be under the control of the board of supervisors of the county, and the mayor and recorder of the city of Albany, who were authorized to make all laws as to the regulation and government thereof as they should deem expedient. At a joint meeting of the supervisors of the county and the mayor and recorder of the city, a committee was appointed consisting of five supervisors, the mayor, and recorder, charged with an investigation as to the effect of convict labor, and authorized to send for persons and papers and take evidence under oath. An application for attachment against the superintendent of the penitentiary to compel him to give evidence and produce his books before the committee was made under 1 Rev. St. (6th Ed.) pp. 879–880, providing for examination by the board of supervisors of any county of any county officer on matters within the jurisdiction of the board. Held, that the application must fail because no committee of "the board of supervisors" appointed by the board, or any committee consisting of supervisors only, had required the witness' attendance before it.—In re Pilsbury, 56 How. Prac. 290.

[g] (N. C. 1802) A witness may be summoned to testify in equity as well as at law.—Mourning v. Davis, 3 N. C. 219.

[h] (Ohio, 1887) Rev. St. § 1686, empowering the committee of either branch of a city council to compel the attendance of witnesses in the investigation of charges against officers, does not authorize one branch of the council to investigate, but the whole council must first provide by ordinance for such investigation before a witness can be compelled to attend.—Muhlhauser v. Morgan, 10 Ohio Dec. 90, 18 Wkly. Law Bul. 340.

[i] (Pa. 1876) The courts of oyer and terminer and of quarter sessions of any county may award subpœnas and attachments for witnesses in any part of the state for execution by the sheriff of the county in which they are awarded, and may compel the attendance of such witnesses on the trial of any criminal proceeding before such courts.—Kirkendall v. Luzerne County, 33 Leg. Int. 313.

[j] (Pa. 1881) An objection by a witness who appeared on subpœna before a subcommittee of the finance committee of councils, which was investigating a default by the city treasurer, under Act June 1, 1885, that the power to issue subpœnas was vested in councils, is of no avail when the witness appeared in obedience to the subpœna.—In re Yard, 48 Leg. Int. 288.

[k] (Pa. 1892) Where persons have been appointed commissioners to take the testimony of witnesses in Pennsylvania by a court of another state, but the witnesses refuse to answer, the court of common pleas will order the commissioners to issue subpœnas for the witnesses, and, if they fail to obey these, to issue attachments directed to the sheriff to compel their attendance.—In re Robb (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 298.

Right of accused to witnesses on preliminary examination, see "Criminal Law," vol. 14, cc. 1118, 1119, § 480.

[a] (U. S. 1807) Any person charged with a crime in the courts of the United States has a right, before as well as after indictment, to the process of the court to compel the attendance of his witnesses.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[b] (U. S. 1870) It is the duty of the court, on application of the prisoner, showing that he is unable to send for his witnesses, to summon them at the expense of the government.—United States v. Kenneally, Fed. Cas. No. 15,522 [5 Biss. 122].

[c] (U. S. 1891) Rev. St. § 878, authorizing a judge to order witnesses to be subpœnaed in behalf of an indicted indigent person, gives no authority to order subpœnas for one against whom a bill of indictment is pending before a grand jury.—United States v. Stewart (D. C.) 44 Fed. 483.

[d] (Fla. 1893) An application under Rev. St. § 2868, for the procurement of witnesses at the cost of the state, by one charged with crime, should be made at the earliest reasonable opportunity, and not withheld until the cause is called for trial.—Jenkins v. State, 31 Fla. 190, 12 South. 680.

[e] (Fla. 1893) Under Rev. St. § 2868, prescribing the requisites to be complied with by one charged with crime upon application for the procurement of witnesses at the cost of the state, a sound judicial discretion is reposed in the trial judge to decide whether the statutory requisites have been properly complied with, and as to the bona fides of the application.—Jenkins v. State, 31 Fla. 190, 12 South. 680.

[f] (Idaho, 1896) To entitle a defendant to the benefit of Rev. St. § 8151, as amended by Laws 1893, relating to payment of expenses of the defense by the state, there must be a strict compliance with the section; and the necessity and materiality of witnesses desired by defendant must be shown before a subpœna will be issued, or any expense incurred will be charged to the county.—State v. Godard, 4 Idaho, 750, 44 Pac. 643.

[g] (Mass. 1816) In capital trials defendant's witnesses may be summoned at the expense of the state; but this is not done in cases not capital.—Commonwealth v. Williams, 13 Mass. 501.

[h] (N. H. 1874) An accused is allowed the process of the state to compel the attendance of his witnesses only in a capital case, and not even in such a case unless he is poor and unable to furnish the witnesses himself.—State v. Archer, 54 N. H. 465.

[i] (S. C. 1796) A witness may be compelled by a subpœna to attend to give testimony of the extenuating circumstances attending the assault, to the court, before the passing of the sentence, where a party has been indicted for an assault and battery and pleaded not guilty.—State v. Smith, 2 Bay, 62.

[j] (S. C. 1894) Gen. St. § 835, giving the accused in felony cases the same process as the state to compel the attendance of witnesses, is not restricted to capital felonies.—Eustace v. Greenville County, 42 S. C. 190, 20 S. E. 88.

[k] (Wash. 1893) The constitutional right to have compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses does not apply to a preliminary examination.—State v. Grimes, 7 Wash. 445, 35 Pac. 361.

[l] (Wyo. 1895) On the hearing of the application for admission to bail by one under indictment for murder in the first degree, to determine whether the proof is evident or the presumption great, both parties are entitled to compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses.—State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681.

[a] (Ark. 1887) Cr. Code, § 190, makes applicable to prosecutions the provisions as to continuances in civil cases. Civ. Code, § 340, as amended by act March 5, 1879, provides for the refusal of a continuance on the admission by the adverse party that the absent witnesses, if present, would testify to the statement contained in the application. Held, that the statute denies the accused the right granted by Const. art. 2, § 10, of compulsory process for witnesses in his favor, and is unconstitutional.—Graham v. State, 50 Ark. 161, 6 S. W. 721.

[b] (Fla. 1893) Rev. St. § 2868, prescribing the requisites to be complied with by the parties charged with crime in applications for the procurement of witnesses at the cost of the state, is a proper legislative regulation of the right given by the constitution to one accused of crime to have "compulsory process for the attendance of witnesses in his favor."—Jenkins v. State, 31 Fla. 190, 12 South. 680.

[c] (Tex. 1884) The bill of rights guaranties to persons charged with crime compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in their favor. Held, that Code Cr. Proc. arts. 488, 489, regulating the matter, is not so repealed or modified by Act April 23, 1883, as to give the court a discretion if the application is made in term, the only object of the act of 1883 being to provide for the payment of the expense.—Roddy v. State, 16 Tex. App. 502.

[a] (U. S. 1895) The court allowed 15 witnesses for defendant to be summoned at government expense, and disallowed 10, of whom 2 were already summoned, 7 were the wives of witnesses whom the court ordered summoned (the affidavit stating that the husband and wife were relied on to prove the same fact), and 1 was relied on merely to corroborate the testimony of other witnesses. Held, that the action of the court was proper.—Goldsby v. United States, 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. Ct. 216, 40 L. Ed. 343.

[b] (Ark. 1894) Defendant was indicted for murder, and applied to the clerk for subpœnas for 18 witnesses, which were refused on account of a rule of court prohibiting the issuing of more than 5 subpœnas without an order of court, obtainable on application showing the materiality of the witnesses. Application for an order was afterwards made, and refused on the ground that it did not show that the witnesses were material. Held that, though the rule was in violation of defendant's constitutional right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses, yet, where it does not appear that an application for a continuance was made, nor that defendant was prejudiced, it is not ground for reversal.—Aikin v. State, 58 Ark. 544, 25 S. W. 840.

[c] (Idaho, 1894) Under Rev. St. § 8151, as amended by 2 Sess. Laws, p. 20, providing that when a defendant in a criminal case requires more than five witnesses he must make an affidavit that they are material to his defense, the affidavit must state what defendant expects to prove by such witnesses.—De Lano v. Logan County, 4 Idaho, 83, 35 Pac. 841.

[d] (Mo. 1893) Under Const. art. 2, § 22, providing that an "accused shall have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf," a rule of court limiting to 15 the number of subpœnas for witnesses to which one accused of murder is entitled as of right is void.—State v. Gideon, 119 Mo. 94, 24 S. W. 748, 41 Am. St. Rep. 634.

[e] (Mont. 1896) Pol. Code, § 4656, providing, in criminal cases, that the clerk must not issue subpœnas for more than six witnesses for each side except on order of court is constitutional, and authorizes the court to refuse defendant an order for subpœnas for additional witnesses unless he discloses the materiality of their expected testimony.—State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399.

[f] (Wash. 1896) Under Const. art. 1, § 22, and 2 Code, § 1363, providing that accused shall have compulsory process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, accused is entitled to have only necessary witnesses subpœnaed for him at public expense, and only on an order of court.—State v. Graves, 13 Wash. 485, 43 Pac. 376.

§ 5. Persons who may be required to appear and testify.

Compelling husband or wife to testify, see post, § 136.

Persons entitled to compensation as witnesses, see post, §§ 50–54.

Privilege of witness, see post, §§ 1008–1071.

[a] (U. S. 1854) The court will not compel the attendance of an interpreter who has neglected to obey a subpœna, unless in case of necessity.—Ex parte Roelker, Fed. Cas. No. 11,995 [1 Spr. 276].

[b] (U. S. 1875) Rev. St. § 1080, authorizes the government to examine the claimant in the court of claims before trial, and if he fails to appear or refuses to testify the court in its discretion should order the cause not to be brought to trial. Held, that the claimant cannot be required to produce his assignor as a witness under penalty that the case shall not be brought to trial.—Macauley v. United States, 11 Ct. Cl. 575.

[c] (Ala. 1893) Code, § 2813, providing that when the deposition of a witness has been taken, if affidavit be made that the personal attendance of the witness, residing in the county, is necessary, then such attendance shall be required, applies to women, whose evidence, by the provision of section 2801, may be taken by deposition.—Ex parte Jenks, 101 Ala. 429, 13 South. 564.

[d] (Ga. 1889) Plaintiff can introduce the testimony of a female witness, taken by interrogatories, though he produces other female witnesses at the trial, but the court, on proper representations, can compel the attendance of the absent witness, under Code, § 206, par. 4, giving it power, in the furtherance of justice, to control all persons connected with a judicial proceeding before it.—Western & A. R. Co. v. Denmead, 83 Ga. 351, 9 S. E. 683.

[e] (Ga. 1890) It is not error to refuse to compel female witnesses to come into court and testify, or to continue the case in order that their interrogatories may be taken, where what they will testify, or the materiality of their testimony, is not shown to the court.—Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 297, 11 S. E. 706.

[f] (Ind. 1862) After a party to a suit has answered interrogatories propounded by his opponent, he may still be personally examined as a witness on the trial.—Smith v. Rosenham, 19 Ind. 256.

[a] (U. S. 1874) Rev. St. § 858, providing that in the courts of the United States no witness shall be excluded in any civil action because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, operates not merely to give a privilege to each party which may be availed of or not as a matter of choice, but places the parties to a suit (except those named in a proviso to the enactment) on a footing of equality with other witnesses; it makes all admissible to testify for themselves, and all compellable to testify for others.—Texas v. Chiles, 88 U. S. (21 Wall.) 488, 22 L. Ed. 650.

[b] (U. S. 1812) A witness will be compelled to testify, though he be interested, if he voluntarily became interested after he had acquired his knowledge on the subject; but if this interest is created by act of law or of the party who calls him, he cannot be so compelled to testify.—Tatum v. Lofton, Fed. Cas. No. 13,766 [Brunner, Col. Cas. 175; 3 Tenn. (Cooke) 115].

[c] (U. S. 1868) At common law parties were not competent witnesses, and they could not be compelled to attend, by writ of subpœna, or bring with them any writings pertinent to the issue, by the writ of subpœna duces tecum.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Boston v. State Nat. Bank of Boston, Fed. Cas. No. 9,448 [3 Cliff. 201].

[d] (Ala. 1831) A mere nominal plaintiff in an action is a competent witness in favor of defendant; but he cannot be compelled to testify in such action.—Prewett v. Marsh, 1 Stew. & P. 17, 21 Am. Dec. 645.

[e] (Ala. 1842) Where there are two defendants, and one pleads usury, the other defendant cannot be compelled, against his will, to be examined as a witness to prove the usury.—Bolling v. Logan, 4 Ala. 169.

[f] (Conn. 1820) One who signed a note as attorney for another, and afterwards gave bonds for his principal to prosecute an appeal from a judgment on the note, was not privileged thereby from giving evidence for the payee of the note to prove its execution.—Phelps v. Riley, 3 Conn. 266.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) Though a party to a suit present in court may be called on as a witness without being subpœnaed, he cannot be compelled to testify if he prefers the alternative provided by Code 1873, §§ 2421, 2422.—Goodpaster v. Voris, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 334, 74 Am. Dec. 313.

[h] (Iowa, 1864) Where the taking of the testimony of a codefendant involved a continuance of the cause, and it further appeared that the proposed witness was interested in the suit, the application for a rule to take the testimony was properly refused.—Greither v. Alexander, 15 Iowa, 470.

[i] (Me. 1842) A stockholder in a bank may legally refuse to testify in an action brought by the bank in its corporate name.—Bank of Oldtown v. Houlton, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 501.

[j] (Md. 1833) Plaintiff upon the record, at common law, unless he voluntarily waive his privilege, cannot be compelled to give testimony for defendant.—Owings v. Low, 5 Gill. & J. 134.

[k] (Md. 1855) Under the bill of rights it is competent for the legislature to alter the rules of evidence so as to compel a party to give evidence against himself; but the exercise of such power will be strictly watched and confined within the narrowest possible limits by the courts.—Broadbent v. State, 7 Md. 416.

[l] (Md. 1869) The provision of the Code in regard to the compulsory attendance of witnesses has no application to a party who is a witness in his own behalf.—Gambrill v. Parker, 31 Md. 1.

[m] (Mass. 1833) In an action against the parties concerned in a voyage, brought by one of the vendors of goods supplied for the use of himself and other vendors, upon several notes given by the defendants' agent, of one of which notes plaintiff was the payee, and of the others the indorser, held, that the payees of such other notes were competent witnesses on the part of defendants, and compellable to testify on the question whether at the time when the notes were taken plaintiff and the other vendors had knowledge that other persons besides the agent were interested in the purchases of the goods.—French v. Price, 41 Mass. (24 Pick.) 13.

[o] (Neb. 1887) Under Civ. Code, § 328, the parties to a civil action are competent witnesses, and each may be compelled to testify in favor of the adverse party, the same as any other witness.—Dogge v. State, 21 Neb. 272, 31 N. W. 929.

[p] (N. H. 1889) Defendant cannot call plaintiff when an executor and compel him to testify against his will.—Sheehan v. Hennessey, 65 N. H. 101, 18 Atl. 652.

[q] (N. Y. 1828) A party in interest, in a suit in another state, cannot be compelled to testify before a magistrate as a witness in that suit.—People v. Irving, 1 Wend. 20.

[r] (N. Y. 1829) In an action of ejectment against the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church in the city of New York, the treasurer of the corporation, who was likewise one of the corporators and a pewholder, was not so far a party to the suit as to exempt him from testifying against the corporation.—In re Kip, 1 Paige, 601.

[s] (N. Y. 1841) A member of a partnership or unincorporated banking association is not obliged to testify against them in a suit prosecuted for their benefit in the names of others.—Cook v. Spaulding, 1 Hill, 586.

[t] (N. Y. 1874) A party to an action cannot be compelled to submit to an examination at the instance of the adverse party, save as a general witness in the cause as prescribed by the Code.—King v. Leighton, 58 N. Y. 383.

[u] (N. C. 1830) On an indictment against a slave for a capital offense, the master cannot be compelled to testify.—State v. Charity, 13 N. C. 543.

[v] (Pa.) Though in an action against two partners one of them who has not been arrested is a competent witness for plaintiff as to the amount of the demand, he cannot be compelled to give evidence.—(1796) Norman v. Norman, 2 Yeates, 154; (1828) Taylor v. Henderson, 17 Serg. & R. 453.

[w] (Pa. 1883) In proceedings to dissolve an attachment, defendant and the judgment creditor whose judgment is attacked as fraudulent can be compelled to testify on behalf of plaintiff.—Sullivan v. Wallace (Com. Pl.) 82 Wkly. Notes Cas. 440.

[x] (Vt. 1839) The real party to a suit at law, although not the party of record, cannot be compelled to testify.—Flint v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 615.

[y] (Vt. 1844) A person may be compelled to testify as a witness against his interest, if he be not the real party to the suit.—Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121.

Habeas corpus ad testificandum, see post, § 33.

[a] (U. S. 1885) A United States district court will not grant a process by subpœna, attachment, or otherwise, on application of the United States district attorney, for a party confined in a state penitentiary for assault with intent to murder, whose testimony it is desired to have in a criminal prosecution pending in such court.—United States v. Barefield (D. C.) 23 Fed. 136.

[b] (Cal. 1890) The provision of Const. § 13, art. 1, that the accused shall have the right to have the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, is limited by the provision that the legislature may provide for the taking, in the presence of the accused and his counsel, of depositions of witnesses in criminal cases other than homicide, when there is reason to believe that the witness, from inability or other cause, will not attend at the trial, and does not secure to defendant in a criminal action an absolute right to the process of the court to compel attendance, as a witness, of a convict imprisoned in the state prison.—Willard v. Superior Court, 82 Cal. 456, 22 Pac. 1120.

[c] (Cal. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1878–1881, make convicted felons competent witnesses. Const. art. 1, § 13, confers on defendants in criminal cases the right to have the process of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses. Pen. Code, § 1567, provides that a person imprisoned in the state prison may, on order for that purpose, be brought before a court sitting in another county. Held, on an information for receiving stolen goods from W., that where notice had been given to the state of an application to produce W. from the state prison to testify on behalf of defendants, and it was clearly shown that his testimony was the only evidence obtainable, and would exonerate defendant, the application should have been granted.—People v. Willard, 92 Cal. 482, 28 Pac. 585.

[d] (Ga. 1894) In order that a defendant in a criminal case may secure the benefit of the act of September 27, 1883, touching the production of convicts in the penitentiary as witnesses, he must first apply to the governor, as the act requires, such requirement being mandatory.—Roberts v. State, 94 Ga. 66, 21 S. E. 132.

[e] (Ga. 1894) Under Code, § 4027, providing for compulsory process to obtain witnesses for a defendant in a criminal case, a judge of the superior court is not bound to require the production of a convict from the penitentiary at the public expense, though defendant is unable to defray such expense.—Roberts v. State, 94 Ga. 66, 21 S. E. 132.

[f] (Iowa, 1866) Under Revision, § 4019, providing that "a person confined in any prison * * * may be produced for oral examination in a criminal case in any county in the state," the court in its discretion may refuse to require the personal attendance of a convict.—State v. Kennedy, 20 Iowa, 872.

[g] (Mo. 1886) Rev. St. § 4031, provides that "courts of record * * * shall have power upon the application of any party to a suit, * * * civil or criminal, pending in any court of record, * * * to issue a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of bringing before such court * * * any person who may be detained within the state, for any cause, except a sentence for felony, to be examined as a witness in such suit on behalf of the applicant." Held, that such section does not conflict with Const. 1875, art. 2, § 22, providing that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right * * * to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf"; and a jailer is not guilty of contempt in refusing to produce such felon.—Ex parte Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 228, 4 S. W. 91, 60 Am. Rep. 250.

[h] (Nev. 1876) A convict confined in jail may be required to give his testimony or deposition in a civil action then pending.—Maxwell v. Rives, 11 Nev. 213.

[a] (U. S. 1795) Judges of a county court are not excused from obeying a subpœna to appear as witnesses, on the ground that the judges of the state supreme court are holding a nisi prius court in the county, and that the occasion seems to require respectful attention to them on the part of the county judges.—United States v. Caldwell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,708 [2 Dall. 333, 1 L. Ed. 404].

[c] (U. S. 1807) That a witness summoned to give his deposition was employed in the collector's office and could not attend without detriment to the public service does not excuse his contempt in refusing to respond to the subpœna.—Hodgson v. Butts, Fed. Cas. No. 6,563 [1 Cranch, C. C. 447].

[d] (U. S. 1807) A subpœna may issue to the president of the United States to compel his attendance as a witness, and an accused person is entitled to it of course.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[e] (U. S. 1847) The court will not issue an attachment against a member of congress who declines to attend as a witness.—United States v. Thomas, Fed. Cas. No. 16,476 [1 Hayw. & H. 243].

[f] (U. S. 1854) The provision of the federal constitution which secures to the accused in criminal prosecutions the right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor does not authorize the issuing of such process to ambassadors or consuls who by public law or express treaty are not amenable to the process of the courts.—In re Dillon, Fed. Cas. No. 3,914 [7 Sawy. 561].

[g] (U. S. 1870) Members of congress are not exempt from compulsory process to require their attendance as witnesses in behalf of one charged with crime.—United States v. Cooper, Fed. Cas. No. 14,861 [4 Dall. 341, 1 L. Ed. 859].

[h] (U. S. 1885) The exemption of a witness or party to a suit from service of process does not extend to service of a subpœna to testify in the same cause on which he is giving attendance.—Norris v. Hassler (C. C.) 23 Fed. 581.

[i] (U. S. 1891) In a prosecution against private individuals for violating the neutrality laws of the United States by fitting out a warlike vessel to aid a rebellion against a foreign power, the vice consul of that power cannot be compelled by legal process to attend as a witness in behalf of the United States, when it appears that the insurgent party has been successful, and the government established by it has been recognized by the United States.—United States v. Trumbull (D. C.) 48 Fed. 94.

[j] (U. S. 1891) A vice consul of a foreign nation who possesses an unrebuked exequatur issued by the president of the United States must still be recognized by the courts as the accredited representative of his country, entitled to all the privileges appertaining to that office, notwithstanding that the government which sent him has been overthrown and an apparently successful revolutionary government established in its place.—United States v. Trumbull (D. C.) 48 Fed. 94.

[k] (U. S. 1896) Service of a subpœna to attend hearings as a witness, upon an attorney who has come from another state to attend to business of his clients pending in the court, before he has had reasonable time to take his departure, will be set aside, on his motion, as a violation of the protection which the law extends to all necessarily attending on a court, especially when the business of his clients requires his immediate presence in other states.—Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 74 Fed. 442.

[l] (D. C. 1874) The privilege of a witness before congress or any of its committees stands on the same footing as the privilege of the members of that body, and does not extend to freedom from the service of a simple summons, but only from arrest.—Wilder v. Welsh, 1 MacArthur, 566.

[m] (N. Y. 1878) If a witness, instead of returning to his residence within a reasonable time, proceeds about his own business, he loses his privilege, and is not entitled to have set aside an order to appear and be examined in supplementary proceedings on the ground that he was privileged from service of the order.—Shults v. Andrews, 54 How. Prac. 380.

[n] (Pa. 1807) An attachment will lie against a member of congress for not obeying a subpœna, if he is not attending a session, or going to or returning from congress.—Respublica v. Duane, 4 Yeates, 347.

[o] (Pa. 1885) The courts will not grant an attachment against a physician for nonattendance as a witness, because his duty requires his attendance at the bedside of his patients. He is classed among going witnesses, and his deposition should be taken.—Vanriper v. Vanriper, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 155.

§ 9. Residence of witness and place where attendance may be required.

Place where subpœna may be served, see post, § 13.

Right to recover compensation, see post, § 45.

[a] (U. S. 1831) A witness residing more than 100 miles from a court of the United States is not compelled to attend on a subpœna, but his deposition may be taken, and his residence is proved prima facie by the certificate of the magistrate who takes it.—Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 30 U. S. (5 Pet.) 604, 8 L. Ed. 243.

[b] (U. S. 1806) The circuit court of the District of Columbia has power to send an attachment into Virginia for a witness in a civil case, who resides within 100 miles of the place of trial.—Voss v. Luke, Fed. Cas. No. 17,014 [1 Cranch, C. C. 331]; Woods v. Young, Fed. Cas. No. 17,994 [1 Cranch, C. C. 346].

[c] (U. S. 1807) The circuit court for the District of Columbia will send attachments into Maryland for witnesses who reside within 100 miles of Washington, where they fail to attend according to summons.—Sommerville v. French, Fed. Cas. No. 13,173 [1 Cranch, C. C. 474].

[d] (U. S. 1809) The court will not, in a civil suit, attach a witness who resides more than 100 miles from the place of trial, nor issue a subpœna commanding him to go and testify before a magistrate.—Henry v. Ricketts, Fed. Cas. No. 6,386 [1 Cranch, C. C. 580].

[e] (U. S. 1831) The attendance of a witness living within 100 miles, but outside, of the District of Columbia, may be compelled by the circuit court of the District.—Gustine v. Ringgold, Fed. Cas. No. 5,877 [4 Cranch, C. C. 191].

[f] (U. S. 1833) A witness residing in Virginia cannot be compelled, by attachment, to attend the circuit court of the District of Columbia, in a criminal cause.—Ex parte Pleasants, Fed. Cas. No. 11,225 [4 Cranch, C. C. 314].

[g] (Ala. 1894) Code, § 2793, provides that no subpoena shall issue for a witness residing over a certain distance from the place of trial, except on affidavit of the party summoning him stating that his personal attendance is necessary. Section 2801 provides for the taking the deposition of a witness in certain cases. Section 2813 provides that any witness "residing in the county where the cause is pending," whose deposition has been taken, may, on application of either party, supported by affidavit stating that his personal attendance is necessary, be required to attend. Held, that a witness residing out of the county, whose deposition has been taken, cannot be compelled to attend.—Ex parte Branch, 105 Ala. 231, 16 South. 926.

[i] (Ind. 1891) The Code provides that witnesses residing in the county where the court is held may be required to attend without prepayment of their fees; that a witness from another county is entitled to prepayment of fees and mileage; and that, where a witness does not reside in the county where the court is held, or in an adjoining county, his deposition may be taken. Held, that a witness cannot be compelled to attend court in a civil case in any other county than that in which he lives, or in an adjoining county.—Alexander v. Harrison, 2 Ind. App. 47, 28 N. E. 119; Same v. Horn, 28 N. E. 122.

[j] (Iowa, 1896) Const. art. 1, § 10, providing that in all criminal trials the accused shall have the right to have compulsory process for his witnesses, does not apply to witnesses beyond the reach of compulsory process of the court.—State v. Yetzer, 97 Iowa, 423, 66 N. W. 737.

[k] (Kan. 1890) A resident of one county who while in another county for one day only was subpœnaed to appear four days thereafter and give his deposition in the latter county is not in contempt for failing to return after he had gone home to his own county, for he was not obliged to obey the subpœna.—In re Hughbanks, 44 Kan. 105, 24 Pac. 75.

[l] (Kan. 1890) Under Comp. Laws, c. 80, § 328, which provides that a witness shall not be compelled to attend to give his deposition out of the county where he resides or where he may be when the subpœna is served upon him, a person is not obliged to obey a subpœna served upon him during his temporary presence in a county in which he does not reside, requiring him to attend in such foreign county several days thereafter to give his deposition.—In re Hughbanks, 44 Kan. 105, 24 Pac. 75.

[m] (Miss. 1894) A motion by defendant to compel the attendance, pursuant to Code 1892, § 1756, of a witness for plaintiff whose deposition has been taken, is properly overruled where the witness is outside of the jurisdiction, so that any attempt to procure his attendance would be futile.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. v.

[n] (Mo. 1887) The right to compulsory process for witnesses does not extend to nonresident witnesses.—State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 4 S. W. 931.

[o] (N. H. 1859) Under the commissioner act a party cannot be compelled to appear and testify before a trial commissioner unless within the jurisdiction of our laws.—Cheever v. Scott, 38 N. H. 32.

[p] (N. H. 1860) A witness who after being summoned and paid removes to another state is still bound to attend unless released.—Gunnison v. Gunnison, 41 N. H. 121, 77 Am. Dec. 764.

[q] (N. C. 1845) A resident of one state, while temporarily in another, if subpœnaed to attend court as a witness in the latter, is not liable to amercement for not attending, if he be out of the state when called out on the subpœna.—Kinzey v. King, 28 N. C. 76.

[r] (Ohio, 1860) Under Code, § 320, providing that a witness shall not be obliged to attend the trial of a civil action except in the county of his residence nor to attend to give his deposition out of the county where he resides or where he may be when the subpœna is served on him, a witness cannot be required to attend on the trial of a civil action out of the county of his residence, no matter where served with subpœna.—Anonymous, 2 Ohio Dec. 407.

[t] (Wash. 1893) Code, § 1650, declares that no person shall be obliged to attend as a witness in any civil action or proceeding out of the county where he resides unless he resides within 20 miles of the place where he is required to testify. Held, that where a witness was served with process in one county, commanding him to appear and testify in supplementary proceedings had in another county, the court had no jurisdiction to punish him for contempt in failing to appear, where no proof was submitted to the court to show that the witness lived within 20 miles of the place of holding court; since, as supplementary proceedings are special in their nature, no presumption can attach in favor of the jurisdiction of the court.—State v. Trounce, 5 Wash. 804, 32 Pac. 750.

Of second subpœna to compel further attendance, see post, § 18.

[a] (Ala. 1852) The court may, in its discretion, refuse a motion to have a person, who is about the court, but has not been subpœnaed, brought in to testify as a witness in a cause.—Woodward v. Purdy, 20 Ala. 379.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) Where a party to a suit is present in court, he may be called on as a witness, without being served with a subpœna.—Goodpaster v. Voris, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 334, 74 Am. Dec. 313.

[c] (La. 1836) Any person within the verge of the court may be called to testify, without previous summons.—Leckie v. Scott, 10 La. 412.

[d] (N. H. 1859) Under the commissioner act a party is not bound to appear and testify before a trial commissioner at the request of the other party unless duly summoned.—Cheever v. Scott, 38 N. H. 32.

[e] (N. H. 1860) Before an auditor, neither party can properly refuse to testify when interrogated by the auditor or by counsel by permission of the auditor, because he had not been summoned and paid as a witness.—Whitney v. Pierce, 40 N. H. 114.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) Where a party undertakes to examine the adverse party as a witness, under the Code of Procedure, he must summon or subpœna the latter.—Anderson v. Johnson, 3 Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 713.

[g] (N. Y. 1867) The proper method of obtaining the attendance of a witness before a county judge, on a hearing in supplementary proceedings, is by a subpœna issued out of the court in which the judgment is obtained; and disobedience to such subpœna should be tried and punished by that court.—People v. Dutcher, 3 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 151.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2444, providing that witnesses in supplementary proceedings, other than the parties, may be produced and examined as on the trial of an action, an order requiring a witness to appear before the referee on a future day, and submit to an examination, is void, as the appearance of such third person can only be compelled by service of a subpœna.—People v. Warner, 51 Hun, 53, 3 N. Y. Supp. 768.

[i] (Ohio, 1825) Where other proof can be had that a witness is dead or absent, it is unnecessary to take out a subpœna.—Clark v. Boyd, 2 Ohio (2 Ham.) 56.

[a] (Ala. 1846) Where a party directs a subpœna for a witness, it is the duty of the clerk to issue it to each succeeding term, until the order is countermanded, or the suit disposed of.—Marsh v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 10 Ala. 57.

[b] (N. Y. 1860) A subpœna to a witness is a "process" within 2 Rev. St. 287, § 70, prohibiting any one not a general law partner of an attorney, nor his clerk, from suing out any process in his name.—Yorks v. Peck, 31 Barb. 350.

[c] (Pa. 1885) To the end that the allowance of fees to unnecessary witnesses may be avoided in criminal cases, the clerk of the court should give a subpœna on behalf of the commonwealth only on the order of the district attorney, who should see that none but necessary and proper witnesses are subpœnaed.—Commonwealth v. Shell, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 41.

[d] (Tex. 1875) The issuance of a subpœna for a witness during the progress of a cause, at the request of a party, is a matter of right when it is not shown that the witness' attendance cannot be procured, and is not a matter vesting in the discretion of the judge or clerk.—Edmondson v. State, 43 Tex. 230.

[a] (U. S. 1847) By the laws of Arkansas, a subpœna is to be directed to the witness, and not to the officer summoning him.—Russell v. Ashley, Fed. Cas. No. 12,150 [Hemp. 546].

[b] (U. S. 1883) Under Rev. St. § 877, the witnesses for the United States must be summoned to testify, not only in the cause in which the subpœna is entitled, but generally for the United States, "before the grand or petit jury, or both."—United States v. Ralston (C. C.) 17 Fed. 895.

[c] (U. S. 1883) Rev. St. § 877, commanding the clerk to issue "one general subpœna" for witnesses in behalf of the United States who reside in the same locality, does not authorize the clerk to issue subpœnas in criminal cases as for a cause pending in court, for if the subpœna did not indicate the cause for which the witness was specially wanted, the provisions of Const. Amend. 6, that the accused shall have the right to be confronted with the witnesses who testify against him, would be violated.—United States v. Ralston (C. C.) 17 Fed. 895.

[d] (U. S. 1894) A subpœna describing the case as "now pending in this court," correctly states the condition of the case, if a motion for new trial is pending.—In re McKay, 30 Ct. Cl. 1.

[e] (D. C. 1883) A subpœna issued in a criminal case out of a federal court, which does not command the witness to attend from day to day, and not to depart without leave of court, is defective; and the witness having appeared on the day named therein, and having afterwards departed without leave, cannot be deemed guilty of contempt.—In re Spencer, MacArthur & M. 433.

[f] (N. Y. 1805) A subpœna for a person to attend the supreme court as a witness, without stating the place where, is good.—People v. Van Wyck, 2 Caines, 333.

[g] (N. C. 1825) A subpœna is good, though tested in a certain year of American independence, and not of our Lord.—Goodman's Adm'r v. Armistead, 11 N. C. 9.

§ 13. Places where writ may be served.

Place where attendance may be required, see ante, § 9.

[a] (U. S. 1851) A subpœna runs, like all other process, throughout the district, and also 100 miles from the place of holding court.—Dreskill v. Parish, Fed. Cas. No. 4,075 [5 McLean, 218]; Id. 4,076 [5 McLean, 241].

[b] (U. S. 1875) A subpœna for a witness may be served in another district, if he does not live more than 100 miles from the place where the register who issues it requires the witness to attend.—In re Woodward, Fed. Cas. No. 18,000 [8 Ben. 112].

[c] (Nev. 1879) A sheriff has no authority to serve a subpœna on witnesses residing in any other than his county, unless such other county is within the same judicial district.—Washoe County v. Humbolt County, 14 Nev. 123.

Personal service to render competent parties in action for divorce, see post, § 169.

[a] (U. S. 1868) In the federal courts it is not necessary that the subpœna for witnesses should be served by the marshal, and the party who serves the same is entitled to recover for service and mileage.—Gordon v. Scott, Fed. Cas. No. 5,620.

[b] (D. C. 1883) While a witness' subpœna, issued by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, may run out of the District, it must be served by a marshal, or, under his order, by a deputy; it cannot be served by any one, although such service might be valid under the law of the state where made.—In re Spencer, MacArthur & M. 433.

[c] (Ill. 1857) A witness is bound to obey a subpœna directed to him, no matter by what means it comes to his hands.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dunning, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 494.

[e] (La. 1851) Where notice is served at 6 o'clock in the evening to attend the next morning at 10, and the witness remaining some days afterwards in the city the party notified can have him resummoned and cross-examined, the testimony will be received, though the notice is short.—Wright v. Abbott, 6 La. Ann. 569.

[f] (Mo. 1893) Under Rev. St. § 8937, providing that a subpœna may be served by the sheriff, coroner, marshal, or any constable in the county in which the witness to be summoned may be found, or by any disinterested person who would be a competent witness in the cause, the service may be by a party to a suit, though interested therein.—Larimore v. Bobb, 114 Mo. 446, 21 S. W. 922.

[g] (N. C. 1853) Where two subpœnas are served the same day on a witness, requiring his attendance at different places distant from each other, he may make his election which he will obey.—Icehour v. Martin, 44 N. C. 478.

[h] (Pa. 1851) The rule of court requiring the subpœna to be taken out and served on the witness five days before the trial applies only to applications for a continuance on account of the absence of witnesses who might have been found within reach of the process within five days.—Scriber v. Reeves, 1 Phila. 284.

[i] (Pa. 1885) It is not necessary that an officer serve a subpœna, but it may be served by any person as agent for the party or by the party himself.—Lyon v. Marshall, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 90.

[j] (Tex. 1854) A plaintiff cannot safely wait for the coming in of the answer, before subpœnaing his witnesses; it will be at his peril.—Osborne v. Scott, 13 Tex. 59.

§ 15. Payment or tender of fees and expenses.

Payment as condition precedent to duty to testify, see post, § 73.

Refusal of expert to testify without additional compensation as contempt, see post, § 66.

[a] (U. S. 1869) If a witness subpœnaed by the government has means to travel, it is not necessary for the officer to tender his traveling expenses; and the court will attach a witness who, on that ground, neglects to attend.—United States v. Durling, Fed. Cas. No. 15,010 [4 Biss. 509].

[b] (U. S. 1869) The officer summoning witnesses should see that those who have no means to travel are provided with necessary funds.—United States v. Durling, Fed. Cas. No. 15,010 [4 Biss. 509].

[c] (U. S. 1871) A federal court will be regulated by the statute of the state which provides that a witness who makes a demand for his traveling fees and his fees for one day's attendance at the time of the service of the subpœna shall not be liable to attachment for contempt where he fails to obey the writ.—In re Thomas, Fed. Cas. No. 13,889 [1 Dill. 420].

[d] (U. S. 1885) In the federal courts, witnesses, if they have the means, are obliged to obey the process of the court and attend, whether their fees are advanced or not, and a witness who can pay his expenses and refuses to attend because the money is not tendered him may be punished for contempt.—Norris v. Hassler (C. C.) 23 Fed. 581.

[e] (U. S. 1885) A witness who has been served with a subpœna and received money for traveling expenses cannot refuse to obey such subpœna because the proper amount of mileage has not been paid.—Norris v. Hassler (C. C.) 23 Fed. 581.

[f] (Colo. 1883) The refusal of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses, who had been subpœnaed, but whose fees had not been paid, does not justify a reversal, especially where the party complaining makes no affidavit as to what was expected to be proved by them, or that their testimony was material.—People v. Com'rs of Grand County, 7 Colo. 190, 2 Pac. 912.

[g] (Ill. 1891) A party made a witness for his adversary in a civil case will not be punished for contempt for failing to attend as a witness unless his fees are tendered.—Bonner v. People, 40 Ill. App. 628.

[h] (Ky. 1858) A person summoned as a witness out of the county in which he resides is not bound to attend unless his traveling expenses of going to, and returning from, the place to which he is summoned, are paid or tendered to him, or payment thereof waived by him.—Thurman v. Virgin, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 785.

[i] (Mo. 1893) The statute requiring mileage, and fees to be tendered a witness in advance, when the witness resides over 40 miles from the place of trial, does not apply where a witness resides without the state.—Larimore v. Bobb, 114 Mo. 446, 21 S. W. 922.

[j] (N. H. 1859) Under the commissioner act a party was not bound to appear and testify before a trial commissioner at the request of the other party, unless duly paid as a witness.—Cheever v. Scott, 38 N. H. 32.

[k] (N. H. 1860) A witness is not bound to attend court unless his fees for travel and one day's attendance are paid or tendered to him.—Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255.

[l] (N. H. 1874) It is the duty of a witness on whom is duly served a subpœna sent out under the indorsement of the attorney general or county solicitor to attend court and testify according to its command without the payment or tender of any fees to him, such indorsement of the subpœna by the prosecuting officer being a sufficient guaranty that his fees will be paid by the county.—State v. Tebbetts, 54 N. H. 240.

[n] (N. Y. 1825) In prosecutions for misdemeanors, witnesses for the defense are not bound to attend unless their fees are paid or tendered, as in civil cases; but it is otherwise in prosecutions for felony.—Ex parte Chamberlain, 4 Cow. 49.

[o] (N. Y. 1846) A witness is not liable to the penalty fixed by the statute for not attending when subpœnaed, unless his fees were paid for attendance.—Courtney v. Baker, 3 Denio, 27.

[p] (N. Y. 1847) Where less than the legal amount was paid to a witness when he was subpœnaed, and it did not appear that he objected to the amount, and he actually attended pursuant to the subpœna, but left court before the cause was tried, held, notwithstanding, in a suit against him by plaintiff, on the ground of his default, that the nonpayment of the full amount was a fatal objection to a recovery.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[q] (N. Y. 1847) To enable plaintiff to recover the costs of the circuit against a defaulting witness, it must appear that he had been paid his fees for travel and one day's attendance.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[r] (N. Y. 1848) Where a party summons the adverse party for examination as a witness, he must pay him his fees for attending.—Anderson v. Johnson, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 713, 1 Code Rep. 94.

[s] (N. Y. 1849) A person examined as a witness in supplementary proceedings (section 295) is entitled to fees as a witness as allowed by statute, which he may insist on as a condition of attending or testifying.—Davis v. Turner, 4 How. Prac. 190.

[t] (N. Y. 1858) A party made a witness by his adversary is as much entitled to fees as a condition precedent to creating a duty to attend, as a third person.—Hewlett v. Brown, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 655, 7 Abb. Prac. 74.

[u] (R. I. 1850) A witness who is subpœnaed is bound to attend at the trial unless he has given notice that he shall refuse to appear without payment of the fees due him.—Holden v. Shove, 1 R. I. 287.

[v] (Tenn. 1836) In a civil suit a witness is bound to attend and give evidence when subpœnaed, although the party summoning him did not tender or offer him his necessary expenses.—Smith v. Barger, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 322.

[w] (Wis. 1853) A witness is bound to obey the process of subpœna in a criminal prosecution, as well on the part of defendant as on that of the state, without payment or tender of fees.—West v. State, 1 Wis. 209.

[x] (Wis. 1894) A person who attends as a witness without the payment or tender of his fees waives their payment or tender in advance.—Rozek v. Redzinski, 87 Wis. 525, 58 N. W. 262.

[a] (N. H. 1860) At the close of each day, if a witness' fees for the next day are not paid, he has the right to return home; but if the case has not terminated, he must first give notice to the party who has summoned him, or his attorney, of his intention to leave unless his fees are paid.—Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255.

[b] (N. Y. 1847) To enable plaintiff to recover the costs of the circuit, against a defaulting witness, it is not sufficient that the proper fees were paid in the first instance, if the witness left court after a default in payment for further attendance, although he had not applied to the party for such payment.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[c] (Vt. 1838) When a witness attends, if he is wanted for a further day, his fees must be tendered each day for the succeeding day.—Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493.

Validity of subpœna returnable on Sunday, see "Sunday," vol. 45, c. 159, § 78 [c].

[a] (Ind. 1856) Certain witnesses for defendant in ejectment appeared, by the return of the sheriff to the process issued, which was admitted without objection, to be tenant of defendant. Held, that the return was prima facie evidence of this fact.—Stump v. Town of Attica, 7 Ind. 641.

[b] (Iowa, 1888) Where the proof of service of a notice of witnesses for the state consists of the sheriff's return, which states that "the within notice was read, * * * and a copy of the same delivered, to defendants," in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the return of the sheriff is written on the original notice; and, the sheriff being an officer of the court, whose duty it is to send such notices, the return needs no further verification.—State v. Pugsley, 75 Iowa, 742, 38 N. W. 498.

[c] (La. 1891) An accused is not entitled to a new subpœna in place of a previous one not returned on the day of trial, when it appears that he has been wanting in due diligence, and that he rested on his motion for a new subpœna after an intimation of the trial judge that relief would be given if a reasonable showing were made in support of a motion for a continuance.—State v. Stevens, 43 La. Ann. 610, 9 South. 113.

[d] (Tex. 1878) A return of a subpœna, "Served by reading in hearing of" the witness, is not a compliance with Pasch. Dig. art. 1434, requiring the return to show that the service was "by being read to the witness."—Tooney v. State, 5 Tex. App. 163.

[e] (Tex. 1883) A return on a subpœna "not executed," or "not found," does not conform to Cr. Code. art. 479, requiring a return of the mode of service, or the cause of the failure to serve.—Neyland v. State, 13 Tex. App. 536.

§ 18. Operation and effect.

[a] (Ala. 1850) Where a witness is subpœnaed as well to testify as to bring papers into court, the party at whose instance the subpœna issues may require the production of the papers without introducing the witness generally.—Martin v. Williams, 18 Ala. 190.

[b] (N. C. 1849) A witness summoned to attend at court, though a verdict may be rendered in the cause, yet if a new trial be granted, is bound to attend without a new subpœna.—Fulbright v. McElroy, 32 N. C. 41.

[c] (Tenn. 1651) Upon a change of venue, the witnesses, unless resummoned, are not required to attend the court of the county to which the venue has been changed; and if this be not done, their failure to appear at the final trial is no reason why the costs of their attendance at the court from which the cause was removed should not be allowed them.—Hodges v. Nance, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 57.

[d] (Tex. 1886) Service of a subpœna is good only for the particular occasion for which it is issued, and a witness cannot be forced, by reason of such service, to attend the trial of the cause at a subsequent term. Rule applied to a nonresident witness served within the county.—Sapp v. King, 66 Tex. 570, 1 S. W. 466.

[e] (Vt. 1838) Where a witness attends, if he is wanted for a further day, it is not necessary that he should be served each time with a subpœna.—Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493.

§ 19. Authority to issue.

[a] (U. S. 1892) Rev. St. § 4906, providing that, on the application of any party to a contested case pending in the patent office the clerk of any federal court shall issue a subpœna for a witness commanding him "to appear and testify," does not include an authority to issue a subpœna duces tecum.—Ex parte Moses (C. C.) 53 Fed. 346.

[a] (U. S. 1802) A subpœna duces tecum will not be ordered to the clerk of a court in Virginia, to bring into a court of the District of Columbia original papers filed in his court.—Craig v. Richards, Fed. Cas. No. 3,337 [1 Cranch, C. C. 84].

[b] (U. S. 1807) A subpœna duces tecum may issue to the president of the United States, directing him to bring any paper of which the party praying it has a right to avail himself as testimony.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[c] (U. S. 1807) Where it does not affirmatively appear that letters and executive orders in the hands of the president of the United States which may be material to the defense of an accused contain any matter which it would be imprudent to disclose, a subpœna duces tecum will issue. The fact that such letters and orders may contain matter not essential to the defense, and which ought not to be disclosed, will appear on the return.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[d] (U. S. 1847) In an equity case, the court will give a subpœna duces tecum for any witness to bring in the books who is supposed to have them.—Russell v. McLellan, Fed. Cas. No. 12,158 [3 Woodb. & M. 157].

[e] (U. S. 1854) On application for a subpœna duces tecum directed to a consul, it must appear that the document is not an official paper protected by law from examination and seizure.—In re Dillon, Fed. Cas. No. 3,914 [7 Sawy. 561].

[f] (U. S. 1871) An officer of a corporation, party to a suit, can be compelled by subpœna duces tecum to bring its books before a master to whom the cause is referred.—Erie Ry. Co. v. Heath, Fed. Cas. No. 4,513 [8 Blatchf. 413].

[g] (U. S. 1878) Under Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 868, which provides for the production of books and papers of a corporation upon a subpœna duces tecum, directed to the officer "in whose custody the book or paper is," the vice president, who is also secretary and treasurer of a foreign railroad corporation, and who has an office in New York, cannot be required to produce books of the company which were at one time in his control but have since been sent to the home office, in another state, where they are in charge of a co-ordinate officer over whom the officer resident in New York has no control.—In re Sykes, Fed. Cas. No. 13,707 [10 Ben. 162].

[h] (U. S. 1878) Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 868, which provides for the production of books, etc., of a corporation, upon a subpœna duces tecum, to the officer in whose custody the same are, relates as well to foreign as to domestic corporations.—In re Sykes, Fed. Cas. No. 13,707 [10 Ben. 162].

[i] (U. S. 1879) The major general commanding the department of the East was served with a subpœna duces tecum, requiring him to produce in court official papers on file in the office of the headquarters of the department. Held, that the subpœna should be set aside on its appearing that copies of such papers could be read in evidence.—Corbett v. Gibson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,221 [16 Blatchf. 334].

[j] (U. S. 1880) A subpœna duces tecum under Rev. St. § 869, cannot be used to compel the production of "patterns" for a stove, such process applying only to documentary evidence.—In re Shephard (C. C.) 3 Fed. 12.

[k] (U. S. 1883) The officers of a corporation may be compelled by a subpœna duces tecum in a suit in equity to produce its books and papers in evidence, though the corporation is not a party to the suit, where they are necessary to determine the rights of parties to the litigation.—Wertheim v. Continental Ry. & Trust Co. (C. C.) 15 Fed. 716.

[l] (U. S. 1891) Defendant, in an action for infringement of a patent, claimed that complainant, in a divisional application upon which letters patent were never issued, made admissions which greatly restrict the claim of the patent in suit, and, a foundation for secondary evidence being laid, sought to compel complainant to bring into court a copy thereof, which was in its possession. Held, that a subpœna duces tecum was the proper method when the paper was identified by a specific description.—Edison Electric Light Co. v. United States Electric Lighting Co. (C. C.) 45 Fed. 55.

[m] (U. S. 1891) In a suit for infringing a patent on steel rails, where the defense is want of invention, in view of the prior state of the art, and that rails of the kind patented were in public use more than two years before the application, and it appears that rails of that general character were manufactured by a certain company for several years prior thereto, it is prima facie material to inquire into the exact shape of such rails, and therefore a subpœna duces tecum will issue to compel the production of drawings descriptive thereof.—Johnson Steel Street Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. (C. C.) 48 Fed. 191.

[o] (Del. 1866) An adverse party cannot be compelled to produce a document in his possession by a subpœna duces tecum.—Campbell v. Johnston, 3 Del. Ch. 94.

[p] (Ga. 1883) Where in ejectment against a grantee his warrantor, though not nominally a party, employed counsel to defend the case, and placed in his hands a deed to be used in the litigation, the paper is legally in the custody of the warrantor, and must be produced under a subpœna duces tecum.—Steed v. Cruise, 70 Ga. 168.

[q] (Ga. 1886) The mayor of Savannah, who is ex officio presiding judge of the police court, a court of record, is not subject to subpœna duces tecum requiring him to bring into the superior court the "information docket" of the police court, to be used as evidence before the grand jury.—In re Lester, 77 Ga. 143.

[r] (Ind. 1835) If a party wishes to introduce a written instrument in evidence which is in the hands of a third person, he must take out a subpœna duces tecum.—Carlton v. Litton, 4 Blackf. 1.

[rr] (Ind. 1862) Under 2 Rev. St. §§ 305, 306, a party to an action cannot be compelled, by service of a subpœna duces tecum issued ex parte, to produce his books on the trial. An order by the court or a judge thereof is necessary.—Duke v. Brown, 18 Ind. 111.

[s] (Iowa, 1888) Code 1873, § 3672, providing that a witness may be required by subpœna to produce books or writings in his possession, and section 3675, making disobedience of the subpœna contempt of court, apply to witnesses only, and not to parties.—Beebe v. Equitable Mut. L. & E. Ass'n, 76 Iowa, 129, 40 N. W. 122.

[ss] (Kan. 1875) The district court has no power to require that the books and records of the county treasurer and county clerk of one county shall be removed, 50 miles from the place where they are usually kept, into another county, so that they may be used as evidence in a criminal action pending in such other county. Copies may be used where the original cannot be procured.—State v. Smithers, 14 Kan. 629.

[t] (Md. 1818) Documents and vouchers upon which an account has been passed in the orphans' court, lodged with the register of wills, may be produced by a subpœna duces tecum.—Randall v. Hodges, 3 Bland, 477.

[tt] (Md. 1829) A corporation, by its officers, may be compelled to produce books and papers in its possession, containing matter pertinent to the issue in an action between third parties, as a private individual may.—Winder v. Diffenderffer, 2 Bland, 166.

[u] (N. Y. 1825) The court will not, on motion, compel a stranger to the suit to produce a deed of his own, for the inspection of a party, but plaintiff must compel its production by a subpœna duces tecum.—Davenbagh v. McKinnie, 5 Cow. 27.

[uu] (N. Y. 1826) In an action where a bank is a party, the opposite party cannot compel the cashier to produce the books of the bank by a subpœna duces tecum.—Utica Bank v. Hillard, 5 Cow. 419.

[v] (N. Y. 1845) Where a deed or other instrument which a party wishes to prove, as an exhibit, is in the hands of a third person, who will not produce it voluntarily for that purpose, the proper course is to compel him to produce it, by a subpœna duces tecum.—Aiken v. Martin, 11 Paige, 499.

[vv] (N. Y. 1852) A party to an action is not bound, upon a mere subpœna duces tecum, and without a previous order, to produce his books and papers.—Trotter v. Latson, 7 How. Prac. 261.

[w] (N. Y.) Under Code Proc. § 390, a party may be required by subpœna duces tecum to bring his books and papers. The adverse party is not restricted to obtaining an inspection and copies before the trial.—(1853) Bonesteel v. Lynde, 8 How. Prac. 226; (1861) In re Mitchell, 12 Abb. Prac. 249; (1862) People v. Dyckman, 24 How. Prac. 222.

[ww] (N. Y. 1870) A subpœna duces tecum must in all cases be issued for the purpose of obtaining profert of books and papers; and on taking conditionally the testimony of a witness, whether a party to the action or not, he may be required, by such a subpœna, to produce any books or papers specified in the writ, and for disobedience is guilty of contempt and liable in damages to any party aggrieved thereby.—Central Nat. Bank v. Arthur, 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sweeny) 194.

[x] (N. Y. 1874) Corporations cannot be compelled to produce their books by a subpœna duces tecum.—Central Nat. Bank v. White, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Jones & S.) 297.

[xx] (N. Y. 1884) A witness in supplementary proceedings may be required to produce papers by a subpœna duces tecum.—Pruden v. Tallman, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 360.

[y] (Pa. 1794) A subpœna duces tecum should not be issued to a public officer to bring official original papers into court, where certified copies would be evidence.—Delaney v. Regulators of City of Philadelphia, 1 Yeates, 403.

[yy] (Pa. 1797) A subpœna duces tecum cannot be issued to the printer of a newspaper to produce his papers containing the advertisements of notices of the sale of unseated lands for taxes.—Shippen's Lessee v. Wells, 2 Yeates, 260.

[z] (Pa. 1873) A servant cannot ordinarily be compelled to produce his master's books, because his custody of them is, in law, the master's custody, and the latter is the person amenable to process for their production.—Lorenz v. Lehigh Co., 5 Leg. Gaz. 174.

[zz] (Pa. 1873) If the master of a servant is out of the jurisdiction or is a mere legal entity, i. e., a corporation, which can be acted on only through its officers or servants, then a subpœna duces tecum to produce books and papers before a commissioner appointed under Court Rule No. 10, § 35, will properly go against the person having the actual custody, without regard to the master's orders.—Lorenz v. Lehigh Co., 5 Leg. Gaz. 174.

[a] (U. S. 1807) A motion for a subpœna duces tecum, though addressed to the discretion of a court, is a motion not to its inclination, but to its judgment, which is to be guided by sound legal principles.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[b] (U. S. 1807) A motion for a subpœna duces tecum is to the discretion of the court; and as a legal means of obtaining testimony it cannot be regularly opposed by the opposite party in his character as such.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,692d.

[c] (U. S. 1882) When the district attorney, either upon his own motion or at the instance of the grand jury, applies for a subpœna duces tecum, he should state that there is a question either pending before, or which is intended to be brought before, the grand jury or the court, in which certain telegrams, sent from or received at the telegraph office in charge of the witness named, are believed to be pertinent to the question to be considered, and should state the names of the parties sending or receiving the telegrams, and should further state the periods between which, or the day upon which, they were sent or received, which should be a reasonable time; or, if the names of the parties should not be known, then the time and the subject-matter which the dispatches contain, or to which they relate, should be stated.—United States v. Hunter (D. C.) 15 Fed. 712.

[d] (U. S. 1891) When, under the 67th rule in equity, a court has appointed a special examiner to take testimony in another district, a subpœna duces tecum may issue from the clerk's office of the latter district in the usual way, without a direct order of court, and the court of that district has power to punish a disobedience thereof. Rev. St. § 869, requiring an order of court for the issuance of such a subpœna, does not apply, as it is restricted to the taking of depositions de bene esse, or in perpetuam rei memoriam and under a dedimus potestatem, according to the provisions of sections 863 and 866.—Johnson Steel Street Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. (C. C.) 48 Fed. 191.

[a] (U. S. 1876) When a writ of subpœna duces tecum is issued out of a federal court, directed to an officer of a telegraph company, to produce certain messages, it need only describe the messages with such practicable certainty that the witness may know what is required of him, and it is the duty of the person to whom the writ is directed, to use reasonable diligence to obey it, and to find and produce the required instruments of evidence if they are within his custody.—United States v. Babcock, Fed. Cas. No. 14,484 [3 Dill. 566].

[b] (U. S. 1882) Where a subpœna duces tecum is issued to a person in charge of a telegraph office with the intention to bring certain telegrams before the grand jury or the court, the subpœna should describe the telegrams required to be produced as they are described in the application for the writ, either naming the parties sending or receiving them and the subject-matter to which they relate, or, if the names are unknown, then the subject-matter and the times or the periods between which they were sent or received.—United States v. Hunter (D. C.) 15 Fed. 712.

[d] (U. S. 1894) A subpœna duces tecum, directed to the superintendent of a telegraph company, to produce telegrams between a number of parties, is not defective merely because it does not describe the messages by date, or identify the particular ones required, if they are described with such particularity as appears to be practicable.—In re Storror (D. C.) 63 Fed. 564.

[f] (U. S. 1896) A paper directing the jury commissioners to furnish the names and residences of citizens who appeared for qualification as jurors, and of those who qualified, and from whom the grand jury was drawn, is not a subpœna duces tecum.—Murray v. Louisiana, 163 U. S. 101, 16 Sup. Ct. 990, 41 L. Ed. 87.

[g] (Cal. 1886) A witness served with a subpœna duces tecum, requiring him to search for and produce all telegraphic messages from a number of persons to many other persons, between certain specified dates, with no further identification of the messages, is not bound to respond.—Ex parte Jaynes, 70 Cal. 638, 12 Pac. 117; Jaynes v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 12 Pac. 117.

[h] (Ga. 1878) After a document has been produced under a subpœna duces tecum, the sufficiency of the subpœna as a means of compelling its production is immaterial.—Starr v. Mayer, 60 Ga. 546.

[i] (Mo. 1880) A subpœna duces tecum for the production of certain telegraphic messages, that merely gives the names of the senders and the persons addressed and as having been sent "within fifteen months last past," is not a sufficient description to render the person subpœnaed guilty of contempt in failing to produce them.—Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426.

[j] (Mo. 1893) A subpœna duces tecum, which requires a druggist to produce all prescriptions filed in his store since a certain day, is too indefinite, since the grand jury is not authorized to inspect all the prescriptions, but only such as relate to the matter under investigation.—State v. Davis, 117 Mo. 614, 23 S. W. 759.

[k] (N. J. 1872) A party to a suit can be compelled by a subpœna duces tecum to produce papers and documents to be used on the trial as evidence. But such a subpœna commanding a party only to appear at a certain place and time named in the writ, and bring with him a certain book, but omitting the direction to testify, is invalid, and the party refusing to obey it cannot be attached for contempt.—Murray v. Elston, 23 N. J. Eq. (8 C. E. Green) 212.

[a] (U. S. 1892) A second subpœna duces tecum is void while the first is unexecuted and unreturned.—Elting v. United States, 27 Ct. Cl. 158.

[b] (N. C. 1886) The return by a sheriff on a notice to defendants to produce a paper, to the effect that it was "executed by delivering a copy," is sufficient to prove service on a particular party, as such return implies a delivery to each defendant.—McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. C. 497.

[c] (S. C. 1815) The party has a right to require that a witness who has been served with a subpœna duces tecum should make a return to the subpœna before the cause is opened.—Treasurer v. Moore's Ex'rs, 3 Brev. 550.

[a] (U. S. 1894) A subpœna duces tecum, requiring a witness to appear before the federal grand jury, and bring telegrams, will not be quashed because no fees were tendered in advance.—In re Storror (D. C.) 63 Fed. 564.

[b] (Tex. 1896) A defendant to whom a subpœna duces tecum has been issued, requiring him to produce his account books to be used as evidence for plaintiff, may be compelled to produce them, though he has received no witness fees.—Cullers v. Birge (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 986.

Punishment of disobedience as contempt, see post, § 40.

[a] (U. S. 1807) On a motion to compel the production of a letter written to the president of the United States, and in the hands of the prosecuting attorney, averred to be material to the defense, parts of it cannot be withheld, in the discretion of the prosecuting attorney, on the ground of public interest. The president alone may decide as to the propriety of withholding them, and he cannot delegate his discretion.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,694.

[b] (U. S. 1882) It is the duty of the witness served with a subpœna duces tecum by the district attorney on his own motion or at the instance of the grand jury to appear before the grand jury or court and produce the telegrams stated in the subpœna, and if he has doubts as to whether or not he should produce any telegram called for, he may submit it to the inspection of the court, which may decide on the question of its production.—United States v. Hunter (D. C.) 15 Fed. 712.

[d] (U. S. 1896) An internal revenue collector is not justified in refusing to produce, in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum issued by a state court, the application or return made by a person to obtain a retail liquor license, either by the nature of such documents or instructions from the commissioner of internal revenue.—In re Hirsch (C. C.) 74 Fed. 928.

[e] (Ga. 1891) In proceedings to establish lost county records, the secretary and treasurer of a private abstract company is not bound to obey a subpœna duces tecum calling on him to produce "all the abstract books of the company, in which appear the abstracts of Deed Books B, F, and H, and Mortgage Book E," since such information is valuable, and its disclosure is not sought as testimony for the proof of any alleged fact, but as a substitute in the first instance for the allegation of facts unknown, or not known sufficiently to enable the plaintiff to set them forth conformably to general laws applicable to pleading.—Ex parte Calhoun, 87 Ga. 359, 13 S. E. 694.

[f] (Iowa, 1864) It is no ground for the reversal of a judgment that the court refused to compel a party to obey a subpœna duces tecum. —Manning v. Perkins, 16 Iowa, 71.

[g] (Mass. 1830) A witness may be compelled, under a subpœna duces tecum, to produce a document in his possession, unless he has a lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding it, although the production of it will adversely affect his pecuniary interest.—Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9.

[h] (Mass. 1830) In an action on a note, a witness served by plaintiff with a subpœna duces tecum to produce the note testified that defendant, a mechanic, assigned his property to the witness, who was a creditor; that plaintiff and the other creditors put their demands, including the note in question, into the hands of the witness for collection, under an agreement that he might furnish stock to the defendant to work up for the benefit of the creditors, and that the proceeds of all the property should be applied, first, to the repayment of the advances made by the witness, and the surplus to the payment of the demands; and that a large sum was due to the witness on account of his advances. Held, that the witness had such an equitable interest in the note, and such a right to its custody and control under the agreement, that he could not be required to surrender it for the purpose of maintaining a suit and thereby fixing a lien on the funds placed in his hands for the benefit of all creditors.—Bull v. Loveland, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 9.

[i] (Miss. 1845) A witness, under subpœna duces tecum, is compelled to produce all documents in his possession, unless he have a reasonable excuse to the contrary, of the validity of which excuse the court and not the witness is to judge.—Chaplain v. Briscoe, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 198.

[j] (N. H. 1858) The court will not, on the motion of a party, order a witness, summoned on a subpœna duces tecum, to produce the papers mentioned in the subpœna, until it appears from his own admission, or from other conclusive evidence, that he has them under his control; and it seems an order will not be made upon him, in the alternative, to produce them, or show cause why, until he has been asked whether he has them in his possession.—Hall v. Young, 37 N. H. 134.

[k] (N. J. 1871) Where a subpœna duces tecum had been served on the governor of the state, commanding him to appear in court and to bring with him a certain document, and he declined to appear, but his refusal to appear was based upon what he deemed to be his official duty, the court will not compel his appearance.—Thompson v. German Valley R. Co., 22 N. J. Eq. (7 C. E. Green) 111.

[m] (N. Y. 1825) A clerk in a bank is not bound, on a subpœna duces tecum, to produce the books of the bank, they not being under his control.—Utica Bank v. Hillard, 5 Cow. 153.

[n] (N. Y. 1845) If the reasons stated by a witness for not producing a paper in compliance with a subpœna duces tecum are overruled by the examiner, he will be bound to produce the paper; or, if the court sustains the ruling of the examiner, the witness will be bound to pay the costs occasioned by his former refusal. —Aiken v. Martin, 11 Paige, 499.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) A witness is not bound to produce a paper, in compliance with a subpœna duces tecum, until he has been sworn as a witness, to enable him to state on oath his reasons why he should not be compelled to produce it.—Aiken v. Martin, 11 Paige, 499.

[p] (N. Y. 1886) A witness subpœnaed by duces tecum may be relieved by the court from producing unnecessary books.—Pond v. Solomon, 2 City Ct. R. 300.

[q] (N. C. 1826) Where a deed produced under subpœna duces tecum was left after the trial among the papers in the office, it was subject to the control of the party producing it.—Carter v. Graves, 12 N. C. 74.

[r] (S. C. 1841) A witness attending under a subpœna duces tecum is not required to testify, but merely to bring into court a paper which the party needs.—Sherman v. Barrett, 1 McMul. 147.

[s] (Tex. 1896) Where a subpœna duces tecum, requiring a defendant to produce account books to be used on hearing of plaintiff's affidavit controverting an answer by a garnishee, was issued, and defendant appeared, but refused to produce the books, it was error to rule that the witness could not be required to produce the books to be used as evidence against himself.—Cullers v. Birge (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 986.

[t] (Va. 1816) An attachment will not be granted against the clerk of the executive council for disobeying a subpœna duces tecum commanding him to bring into court a paper submitted to the council for the purpose of enabling it to perform its executive functions, and filed among its papers. The clerk ought not to take such paper from the files, without the order of the council.—Morris v. Creel, 2 Va. Cas. 49.

[a] (N. Y. 1892) An action against a company and others to recover for the illegal use of patent processes having been dismissed as to the company, leaving only the question of the amount of profits for which the other defendants were liable to be determined, the court erred in refusing to vacate a subpœna duces tecum against the company, the only object of which was to discover its secret processes.—Averill v. Barber, 63 Hun, 630, 18 N. Y. Supp. 80.

[a] (Pa. 1837) Where a party notified to produce books or papers on the trial is sworn and states that the same are not in his possession, he cannot be examined generally as to the merits of the case, since the case does not resemble in this respect that of a bill of discovery.—Wood v. Connell, 2 Whart. 542.

3. ATTACHMENT TO COMPEL ATTENDANCE AND HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM.

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE ATTACHMENT AND GROUNDS THEREFOR, § 28.

I. Attendance, Production of Documents, and Compensation. (B) Process and Proceedings [50 Am. Dig. to Compel Attendance and Production of Documents. 3. Attachment to Compel Attendance.

Privileges and exemptions, see ante, § 8.

Compensation of sheriffs and constables for serving attachment, see "Sheriffs and Constables," vol. 43, cc. 3382-3384, § 67.

Suing out attachment for witness not subpœnaed as contempt of court, see "Contempt," vol. 10, c. 2397, § 23 [b].

Authority to compel attendance in general, see ante, § 1.

[a] (U. S. 1807) The circuit court for the District of Columbia will grant a rule on a witness residing in Baltimore, to show cause why he should not be attached for not attending according to summons.—Hodgson v. Butts, Fed. Cas. No. 6,563 [1 Cranch, C. C. 447].

[b] (U. S. 1851) Although Act March 2, 1793 (1 Stat. 333, c. 22) allows subpœnas ad testificandum to run from the federal circuit courts into districts not their own, yet where the witness who has been thus subpœnaed shows no disposition to treat the process of the court with contempt, the issuing of an attachment is always matter of discretion with the court. And where it would be oppressive, or dangerous to the health of the witness, or where any strong reason of business or family exists against his compulsory absence from home, the court will not compel his attendance; but will either postpone the cause or have his deposition taken.—Ex parte Beebees, Fed. Cas. No. 1,220 [2 Wall. Jr. 127].

[c] (Fla. 1880) Defendant, in a criminal case, who has caused his witnesses to be duly subpœnaed to appear at the trial, is entitled, on their nonappearance, to an attachment to compel their attendance; it is error to force him to trial before such attachments have issued.—Green v. State, 17 Fla. 669.

[d] (La. 1879) Where accused has, in proper time, ordered subpœnas to issue, he cannot be compelled to apply for attachments, swear to the facts he intends to prove by his witnesses, or go to trial without them, until an earnest and vain effort has been made to bring them into court.—State v. Boitreaux, 31 La. Ann. 188.

[e] (La. 1889) An attachment for witnesses, to substantiate the grounds of a motion for new trial on an indictment for murder, will not be granted where the testimony would be cumulative only of that heard on the trial, and due diligence was not used to secure the attendance of the witnesses for the trial.—State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 574, 7 South. 670.

[f] (La. 1889) On an indictment for murder, an attachment cannot be required against an absent witness when it appears that he is not in the state, and was not served, and there is no showing that the accused was ignorant of his absence, that his testimony is material, or that his attendance can be secured for an early trial.—State v. Johnson, 41 La. Ann. 574, 7 South. 670.

[h] (La. 1891) It is proper to refuse to issue attachments for witnesses in a criminal case where it appears that one of them is in a dying condition, and the other is far gone in pregnancy, and cannot attend.—State v. McCarthy, 43 La. Ann. 541, 9 South. 493.

[i] (Mass. 1831) Where a witness, under recognizance, fraudulently avoided with a view to prevent the trial of a capital cause at the first term, the court will issue an attachment against him, returnable at the next term, and continue the indictment.—Commonwealth v. Carter, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 277.

[j] (Mass. 1853) A justice of the peace has no authority to issue a warrant for the arrest of a witness who failed to attend before him, when duly summoned on behalf of the commonwealth in a criminal prosecution, if the case in which he was to testify has been finally determined and ended.—In re Clarke, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 320.

[k] (Mo. 1880) When the fact that a witness has recognized to appear is not duly shown by the record, and not otherwise made known to the court when an application is made for an attachment against such witness, the refusal to order an attachment will not be a ground for reversing the judgment.—State v. Hopper, 71 Mo. 425.

[l] (N. H. 1874) The court will order a capias to issue against a witness to answer for his default where the witness who has been properly served with a subpœna sent out under the indorsement of the attorney general or the county solicitor fails to attend according to its command; the facts of such service being properly returned to the court.—State v. Tibbetts, 54 N. H. 240.

[n] (N. Y. 1800) Where a witness positively refuses to obey a subpœna, an attachment will be granted in the first instance.—Andrews v. Andrews, 2 Johns. Cas. 109, Coleman, Cas. 120.

[o] (N. Y. 1824) The court may by attachment compel the production of a public document which is in the hands of a private individual.—People v. Vail, 2 Cow. 623.

[p] (N. Y. 1827) The circuit court may grant an attachment against a witness to bring him forward to testify, after he has disobeyed a subpœna.—People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. 108.

[q] (N. Y. 1848) Since a witness can only be brought into court on compulsory process to be punished for contempt in refusing to appear and testify, a surrogate has no jurisdiction to issue an attachment for a witness disobeying a subpœna, to compel him to be brought into court to testify.—Perry v. Mitchell, 5 Denio, 537.

[r] (N. Y. 1867) Where a witness appears in response to a subpœna duces tecum, but neglects to produce, plaintiff may be allowed to withdraw a juror and proceed by attachment, and the question whether the witness is bound to obey and produce the papers will be considered when he is sworn or when brought up on the attachment.—In re O'Toole's Estate, 1 Tuck. Sur. 39.

[s] (Pa. 1788) Where it appeared that witnesses against whom an attachment had issued for disobedience to a subpœna had been so much indisposed as to be incapable of attending, they were discharged, and the costs of the attachment directed to abide the event of the suit.—Butcher v. Coats, 1 Dall. 340, 1 L. Ed. 166.

[t] (Pa. 1881) A witness subpœnaed to appear before an examiner refused to appear, although reasonable time was allowed. Held that a rule for an attachment would be made absolute.—Bowen v. Thornton, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. 575.

§ 29. Necessity and sufficiency of subpœna and service thereof.

has been previously issued and actually served; and all the documents upon which it is awarded must be filed with the court.—United States v. Caldwell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,708 [2 Dall. 333, 1 L. Ed. 404].

[b] (U. S. 1853) When no preliminary evidence has been given before the commissioner, prior to his issue of the subpœna, showing the case to be one in which a de bene esse examination can be lawfully had, the federal circuit court will not grant a writ of attachment against the witness.—Ex parte Peck, Fed. Cas. No. 10,885 [3 Blatchf. 113].

[c] (La. 1873) It is a rule of court, long since established, that, unless personal service has been made on a witness, no attachment to compel his attendance will be granted.—State v. Allemand, 25 La. Ann. 525.

[d] (Minn. 1858) On the refusal of the court to allow defendant to prove his case on cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, defendant said that he should call the witness at the proper time, and plaintiff said that he had no objection to the witness' remaining. The next day the witness could not be found when defendant called him. It appeared that no fee had been tendered him for the second day, and that defendant had not subpœnaed him. Held, that defendant could not have an attachment against the witness.—Beaulieu v. Parsons, 2 Minn. 37 (Gil. 26).

[e] (Minn. 1858) To entitle a party to an attachment for an absent witness he must have duly subpœnaed such witness; it is no excuse that the witness had been subpœnaed by the other side, and examined.—Beaulieu v. Parsons, 2 Minn. 37 (Gil. 26).

[f] (N. J. 1818) An attachment will not be ordered against a witness, unless the subpœna be strictly served, and the witness designed to contemn the authority of the court.—State v. Trumbull, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 139.

[g] (N. Y. 1852) Where a witness fully explains to the party the reasons why he could not attend a trial on a notice of three or four hours, and offered to attend the next day, if the party moves for an attachment, he will be charged with costs thereon.—Chalmers v. Melville, 1 E. D. Smith, 502.

[h] (Ohio, 1860) Under Code, § 322, authorizing an attachment for a witness who fails to attend after subpœna has been "lawfully ordered" and served on him, attachment will not issue for a witness on whom service was had outside of the county where he resides, and it is immaterial that the witness may have accepted a witness fee.—Anonymous, 2 Ohio Dec. 407.

[i] (Pa. 1793) A witness may, by his own act, dispense with the legal form of serving a subpœna, and may, under such service, be subjected to an attachment.—Feree v. Strome, 1 Yeates, 303.

[j] (Tex. 1895) A refusal to grant an attachment for a witness is proper, where the evidence to be given is cumulative, and no process had been issued for the witness or reason given why it had not been so issued.—Cline v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 415, 31 S. W. 175.

[a] (Cal. 1886) There is no abuse of discretion by a court in refusing to grant an attachment for witnesses, if it is not shown by any sworn statement what was intended to be proved by such witnesses; especially where they are out of the county in which the trial was had, and no attachment was asked to enforce their appearance until after one side of the case had been closed, and numerous witnesses had been examined on the other side.—People v. Marseiler, 70 Cal. 98, 11 Pac. 503.

[b] (Ill. 1896) The refusal of the court to order an attachment for a witness, under the circumstances on which it was asked, is not a sufficient reason for reversing the judgment.—Huffer v. Viskovsky, 62 Ill. App. 94.

[c] (La. 1826) A witness may be attached without an affidavit of the materiality of his testimony.—Southward v. Bowie, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 151.

[d] (N. Y. 1859) After the announcement of the counsel on each side that the testimony is closed, it is in the discretion of the presiding judge to issue an attachment to compel the attendance of an absent witness.—Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549, affirming (1859) 4 Parker, Cr. R. 396.

[e] (Pa. 1791) Where the attendance of a witness can be obtained in time for the trial, an attachment may be issued at nisi prius; but where the action has been postponed for the term, application must be made to the court in bank.—Knight's Lessee v. Pechen, 1 Yeates, 18.

[f] (Tex. 1896) In a criminal case, defendant's application for an attachment for a witness should not be denied merely because the application does not recite the facts expected to be proved by the witness.—Moore v. State (Cr. App.) 38 S. W. 980.

[a] (U. S. 1858) Where a witness living in another state and district fails to obey a subpœna, and an attachment is issued for him, such attachment should be directed to the marshal of the court issuing the same, and not to the marshal of the district where the witness may be found.—United States v. Potter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,075.

§ 32. Service and return.

[a] (La. 1879) A return of an attachment for a witness in a criminal case, that she "could not be found," is insufficient; the officer should state what inquiry and search he made, especially if in another parish.—State v. Boitreaux, 31 La. Ann. 188.

Compelling attendance of convicts in general, see ante, § 7.

[a] (Ga. 1884) Where application for process to compel the attendance of a witness in a criminal case who was confined in the penitentiary was made to the court, it was not essential that money to defray his expenses should have been tendered.—Roberts v. State, 72 Ga. 673.

[b] (Nev. 1876) The only design of the law requiring an affidavit to be made of certain facts, before the court shall make an order to have a party in jail produced in court, to testify at the instance of the adverse party, was to prevent improper and unnecessary interference with the custody of prisoners. If the order for the prisoner's attendance in court was improvidently granted, it is no concern of the prisoner; being before the court he is bound to answer any question that he would have been required to answer if the process for bringing him there had been strictly pursued.—Maxwell v. Rives, 11 Nev. 213.

[c] (N. Y. 1810) When served with a habeas corpus ad testificandum, a sheriff is bound to bring up a person in his custody on execution, to testify in a civil suit, on being tendered the expenses for bringing up and returning the prisoner.—Noble v. Smith, 5 Johns. 357.

[d] (N. Y. 1844) In the case of a habeas corpus ad testificandum, the judge or commissioner issuing the writ has no power to authorize the sheriff to suffer the prisoner to go at large pending the proceedings.—People v. Stone, 10 Paige, 606.

[e] (N. Y. 1895) The supreme court has inherent power to issue a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum.—People v. Sebring, 14 Misc. Rep. 31, 35 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[f] (N. Y. 1895) An indictment found on the testimony of persons convicted of felony, who were brought from the penitentiary on a habeas corpus ad testificandum, notwithstanding the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 2011, that the writ shall not issue to bring up such persons, will not be set aside on that ground, since the fact that such writ was wrongfully issued could not be objected to by defendant, but only by the warden of the penitentiary.—People v. Sebring, 14 Misc. Rep. 31, 35 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[g] (N. Y. 1895) An indictment found on the testimony of persons convicted of felony, who were brought from the penitentiary on a habeas corpus ad testificandum, notwithstanding the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 2011, that the writ shall not issue to bring up such persons, will not be set aside on that ground, since a convict is a competent witness (Code Civ. Proc. § 832; Pen. Code, § 714).—People v. Sebring, 14 Misc. Rep. 31, 35 N. Y. Supp. 237.

[h] (N. C. 1872) Acts 1868–69, c. 116, § 37, forbidding the use of the writ habeas corpus ad testificandum for witnesses under sentence for a felony, in favor of parties in any suit, applies only to parties strictly so-called, and not to a case where the state is plaintiff.—State v. Adair, 68 N. C. 68.

[i] (N. C. 1875) Where one convicted of murder and sentenced to be executed is a material witness for the state in a criminal case to be inquired into by the grand jury, the solicitor for the state is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus to bring him into court.—Ex parte Harris, 73 N. C. 65.

[j] (Pa. 1870) Where, on the trial of an issue in a divorce case, respondent, the husband, had been served with a habeas corpus ad testificandum directing him to produce the two daughters of the parties, who were at a school near Boston, and he made return that the children had been sent to school more than six months before, that libelant, the mother, had visited them there, and had free access to them, held, that the writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum having been improvidently issued, it could not be enforced; the witnesses not having been sent away by the father to avoid service of a subpœna, and being, at the time of the application, and for several months before, in another state, could not be brought in under this writ without their consent.—Koecker v. Koecker, 7 Phila. 364.

[k] (Vt. 1836) A writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, returned into court, and lodged on the files, may be shown by copy attested by the clerk.—Mattocks v. Bellamy, 8 Vt. 463.

4. SECURITY FOR APPEARANCE AND TAKING INTO CUSTODY, COMMITMENT, OR DETENTION OF WITNESSES.

BOND, RECOGNIZANCE, OR OTHER SECURITY FOR APPEARANCE, § 34.
—— FORM AND REQUISITES OF BOND AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF, § 35.
TAKING INTO CUSTODY, COMMITMENT, AND DETENTION OF WITNESSES, § 36.

§ 34. Bond, recognizance, or other security for appearance.

[a] (U. S. 1807) Where a witness appears in court at the term mentioned in his recognizance, and the same is not respited, he is not bound to attend at the following term to which the cause is continued.—United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,698.

[b] (U. S. 1860) Where, upon the arrest of a person as a witness in a criminal case for the United States under Act Aug. 8, 1846, § 7, great hardship will be imposed upon him when imprisoned, for want of bail, he will be discharged by the federal court on its own recognizance.—United States v. Lloyd, Fed. Cas. No. 15,614 [4 Blatchf. 427].

[c] (U. S. 1869) It is the duty of the United States district attorney, in criminal prosecutions by the government, where he has any doubt whether witnesses will attend, to have them properly recognized.—United States v. Durling, Fed. Cas. No. 15,010 [4 Biss. 509].

[d] (Ala. 1892) Under Cr. Code, § 4294, providing that a justice of the peace may compel a witness for the prosecution in a criminal case to enter into bond for his appearance, with sufficient sureties, but such sureties must not be required when the witness does not reside in the state, the justice has not power to compel a bond with sureties where the witness resides in Georgia, and such a bond, while binding on the principal, would be invalid as to the sureties.—State v. Calhoun, 99 Ala. 279, 13 South. 425.

[e] (Cal. 1882) The power to require undertakings from witnesses in criminal cases is limited, under Code, to those who have been examined as witnesses before the committing magistrate.—Ex parte Shaw, 61 Cal. 58.

[f] (Ind. 1895) A justice of the peace cannot require one subpœnaed as a witness on a prosecution for a crime other than a felony to enter into a recognizance for his appearance on the day of trial stated in the subpœna, there being no statutory authority therefor.—Clayborn v. Tompkins, 141 Ind. 19, 40 N. E. 121.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) Under Code 1873, § 4385, which provides that on change of venue in criminal cases the judge may require witnesses for the state to enter into recognizance for their appearance, the judge is not authorized to require the witness to furnish bond with sureties, and in default thereof to be kept in custody.—Comfort v. Kittle, 81 Iowa, 179, 46 N. W. 988.

[h] (Iowa, 1890) Code 1873, § 4385, which provides that, on change of venue in criminal cases, the accused shall give bond for his appearance, and the court or judge may require witnesses for the state to enter into "cognizance" for their appearance, should be construed as though the word "recognizance" had been used.—Comfort v. Kittle, 81 Iowa, 179, 46 N. W. 988.

[i] (Iowa, 1890) Under Code 1873, § 4385, which provides that on change of venue in criminal cases the judge may require witnesses for the state to enter into recognizance for their appearance, the order requiring such recognizance may be made at chambers without notice to the witness.—Comfort v. Kittle, 81 Iowa, 179, 46 N. W. 988.

[j] (Kan. 1873) On the continuance of a criminal case in the district court, the witnesses may be required to give personal recognizances for their appearance at the next term, but cannot be compelled to give recognizances with sureties; nor does the fact that such recognizance has been signed by a surety bind him.—State v. Lane, 11 Kan. 458.

[k] (Kan. 1895) Under Gen. St. 1889, c. 82, § 61, one who makes complaint for the arrest of another for a felony may be required to enter into a recognizance for his appearance as a witness against the person so charged, and on his refusal to do so may be held in custody.—In re Petrie, 1 Kan. App. 184, 40 Pac. 118.

sance to appear at a future day, but cannot require any surety of him.—Bickley v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 572.

[m] (Ky. 1886) A bond was executed for the appearance of a witness "at the time and place mentioned within." At the next term of court the witness appeared and was told by the attorney for the commonwealth, without any notice to return at a future term, that he could go. Held, that the terms of the bond were complied with and the sureties released.—Com. v. Stephens, 8 Ky. Law Rep. 61.

[n] (Miss. 1886) The circuit court, as a court of oyer and terminer, has the power to require a witness, who has been subpœnaed to testify for the state before the grand jury, to enter into a recognizance to appear either at a present or future term.—Gwynn v. State, 64 Miss. 324, 1 South. 237.

[o] (N. J. 1824) Witnesses in behalf of the prisoner may be compelled to recognize for their appearance at the trial.—State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 220.

[p] (N. J. 1880) Under Revision, p. 266, § 2, relating to recognizances of witnesses, magistrates have power, in criminal cases, to require witnesses examined by them to give recognizances, with sureties, for their appearance at the trial, and to commit them to the county jail in default thereof.—State v. Walsh, 3 N. J. Law J. 119.

[q] (N. Y. 1824) A witness from a foreign state, attending before arbitrators, is privileged from arrest; and, if arrested, will be discharged absolutely, and without filing common bail.—Sanford v. Chase, 3 Cow. 381.

[r] (Ohio, 1848) Swan's St. pp. 538, 539, authorizing a magistrate to require a witness in a criminal case to enter into a recognizance for his appearance, does not authorize the magistrate to exact recognizance with security, his own recognizance being sufficient.—Latshaw's Case, 1 Ohio Dec. 90.

[a] (Mass. 1815) An action of debt will lie on a recognizance running to the commonwealth.—Commonwealth v. Green, 12 Mass. 1.

[b] (N. Y. 1844) A recognizance for the appearance of a witness to testify on an indictment in a court of sessions must acknowledge an indebtedness to the people, and mention the offense charged, or no action can be had thereon.—People v. Rundle, 6 Hill, 506.

[c] (N. Y. 1849) A recognizance by the prosecutor of a criminal complaint, which by statute is to be conditioned that the prosecutor shall appear and testify at the next court having cognizance thereof, is not vitiated by the addition of the words "as well to the grand as the petit jury, and not depart the said court without leave."—People v. Millis, 5 Barb. 511.

[d] (N. C. 1839) The words of the act of 1715, prescribing that the magistrate shall take recognizances from the informer and witnesses to appear at the next court "where the matter is cognizable," and that the recognizances shall be returned into the office of "the court wherein the matter is to be tried," are merely directory as to the time and place of returning the proceedings, so that they may be acted on speedily and efficiently, for the advantage of each side. They mean only that the return shall be made to the next term of the court, in which, according to the recognizance, the party is to appear, so that the party shall not be required to appear at one term, or in one court, and the recognizance be returned to a subsequent term, or to a different court.—State v. Edney, 20 N. C. (3 & 4 Dev. & B.) 513.

[e] (Tex. 1890) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 314, requiring an examining magistrate to certify to all the proceedings had before him, failure to certify that bail was required for appearance as a witness is fatal to the enforcement of the bail-bond, and parol evidence of the fact is inadmissible to supply the omission.—Foat v. State, 28 Tex. App. 527, 13 S. W. 867.

[f] (Tex. 1890) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 318, providing that witnesses may be required by the magistrate, "upon the examination of any criminal accusation before him," to give bail for their appearance, etc., a witness' bail-bond not executed till four days after the examination is concluded, and the examining court has adjourned, and where no order requiring the bond had been entered of record by the magistrate, is void.—Foat v. State, 28 Tex. App. 527, 13 S. W. 867.

[g] (Vt. 1835) A recognizance by a justice of the peace, for the appearance of a witness, is not vitiated by containing the condition "and not depart without leave of court." The statute prescribes no particular form.—State Treasurer v. Woodward, 7 Vt. 529.

Right to fees during detention, see post, § 61.

[a] (U. S. 1860) A person arrested under Act Aug. 8, 1846 (9 Stat. 73), as a witness on the part of the United States in a criminal case, and unable to give the bond of $5,000 on being imprisoned, filed an affidavit stating that he was not in possession of certain documents, which it was desired that he should produce, and that he was not responsible for their alleged loss; that he was a householder and resident, and had been for the past 13 years, and that his health was feeble, and that the imprisonment was injurious. The government furnished no testimony directly contradicting any of these statements, and did not prove that the petitioner was able to give bail for his appearance. Held, that he might be discharged on executing his own recognizance in $1,000 penalty to appear and testify.—United States v. Lloyd, Fed. Cas. No. 15,614 [4 Blatchf. 427].

[b] (U. S. 1882) Where a federal court orders the arrest of a witness charged with having failed to obey a subpœna issued by it, and duly served, and the witness departs into another district before he can be arrested, any judge of the United States, having jurisdiction in the district to which the witness has removed, may order his arrest and removal back to the district in which he is charged with the offense.—In re Ellerbe (C. C.) 13 Fed. 530.

[c] (Cal. 1874) When a witness for the people in a criminal case is required to enter into an undertaking with sureties, to appear and testify, and is committed for failure to comply, and it appears that he is unable to procure sureties, he may be discharged, and his deposition may be forthwith taken on behalf of the people.—People v. Lee, 49 Cal. 37.

[d] (Cal. 1885) Where witnesses shall not be "unreasonably detained" (Const. art. 1, § 6), a witness who is detained for 90 days, and after several continuances, not satisfactorily accounted for, is entitled to discharge on habeas corpus.—Ex parte Dressler, 67 Cal. 257, 7 Pac. 645.

[e] (Iowa, 1878) Only in a case of actual contempt, and when necessary to the administration of justice, can a witness be arrested on a warrant directing his arrest in vacation. Under Code 1873, § 4217, the court may order his discharge by the officers entrusted with the writ, upon bail fixed by the court.—State v. Archer, 48 Iowa, 310.

[f] (Iowa, 1880) The decision of a magistrate ordering the commitment of a witness, under Code 1873, §§ 4248, 4249, 4251, for refusal to give security for his appearance, must be presumed legally and regularly made, and based on sufficient grounds.—Markwell v. Warren County, 53 Iowa, 422, 5 N. W. 570.

[g] (Mich. 1895) Although a person may, on proper showing, be held in custody as a witness, such detention will not be permitted merely on ex parte affidavits.—In re Lewellyn, 104 Mich. 318, 62 N. W. 554.

[h] (Mich. 1895) Persons detained as witnesses are held "upon civil process," under How. Ann. St. § 8941, providing that persons held on civil process shall not be confined in a room with those arrested on a criminal charge.—In re Lewellyn, 104 Mich. 318, 62 N. W. 554.

[i] (Minn. 1872) Under Laws 1868, c. 71, providing that on affidavit filed by the prosecuting attorney, stating that affiant has good reason to believe that certain persons, material witnesses, will leave the state before the trial, the court may order such persons brought before it, and, if in its judgment the circumstances of the case or the interests of the state warrant it, it may require such person to enter into a recognizance, with or without surety, as it might direct, and for a refusal to comply commit him to jail to await the trial, a witness for the state, who is willing to enter into his own recognizance to appear and testify at the trial, cannot be committed to await the trial, unless he intends to leave the state, and not return or be present at the trial, or otherwise evade his obligation to appear and testify, and, as thus construed, the act is not unconstitutional.—State v. Grace, 18 Minn. 398 (Gil. 359).

[j] (Minn. 1872) Where one accused of felony has been held to answer in the district court, the prosecution is deemed "pending" in such court, within the meaning of Laws 1868, c. 71, providing for the compulsory attendance of witnesses by committing them to jail, or holding them to bail, though the return of the magistrate may not have been filed.—State v. Grace, 18 Minn. 398 (Gil. 359).

[k] (Ohio, 1893) Under Rev. St. §§ 7150–7153, an examining magistrate has power, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to commit to prison a necessary witness against a person accused of crime.—Fawcet v. Linthecum, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 141.

Prevention of attendance of witness as criminal contempt, see "Contempt," vol. 10, c. 2379, § 4 [x].

§ 37. Excuses for failure to attend.

Payment or tender of fees and expenses, see ante, §§ 15, 16.

[a] (Ala. 1852) A defaulting witness may excuse himself by showing that, in failing to attend, he was not guilty of either negligence or willful disobedience, and this should be the limit of the power of the courts below in allowing excuses.—Maclin v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 670.

[b] (N. Y. 1836) A witness duly subpœnaed is bound to make extraordinary efforts to attend. Nothing but extreme poverty or sickness of himself or family will excuse him.—People v. Davis, 15 Wend. 602.

[c] (N. Y. 1852) Where a party has delayed the service of a subpœna, so as not to give the witness reasonable time to prepare to attend the trial, his nonattendance will be excused on comparatively slight grounds, although the shortness of the notice is not per se an excuse.—Chalmers v. Melville, 1 E. D. Smith, 502.

[d] (N. Y. 1853) That a witness deems his testimony immaterial does not excuse nonattendance.—Bonesteel v. Lynde, 8 How. Prac. 226; Id. 352.

[e] (N. Y. 1874) In a proceeding to punish a witness for contempt for neglecting to attend in obedience to a subpœna, it is a sufficient answer that he knows nothing material to the issue.—Morgan v. Morgan, 16 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 291.

[f] (N. C. 1842) The inability of a witness to attend court must be decided in reference to the modes of traveling which are in use in the community. If there are modes not impracticable, and it does not appear but that they were in the power of the party summoned, his nonattendance cannot be attributed to inability.—Eller v. Roberts, 25 N. C. 11.

[g] (Pa. 1788) Witnesses who failed to obey a subpœna because they were so ill as to be unable to do so are not in contempt.—Butcher v. Coats, 1 Dall. 340, 1 L. Ed. 166.

[h] (Pa. 1827) The absence of a witness is not excused by the difficulty of bringing her to the courthouse on account of lameness, provided her general health is good.—Pipher v. Lodge, 16 Serg. & R. 214.

[i] (Tenn. 1858) The extreme illness of witness' wife, "so that his attention to her was absolutely necessary to her comfort and safety," is not an excuse for failure to attend.—Slaughter v. Birdwell, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 341.

[j] (Tenn. 1858) Under Acts 1794, c. 1, § 29, the only "incapacity" which will excuse a witness duly summoned from its penalties for nonattendance is a physical incapacity.—Slaughter v. Birdwell, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 341.

[k] (Tenn. 1874) Serious illness of a witness' wife is a sufficient cause for his failure to attend court, within Code, § 3822.—Foster v. McDonald, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 619.

Place where attendance may be required, see ante, § 9.

Constitutional guaranty against deprivation of liberty as applied to imprisonment of witnesses for refusal to appear or testify, see "Constitutional Law," vol. 10, cc. 2161, 2162, § 744.

Duty of witness observing Saturday as Sabbath, see "Sunday," vol. 45, c. 165, § 85 [a].

Punishment of bankrupt or witnesses for failure to appear or answer interrogatories on examination in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," vol. 6, cc. 461, 462, § 405.

[a] If a witness merely disobeys a subpœna, the court will not in the first place grant an attachment for contempt, but the practice is to move for a rule to show cause.
—(N. Y. 1805) Jackson v. Mann, 2 Caines, 92; (Va. 1814) Morris v. Creel, 1 Va. Cas. 333.

[b] (U. S. 1860) A defendant, made liable by the state statute to examination as a witness for plaintiff, is liable to be attached for contempt in not obeying a subpœna issued by the federal circuit court and served on him, commanding him to attend and be examined on the trial of a civil suit at common law, pending in such court.—Fowler v. Hecker, Fed. Cas. No. 5,001 [4 Blatchf. 425].

[c] (Ala. 1838) A defendant, who neglects to answer on service of a subpœna upon him, places himself in contempt of the process of court.—Mussina v. Bartlett, 8 Port. 277.

[d] (Ala. 1848) A witness summoned before a grand jury to give evidence of crime, who declines to answer, may be proceeded against by indictment, but cannot be fined for contempt.—State v. Blocker, 14 Ala. 450.

[e] (Ill. 1850) If a witness refuses to appear before the master or to answer, the court, on information thereof, will punish him for contempt.—Brockman v. Aulger, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 277.

[f] (Ind. 1877) An attachment for contempt of court may be issued against a witness, based solely on the sheriff's return on a subpœna for such witness, showing the latter to have willfully refused to permit such subpœna to be served on him, and his refusal, with knowledge of its nature, to obey the same.—Wilson v. State, 57 Ind. 71.

[g] (Iowa, 1870) A witness is not entitled to release from commitment on habeas corpus, because the affidavit desired by the party at whose instance the subpœna was issued would not be legally admissible in the proceeding, pending in another forum, for which it is sought or in which it is desired to be used. Of this the witness or person subpœnaed has no right to judge.—Robb v. McDonald, 29 Iowa, 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211.

[h] (Iowa, 1883) A person subpœnaed to make affidavit before a justice of the peace, as permitted by Code 1873, §§ 3692, 3693, who refuses obedience, may be committed for contempt, although the affidavit may be useless as evidence in the case in which it is desired, and he cannot be released on habeas corpus.—State v. Seaton, 61 Iowa, 563, 16 N. W. 736.

[i] (Mich. 1862) Discontinuance of a suit obliges the discharge of one summoned as a witness therein and committed for contempt of court for refusal to answer.—In re Hall, 10 Mich. 210.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) A defendant was summoned to appear before a county judge for examination on behalf of plaintiffs, under Code, § 391, and on the day appointed made default in attendance without any sufficient excuse, and the examination was continued to a later day by stipulation between the attorneys for both parties. On the day appointed by the stipulation defendant did not appear. Held, that defendant would not be held in contempt, as it did not appear that plaintiffs appeared at that time, nor that there was any reason given why they did not, and the inference was that plaintiffs had abandoned the proceedings.—Gardiner v. Peterson, 14 How. Prac. 513.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) It is not an indictable criminal contempt to disobey the subpœna of the district attorney issued in a criminal case. Such disobedience is not embraced in subdivision 3, § 10, 2 Rev. St., which specifies "willful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by it," (a court of record.)—Sherwin v. People, 100 N. Y. 351, 3 N. E. 465.

[m] (Ohio, 1834) The object of an attachment against a witness for contempt is to punish him, not to redress the party injured.—State v. Nixon, Wright, 763.

[n] (Ohio, 1878) In a proceeding in aid of execution, before a referee, under Code, § 459, a witness was subpœnaed by the clerk of the court of common pleas to appear before the referee to testify; but no order had been made by the court for the examination of witnesses other than the judgment debtor, and the witness refused to appear in obedience to the subpœna. Held, that the subpœna issued by the clerk was not an order of the court, and the witness was not bound to obey the same, and therefore was not liable to be attached as for contempt.—Harman v. Waller, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 26, 4 Ohio Dec. 97.

[o] (S. C. 1837) The termination of a cause before an attachment for a contempt is moved for against a witness does not destroy the power of the court to punish him.—Johnson v. Wideman, Dud. 70.

[p] (Va. 1834) A circuit superior court ordered a subpœna for witnesses to attend the grand jury, then in session, and they intentionally concealed themselves from the sheriff to prevent the process from being served, and so prevented it from being served, until the grand jury was discharged. Held, on the construction of St. 1830–31, c. 11, § 25, that this was not a contempt punishable by the court in a summary manner.—Commonwealth v. Deskin, 4 Leigh, 685.

§ 39. Refusal to be sworn or to testify.

Refusal of expert to testify without additional compensation as contempt, see post, § 66.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Witnesses before an examiner will be compelled to answer, when it seems probable the testimony may be relevant; but care will be exercised to avoid unnecessary and improper inquiry into private affairs.—Robinson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (C. C.) 28 Fed. 340.

[b] (U. S. 1891) On an examination before a special examiner a witness will be compelled, by proceedings in contempt, to answer questions that seem to be material to the issue.—Johnson Steel Street Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. (C. C.) 48 Fed. 196.

[c] (U. S. 1892) In the case of the refusal to testify of a witness subpœnaed on the trial of an interference, the remedy is by petition for an attachment for contempt, and not for an order to compel the witness to answer the questions put to him.—Brungger v. Smith (C. C.) 49 Fed. 124.

[d] (Ga. 1887) Upon a prosecution for libel, under Code, § 4522, the court may fine and imprison the publisher of the newspaper containing the libel, who refuses to give up the real name of the author of the publication, or to testify at all, although he may have been indicted for the same offense.—Pledger v. State, 77 Ga. 242, 3 S. E. 320.

[e] (Mich. 1860) A magistrate having jurisdiction, under Comp. Laws, c. 194, to examine and commit for trial, or hold to bail, persons charged with crimes not cognizable before a justice of the peace, has no power to commit a witness for refusing to testify on such examination. He has no powers except such as are expressly conferred by this chapter.—In re Farnham, 8 Mich. 89.

[f] (Mo. 1879) Where a witness pertinaciously refuses to answer a lawful question, to compel obedience the court may order his imprisonment until he does answer, and need not limit his imprisonment to a given number of days; and this, whether such contumacious refusal to answer be before the court or the grand jury.—Ex parte Renshaw, 6 Mo. App. 474.

[g] (N. Y. 1838) A defendant may refuse to answer an illegal or improper question, on an examination under an order of reference; but, if he refuses to answer a proper question, he may be punished by the court for a contempt in refusing to answer.—Gihon v. Albert, 7 Paige, 278.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) Where complaint is made that an offense has been committed, the magistrate may compel the attendance of witnesses; and if any witness, on being brought before the magistrate, refuses to be sworn and to testify, he may be adjudged guilty of a criminal contempt, and punished by imprisonment.—People v. Hicks, 15 Barb. 153.

[i] (N. Y. 1857) The power of a justice of the peace to commit a witness, under 2 Rev. St. p. 274, § 279, for refusing to be sworn as provided in that section, is conditional, being dependent upon the fact that the party at whose instance the witness attends shall make oath that the testimony of the witness is so far material that without it he cannot safely proceed in the trial of the cause. The power of the justice to commit does not vest until the party makes such oath. Hence this provision is not applicable to the case of the refusal on the part of a person arrested on a charge of intoxication, under Laws 1857, c. 628, to be sworn as to the cause of his intoxication.—People v. Webster, 14 How. Prac. 242.

[j] (N. Y. 1857) Justices of the peace in this state have no power to commit persons refusing to be sworn as witnesses, in examinations before them on complaints in criminal causes. People v. Webster, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 503.

[k] (N. Y. 1861) Where a witness is committed for refusing to testify, it is not necessary that the commitment should show affirmatively that he was not entitled to the privilege claimed by him, though the commitment state that he claimed the privilege.—People v. Kelly, 12 Abb. Prac. 150.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 856, 857, authorizing the judge, on proof by affidavit that a witness refuses to answer a legal question, to commit him to jail by warrant, specifying the cause of commitment, etc., the fact that notice of the application was given, and an order to show cause granted, does not require a decision evidenced by an order in writing, as the statute does not require notice or rule to show cause, and such procedure is a mere nullity.—In re McAdam, 54 Hun, 637, 7 N. Y. Supp. 454, affirming judgment 5 N. Y. Supp. 387.

[m] (S. C. 1818) A witness persevering in silence, when questioned, may be committed for contempt, and confined until he does answer.—Lott v. Burrel, 2 Mill, Const. 167.

[n] (Tenn. 1884) If a witness appear under a subpœna issued by order of the attorney general during the term of court to testify as to gaming and refuse to answer, he is not guilty of contempt, since the attorney general has no authority to order such subpœna issued.—Warner v. State, 81 Tenn. (13 Lea) 52.

[o] (Vt. 1874) On a proceeding under Gen. St. c. 94, § 10, for the punishment of intoxication, it is error to require defendant to disclose the place where and the person of whom he procured the liquor, and to commit him for failure to make the disclosure, as this is a proceeding under section 33, in which there is no prosecution of the intoxicated person.—In re Pierce, 46 Vt. 374.

[p] (Wis. 1889) Rev. St. §§ 2515, 2517, give the municipal judge of Dane county all the power and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in criminal matters, and confer on him exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal cases in the city of Madison. Section 4053 provides that subpœnas may issue by any justice of the peace, municipal judge, or police justice, requiring the attendance of witnesses within the territory in which such officer has jurisdiction, in any action, matter, or proceeding pending or to be examined into before any court, magistrate, or officer. Sections 4763, 4776, provide that, on complaint being made to such magistrate that a crime has been committed, he shall examine on oath the complainant, and any witnesses produced by him, and reduce the same to writing; and, in case any person summoned fail or refuse to appear, or any witness appearing shall refuse to be sworn, he shall be liable to the same penalties, and shall be proceeded against as provided in case of jurors and witnesses in justices' courts in civil cases. Held that, in examining whether a crime has been committed, the municipal judge may also examine as to who committed it, and for that purpose he has discretionary power to issue subpœnas for such witnesses as he deems necessary; and, where one subpœnaed refuses to be sworn or testify, such municipal judge may punish him for contempt.—State v. Keyes, 75 Wis. 288, 44 N. W. 13.

Compliance with writ in general, see ante, § 25.
Sufficiency of writ, see ante, § 22.

[a] (La. 1873) The consequence of not producing books and papers in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum is not imprisonment for contempt, but the party who has obtained the subpœna has the right to ask that the facts which he states in his affidavit for the subpœna be taken as proved.—Columbia Fire Co. v. Purcell, 25 La. Ann. 283.

[b] (Mo. 1879) The manager of a local telegraph office will be committed for contempt where he refuses to obey a subpœna duces tecum, issued by the court at the instance of the grand jury, commanding him to produce before the grand jury all telegrams or copies of telegrams in his office which passed between certain persons named during the last six months.—Ex parte Brown, 7 Mo. App. 484, affirmed (1880) 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426.

[c] (N. Y. 1861) The refusal of a witness to produce papers acknowledged to be in his possession, for the reason that it would be a breach of his privilege as attorney, constitutes contempt.—In re Mitchell, 12 Abb. Prac. 249.

[d] (N. Y. 1864) On application for an order for the issue of an attachment against a witness for contempt of court during a hearing before a referee, it appeared that the witness was directed, while under examination, to produce certain books not then in court, and which he declared under oath that he could not then produce. No prior notice to produce the books had been given to the witness. Held, that the application must be refused.—Heerdt v. Wetmore, 25 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Rob.) 697.

[e] (N. Y. 1874) In a proceeding to punish a witness for contempt for neglecting to attend, in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, it is a sufficient answer that he has not any document, such as he is called upon to produce, material and necessary as evidence tending to prove the case of the party requiring his attendance.—Morgan v. Morgan, 16 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 291.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) The mere assertion of officers of a corporation that the corporation's books are not in their possession is not sufficient to purge them of contempt in disobeying an order of court for the production of the books at an examination before trial, where it has been shown that the books were lately in their possession, and they have failed in any manner to account for their disappearance.—Fenlon v. Dempsey, 21 Abb. N. C. 291.

[g] (N. Y. 1893) The court may punish for contempt one who fails to produce books pursuant to the subpœna duces tecum.—Holly Mfg. Co. v. Venner, 74 Hun, 458, 26 N. Y. Supp. 581, judgment affirmed (1894) 143 N. Y. 639, 37 N. E. 648.

[h] (Tex. 1896) A defendant to whom a subpœna duces tecum has been issued, requiring him to produce his account books to be used as evidence for plaintiff, who appears, but refuses to produce the books, is guilty of contempt.—Cullers v. Birge (Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 986.

§ 41. Departure or absence during trial and discharge.

Payment or tender of fees, see ante, § 16.
Sufficiency of subpœna, see ante, § 12 [e].

[a] (N. Y. 1887) A witness subpœnaed to attend forthwith, who went promptly, and, when he arrived, found that the court had adjourned, on which he returned to his home, should not have been punished for contempt.—People v. Potter, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 753.

[b] (Ohio, 1834) If a party gives his witness leave of absence, and he departs, he is not in contempt, and, if attached, will be discharged at the cost of the party.—State v. Nixon, Wright, 763.

[c] (Pa. 1887) Where witnesses were in attendance at court, and it was found that the case would not be reached before the following week, they were permitted by the court to go home before Saturday, to return the following Monday; but in such a case special permission from the court is necessary, and should be entered of record.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

[d] (Tenn. 1839) A nonsuit, though set aside at the same term at which it is taken, operates as a discharge of the witnesses in attendance.—Cochran v. Brown, 20 Tenn. (1 Humph.) 329.

[a] (Ala. 1852) The statute imposing a forfeiture on a defaulting witness does not give the party summoning the witness any right to this sum; but it is imposed as a punishment on the delinquent.—Maclin v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 670.

[b] (Ala. 1858) To justify a judgment against a defaulting witness, who was summoned to give evidence before the grand jury, the record must affirmatively show a substantial compliance with the statute. Code, § 3492.—Durden v. State, 32 Ala. 579.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) Where a witness is a party to a suit in which his attendance is required, no technical objection to the regularity or sufficiency of the subpœna should be suffered to prevail, in a suit to recover damages for failing to obey the same.—McCall v. Butterworth, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 329.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) In an action for damages for failing to obey a subpœna, it is not indispensably necessary that the return of the officer should show that a copy of the subpœna was delivered to the witness.—McCall v. Butterworth, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 329.

[e] (Mich. 1845) It is no answer to an action for damages occasioned by defendant's nonattendance as a witness, that the court from which the subpœna issued, refused, on motion, to impose a fine on defendant for contempt in disobeying the supbœna, but accepted his excuse.—Prentiss v. Webster, 2 Doug. 5.

[f] (Mo. 1852) A witness, subpœnaed, his fees having been tendered to him, who fails to attend on the trial to which he is summoned, is liable for the damages occasioned by his nonappearance, though the suit wherein he was summoned has not been determined.—Connett v. Hamilton, 16 Mo. 442.

[g] (N. Y. 1834) An action on the case will not lie against a witness for nonattendance in court; it appearing that plaintiff voluntarily submitted to a nonsuit, and that the witness appeared at the place of trial a short time after the nonsuit was entered, and it appearing, also, that plaintiff could have proved in another way all the facts essential to his recovery.—West v. Tuttle, 11 Wend. 639.

[h] (N. Y. 1846) A witness is not liable to the penalty fixed by the statute for not attending when subpœnaed, unless his evidence is material.—Courtney v. Baker, 3 Denio, 27.

[i] (N. Y. 1847) An action may be maintained against a defaulting witness for the penalty and the damages sustained by plaintiff, though a jury was not sworn in the cause in which the witness was subpœnaed.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[j] (N. Y. 1847) To enable plaintiff to recover the costs of circuit against a defaulting witness, it must appear that the failure to try the cause was on account of his absence.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[k] (N. Y. 1882) In order to recover the statutory penalty for the nonattendance of a witness, it must be shown that he was a material witness, and that damages resulted from his nonattendance.—Carrington v. Hutson, 28 Hun, 371.

[l] (N. C. 1809) A witness for the state, who has judgment nisi entered against him on his recognizance, may apply for a remission of the forfeiture, if he do it before a sci. fa. is issued against him.—State v. Herndon, 5 N. C. 269.

[m] (Tenn. 1833) It is a good defense for a witness, against whom a forfeiture has been taken for nonattendance, that he was discharged by the party who subpœnaed him, or told to attend if it was convenient, and, if not, that he should not be called out; but the witness cannot discharge himself on his own affidavit.—Duke v. Given, 12 Tenn. (4 Yerg.) 478.

[n] (Tenn. 1835) A witness who fails to attend on subpœna by the grand jury is not liable to a forfeiture, since he should be summoned by the court.—State v. Butler, 16 Tenn. (8 Yerg.) 83.

[o] (Tenn. 1836) It is not necessary that the witness should have been summoned in the county in which he resided, to incur the forfeiture for nonattendance. A legal summons executed on him personally, or left at his place of residence, is sufficient.—Smith v. Barger, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 322.

[p] (Tenn. 1883) The forfeiture given by statute may be taken against a witness regularly summoned and failing to appear, although it does not appear affirmatively that his default was willful.—State v. Thomas, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 113.

[q] (Vt. 1838) A witness who has had his travel fee and one day's attendance tendered, and who attended one day and then left the court, is not liable for the penalty under the statute, if the subpœna was served by an indifferent person, who was not named in the subpœna.—Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493.

Justice court's jurisdiction, see "Justices of the Peace," vol. 31, c. 989, § 134.

[a] (Ala. 1836) The fact that no return appears on a scire facias issued against a defaulting witness is sufficient ground for reversing a judgment rendered thereon.—Catoe v. Harrison, 3 Port. 219.

[b] (Ala. 1844) On scire facias against a witness for a failure to obey a subpœna, the witness may excuse himself on his own oath.—Livingston v. Lucas, 6 Ala. 147.

[c] (Ala. 1852) A scire facias against a defaulting witness should set out the subpœna, either verbatim or substantially, and aver that it was served. It should also contain an averment showing at what day and term the witness was bound to appear, or it is fatally defective.—Emanuel v. Ketchum, 21 Ala. 257.

[d] (Ala. 1852) In scire facias against a defaulting witness, against whom a judgment nisi has been rendered, the writ, when no declaration is filed, should show by positive averment that a subpœna had been issued and served, and then set out in substance the judgment nisi; in short, every material fact to entitle plaintiff to judgment.—Spence v. Simmons, 21 Ala. 563.

[e] (Ala. 1866) A demurrer which does not state any specific objection to a scire facias against a defaulting witness should be overruled.—Pomeroy v. State, 40 Ala. 63.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) In an action for damages for failure to appear as witness in obedience to a subpœna, the return of service upon the subpœna not being conclusive, plaintiff may show by evidence aliunde that the writ was duly and legally served.—McCall v. Butterworth, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 329.

[g] (Mich. 1845) In an action for damages occasioned by defendant's nonattendance as a witness in obedience to a subpœna, plaintiff is entitled to recover any damages immediately consequential upon such nonattendance; e. g., that occasioned by the postponement of the trial.—Prentiss v. Webster, 2 Doug. 5.

[h] (Miss. 1886) Where a judgment nisi has been rendered "for a failure to appear to testify before the grand jury," etc., and a sci. fa. is issued to show cause why a judgment should not be entered for a failure to appear "to answer to the state of Mississippi on a charge preferred against him," etc., there is a fatal variance, which necessitates the amendment of the writ. In these cases writs of sci. fa. should be amended to accord with the judgment nisi.—Gwynn v. State, 64 Miss. 324, 1 South. 237.

[i] (N. Y. 1828) In an action for the penalty imposed by 1 Rev. Laws, p. 524, for nonattendance of witness, the declaration must aver that the fees were paid or tendered to the witness.—McKeon v. Lane, 1 Hall, 319.

[j] (N. Y. 1836) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 400, authorizing the recovery of damages and also a penalty against witnesses for nonattendance when duly subpœnaed, and giving, by section 43, the "proper action" for the injury complained of, a count in case and a count in debt might be joined in the same declaration.—Smith v. Merwin, 15 Wend. 184.

[k] (N. Y. 1846) A witness not being liable to the penalty fixed by statute for not attending when subpœnaed, unless his evidence is material, the admission of the party suing for the penalty that the witness knew nothing about the matter in controversy is admissible in a suit for such penalty.—Courtney v. Baker, 3 Denio, 27.

[l] (Tenn. 1836) In a scire facias, issued to enforce the penalty for the nonattendance of a witness, it is not necessary to set out the subpœna verbatim.—Smith v. Barger, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 322.

[m] (Tenn. 1842) A scire facias, to have execution for the penalty of a subpœna, must show by direct averment of the time of the service of the subpœna and of the time of the trial, that the defendant was bound to attend at that time.—State v. Lacy, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 225.

[n] (Tenn. 1850) A judgment nisi against a witness for a failure to attend in accordance with a subpœna must show that the subpœna was executed five days before the court to which it was returnable, or it will be void.—Dickenson v. Kincaid, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 72.

[o] (Tenn. 1852) The penalty given by the statute to be recovered against witnesses who have been summoned at the instance of the accused in a criminal prosecution, and who fail to attend, can only be recovered in the name of and for the use of the state.—Nelson v. Ewell, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 271.

[p] (Tenn. 1852) The liability incurred by a witness in default is several in its nature. The remedy to enforce it is against him alone, and it cannot be united with a proceeding against other witnesses in like default.—Nelson v. Ewell, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 271.

[q] (Tenn. 1854) A scire facias on a judgment nisi against a witness for nonattendance on a subpœna must state distinctly the legal grounds of his liability, and must leave nothing to implication or inference which the law requires, to render him liable.—Knott v. Smith, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 244.

[r] (Tenn. 1854) Under Acts 1794, c. 1, § 33, a witness summoned in a criminal transaction, failing to appear, forfeits the sum of $250 to the state. Held, that a judgment rendered against a defaulting witness for the sum of $125 is void.—State v. Dill, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 414.

[s] (Tenn. 1855) Scire facias against a witness to recover a forfeiture for nonappearance under Acts 1794, c. 1, § 29, must be tested of the term at which the judgment nisi was entered; the witness being required to show cause "at the next term after his failure."—Kincaid v. Rogers, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 1.

[t] (Tenn. 1855) An accidental failure of service of process, properly tested, will not, however, defeat the remedy.—Kincaid v. Rogers, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 1.

[u] (Tenn. 1874) Where the clerk of a chancery court failed to issue a scire facias during the term at which a judgment nisi against a witness had been rendered, an alias scire facias may properly be issued at the next term, requiring defendant to show cause why the judgment nisi should not be made absolute.—Upton v. Girdner, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 183.

[v] (Tenn. 1895) A scire facias cannot issue against a defaulting witness to appear and show cause why a judgment should not be rendered against him where there is no judgment nisi on which to base the scire facias.—Rogers v. Goins, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 361, 32 S. W. 197.

—— ATTORNEYS AT LAW, § 52.
—— PARTIES, § 53.
—— OFFICERS, AGENTS, OR MEMBERS OF CORPORATION, § 54.
LIMITATION OF NUMBER OF WITNESSES, § 55.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Witnesses do not lose their right to mileage and per diem by not insisting on prepayment; and the party summoning them, being bound to pay such mileage and per diem, may tax them in his costs.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[b] (Iowa, 1853) Under Code 1873, § 2544, allowing compensation to a witness for attending a trial before a justice of the peace, a witness is entitled to his fees from the county for his attendance in criminal cases on a preliminary examination before a justice of the peace.—Johnson County v. Porter, 4 G. Greene, 79.

[c] (Kan. 1878) In the absence of express statutory provision therefor, a witness for the prosecution is not entitled to fees, unless there is a conviction.—Shawnee County v. Ballinger, 20 Kan. 590.

[d] (Ky. 1830) A witness who attends and deposes, in obedience to a subpœna which he has acknowledged by a written indorsement, is entitled to pay for his attendance.—Brown v. Moore, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 306, 20 Am. Dec. 142.

[e] (Mo. 1894) A witness who accepts service of a subpœna is entitled to fees for attendance.—McHoney v. Kerwin, 56 Mo. App. 459.

[f] (N. Y. 1808) Poor witnesses appearing for the people on subpœna are equally entitled to pay as if they had agreed on recognizance.—People v. Duell, 3 Johns. 449.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) A third person, who is required to attend and be examined in supplementary proceedings as to property in his possession belonging to the judgment debtor, is not entitled to witness fees.—Heckman v. Bach, 20 Abb. N. C. 401.

[h] (N. C. 1801) A witness is entitled to have his attendance dues taxed in execution, though a previous execution has omitted them.—Anonymous, 3 N. C. 138.

[i] (N. C. 1857) Witnesses summoned by one suing in forma pauperis are entitled to their costs. The officers of the court only are included in the order authorized by Rev. Code, c. 31, § 43.—Morris v. Rippy, 49 N. C. 533.

[j] (N. C. 1876) Where the names of witnesses are indorsed on a bill which was prepared and submitted to the grand jury, such witnesses may be summoned and allowed compensation for attending.—Lewis v. Wake, 74 N. C. 194.

[k] (N. C. 1876) Witnesses cannot be paid for appearing before the grand jury on a general inquiry, since there is no authority for such summonses.—Lewis v. Wake, 74 N. C. 194.

[l] (Pa. 1887) Where a witness is neither subpœnaed nor examined, but attends on request, the court may, if satisfied that the party who procured his attendance did it in good faith, expecting to require his testimony, make an allowance for payment.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

[m] (Pa. 1890) Act May 19, 1889 (P. L. 129), providing that, in all road cases, "it shall be lawful for the court hearing such proceedings to make such order about the payment of the necessary costs incurred as to the court shall appear right and just," simply authorizes the court to direct by whom the costs shall be paid, and does not empower it to order payment of witness fees, which have never been considered taxable in road cases.—In re Lebanon & Dyberry Road (Quart. Sess.) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 461.

[n] (Pa. 1895) Under Act May 19, 1887, a county is liable for the payment of costs to a witness who appeared before the grand jury and was subpœnaed at the trial though the indictment was quashed, and a new indictment was subsequently found, upon which a trial was had; said witness testifying therein, and the prisoner being convicted.—Richards v. Clearfield County (Com. Pl.) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 227.

Right to mileage, see post, §§ 67–69.
—— for travel outside state or district, see post, § 68.

[a] (U. S. 1886) All parts of the state of South Carolina are within the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court for the Eastern district of South Carolina; and per diem and mileage will be allowed witnesses attending at a trial in that court who come from the Western district of that state, no matter what the distance.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[b] (Ala. 1893) Though Code, § 2801, provides that the evidence of a witness may be taken by deposition where he resides more than 100 miles from the place of trial, if such a witness attends the trial when subpœnaed he is entitled to his mileage and per diem fees.—Alabama Midland Ry. Co. v. Rushing, 103 Ala. 542, 15 South. 853.

[c] (Ill. 1881) A witness, summoned from another county to testify in a habeas corpus proceeding growing out of an arrest for crime, is entitled to fees, in accordance with Rev. St. c. 65, § 8.—Angell v. Union County, 8 Ill. App. Bradw.) 244.

[d] (N. Y. 1824) A witness attending from a foreign state is within 2 Rev. Laws, p. 29, entitling witnesses attending from a foreign county to 50 cents a day.—Nichols v. Doty, 8 Cow. 352.

[e] (Or. 1886) Act 1885, providing that "in all criminal actions and proceedings witnesses residing within two miles of the place of trial, or the place where they are required to appear and testify, shall not be entitled to receive either witness fees or mileage," is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 18, providing that the "particular services" of any man shall not be demanded without just compensation.—Daly v. Multnomah County, 14 Or. 20, 12 Pac. 11.

[f] (Tex. 1881) A witness, who had been subpœnaed in a cause, removed from the county in which the suit was pending. His deposition was taken. He afterwards returned to the county and attended the trial. Held, that he was entitled to witness fees.—Allbright v. Corley, 54 Tex. 372.

[a] (U. S. 1804) A witness may be allowed his fees, although not regularly summoned.—United States v. Williams, Fed. Cas. No. 16,709 [1 Cranch, C. C. 178].

[b] (U. S. 1805) Witnesses who attended in response to a summons, though served by a private person, are entitled to their fees.—Power v. Semmes, Fed. Cas. No. 11,360 [1 Cranch, C. C. 247].

[c] (U. S.) Witnesses may become entitled to fees as having attended a federal court "pursuant to law," though they have done so voluntarily, without being subpœnaed.—(1888) The Vernon (D. C.) 36 Fed. 113; (1889) Eastman v. Sherry (C. C.) 37 Fed. 844; (1893) Pinson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 464.

[d] (U. S. 1893) Where a witness in a federal court, who lives in another state more than 100 miles away, and therefore cannot be served with subpœna, voluntarily attends in good faith on the request of a party who deemed his testimony material, such witness is entitled to the usual fees and to mileage for 100 miles.—Burrow v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 278.

[e] (Ga. 1895) A nonresident witness who appeared pursuant to a subpœna issued in a criminal case which was not signed by the clerk of the superior court and the solicitor general of the circuit, as required by Code, § 3845, was not entitled to compensation or mileage.—Harris v. Early County, 96 Ga. 186, 22 S. E. 704.

[f] (Mo. 1894) It is error to tax fees of a witness in the absence of evidence that he attended the trial in pursuance of service of a subpœna.—McHoney v. Kerwin, 56 Mo. App. 459.

[g] (N. Y. 1859) Witnesses who come on request, without subpœna, are entitled to the allowance for traveling expenses, and also to the per diem allowance for the days during which the case is actually on the day calendar, and the court actually in session, and the witnesses in attendance.—Vence v. Speir, 18 How. Prac. 168.

[h] (N. C. 1824) A witness, who attends court without a subpœna to him, is not entitled to prove his attendance so as to charge the losing party.—Thompson v. Hodges, 10 N. C. 318.

[i] (Pa.) A witness who attends and is examined without the service of a subpœna is entitled to his pay and mileage.—(1803) De Benneville v. De Benneville, 1 Bin. 46; (1874) Lagrosse v. Curran, 10 Phila. 140; (1884) Herr v. Keener, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 337; (1887) Commonwealth v. Smith, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

[j] (Pa. 1874) Witnesses attending without subpœna, and not called to testify, are entitled to their costs, where a subpœna had been taken out, but they waived its service, and where there was no allegation that their testimony was not needed.—Lagrosse v. Curran, 10 Phila. 140.

[k] (S. C. 1804) Witnesses called and sworn at the trial, if it be not done fraudulently and collusively, are entitled to their costs, though not subpœnaed.—Price v. McGee, 1 Brev. 455.

Amount of compensation, see post, § 59.
Right to fees in several causes, see post, § 64.

[a] (U. S. 1803) A witness recognized and attending the court on the part of defendant, if sworn and sent before the grand jury on the part of the United States, is entitled to be paid by the United States for his attendance on the trial.—Ex parte Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 7,367 [1 Wash. C. C. 47].

[b] (U. S. 1851) When a person is summoned as a juror, and at the same term is subpœnaed by the United States as a witness, and attends in obedience to each process, and, according to the practice of the court, makes affidavit of such attendance, he is entitled to compensation for each service.—Edwards v. Bond, Fed. Cas. No. 4,294 [5 McLean, 300].

[c] (U. S. 1886) A defendant in attendance upon court under indictment, under recognizance, who is also under recognizance as witness for the United States in another case, is entitled to his mileage and witness fees for attendance in the latter case.—In re Addis (D. C.) 28 Fed. 794.

[d] (U. S. 1887) Plaintiff was a witness in a case under recognizance and also at the same time a grand juror. He was paid his per diem as such juror. Held, that he was only entitled to the per diem of a witness from the time he was discharged as grand juror.—Ex parte Turner (D. C.) 32 Fed. 372.

[e] (Me. 1852) One is not authorized to certify to his attendance as a witness, unless he come into the courthouse and be in actual attendance there.—Kennedy v. Wright, 34 Me. 351.

[f] (Pa. 1878) A witness in attendance at court, under arrest on a judgment which was afterwards withdrawn, will not be allowed witness fees in the case in which he testified.—Commonwealth v. Lovett, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 875.

[g] (Pa. 1886) A witness in a case in court where he is at the same time a party to a suit in a different case is presumably there in his own interest, and is not entitled to witness fees.—Beatty v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

[h] (Pa. 1887) Where the rules of court do not require the attendance of defendants or their witnesses on the first day of the term, but only the attendance of grand jurors and witnesses for the commonwealth, one attending at such time as a witness for the commonwealth, though bound over by recognizance to the sessions as defendant in another case, is entitled to witness fees for that day and single mileage.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

[i] (Pa. 1894) Where a witness attends court as plaintiff, and also as witness in another suit, and stays one day after the trial of his suit to testify in such other suit, he is entitled to witness' fees for one day and mileage for returning home.—Fritz v. Fritz (Com. Pl.) 2 Lack. Leg. N. 187.

[j] (Pa. 1894) Where a witness is attending court in a case in which he is defendant, he is not entitled to witness' fees and mileage when called to testify in the other case for which he was subpœnaed, and which was tried before his case.—Fritz v. Fritz (Com. Pl.) 2 Lack. Leg. N. 186.

§ 48. Failure or inability to testify.

Persons liable for compensation, see post, § 70 [b].

Recovery as costs of witness fees affected by incompetency of witness, see "Costs," vol. 13, cc. 683, 684, § 723.

[a] Witnesses who are subpœnaed in a cause are entitled to their fees, whether sworn or not.—(Ill. 1841) Leigh v. Hodges, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 15;

(Pa. 1803) De Benneville v. De Benneville, 1 Bin. 46; (1887) Commonwealth v. Smith, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 321.

[b] (U. S. 1886) Witnesses subpœnaed to testify to a particular point will be allowed mileage and per diem up to the admission of their testimony, although the other party admits at the trial the point to be proved by such witnesses; and, a second trial being had, and no stipulation or entry made on record that the point would be admitted at such second trial, such witnesses will be allowed per diem and mileage for attendance at that trial also.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[c] (N. H. 1860) A witness who is summoned to attend court, and paid for his travel and one day's attendance, or who is summoned and attends without being paid, if he remain in attendance in good faith until the cause is tried or otherwise disposed of, without notice that his attendance is no longer required, is entitled to his fees for such attendance from the party summoning him, and, if they be not paid, may maintain an action to recover them.—Gunnison v. Gunnison, 41 N. H. 121, 77 Am. Dec. 764.

[d] (Pa. 1887) Fees cannot be taxed for witnesses rejected as incompetent, though subpœnaed in good faith.—Eakin v. Fulmer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 319.

[e] (Pa. 1888) A witness is entitled to fees for every day he was in attendance, though he was not examined.—In re Goodman's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 254.

[f] (Pa. 1890) No fees should be allowed for witnesses subpœnaed by defendant to testify as to his character for truth and veracity, where no attack of that sort was made, and there was no reasonable ground for believing it would be made.—First Nat. Bank v. Broadhead (Com. Pl.) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 536.

[g] (Pa. 1894) A witness who was too drunk to answer questions on cross-examination is not entitled to witness' fees or mileage.—Fritz v. Fritz (Com. Pl.) 2 Lack. Leg. N. 187.

[h] (Tenn. 1846) A witness is entitled to his witness fees, if he is examined, even though he proves to be an incompetent witness. His incompetency may be waived, or his interest released, and it does not follow that he was not examined, because he appears of record to have been incompetent.—Gray v. Alexander, 26 Tenn. (7 Humph.) 16.

On amount of compensation, see post, § 62.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Where a cause was on the docket, and could be tried at a term of court at which it was not tried, and, before learning that the trial would not take place, a party summoned witnesses whom he was not able to notify that the trial would not be had, such witnesses, attending court, are entitled to their mileage and per diem.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[b] (U. S. 1889) A witness for the United States, under subpœna, attended court. The case was continued, and the witnesses were verbally instructed to attend at the next term. In the meantime he removed his residence into another state, but without further summons attended court, and was used as a witness. Held, that he was entitled to his per diem and mileage from his place of residence.—In re Williams (D. C.) 37 Fed. 325.

[c] (Ga. 1855) Under Judiciary Act 1799, § 21, if a witness is not present in court when his case is postponed or continued, and so remains in ignorance of such postponement or continuance, it is by his own fault, and he cannot charge for any subsequent attendance.—Robison v. Banks, 17 Ga. 211.

[d] (Ill. 1889) A witness who attends court is entitled to his fees, though he was not examined by reason of the continuance of the cause to another term.—Fish v. Farwell, 33 Ill. App. 242.

[e] (N. Y. 1842) A witness living at a distance, who was delayed by accident from reaching the circuit on the first day, but arrived the second, before the court was open and the cause reached on the calendar, is entitled to his fees, though by consent the cause had been adjourned for the circuit on the first day.—Anonymous, 3 Hill, 457.

[f] (N. Y. 1849) A witness was not subpœnaed until the night of the first day of the circuit, for the reason that he could not be found. He went to court the next morning, but arrived an hour after the cause had been postponed. Held that, since the witness arrived in time to have been sworn if the cause had been tried, and there was no laches on the part of the witness or the party, the witness was entitled to his fees.—Clarks v. Staring, 4 How. Prac. 243.

[g] (N. Y. 1857) A witness residing out of the state and attending the circuit court, which was twice adjourned before the cause in which his testimony was given was tried, is entitled to only one traveling fee from the state line and fees for attendance only on the days at which the court was adjourned and at which he actually attended; and a witness residing in the county is entitled to like fees for attendance and traveling fees for going from his residence to the place where the court was held and returning three times.—Moulton v. Townsend, 16 How. Prac. 306.

[h] (Pa. 1895) Where, in obedience to a subpœna, a witness traveled to the nearest station, and, being met there by a telegram informing him that the case was continued, returned home, he is not entitled to witness fees or mileage.—Shutt v. Canon (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 463, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 167, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 337.

Right of bankrupt and wife to witness fees on examination in bankruptcy, see "Bankruptcy," vol. 6, c. 462, § 407.

[a] (Pa. 1881) In the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, witnesses who are devisees or legatees named in the will, and therefore interested, are entitled to witness fees if they are not parties to the record.—Lightner v. Houser, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 103.

[b] (Pa. 1886) Where there has been an absolute assignment of a chose in action, and action is brought thereon by the assignee, there is no presumption that the assignor is in court to protect his own interests; and, if he is subpœnaed as a witness and gives testimony, he is entitled to his witness fees.—Beatty v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

[c] (Pa. 1891) A wife who testifies as a material witness in a suit on behalf of her husband is entitled to witness fees.—Bell v. Dawes (Com. Pl.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 636.

[d] (Pa. 1892) Where the husband survives, the right of action for the death of the wife by the wrongful act of another is in him alone, and the children cannot be made parties; and hence, where they are called and examined as witnesses, they are entitled to the usual fees and mileage.—Kauffman v. Manor Tp. (Com. Pl.) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 304.

[e] (Pa. 1893) A husband who testifies on behalf of his wife, having been regularly summoned, is entitled to fees.—Curry v. Philips (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 479.

[f] (S. C. 1881) In an action by a third person against a sheriff to recover cotton seized under an agricultural lien, the lienee is entitled to recover fees as a witness against plaintiff, who failed in the action.—Winsmith v. Dewberry, 14 S. C. 554.

[a] (U. S. 1887) A deputy marshal is an officer of the court, but, unless he be actually engaged in waiting on the court, he is entitled to per diem and mileage if he be summoned as a witness for the government.—Ex parte Burdell (D. C.) 32 Fed. 681.

[b] (U. S. 1887) A deputy clerk is an officer of court, and is not entitled to per diem and mileage when used as a witness for the government in a case tried in the court in which he is officiating.—Ex parte Burdell (D. C.) 32 Fed. 681.

[c] (U. S. 1887) The clerks employed by the marshal in his office, keeping his accounts, are not officers of court, and are entitled to fees and mileage, if used as witnesses for the government.—Ex parte Burdell (D. C.) 32 Fed. 681.

[d] (U. S. 1892) A person employed by a postmaster who receives a fixed salary, without any allowance for clerk hire, is not a "clerk or officer of the United States," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 850, declaring that such persons shall receive only their necessary expenses when summoned as witnesses in behalf of the government.—In re Waller (D. C.) 49 Fed. 271.

[e] (U. S. 1888) Rev. St. § 850, provides that a clerk sent away from his place of business as a witness for the government shall be paid his necessary expenses, but no "mileage or other compensation in addition to his salary." Held, that a marshal's clerk receiving a salary, subpœnaed as a witness for the government, is entitled to his necessary expenses, but not to mileage or additional compensation.—Duval v. United States, 23 Ct. Cl. 102.

[f] (Pa. 1814) A justice of the peace, who attends as a witness for the state, is entitled to costs for attending, except for one day, when he is bound to attend for the purpose of returning recognizances; and it is not necessary that he should have been summoned.—Commonwealth v. Philadelphia County Com'rs, 6 Bin. 397.

[g] (Pa. 1876) Magistrates and constables, subpœnaed as witnesses in felony cases, are entitled to receive from the county their daily pay as witnesses, except for one day during each court, when they are bound to attend to return their recognizances; but, if they make their return 10 days before the commencement of the session of court, under Act May 8, 1854, this rule does not apply.—Kirkendall v. Luzerne County, 33 Leg. Int. 313.

[h] (Pa. 1894) The county auditor is entitled to full fees and mileage when called as a witness in a criminal case.—Commonwealth v. McArdle (Quart. Sess.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 258.

[a] (Mass. 1833) An attorney at law, attending court on professional business and also pursuant to a subpœna, is only entitled to a day's pay for attendance on the day on which he testifies; but he is entitled to pay for any time he is detained as a witness, waiting to testify, after having finished his professional business.—Parks v. Brewer, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 192.

[b] (N. Y. 1828) An attorney or counselor is not entitled to fees as a witness.—Crummer v. Huff, 1 Wend. 24.

[c] (N. Y. 1863) The attorney of record, who testifies as a witness, is entitled to a witness fee for the day on which he was sworn and testified.—Taaks v. Schmidt, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 340.

[d] (Pa.) An attorney is not entitled to witness fees for attendance in a court where he actually practices.—(1836) McWilliams v. Hopkins, 1 Whart. 276; (1885) Bank v. Wirebach, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 274.

[e] (Pa. 1872) A. went to Reading at April term, 1871, as counsel for defendants. Owing to the absence of two material witnesses, he withdrew from the case, and became a witness, another counsel being retained in his place. He also attended as a witness at August term, 1871. Held, on motion to retax costs, that A. could recover witness fees only for August term, 1871, but for the first term was entitled to compensation from defendants as counsel.—Marsdorf v. Lacey, 2 Woodw. Dec. 81.

[f] (Pa. 1886) A member of the bar is not entitled to witness fees, as his business calls him to be present in court, and he therefore suffers no loss of time or inconvenience.—Beatty v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

[g] (Wis. 1879) Attorneys at law who are in attendance as witnesses at the trial of a cause are entitled to witness fees, unless it is shown that they are also counsel in the cause.—Abbott v. Johnson, 47 Wis. 239, 2 N. W. 332.

Recovery as costs of fees to parties or persons interested as witnesses, see "Costs," vol. 13, cc. 684–686, §§ 724, 725.

[a] (U. S. 1891) A party is not entitled to either witness fees or mileage when his presence has not been required by the opposite party.—Street v. The Progresso (D. C.) 48 Fed. 239.

[b] (U. S. 1896) A party called and examined as a witness on his own behalf is not entitled to fees for travel and attendance.—Roundtree v. Rembert (C. C.) 71 Fed. 255.

[c] (Cal. 1887) A party not subpœnaed by his adversary, who appears and testifies in his own behalf, is not entitled to fees and mileage.—Beal v. Stevens, 72 Cal. 451, 14 Pac. 186.

[d] (Ind. 1882) Where, in a proceeding to lay out a highway, some of the remonstrants are used as witnesses by another remonstrant, they are entitled to witness fees.—Reader v. Smith, 88 Ind. 440.

[e] (Minn. 1869) A defendant is not entitled to fees for attendance as a witness in a cause except where he attends solely as a witness for his codefendants.—Barry v. McGrade, 14 Minn. 286 (Gil. 214).

[f] (N. H. 1850) A defendant, required by order of court to answer interrogatories relative to a negotiable note disclosed by a trustee, is entitled to fees as a witness.—Hurd v. Fogg, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 98.

[g] (N. H. 1860) Rev. St. c. 189, providing for the appointment of auditors in certain cases, prescribes their duties, and declares that they may hear the parties and make report. Sections 6, 7, provide that if any party neglect or refuse to appear before the auditor, or to render an account, or to produce such books and papers, and to answer on oath such interrogatories, relating to the matter in controversy, as may be pertinent and material, the auditor shall certify the same to the court, and that the court shall thereupon render judgment against such party as upon nonsuit or default, and, if necessary, cause the damages to be assessed by a jury. Held, that neither party is entitled to fees as a witness before an auditor, whether testifying in his own favor or for his adversary.—Whitney v. Pierce, 40 N. H. 114.

[h] (N. H. 1860) Under Pamph. Laws, cc. 1952, 2090, making parties to suits witnesses, a party who testifies or gives his deposition to be used in his own favor on trial is not entitled to fees as a witness; but, when such party compels his adversary to testify or give a deposition to be used on such trial, he shall pay him the same as any other witness.—George v. Starrett, 40 N. H. 135.

[i] (N. Y. 1836) Plaintiff cannot be allowed for his own attendance as a witness, though his testimony should be admissible.—Christy v. Christy, 6 Paige, 170.

[j] (N. Y. 1856) Where defendant was examined as a witness on his own behalf, in answer to the testimony of the assignor on the demand in suit, defendant was entitled to fees as a witness, to be taxed as costs.—Querissle v. Hilliard, 3 Abb. Prac. 31.

[k] (N. Y. 1858) A party who testified in his own behalf, as permitted by Code, § 399, is not entitled to fees under Laws 1840, c. 386, § 8, providing for fees to witnesses, as a witness, within the meaning of the act, is one who attends only in obedience to a subpœna.—Cornell v. Potter, 15 How. Prac. 278.

[l] (N. Y. 1865) A party who attends the trial of his cause solely as a witness, and is sworn and examined as such, is entitled to witness fees.—Van Dusen v. Bissell, 29 How. Prac. 481.

[m] (N. C. 1876) A party who is compelled to attend court to be examined in behalf of the adverse party is entitled to witness fees.—Penny v. Brink, 75 N. C. 68.

[n] (Pa. 1878) A plaintiff, although suing in a representative capacity, is not entitled to witness fees and mileage for himself.—Rhoades v. Bank, 12 Phila. 391.

[o] (Pa. 1884) The superintendent of a Sunday school organization, and plaintiff of record, attending the trial as agent of the Sunday school to conduct the suit, authorized as such by the school, is not entitled to witness fees.—Climenson v. Green, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 206.

[r] (Pa. 1887) A party, suing as administrator, cannot tax costs for his own attendance as a witness.—Eakin v. Fulmer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 319.

[s] (Pa. 1895) Where a member of a firm for whom a receiver is appointed testifies in an action by the receiver, he is not entitled to witness fees, and the action is in reality an action by the firm.—Leonard v. Smith (Com. Pl.) 1 Lack. Leg. N. 40; Id., 4 Pa. Dist. R. 249.

[t] (Pa. 1896) Petitioners for an inquisition in lunacy are parties to the proceedings, and are not entitled to witness fees and mileage.—In re Hogg (Com. Pl.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 509.

[u] (Tenn. 1871) A party to a suit in his own right is not entitled to compensation for attending as a witness.—Grub v. Simpson, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 92.

[v] (Tex. 1872) Under Act May 19, 1871 (Gen. Laws, p. 108), providing that a party litigant may testify in his own behalf in all cases except actions against executors, administrators, or guardians, or may be called to the witness stand by the opposite party, a party thus becoming or made a witness is not entitled to witness fees.—Gause v. Edminston, 35 Tex. 69.

[a] (U. S. 1885) Where the witnesses who appear before the master for the purpose of furnishing an account are officers of a defendant corporation in an infringement suit, which has been ordered to render such account, they are not entitled to mileage and per diem fees.—American Diamond Drill Co. v. Sullivan Machine Co. (C. C.) 32 Fed. 552.

[b] (Pa.) The president, secretary, and members of a school board, in a case in which their board is a party, and in which they are summoned as witnesses, are entitled to witness fees.—(1877) Evans v. School Board, 9 Lanc. Bar, 102; (1884) First Nat. Bank of Mt. Joy v. Greider, 5 Lanc. Bar, No. 1, p. 1.

[c] (Pa. 1884) A president of a corporation, subpœnaed as a witness, is entitled to witness fees and mileage, although he assisted in conducting the suit.—Salmon Creek Lumber & Mining Co. v. Dusenberry, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 205.

[d] (Pa. 1885) Officers and members of a corporation, who are material witnesses and in attendance in obedience to a subpœna, on the trial of a cause in which the corporation is a party, are entitled to witness fees and mileage.—Wilson v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 11.

[e] (Pa. 1885) Officers and members of a corporation, in attendance on the trial of a cause to which the corporation is a party, are entitled to witness fees.—Johnson v. A. & N. P. R. Co., 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 10.

[f] (Pa. 1887) A party who sued as agent of another is not entitled to witness fees.—Fisher v. Selden, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 392.

[g] (Pa. 1888) The president of a corporation plaintiff is entitled to witness fees, where he attends court in the capacity of a witness alone, and not to conduct the suit.—Skinner Engine Co. v. Webb, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 480.

[h] (Pa. 1888) A former agent of a corporation, who attends court as a witness and assists counsel in the management of a trial, where the corporation is plaintiff, is entitled to witness fees, where the agency no longer exists between him and the corporation.—Skinner Engine Co. v. Webb, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 480.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Under Gen. St. S. C. § 2192, mileage and per diem will be allowed for but three witnesses to each issue raised in the action in which they are subpœnaed.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[b] (Tex. 1894) Rev. Civ. St. art. 1423, which provides that the fees of more than two wit-

STATUTORY PROVISIONS, § 57.
SUBPŒNA DUCES TECUM, § 58.
ATTENDANCE IN GENERAL, § 59.
TIME SPENT IN TRAVELING TO AND FROM PLACE OF TRIAL, § 60.
DURING DETENTION OF WITNESS, § 61.
EFFECT OF CONTINUANCE OR POSTPONEMENT, § 62.
ATTENDANCE OVER SUNDAY, § 63.
WITNESSES SUMMONED OR TESTIFYING IN SEVERAL CAUSES, § 64.
ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION TO EXPERTS, § 65.
—— REFUSAL TO TESTIFY AS CONTEMPT, § 66.
MILEAGE AND EXPENSES, § 67.
—— TRAVEL OUTSIDE STATE OR DISTRICT, § 68.
—— EFFECT OF CONTINUANCE OR POSTPONEMENT, § 69.

[a] (Ga. 1880) In absence of special statutory provision therefor, witnesses are not allowed $2 per day for attending a commitment trial, though this be allowed for attending on the superior court.—Floyd County Com'rs v. Black, 65 Ga. 384.

[b] (Ill. 1889) A person who, under subpœna, attends court as a witness, cannot recover more than the fees prescribed by law for witnesses, though the party who procured the attendance of such witness agreed to pay him a greater sum.—Walker v. Cook, 33 Ill. App. 561.

[c] (La. 1812) A witness is not entitled to daily compensation for time lost by missing a passage to a port, where he does not reside.—In re Shaddock, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 207.

[d] (Minn. 1878) In the absence of a special agreement for a different sum, a person attending as a witness at the request of a party, and without a subpœna is only entitled to recover for his services and expenses the statutory compensation allowed in such cases.—Holbrook v. Cooley, 25 Minn. 275.

[e] (N. H. 1850) By Rev. St. c. 472, § 12, the fees of witnesses, in all cases except when they attend the superior court or court of common pleas, are those only which are taxable for attendance before a justice of the peace.—Mathes v. Bennett, 21 N. H. (1 Fost.) 204.

[f] (N. J. 1883) Without a special agreement for extra compensation, a witness is not entitled to more than the statutory fees.—Fonda v. Bolton, 6 N. J. Law J. 240.

[g] (N. C. 1808) A witness summoned by each party is entitled to compensation from each.—Pearce v. Person, 5 N. C. 188.

[h] (Or. 1886) Civ. Code, § 785, providing that witnesses subpœnaed out of the county where the court is sitting are entitled to double fees, has no reference to criminal cases.—Sargent v. Umatilla County, 13 Or. 442, 11 Pac. 225.

[i] (Pa. 1878) Witnesses who attend before a committing magistrate, and afterwards on the same day attend in court on the same case, will not be allowed witness fees for the attendance before the magistrate.—Commonwealth v. Lovett, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 375.

[j] (Pa. 1880) The equity fee bill under Act May 4, 1864 (Purd. Dig. p. 601, pl. 70), directs that the fees of witnesses shall be the same as before arbitrators, and accordingly daily pay of witnesses was reduced from $1 to 62½ cents.—Quay v. Quay, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 489.

[k] (Pa. 1881) Under Act April 16, 1849, providing that witnesses attending before any commissioner in lunacy inquisitions shall be allowed the same fees and mileage as if attending as witnesses in court, the pay of such witnesses changes with any changes in the pay of witnesses attending at court.—Commonwealth v. Reese, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 176.

[l] (Pa. 1881) The pay of witnesses before commissioners is regulated by that allowed witnesses in court, and as Act April 21, 1856, provided that the pay of witnesses in Chester county attending court shall be $1 per day, except when they reside in Westchester, where it should be as theretofore, and as said witnesses resided in the county, their pay was $1 per day.—Commonwealth v. Reese, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 176.

[n] (Pa. 1885) A witness testifying at an arbitration, and subsequently on the same day his deposition being taken in the same cause between the parties under rule of court, cannot be allowed more than one day's pay.—Ulrich v. Getz, 2 Lanc. Law Rev. 137.

[a] (Ark. 1850) The provision of the Revised Statutes, providing that witnesses attending at the same time, in several cases, where their fees are to be paid by the county, shall receive fees in one case only, was repealed by the act of 1843.—Pulaski County v. Downer, 10 Ark. (5 Eng.) 588.

[b] (Pa. 1889) Act Pa. Feb. 23, 1889, does not alter or repeal Act March 11, 1873, under which the fees of witnesses in the courts of record of Philadelphia county are fixed at $1.50 per diem.—De Haven v. Morath, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 388.

[c] (Pa. 1890) Act Feb. 23, 1889 (P. L. 8), by its express terms only affects fees of witnesses in counties regulated by Act Feb. 22, 1821, and does not affect various local statutes fixing the compensation of witnesses.—McDonald v. Alliance Coal Min. Co. (Com. Pl.) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 460.

[e] (Utah, 1888) Act March 8, 1888, declaring that from January 1, 1888, until January 1, 1890, witnesses for the territory, in criminal cases, shall be paid certain fees, is prospective, and will not cover services rendered in the month preceding its passage.—People v. Clayton, 5 Utah, 598, 18 Pac. 628.

[a] (N. Y. 1879) Acts 1840, c. 386, allowing but 50 cents a day to witnesses of whatever class, a witness subpœnaed under a subpœna duces tecum cannot be allowed $1.25.—In re Corwin, 6 Abb. N. C. 437.

Right to compensation, see ante, § 47.

[a] (U. S. 1844) A witness is entitled to his fees during the whole time of his actual attendance during the trial of the case, although the examination on both sides be closed.—Whipple v. Cumberland Cotton Mfg. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 17,515 [3 Story, 84].

[b] (U. S. 1875) A witness is entitled to fees only for the days of actual attendance, and not for the days on which he was ready to attend.—In re Crane, Fed. Cas. No. 3,352.

[c] (U. S. 1892) Witnesses are not entitled to the per diem fee of $1.50 for time occupied previous to trial in conference with counsel or proctor.—Pringle v. The Michigan (C. C.) 52 Fed. 509.

[d] (La. 1812) An inhabitant of another state, detained as a witness, is entitled to a compensation for each day he is so detained, though not actually in attendance on court.—McFall's Case, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 170.

[e] (Minn. 1858) Costs for unnecessary attendance cannot be allowed, but attendance may be necessary on days other than those on which the trial actually takes place.—Andrews v. Cressy, 2 Minn. 67 (Gil. 55).

[f] (N. Y. 1843) Where a cause was on the day calendar, and was there one day only, the city witnesses were entitled to one day's fees.—Ehle v. Bingham, 4 Hill, 595.

[g] (N. Y. 1867) The fees of a witness are not limited to fees for attendance on days during which the cause was on the day calendar, when he lives at a distance.—Wheeler v. Ruckman, 5 Rob. 702.

[h] (Or. 1866) A witness' claim can only be for the number of days he was in actual attendance.—Crawford v. Abraham, 2 Or. 163.

[i] (Pa. 1885) Where defendant and his witnesses waited in court from Monday morning until 2 o'clock Friday afternoon for the case to be called, on termination of the action in his favor, he was entitled to have five days' witness fees taxed in the costs.—Dwight v. Peoples, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 141.

[a] (U. S. 1892) Witnesses are not entitled to the per diem fee of $1.50, in addition to their mileage, for time spent in coming to and returning from the place of trial.—Pringle v. The Michigan (C. C.) 52 Fed. 509.

[b] (N. Y. 1824) The fee to a witness from a foreign state is to be computed from the time he left home.—Nichols v. Doty, 3 Cow. 352.

[c] (N. Y. 1831) If the whole travel of a witness in going and returning is over 15 miles, and under 30, one day is allowed for travel; if over 15 miles each way, the witness is allowed one day to come and one to return, independently of the time he is detained for examination; if the distance traveled is less than 15 miles both ways, no further allowance can be made, unless it appears that the witness was required to attend so early, or was detained so late, that he could not come or return within the usual hours of traveling on the day of his examination.—Rogers v. Rogers, 2 Paige, 458.

[d] (N. Y. 1834) A witness is entitled to reasonable time for travel, availing himself of the usual modes of conveyance. He cannot be required to travel on Sunday, nor can he limit his travel to 30 miles per day.—Wilkie v. Chadwick, 13 Wend. 49.

[e] (N. Y. 1838) A witness is entitled to an allowance for one day in coming to, and one day in returning from, the place of trial, although he resides only eight miles distant.—Lamb v. Coe, 19 Wend. 127.

[f] (Pa. 1878) Under Act April 23, 1864 (P. L. 575), providing that, in addition to the usual mileage, the fees of witnesses attending court shall be one dollar per diem, witnesses are entitled to such per diem allowance only while in actual attendance. The time expended to reach the county seat is covered by the mileage allowance.—Miller v. Shoop, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 377.

[g] (Pa. 1884) Under Act April 23, 1864, making a per diem allowance to each witness "attending" court, the time a witness spent in traveling to reach the place where the court was held was not included.—Miller v. Shoop, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 377.

[h] (Pa. 1893) Under Act Feb. 22, 1821, § 13, providing that a witness shall be allowed fees for "each day's attendance at court," a witness cannot be allowed fees for time spent in traveling to and from the place of trial.—Venetian Blind Co. v. Nesbit (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 330.

[i] (S. C. 1855) Under the act of 1791, allowing witnesses a certain sum per day for "attending" court, a witness residing out of the district is entitled to his per diem fee for travel in going to and returning from court.—Speigner v. Cooner, 9 Rich. Law, 120.

[a] (U. S. 1802) A witness, who for want of surety to appear and testify, has been imprisoned, is entitled to the daily compensation for the time of imprisonment.—Higginson's Case. Fed. Cas. No. 6,471 [1 Cranch, C. C. 73].

[b] (Iowa, 1880) A witness who is confined in the county jail by order of a justice of the peace, for failure to give security for his appearance to testify for the state in a criminal trial, cannot recover from the county his per diem as a witness for the time of his confinement.—Markwell v. Warren County, 53 Iowa, 422, 5 N. W. 570.

[c] (Md. 1896) One who is committed to custody by an examining magistrate in a criminal proceeding for failure to give security for his appearance as a witness for the prosecution, if such failure is not due to contumacy, or to his bad character, but solely to inability through no fault on his part, will be considered as in attendance on the court, and entitled to his per diem as a witness, for the term of his detention.—Hall v. Somerset County, 82 Md. 618, 34 Atl. 771, 51 Am. St. Rep. 484, 32 L. R. A. 449.

[e] (N. J. 1882) A witness who is committed into the custody of the jail during vacation, because he cannot give security for his appearance at the proper time, is not "a witness attending court," within Revision, p. 408, which gives a fee per diem "for every witness attending court."—State v. Walsh, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 470.

[f] (Ohio, 1842) Where a witness is committed because he could not obtain security for his appearance as required by the magistrate, he is entitled to the same fees per diem as if in actual attendance at court under recognizance.—Latshaw's Case, 1 Ohio Dec. 96.

[g] (Or. 1889) An information was filed against C. accusing him of mayhem, at a certain county in the state, and M., the party injured, was a witness before the examining magistrate, who required him to give an undertaking, in the sum of $500, for his appearance as a witness at the trial of C. upon any indictment which might be found against the latter by the grand jury. M. being unacquainted in the community where the alleged offense was charged to have been committed, failed to give such undertaking, and was held by the magistrate as such witness for 17 days. Held, that M. had no right of action against such county for his loss of time; that there was no contract on the part of the county to pay therefor; and that the county had no authority to enter into any such contract, for the reason that the legislature had not granted it power to do so.—Morin v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 163, 22 Pac. 490.

[h] (Or. 1889) Nor did the county neglect or violate any duty it owed M., he having been held as a witness by order of the examining magistrate under an authority vested in him by law, which the county had no right whatever to control.—Morin v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 163, 22 Pac. 490.

[i] (Or. 1889) If the compulsory services performed by M. in attending and giving testimony at the trial against C., were particular services, within the meaning of the clause in the constitution of Oregon which provides as follows: "Nor shall the particular services of any man be demanded without just compensation"—M. could not claim compensation therefor as against the county; the duty of providing for the observance of said clause of the constitution not devolving upon counties, but upon the legislature.—Morin v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 163, 22 Pac. 490.

[j] (Or. 1889) Such services were not "particular services," within the meaning of the constitution, but they belonged to that class of general services which every man is bound to render for the general as well as his own individual good.—Morin v. Multnomah County, 18 Or. 163, 22 Pac. 490.

[k] (Pa. 1889) Under Act Feb. 22, 1821 (7 Smith & R. Laws, 377; 1 Purd. Dig. 746), providing that witnesses shall be entitled to fees for each day's "attendance at court," a witness cannot recover for the time he was confined to the county jail, in default of bail, to appear as a witness in a prosecution by the state.—Howard v. Beaver County, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 397, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. 574.

[m] (Wis. 1895) Mandamus will not lie to compel the clerk of the circuit court to issue the certificate provided for by Rev. St. § 4060, requiring such clerk, on proof by affidavit of the attendance of a witness on a criminal trial in the circuit court, to give the witness a certificate of the compensation to which he is entitled from the county, where relator, in default of a recognizance for her appearance as a witness, was confined in jail during the time for which compensation was claimed, and the case was never brought to trial, and relator never appeared in court as a witness.—State v. Greene, 91 Wis. 500, 65 N. W. 181.

On right to compensation, see ante, § 49.
—— to mileage, see post, § 69.

[a] (U. S. 1808) If a cause in the circuit court for the District of Columbia be postponed for two or three days, witnesses attending from Baltimore will be allowed pay for those days.—Hance v. McCormick, Fed. Cas. No. 6,009 [1 Cranch, C. C. 522].

[b] (U. S. 1844) A witness is entitled to fees during the time of his actual attendance, though the trial is suspended on account of the illness of counsel.—Whipple v. Cumberland Cotton Mfg. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 17,515 [3 Story, 84].

[c] (U. S. 1846) If a case is suspended for a few days, and postponed by agreement of parties, and not by order of the court, except to carry the agreement into effect, the witnesses' continued attendance till discharged will be allowed.—Hathaway v. Roach, Fed. Cas. No. 6,218 [2 Woodb. & M. 63].

[d] (Ala. 1846) Merely laying aside the civil and taking up the criminal docket does not discharge a witness in a case on the former. The witness cannot know how long it may occupy the court, or that the civil docket will not be called again before it is disposed of. If a suitor in such case would be relieved from the costs of his witnesses, he must at least excuse them from attending.—Marsh v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 10 Ala. 57.

[e] (N. Y. 1831) Where a cause is called, and the trial put off by defendant, and he subsequently obtains a verdict, he is not entitled to more than one day's fees to witnesses.—Titus v. Bullen, 6 Wend. 562.

[a] (U. S. 1850) Witnesses from a distance are entitled to fees for attendance on Sunday, when they are detained over that day.—Schott v. Benson, Fed. Cas. No. 12,479 [1 Blatchf. 564].

[b] (N. Y. 1863) A witness residing at a distance from the court is entitled to fees for attending on Sunday, as well as on secular days; and whether he uses the money in expenses at the place of holding the court, or in going to and from his residence, is not material.—Muscott v. Runge, 27 How. Prac. 85.

[a] (U. S. 1857) A witness, summoned in several suits brought by the same plaintiff against different defendants, is entitled to his attendance and mileage in each case.—Parker v. Bigler, Fed. Cas. No. 10,726 [1 Fish. Pat. Cas. 285].

[b] (U. S. 1885) Where witnesses are paid in one or more cases, and not in others, the evidence is strong that they are never to be paid, especially where the lapse of time is great between the rendering of the service and the taxation.—Wooster v. Handy (C. C.) 23 Fed. 49.

[c] (U. S. 1885) In the absence of any rule of court, or special order, or stipulation of parties, a witness is entitled, under Rev. St. § 848, to his fee for each day's attendance in court in each suit in which he attends.—Wooster v. Handy (C. C.) 23 Fed. 49.

[d] (U. S. 1886) Witnesses will not be deprived of their per diem and mileage by the fact that they were in attendance on the court in another cause between different parties, and received per diem and mileage therefor.—Young v. Merchants' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 273.

[e] (U. S. 1887) If a witness be subpœnaed in two cases, the parties being different, to attend therein before the court, and testify orally, or before any officer pursuant to law, to give his deposition, and does so attend, he is entitled to the witness fees prescribed by Rev. St. § 848, for his travel and attendance in each case. The fact that he actually testifies but once on the trial of the cases together by consent, or that his testimony is but once written out in the deposition, to be used by agreement in both cases, makes no difference; nor is there a distinction between witness fees for attendance "in court" and those "before any officer pursuant to law."—Archer v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. (C. C.) 31 Fed. 660.

[f] (U. S. 1888) Where two libels were filed against a vessel for two losses occasioned by the same disaster, but the causes were never consolidated, double mileage and attendance should be allowed, though the witnesses were sworn but once, and their testimony was read in both cases.—The Vernon (D. C.) 36 Fed. 113.

[g] (Ala. 1827) A witness summoned, at the instance of one who is a party in several suits pending at the same time in the same court, to attend and give evidence in such suits, is entitled to fees in each case.—Findley v. Wyser, 1 Stew. 23.

[h] (Ark. 1883) A witness in a civil case is entitled to fees for each case in which he testifies.—Springfield & M. R. Co. v. Lambert, 42 Ark. 121.

[i] (Ga. 1855) A witness is entitled to charge full fees for every case in which he may have been summoned.—Robison v. Banks, 17 Ga. 211.

[j] (Ill. 1892) Rev. St. c. 52, § 47, which allows a witness one dollar for each day's attendance and five cents a mile for necessary travel, does not restrict a witness who is subpœnaed in a number of cases to one dollar for each day he attends and one mileage fee, but he is entitled to a per diem and a mileage fee in each case.—O'Kane v. People, 46 Ill. App. 225.

[k] (Iowa, 1874) A witness subpœnaed and attending court on the same day in several different cases is entitled only to fees for attendance and mileage for the day of his attendance, and the number of cases in which he may give testimony will not increase his compensation.—Hardin v. Polk County, 39 Iowa, 661.

[l, m] (Mass. 1854) Where several actions for the obstruction, at successive periods of time, of the wheels of one mill by the backwater of another, are referred by rule of court to arbitration, the travel and attendance of witnesses, who are summoned, attend, and are paid in all the actions, may be taxed in each.—Day v. Berkshire Woolen Co., 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 420.

[n] (N. Y.) A witness who actually attends in two cases, although between the same parties, is entitled to fees in both.—(1859) Hicks v. Brennan, 10 Abb. Prac. 304; (1860) Vence v. Speir, 18 How. Prac. 168.

[o] (N. C. 1896) Where eight actions against the same defendant had been consolidated into one, an entry of "judgment against both parties, plaintiffs and defendants, for their costs in each case," entitles witnesses to prove but one attendance and in one action.—Morristown Mills Co. v. Lytle, 118 N. C. 837, 24 S. E. 530.

[p] (Or. 1866) In two or more cases between the same parties at the same term, a witness will be allowed but single mileage and attendance. The attendance in each successive case will reach back only to the final disposition of the preceding cause.—Crawford v. Abraham, 2 Or. 165.

[q] (Pa. 1831) Where witnesses in two connected cases, tried at the same court, elect to tax their fees in one of them, and defendant in that case dies before the costs are paid, they cannot afterwards have their fees taxed in the other case, being entitled to fees in one case only.—Commonwealth v. Cozens, 1 Ashm. 265.

[r] (Pa. 1846) Where a controversy arises out of one and the same transaction between several and different plaintiffs, but the same defendant, who alone is liable for costs, a witness, who is subpœnaed in the several suits by the respective plaintiffs, is entitled to single pay for each day's attendance, and no more, without regard to the number of suits in which he is called to testify.—Batdorff's Adm'rs v. Eckert, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 267.

[s] (Pa. 1860) When the same witnesses attend the trial of four different cases tried at the same place, they are not entitled to separate bills in each case. They can demand but one compensation for each necessary attendance.—Law v. Cobb, 1 Luz. Leg. Obs. 3; Card v. Cobb, Id.

[t] (Pa. 1869) Witnesses in criminal prosecutions are entitled to mileage and daily pay, as if attending in one case, although subpœnaed by the commonwealth in several cases, notwithstanding the repeal by the act of 1860 of section 15, Act Sept. 23, 1791, providing that, where several indictments are brought against defendant at same sessions, the county shall pay the costs of one only.—Commonwealth v. Curren, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 393.

[u] (Pa. 1872) Where testimony was taken in two cases together, the witnesses were entitled to one fee only.—In re McCullough, 12 Phila. 576.

[v] (Pa. 1878) Where two causes against the same defendant were heard by the arbitrators on the same day and at the same place, and the witnesses were summoned in each to appear at the same time and place, and were sworn and examined but once, they were entitled to but one fee.—Evans v. Hart, 10 Lanc. Bar, 77.

[w] (Pa. 1885) Witnesses are only entitled to mileage and daily pay as if attending in one case, when subpœnaed and called by the commonwealth in a number of cases.—Commonwealth v. Curren, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 393.

[ww] (Pa. 1885) The daily pay allowed by the fee bill for the attendance of witnesses at court is intended as a compensation, and when they have received that they are entitled to no more; and this, without regard to the number of suits in which they are called to testify.—Cody v. Clelam, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 8.

[x] (Pa. 1886) A person who is subpœnaed in several cases is allowed compensation only in one.—Beatty v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 4 Lanc. Law Rev. 1.

[xx] (Pa. 1895) A witness in criminal cases is entitled to only one day's pay, without regard to the number of cases in which he testifies.—Keller v. Clinton County (Com. Pl.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 216.

[y] (Tenn. 1829) Under Acts 1815, c. 59, providing that a witness duly notified may prove his attendance in each suit he was legally summoned to attend, a witness is permitted to prove his per diem pay in all suits in which he is subpœnaed.—Hopkins v. Waterhouse, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 323.

[yy] (Tenn. 1885) Code, § 6235, declares that "no witness can prove attendance at any one term of the court in more than two criminal cases." Held, that no exception can be grafted on the statute, although terms have lengthened, and a witness has testified in cases tried at different times during the term.—State v. O'Haver, 83 Tenn. (15 Lea) 46.

[z] (Tex. 1852) A witness who is subpœnaed in several suits, pending at the same time and place, at the instance of the same person, is entitled under the statute to compensation in each case.—Flores v. Thorn, 8 Tex. 377.

[zz] (Vt. 1838) If a person attend as a witness in more than one cause at the same time, he is entitled to full pay in each cause, unless the causes are between the same parties, and he is only subpœnaed in one cause, in which case he is only entitled to pay in one cause.—House v. Barber, 10 Vt. 158.

[a] (Ark. 1894) An expert who testifies for the state in a criminal case cannot demand compensation in addition to the usual fees allowed witnesses, provided he is not compelled to make any preliminary examination or preparation, and is not compelled to attend and listen to the testimony.—Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 29 S. W. 459, 46 Am. St. Rep. 168, 27 L. R. A. 669.

[b] (Ark. 1895) A physician is not entitled to any more than the regular witness fees for his expert testimony in respect to a post mortem examination.—Clark County v. Kerstan, 60 Ark. 508, 30 S. W. 1046.

[c] (Colo. 1893) An expert witness, who testifies for the people in a criminal case in obedience to a subpœna, without making in advance any demand for special compensation, is entitled to recover only the statutory witness fees.—Board Com'rs Larimer County v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 32 Pac. 841.

[d] (Colo. 1893) Where there has been no application to the county board to make a special contract with such witness, and it is not affirmatively shown that the refusal to pay him extra compensation would result in a miscarriage of justice, the court trying the case has no power to order payment of extra fees to the witness.—Board Com'rs Larimer County v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 32 Pac. 841.

[e] (D. C. 1893) Under the Rock Creek Park statute, providing, in the condemnation proceedings, that the marshal shall summon any witness desired by any party, and that the expenses of service of summons and their attendance fees shall be paid by the United States as costs, expert witnesses summoned at the request of a landowner, and testifying as regards gold deposits on the land, should be allowed reasonable fees in addition to their per diem as a common witness, to be paid by the United States.—United States v. Cooper, 21 D. C. 491.

[f] (D. C. 1893) Practical miners, testifying as to deposits of gold, are expert witnesses, so as to be entitled to reasonable fees in addition to their per diem.—United States v. Cooper, 21 D. C. 491.

[g] (Ind. 1852) A physician is not entitled to compensation, beyond that of an ordinary witness, for traveling to and giving evidence at a coroner's inquest in obedience to a subpœna; but the expenditure of labor and skill by the physician in a post mortem examination will create a claim to additional compensation.—Gaston v. Marion County, 3 Ind. 497.

[h] (Iowa, 1875) Physicians or other professional men, who may have been summoned as witnesses, are not entitled to extra compensation under Code 1873, § 3814, unless called to testify as experts, and give an opinion based on their special study and experience.—Snyder v. Iowa City, 40 Iowa, 646.

[i] (La. 1888) An expert appointed by one to make researches deemed necessary for his defense must be paid by him.—Harrison v. City of New Orleans, 40 La. Ann. 509, 4 South. 133.

[j] (Mass. 1870) Under Gen. St. 1860, c. 115, § 17, authorizing courts to allow a sum for services and expenses incident thereto in counties, and Laws 1860, c. 191, providing for the allowance of certain specified costs, and that no other costs shall be allowed in criminal proceedings, "except such as the court may deem reasonable for services not therein specifically provided for," the court may allow a reasonable compensation to an expert witness summoned by a prisoner, if the attorney general consents.—In re Clark, 104 Mass. 537.

[k] (Mass. 1896) Where an agreement is made by one to go into court at a future day and testify as an expert as to a matter which he had examined as a civil engineer, he is entitled to recover the reasonable compensation (in addition to the statutory fees) promised him therefor, though he is afterwards summoned and paid the regular statutory fees, and does not then claim extra compensation, or give notice that he will make such claim, and, though testifying, and advising counsel as to questions to be asked him and other witnesses, he is not asked any question as an expert.—Barrus v. Phaneuf, 166 Mass. 123, 44 N. E. 141, 32 L. R. A. 619.

[m] (Minn. 1883) Gen. St. 1878, c. 70, § 8, providing for the allowance of fees or compensation to a witness summoned or sworn and examined "as an expert in any profession or calling," does not apply to cases where a witness skilled in some profession or calling, is called on to testify as to facts within his personal knowledge, although he may have acquired his knowledge of the facts while in the ordinary practice of his profession, and although his professional skill may have enabled him to observe such facts more intelligently and to narrate them more correctly.—Le Mere v. McHale, 30 Minn. 410, 15 N. W. 682.

[n] (Minn. 1887) The provision of the statute (Gen. St. 1878, c. 70, § 8) which authorizes a judge to allow to an expert witness "such fees or compensation as may be just and reasonable," has reference to an allowance to be made after the witness has been summoned and dismissed without being sworn or examined, or after he has been sworn and examined, and not before.—State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535, 32 N. W. 678.

[o] (Minn. 1887) A physician and surgeon upon the stand as a witness cannot properly refuse to answer a question upon the ground that his answer will be expert evidence, and that he has not been summoned or paid as an expert witness.—State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535, 32 N. W. 678.

[p] (N. Y. 1823) A surveyor, attending as a witness, is entitled to no more compensation than another witness, except in causes where there has been a view.—Lyon v. Wilkes, 1 Cow. 591.

[q] (N. Y. 1872) A witness meets the requirements of a subpœna if he appears in court when required to testify, and gives proper impromptu answers to such questions as are then put to him. He cannot be required, by virtue of the subpœna, to examine the case, to use his skill and knowledge to form an opinion, nor to attend, hear, and consider the testimony given, so as to be qualified to give a deliberate opinion on a question of science arising on such testimony; hence, a professional witness, called as an expert, may be paid for his time, services, and expenses, and the question what amount is paid cannot, in the absence of anything to show bad faith, affect the regularity of the trial, though it may, perhaps, affect his credit with the jury. It is not improper for the district attorney to procure the attendance of skilled witnesses in appropriate cases, for a special compensation; nor will the fact that an expert attended and testified at his instance, under agreement for compensation, which was unknown to the defense until after witness' testimony was closed, be an irregularity affecting the verdict.—People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Prac. N. S. 207.

[r] (N. C. 1872) Under Acts 1870-71, c. 139, § 133, giving the court power to allow compensation to a witness summoned as an expert, such a witness is entitled to a reasonable fee, in addition to the usual fee for attendance.—State v. Dollar, 66 N. C. 626.

[s] (Pa. 1889) At a coroner's inquest a physician, who had been duly sworn as a witness, was asked to state his opinion of the effect of the medicines administered to the deceased, and to describe her conditions and symptoms when he first saw her. Held, that he was bound to answer both questions without payment of a professional fee.—Commonwealth v. Higgins, 5 Kulp, 269.

[a] The refusal of a physician to testify as to his professional opinion, without the compensation of a professional fee, is not a contempt of court.

—(Ind. 1877) Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75; Dills v. State, Id. 15;

(N. Y. 1871) People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 207.

[b] (U. S. 1881) A physician cannot lawfully be compelled, even in criminal cases, to testify as an expert to matters of medical science, against his objection, unless first compensated by reasonable fee, as for a professional opinion; and a refusal to so testify is not punishable as a contempt.—United States v. Howe, Fed. Cas. No. 15,404a.

[c] (Ala. 1875) A physician, like any other person, may be called to testify as an expert in a judicial investigation, whether it be of a civil or criminal nature, without being paid for his testimony as for a professional opinion, and, on refusal to testify, is punishable as for a contempt.—Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 25 Am. Rep. 611.

[d] (Ill. 1884) A physician, who, without objection, has testified as to the condition of a patient whom he has visited professionally, is not justified in refusing to give an opinion as to the cause of the symptoms discovered, unless he is paid an expert's fee.—Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540.

[e] (Ohio, 1886) Where a physician who made a post mortem examination was called as a witness in a homicide case, and, after having answered all questions as to facts, refused to testify as to matters of opinion, unless paid an extra compensation as an expert, he is punishable for contempt for refusing to answer, since the statute fixes the fees which witnesses are entitled to receive, regardless of their calling or profession.—State v. Darby, 9 Ohio Dec. 725, 17 Wkly. Law Bul. 62.

[f] (Tex. 1879) A physician may be compelled to testify as to the result of a post-mortem examination made by him, over objection that his knowledge was attained by professional skill, and that, not having been paid therefor, he could not be compelled to testify thereto; for, though a medical expert cannot be compelled to make a post mortem examination, unless he is paid, such examination, having already been made, cannot be withheld on that ground.—Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 385, 32 Am. Rep. 573.

Per diem fees for time spent in traveling to and from place of trial, see ante, § 60.

[a] (U. S. 1862) If a witness, whose residence is not at the place of holding court, is summoned at the place of trial, he is allowed mileage for returning to his home, but not for coming to the court.—Woodruff v. Barney, Fed. Cas. No. 17,986 [1 Bond, 528; 2 Fish. Pat. Cas. 244].

[b] (U. S. 1871) A witness, subpœnaed at the place of trial on the day on which he is required to attend, is not entitled to travel fees to and from his place of residence; and, if not so subpœnaed, he is entitled to such travel fee.—The Sunnyside, Fed. Cas. No. 13,619 [5 Ben. 162].

[c] (U. S. 1889) Rev. St. § 848, allows a witness mileage to and from his residence. Section 876 provides that a subpœna may run into another district as to witnesses living not more than 100 miles from the place of trial. Section 863 authorizes depositions by witnesses living more than that distance. Held, that witnesses voluntarily attending a court more than 100 miles distant from their residences can only recover mileage for 100 miles.—Eastman v. Sherry (C. C.) 37 Fed. 844.

[e] (Iowa, 1887) A county is not liable for the mileage of a witness subpœnaed to attend a preliminary examination of a person accused of crime, where the subpœna was issued and served before the complaint was lodged with the magistrate, and before the accused was arrested.—Warnstaff v. Louisa County, 35 N. W. 604.

[f] (Iowa, 1890) Code 1873, § 3814, provides that in criminal cases, where defendant is adjudged not guilty, mileage fees of witnesses shall be paid by the county. McClain's Code, § 5095, provides that in no criminal case shall witnesses for the defense be subpœnaed at the expense of the county, except upon order of the court before whom the case is pending, and then only upon a satisfactory showing that the witnesses are necessary for the defense. Held, that where a witness in a criminal case attends without being subpœnaed, at the request of defendant's counsel, he is not entitled to mileage, though he may have been included in the order granting defendant authority to subpœna witnesses, that not being an order or request of the court to such witness to attend.—State v. Willis, 79 Iowa, 326, 44 N. W. 699.

[g] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 3673, providing that witnesses living more than 70 miles from the place of holding court cannot be compelled to attend, does not prohibit the granting of full mileage to a witness attending from a greater distance.—Briggs v. M. Rumely Co., 96 Iowa, 202, 64 N. W. 784.

[i] (Mass. 1887) Where three cases were heard together before a master, and the same attorneys were employed in each case, and the witnesses were all summoned in but one case, held, that they were not entitled to more than one travel, because the officer who served the subpœnas upon them requested them to attend for all the cases, and they did so attend and testify.—Barber v. Parsons, 145 Mass. 203, 13 N. E. 491.

[j] (Mo. 1893) Attendance by a witness who has accepted service of a subpœna is attendance "under subpœna," within Rev. St. 1889, § 5003, so as to entitle him to mileage.—Wilson v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. Ry. Co., 53 Mo. App. 342; Mt. Olivet Cemetery Ass'n v. Dalton, Id. 345.

try, he is entitled to mileage on his first attendance in court, and also for going home and returning, if such conduct is reasonable, which it is within the discretion of the trial court to determine.—Henry v. Walton, 52 N. J. Law (23 Vroom) 370, 19 Atl. 791.

[m] (N. Y. 1831) A foreign witness, subpœnaed at the place of trial, is not entitled to travel fees.—Niagara Bank v. Austin, 6 Wend. 548.

[n] (N. Y. 1849) Where a witness is subpœnaed at his temporary residence or place of business, and attends court pursuant to the writ, he is entitled to his traveling fees from his temporary residence, instead of from his permanent residence.—Clarks v. Staring, 4 How. Prac. 243.

[o] (N. Y. 1852) A foreign witness, who is subpœnaed at the place of the trial, is not entitled to travel fees.—Dowling v. Bush, 6 How. Prac. 410.

[p] (N. Y. 1857) A witness is entitled to traveling fees, to be computed from the place of his residence, though he was subpœnaed at a point nearer the place where the court is held.—Pike v. Nash, 16 How. Prac. 53.

[q] (N. Y. 1863) The attorney of record, who testifies as a witness, is not entitled to mileage.—Taaks v. Schmidt, 25 How. Prac. 340.

[r] (N. Y. 1886) Where one comes from a distant city to the city of his residence to testify, to entitle him to his traveling fees, it must appear that he came for the sole purpose of testifying, and that he actually returned to the city from whence he came.—Sargent v. Warren, 41 Hun, 103.

[s] (N. C. 1888) Where a witness is not summoned, but gives his evidence voluntarily, he cannot recover mileage, as, if he was a nonresident, his deposition could have been taken, and if a resident, he is not entitled to prove his attendance, if not summoned.—Stern v. Herren, 101 N. C. 516, 8 S. E. 221.

[t] (Or. 1866) A witness' claim for disbursements made in a cause must be only for the number of miles actually traveled.—Crawford v. Abraham, 2 Or. 163.

[u] (Pa. 1878) Under Act April 23, 1864 (P. L. 575), providing that, in addition to the usual mileage, the fees of witnesses shall be one dollar per diem, money expended to reach the county seat is covered by the mileage.—Miller v. Shoop, 1 Lanc. Law Rev. 377.

[v] (Pa. 1893) The mileage of a witness should be taxed by the shortest and most direct route from his home to the place of trial.—Venetian Blind Co. v. Nesbit (Com. Pl.) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 330.

[w] (Pa. 1894) Under Act May 19, 1887 (P. L. 134), providing that mileage allowed witnesses shall be computed by the "route usually traveled," mileage may be allowed for a longer route by rail, selected in preference to a route by stage, shorter in actual distance, but longer in time, the former route being the usual route.—Commonwealth v. Heiges (Quart. Sess.) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 184.

[y] (Wash. 1888) A provision in an act of congress that mileage shall not be allowed witnesses for a greater distance than 100 miles applies only to witnesses who come from without the territorial limits of a court's jurisdiction.—United States v. Small, 3 Wash. T. 478, 17 Pac. 739.

§ 68. —— Travel outside state or district.

[a] The travel of witnesses who come from another state is to be taxed from the line of the state to the place of trial, coming and returning.

—(N. J. 1832) Williamson v. Johnson, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 156;

(N. Y. 1809) Howland v. Leonox, 4 Johns. 311.

[b] The travel of a witness coming from another state is to be taxed only from the line of the state in the ordinary route from his place of residence to the place of holding the court.

—(Mass. 1832) Melvin v. Whiting, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 184; (1840) White v. Judd, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 293;

(Pa. 1838) Leeds v. Loud, 2 Miles, 189.

[c] Neither party nor witness can be allowed mileage beyond the line of the state.

—(Me. 1867) Inhabitants of Kingfield v. Pullen, 54 Me. 398;

(Or. 1866) Crawford v. Abraham, 2 Or. 163.

[e] (U. S. 1886) In federal courts, the traveling fees of a witness residing out of the district can only be taxed to the extent of 100 miles.—Buffalo Ins. Co. v. Providence & S. S. S. Co. (C. C.) 29 Fed. 237.

[f] (U. S. 1888) Witness fees in the federal courts are taxable for travel not exceeding 100 miles, unless the distance be wholly within the district, though the witness attend the trial voluntarily, at the request of one of the parties.—The Syracuse (C. C.) 36 Fed. 830.

[g] (U. S. 1889) A witness for the United States, voluntarily attending court on the verbal instructions of the district attorney, is entitled to mileage, notwithstanding that his residence is out of the district, and more than 100 miles from the place of holding court.—In re Williams (D. C.) 37 Fed. 325.

[h] (U. S. 1889) Witnesses residing in the district, who attend court in obedience to a subpœna, are entitled to mileage fees for the whole distance necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the place where the court is held, though it exceeds 100 miles.—Sims v. Schult (C. C.) 40 Fed. 143.

[i] (U. S. 1890) Witness fees in civil cases are not to be taxed for travel over any greater distance than a subpœna would run, and hence, where a witness resident in one district attends to have his deposition taken in another, he is not entitled to fees for travel before he reached the latter district.—Wooster v. Hill (C. C.) 44 Fed. 819.

[j] (U. S. 1891) In admiralty causes in the Eastern district of Pennsylvania, mileage will not be allowed to witnesses brought from beyond the district, except as to 100 miles of the distance.—Street v. The Progresso (D. C.) 48 Fed. 239.

[k] (U. S. 1893) Where the witnesses come from without the state at a greater distance than 100 miles, they are entitled to claim for mileage for the distance of 100 miles, and no more, and also their per diems.—Pinson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 464.

[l] (Ga. 1868) A person who resided in St. Louis, Mo., being in the courtroom, was subpœnaed in a criminal case in behalf of the state. He attended court until it adjourned, and was permitted to go home on his promise to return in obedience to the subpœna. He did return, and gave his testimony in the case. Held, that he was entitled to mileage from his home; there being nothing in the statute expressly restricting mileage to travel performed within the limits of the state.—Dutcher v. Justices Inferior Court of Fulton County, 38 Ga. 214.

[m] (Ill. 1889) A witness in a civil case is not entitled to mileage for travel outside the state.—Fish v. Farwell, 33 Ill. App. 242.

[n] (Iowa, 1883) A witness subpœnaed from out the state to testify for the state in a criminal case, where defendant is found not guilty, may recover from the county mileage outside the state at the same rate as within.—Westfall v. Madison County, 62 Iowa, 427, 17 N. W. 614.

[o] (Kan. 1881) Where a witness, after he had entered into a recognizance to appear at a criminal trial, moved away from Kansas into Massachusetts, and then attended the trial, he could, under Comp. Laws 1879, p. 445, § 15, recover mileage fees only for the distance traveled in Kansas.—Lyon County v. Chase, 24 Kan. 774.

[p] (Mo. 1843) A witness residing in another state, who has been compelled, in Missouri, to recognize for his appearance in the latter state, is entitled to mileage from his place of residence.—Hutchins v. State, 8 Mo. 288.

[q] (Mo. 1895) Rev. St. 1889, § 5003, requires a witness to be examined on oath as to the number of days of attendance under subpœna or recognizance, and the number of miles traveled. Held, that a resident of another state under recognizance is entitled to mileage from the place of his residence, and not from the state line.—State ex rel. Keck v. Seibert, 130 Mo. 202, 32 S. W. 670.

[r] (N. H. 1860) If a witness, after being summoned and paid, removes to another state, but nevertheless attends the trial in good faith, he is entitled to his fees for such attendance and for the additional travel from the other state.—Gunnison v. Gunnison, 41 N. H. 121, 77 Am. Dec. 764.

[s] (N. Y. 1835) An administratrix, who filed a bill of foreclosure as such, will be allowed a reasonable compensation for expenses incurred by her in coming from without the limits of the state to be examined as a witness in the cause.—Elliott v. Lewis, 3 Edw. Ch. 40.

[t] (N. C. 1814) When one who has entered into a recognizance as a witness in behalf of the state removes from the state, he is entitled to travel fees to and from his actual residence.—State v. Stewart, 4 N. C. 138, 1 Car. Law Repos. 524.

[u] (S. C. 1855) Witnesses residing out of the district are entitled to $1 for every 30 miles traveled by them in going to and returning from court in addition to their pay for actual attendance.—Speigner v. Cooner, 9 Rich. Law, 120.

[v] (Vt. 1858) Costs may be taxed for the actual travel of witnesses from the place of their residence to the place of trial, whether they reside in a foreign jurisdiction or not.—Town of Albany v. Town of Derby, 30 Vt. 718.

[a] (U. S. 1846) If a case is suspended for a few days by agreement of parties the witnesses are not entitled to another travel unless included in the agreement.—Hathaway v. Roach, Fed. Cas. No. 6,213 [2 Woodb. & M. 63].

[b] (Kan. 1883) Witnesses were subpœnaed for the 21st, and after they reached court the trial was postponed to the 26th, and the witnesses told to appear then. Held, that they were entitled to mileage for their return on the 26th.—Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Harris, 29 Kan. 275.

[c] (Pa. 1880) Double mileage cannot be allowed to witnesses who attend a trial, even where, after waiting a week for trial, they returned home from Saturday to Monday, and then had to travel to a different place where the court adjourned for trial.—Sweet v. Pennock, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 16.

[d] (Pa. 1881) Where witnesses were subpœnaed for one week, at the end of which the case was continued until the following Monday, when they were resubpœnaed for the following week, they were entitled to but single mileage.—Todd v. Painter, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 176.

[f] (Pa. 1887) Where a cause is called on the first day of trial and set down for subsequent day, witnesses present on the first day who go to their homes and return on the day fixed for trial are not entitled to double mileage.—Eakin v. Fulmer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 319.

[g] (Pa. 1895) Where a case was called on Monday, but postponed till Wednesday, witnesses who went home on Monday and returned on Wednesday are entitled to mileage.—Harman v. Shank (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 813.

3. PERSONS LIABLE, PAYMENT, AND RECOVERY.

PERSONS LIABLE IN GENERAL, § 70.
LIABILITY OF STATE OR COUNTY, § 71.
STATEMENT, ACCOUNT, AFFIDAVIT, AND CERTIFICATE, § 72.
PAYMENT, § 73.
RECOVERY BACK OF FEES PAID, § 74.
FORFEITURES AND PENALTIES FOR CLAIMING EXCESSIVE FEES, § 75.
ACTIONS AND OTHER REMEDIES, § 76.

§ 70. Persons liable in general.

Liability of surety on bond for costs for compensation of witnesses, see "Costs," vol. 13, c. 517, § 555 [c].

Persons calling witness, liable for witness fees, see "Costs," vol. 13, c. 396, § 386.

[a] (Ga. 1849) A witness subpœnaed in a criminal prosecution in behalf of a defendant, who is acquitted on the trial, cannot charge and collect by execution of such defendant, for his attendance and mileage out of the county in which he resides.—Howell v. Blackwell, 7 Ga. 443.

[b] (Ga. 1859) When a witness is rejected as incompetent, he can recover his fees only of the party who subpœnaed him.—Crozier v. Berry, 27 Ga. 346.

[d] (Minn. 1875) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 70, § 7, which fixes the fees of witnesses "for attending in any justice's court," and section 41, which authorizes the county attorney to summon witnesses "without paying or tendering fees in advance," witnesses for the state in a criminal case are entitled to their fees, and it is proper to tax them in the costs against defendant, where costs are allowable.—State v. Bliss, 21 Minn. 458.

[f] (S. C. 1822) A witness subpœnaed by a defendant, who prevails, cannot recover of plaintiff the costs of his attendance.—Clement v. Bagley, 2 McCord, 244.

Right of accused to compulsory process, see ante, §§ 2–4.

[a] (Fla. 1871) A witness summoned to testify in behalf of the state before the grand jury or before the circuit court receives his compensation from the state and not from the county.—State v. Edwards, 13 Fla. 573.

[b] (Iowa, 1882) Where a prosecution is dismissed before trial a witness called for the prosecution may sue the county and recover his legal fees for attending before the justice, although both the complaining witness and defendant may be solvent.—Cassidy v. Palo Alto County, 58 Iowa, 125, 12 N. W. 231.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) Laws 18th Gen. Assem. c. 207, repealing Code 1873, § 3818, provides that "in no criminal case shall witnesses for the defense be subpœnaed at the expense of the county except upon an order of the court or judge before whom the case is pending; then only upon a satisfactory showing that the witnesses are material and necessary for the defense; and the board of supervisors shall in no case audit or allow any claims for witness fees for the defendaint in criminal cases, except upon order or judgment of the court or judge thereof, and such order may be made at the time of trial or other disposition of the case, and upon such showing as the court may require." Held, that it is sufficient if the witnesses were ordered to be subpœnaed by the court, on a satisfactory showing that their testimony would be material to the defense.—Wheelock v. Madison County, 75 Iowa, 147, 39 N. W. 243.

[e] (Md. 1896) Under Code, art. 24, § 7, requiring county commissioners to pay the costs of a defendant who may be discharged or acquitted or fined not exceeding 15 cents, the commissioners must pay all witnesses before justices summoned on behalf of the state, and all summoned on behalf of defendant where defendant has been discharged, or fined only 15 cents, or acquitted; but cannot pay fees due to the prisoner's witnesses where he is convicted.—Schamel v. Washington County, 83 Md. 128, 34 Atl. 839.

[f] (Neb. 1883) The county cannot be required to pay the costs of defendant's witnesses on a prosecution for felony, under either Const. art. 1, § 11, which gives to defendant the right "to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf," or under Comp. St. p. 746, § 541a, providing "that the fees of all the witnesses in criminal cases in the district court shall be paid by the county wherein the indictment is found;" such provision having reference only to cases where a change of venue has been had, and being intended to determine which county should pay such fees as either would be liable for in such cases.—Hewerkle v. Gage County, 14 Neb. 18, 14 N. W. 549.

[g] (N. H. 1845) One recognized to appear as a witness in a public prosecution is entitled to receive from the county his fees for travel and attendance.—Ex parte Mitchell, 17 N. H. 501.

[h] (N. C. 1877) A witness in a criminal case has no claim on the county for his fees until the question of the county's liability for costs is passed on by the court.—Young v. Buncombe County, 76 N. C. 316.

[i] (N. C. 1889) Where an indictment is quashed, defendant's necessary witness fees cannot be taxed against the county as Code, § 747, authorizes the court to tax defendant's witnesses against the county only when he "shall be acquitted, a nolle prosequi entered, or judgment arrested."—State v. Massey, 104 N. C. 877, 10 S. E. 608.

[j] (N. C. 1889) Const. art. 1, § 11, which provides that a defendant in a criminal case shall not be compelled to pay necessary witness fees unless found guilty, does not, in the absence of legislative enactment, require the public to pay defendant's necessary witnesses on his acquittal, but merely deprives them of their common-law right to look to defendant for payment.—State v. Massey, 104 N. C. 877, 10 S. E. 608.

[k] (Pa. 1882) Although the constitution gives to a defendant the right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his behalf, it does not provide that such witnesses' costs and expenses shall be paid by the county, and as there is no act of assembly imposing such liability, the county is not compellable to pay the same.—Commonwealth v. Kilcourse, 1 Del. Co. R. 189.

[m] (Utah, 1889) It is apparent from the act (Sess. Laws 1888, p. 184) providing for the payment of jurors, witnesses, etc., and creating and defining the duties of court commissioners, and another passed on the same day, that the legislature, having provided for payment of all outstanding obligations for witness fees up to January 1, 1888, intended to provide for the payment of all certificates for which the territory was liable after that date, and commit their payment to the court commissioners therein named; but that services rendered after that date and before the passage of these acts should be paid according to the law then in force.—People v. Pyper, 6 Utah, 160, 21 Pac. 722.

Affidavit as to witness fees in statement of costs, see "Costs," vol. 13, cc. 720–722, § 776.

Fees of clerk of state courts for certificates of attendance, see "Clerks of Courts," vol. 10, cc. 109, 110, § 56.

—— of United States court for certificates of attendance, see "Clerks of Courts," vol. 10, cc. 135, 136, § 80.

[a] (U. S. 1875) The clerk's certificate is only prima facie evidence of the number of days that a witness attended before the register in bankruptcy. The memoranda or entries made by the register may be used to prove the proceedings.—In re Crane, Fed. Cas. No. 3,352.

[b] (U. S. 1888) An order of a circuit court of the United States, allowing mileage to a witness, is a sufficient voucher for the marshal of the court on the auditing of his accounts, but is not conclusive on the government, in a suit between it and the witness to recover such mileage.—Duval v. United States, 23 Ct. Cl. 102.

[d] (Ala. 1895) Code, § 4349, provides that the foreman of the grand jury shall give each witness a certificate stating the time, the number of miles traveled, and the amount due him. Section 4887 provides that the fees of witnesses before the grand jury must be paid by the county in the manner specified in section 4889, which provides that the clerk shall issue a certificate to each witness for the state, stating therein the amount of compensation to which he is entitled, and the facts which, under section 4887, make it a good claim against the county, which certificate is payable by the treasurers out of any fines or forfeitures in the county treasury. Held, that the certificate of the clerk prescribed by section 4889 is the only authentication of claims for such fees which the treasurer can pay.—Alston v. Yerby, 108 Ala. 480. 18 South. 559, following Herr v. Seymour (1884) 76 Ala. 270.

[f] (Ill. 1889) Under Rev. St. c. 25, § 16, subd. 5, which provides that the clerk of the court shall keep "a fee-book in which shall be distinctly set down any item under the proper title of the cause and heads, the costs of each suit, including clerk's, sheriff's, and witness' fees, stating the name of each witness having claimed his attendance during the term, with the number of days he attended at each term," a witness who attends at several terms may wait until the term at which judgment is rendered, and then file his affidavit showing the number of days he attended at each term.—Fish v. Farwell, 33 Ill. App. 242.

[g] (Me.) A witness' certificate to travel and attendance, where proved to have been made falsely, will be presumed to have been made corruptly; but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence.—(1834) Chesley v. Brown, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 143; (1852) Kennedy v. Wright, 34 Me. 351.

[h] (Mich. 1880) Witness fees will not be allowed to parties unless a special affidavit is made showing that such parties attended as witnesses, and traveled, as charged, for that purpose, and not to assist as parties in the conduct of the case.—Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 Mich. 624, 7 N. W. 182.

[i] (Mich. 1885) How. Ann. St. § 9016, provides that mileage shall be allowed to witnesses, to be estimated from the residence of the witness, if within the state, or, if without the state from the boundary line, to the place of attendance; and that (section 9002) an affidavit for mileage shall state the distance the witnesses respectively traveled. Held, that an affidavit to tax mileage fees should state the place of residence of the witnesses.—Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246, 25 N. W. 176, 27 N. W. 7.

[j] (Mont. 1891) Under Comp. St. div. 5, § 1081, relative to the payment of witness fees, providing that, on application of a witness, the clerk of court shall fill out an affidavit giving the number of miles traveled by him, which shall be sworn to by the witness, and a certificate corresponding thereto shall be signed by the clerk, provided that, if the county commissioners have established a table of distances, the certificate of mileage shall not exceed the distance established by the table, where there is a regular stage line, and the distance by rail is further, in the absence of any table furnished by the county commissioners the clerk is not bound to give a certificate for the number of miles by rail, though the witness traveled that way, and though he made affidavit that the distance was necessarily traveled, and though the stage route was inconvenient and unpleasant.—State v. Ramsey, 11 Mont. 245, 28 Pac. 258.

[k] (N. Y. 1810) No fees for attendance and travel of witnesses can be taxed without proof by affidavit of their actual attendance and travel.—Jackson v. Scott, 6 Johns. 330.

[l] (N. Y. 1837) In the affidavit of the attendance of witnesses, it is not necessary, in the first instance, to state their materiality, and the affidavit need not be made by the party or his attorney.—Willink v. Reckle, 19 Wend. 82.

[m] (N. Y. 1843) The affidavit of the travel and attendance of witnesses should give the name, residence, distance traveled, and time occupied of each witness.—Ehle v. Bingham, 4 Hill, 595.

[n] (N. C. 1824) Witnesses should swear to their attendance at each term, and the ticket should state the number of days' attendance at each term.—Thompson v. Hodges, 10 N. C. 318.

[o] (S. C. 1890) Gen. St. § 622, subd. 2, requires each county to pay witness fees in state cases, for actual attendance on the circuit court as provided by law; and section 2197 provides that no fees shall be allowed to any witness bound over or summoned to testify, unless the judge who tried the cause in which the witness was summoned shall certify that he was material. Held, that the certificate of a circuit judge, which fails to state that the witness was material, is insufficient.—Hellams v. Greenville County, 32 S. C. 441, 11 S. E. 211.

[p] (S. C. 1894) Gen. St. § 2197, provides that no fees or other compensation shall be allowed to any witness bound over or summoned to testify in the court of general sessions unless the circuit judge who tried the case shall certify that such witness was material. Held, that a certificate that a witness "was regularly bound over as a material witness," signed by the clerk of the circuit court, and marked "Approved" by the circuit judge, is not a compliance with the statute.—Eustace v. Greenville County, 42 S. C. 190, 20 S. E. 88.

[r] (Utah, 1889) Comp. Laws 1888, § 5447, providing that witness fees shall not be taxed "unless the witness appear before the clerk within two days after the trial, and claim his fees," does not apply as against a party who has paid his witnesses their fees in advance, and made the affidavit of costs and disbursements required by section 3695.—Grant v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., 6 Utah, 270, 21 Pac. 996.

Additional compensation to experts, see ante, §§ 65, 66.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Rev. St. § 823 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 632], regulating witnesses' fees, does not prohibit the attorney general from procuring the attendance of witnesses living beyond the process of the court by paying their traveling expenses out of the miscellaneous expense fund under his control.—Douglass v. United States, 21 Ct. Cl. 462.

[b] (U. S. 1889) A marshal, being without funds, gave certificates to witnesses. The assignee of these certificates presented them to the treasury department for payment. Held, that the provision of Rev. St. § 3477 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2320], prohibiting assignments of claims against the United States, did not preclude the treasury department from making payment to such assignee.—Lopez v. United States, 24 Ct. Cl. 84.

ness fees are paid him.—Kipp v. Dawson, 59 Minn. 82, 60 N. W. 845.

[d] (N. Y. 1847) A witness attending court is not obliged to be sworn until his fees as such witness have been paid.—Hurd v. Swan, 4 Denio, 75.

[e] (Pa. 1877) The Armstrong county act of 1834 (P. L. 685), providing that the witness fees must be paid them unless they have given a written order for their payment to some other person, was merely declaratory of the then existing law.—McCain v. Jerrell, 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. (O. S.) 185.

[a] (N. Y. 1851) The sum paid to a witness, on serving a subpœna, for one day's attendance and for mileage, cannot be recovered back by the party paying it, unless the witness has failed, without a reasonable excuse, to attend the court in obedience to the subpœna. If the cause is settled or put off, the witness is not bound to refund, although he is excused from attending.—Ford v. Monroe, 6 How. Prac. 204.

[b] (N. Y. 1852) Where a witness who has been subpœnaed departs from the court without leave before the trial, the fees paid him to secure his attendance may be recovered back.—Dowling v. Bush, 6 How. Prac. 410.

[a] (Ga. 1894) Code, § 3843, providing that a witness who claims more than is due him forfeits all his fees, and shall pay to the injured party four times the amount so claimed, has no application to an execution issued by the clerk for excessive witness fees; the issuance by the clerk of the execution for such fees not being a "claim by the witness" for them, within such section.—State v. Everett, 93 Ga. 575, 20 S. E. 78.

Appealability of orders relating to fees of witnesses, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, c. 1389, § 833.

Claim for fees as "liability created by statute" within meaning of limitation acts, see "Limitation of Actions," vol. 33, cc. 324, 325, § 154.

Limitations applicable to action, see "Limitation of Actions," vol. 33, c. 325, § 154 [h, i].

Splitting causes of action, see "Action," vol. 1, c. 1434, § 621.

[a] (U. S. 1891) The claim of a witness for the United States for fees earned by attendance on a federal court is a claim against the marshal, and not against the government, and therefore not within the prohibition against assignments contained in Rev. St. § 3477 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2320], and an action will lie by the assignee of witness' certificates on the bond of a marshal who has received the money to pay them in his official capacity, but has failed to do so.—Bollin v. Blythe (C. C.) 46 Fed. 181.

[b] (Ala. 1827) A witness may transfer his certificate for fees, and the holder can sustain an action in the name of the witness for his own use.—Findley v. Wyser, 1 Stew. 23.

[d] (Ala. 1846) In a suit on an assigned witness' certificate, it is competent for defendant, notwithstanding the certificate, to show that the witness agreed, before the services were rendered, to attend gratuitously.—Carville v. Reynolds, 9 Ala. 969.

[f] (Del. 1893) In an application for payment by the state of fees of witnesses for the defense in criminal cases, the affidavits of indigence must be read in open court.—In re Indigent Witnesses, 2 Hardesty, 181.

[g] (Ga. 1894) Where the clerk of court issues an execution for the costs due witnesses, and defendant meets it with an affidavit of illegality, on the ground that the witnesses claimed more fees than they are entitled to, the court should hear evidence by the witnesses and try the issue.—State v. Everett, 93 Ga. 575, 20 S. E. 73.

[i] (Kan. 1889) In an action to recover for services as a witness, where the defense was that the services were a mere gratuity, with the understanding at the time of performance that they were not to be paid for, and there was evidence tending to establish such a defense, it is error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury as to the principle that no recovery can be had for services gratuitously performed.—Stadel v. Stadel, 40 Kan. 646, 20 Pac. 475.

[j] (Ky. 1835) A distress issued on a claim of a witness for his attendance may be levied on property fraudulently conveyed by defendant in the distress.—Worland v. Outten, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 477.

[k] (Ky. 1835) The claim of a witness for his attendance is a debt on the party by whom he was summoned, and may be satisfied by distress.—Worland v. Outten, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 477.

[m] (Miss. 1892) Code, § 1595, providing that a party recovering costs in an action may have the amount of his witnesses' fees taxed, for which execution might issue, has no application to witnesses of the unsuccessful party, who are not entitled to have execution issued against such party to enforce collection of their fees, but they have simply a valid claim for the amount, on which they may bring suit as any other creditor by simple contract.—Hall v. Moore, 70 Miss. 75, 11 South. 655.

[n] (Mo. 1892) The right of a witness to have his fees taxed in a case must be exercised through the agency of a party to the suit.—State ex rel. Houser v. Oliver, 50 Mo. App. 217.

[o] (Mont. 1888) Under Cr. Proc. Act § 423, providing that witnesses in criminal cases shall make out, under oath, a bill of their fees, and file it with the clerk, a complaint for the recovery of fees failing to show compliance with this section is defective.—First Nat. Bank of Billings v. Custer County, 7 Mont. 464, 17 Pac. 551.

[p] (N. H. 1850) Where defendant's fees as a witness under order of court to testify to the facts relating to a negotiable note disclosed by a trustee had not been paid, he is entitled to judgment and execution therefor as for costs.—Hurd v. Fogg, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 98.

[q] (N. C. 1801) Witnesses cannot bring an action at common law for their services; they must proceed on the statute.—Standley v. Hodges, 1 N. C. 500.

[r] (N. C. 1802) Before the act of 1790, a witness could not pursue the common-law remedy against the party who summoned him, until recourse was first had against the party cast, according to the directions of the act of 1783.—Stanly v. Hodges, 1 N. C. 203.

[s] (N. C. 1881) A witness is not at liberty, after final judgment, to withdraw, his "witness ticket," and sue upon it. His fees for attendance should be taxed and collected with the other costs against the party adjudged to pay the same, if he be solvent, and if not, then the prevailing party who summoned and required his testimony is responsible therefor.—Belden v. Snead, 84 N. C. 243.

[t] (Or. 1870) A statute that requires a witness in a criminal case to claim his fees at the same term at which the witness attended does not deprive the witness of a constitutional right; it only points out the remedy the witness is to pursue.—Lannahan v. Multnomah County, 3 Or. 187.

[u] (Pa. 1841) On an indictment for forcible entry, and an acquittal of the defendants without any finding of the jury on the subject of costs, an action will not lie, by a witness, in behalf of the commonwealth, to recover his costs of the prosecutor who subpœnaed him.—Strein v. Zeigler, 1 Watts & S. 259.

[uu] (Pa. 1843) A witness may maintain an action for his fees against the party who subpœnaed him and lost the cause, without having the bill of costs taxed, and making demand before suit brought.—Utt v. Long, 6 Watts & S. 174.

[v] (Tenn. 1827) A witness may sue the party who summoned him, for the attendance money allowed by law, although he lives in the same county where the suit is pending, and the cause is not finally determined.—Wetherspoon v. Killough, Mart & Y. 38.

[vv] (Tenn. 1827) Where two joint plaintiffs subpœna a witness, he may sue either or both for the attendance money.—Wetherspoon v. Killough, Mart & Y. 38.

[w] (Tex. 1876) The certificate given by the clerk, on the oath of a witness, showing the amount due such witness for attendance in a cause, while not an adjudication, is prima facie evidence of the correctness of the claim, on which he may sue the party who summoned him without waiting for the termination of the suit.—Houston & G. N. R. Co. v. Jones, 46 Tex. 133.

[ww] (Tex. 1879) In the absence of statute a witness may claim his costs, and the same may be taxed in the bill of costs, at any time before the issue of execution, but not afterwards. Hardy v. De Leon, 7 Tex. 466.

[x] (Tex. 1880) A witness who sued for his fees for attendance should show the subpœna, or account for its absence, and he should show the time at which he attended.—Harris v. Coleman, 8 Tex. 278.

[xx] (Tex. 1880) Under the act of 1836 the fees of witnesses abode the event of the suit, and were recoverable from the party cast only in the mode provided by that act. Under the act of 1846 witnesses have a claim directly against the party summoning them, for their fees; and, as soon as the service is rendered, they may maintain an action for the same.—Flores v. Thorn, 8 Tex. 377.

[y] (Tex. 1880) Where a witness sues for his fees, the subpœna which was served on him is competent evidence to prove that he was subpœnaed.—Flores v. Thorn, 8 Tex. 377,

[z] (Vt. 1894) In assumpsit by a witness to recover his fees of the winning party, the clerk's taxation of costs, which included the attendance of plaintiff as a witness, was admissible to show his attendance, though neither defendant nor his counsel were present at the taxation.—Hamilton v. Gray, 67 Vt. 233, 31 Atl. 315, 48 Am. St. Rep. 811.

[zz] (Wash. 1896) The court's approval of a cost bill in a criminal case, with fees of witnesses stricken out, amounts to a disapproval of such witness fees; and thereupon the right of action of the witnesses against the county for the fees accrues.—State v. Graves, 13 Wash. 485, 43 Pac. 376.

[a] (Ala. 1881) The inability of a witness to read or write does not affect his competency to testify as to the signature of a deed by a certain person as witness, his incapacity affecting only the weight of his testimony.—Allred v. Elliott, 71 Ala. 224.

[b] (La.) The general rule is that all persons not expressly disqualified may testify in civil and criminal cases.—(1822) Bernard v. Vignaud, 10 Mart. (O. S.) 482; (1850) State v. Levy, 5 La. Ann. 64.

[c] (La. 1848) A decision in a civil suit, declaring a witness not entitled to credit, cannot disqualify him, though it may greatly affect his credibility.—Farr v. Gyles, 3 La. Ann. 669.

[d] (La. 1879) Women are competent witnesses to prove the handwriting of a testator, though they are not competent as subscribing witnesses to a will.—Succession of Roth, 31 La. Ann. 315.

[a] (U. S. 1839) On a prosecution for stealing letters from the mail, bank notes alleged to be inclosed in a letter so stolen need not be proved by a person who has seen the president and cashier write; but any one who deals in such notes as cashier of a bank, etc., may prove their genuineness.—United States v. Keen, Fed. Cas. No. 15,510 [1 McLean, 429].

[b] (Ala. 1848) Where usury is proved by a witness, the party to the usurious contract is not competent to testify to an independent fact, showing its connection with the note in controversy, when he knows nothing of the offense itself.—Jackson v. Jones, 13 Ala. 121.

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where the question was whether a certain warehouse was fireproof, a witness who stated that he did not know what a fireproof building was may be allowed to state what was considered such in the place where he resided, and in what respect the one in question differed therefrom.—Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587.

[f] (Ill. 1874) In an action of assumpsit to recover damages for the breach of a parol contract to furnish wood to defendant, the testimony of plaintiff's bookkeeper was admissible to show the amount of wood purchased and the price paid therefor, although he did not make the purchases, where he had knowledge of such purchase and kept the books, one of which was produced at the trial.—Long v. Conklin, 75 Ill. 32.

[g] (Ill. 1887) In an action to recover the price of corn, where the purchaser pleads that the corn did not answer to contract, if the purchaser did not himself sell the corn in the market for which he claimed it was bought, or did not know of his own knowledge how much it was sold for there, he is an incompetent witness to show what it brought there when sold.—Carpenter v. First Nat. Bank of Joliet, 119 Ill. 352, 10 N. E. 18.

[i] (Ind. 1894) One who had been the grantee's partner for a year before the conveyance could testify as to his familiarity with his partner's claim against the grantor, and what occurred between the grantor and grantee when witness figured up the indebtedness and the deed was made.—Fleming v. Yost, 137 Ind. 95, 36 N. E. 705.

[j] (Iowa, 1877) In an action on an account, a witness may testify to the receipt of orders for merchandise from defendant, where the receipt of such orders were within his personal knowledge, though the only knowledge of the witness as to the details of the transaction was based on plaintiff's account book.—Davis Sewing Mach. Co. v. McGinnis, 45 Iowa, 538.

[k] (Iowa, 1888) One who has been in the habit of passing over a crossing every day, and sometimes five or six times a day, is competent to state that she knew the signal to stop or go on, and that the flagman stationed at the crossing gave the signal to go on.—Buchanan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 393, 39 N. W. 663.

[l] (Kan. 1886) It is not competent to prove the condition of a long account between a bank and one of its customers by the oral testimony of the cashier of the bank, where it is not shown that the cashier is the bookkeeper, or that the books are kept under his supervision, or that he has any knowledge of such books.—Mann v. Second Nat. Bank of Springfield, 34 Kan. 746, 10 Pac. 150.

[m] (Kan. 1886) Where a person has lived several months on a farm near a railroad crossing of a public highway, and his business requires him to cross the track frequently, and he is able to tell the time the regular trains pass the crossing, he is competent to testify whether a particular train is an irregular or extra one.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Stevens, 35 Kan. 662, 12 Pac. 25.

[n] (La. 1889) The refusal of a trial judge to permit a witness to answer a question, the purport of which was whether wounds received by an accused had been inflicted in any particular way, will not be interfered with, where the witness had previously stated that he did not know how the wounds had been inflicted, and that he was not an expert.—State v. Claire, 41 La. Ann. 1067, 6 South. 806.

[o] (Md. 1801) The register of a land office is competent to testify as to the loss of records in his office and as to certain practices which prevailed therein previous to the Revolution. —Hall's Lessee v. Gough, 1 Har. & J. 119.

[p] (Mass. 1891) On an indictment charging a conspiracy between defendants to obtain goods under color of a contract between one Kennedy and a corporation, in which Kennedy should assume to be one Brown, who was pretended to be a wealthy person, the testimony of persons residing in the place where it was pretended that Brown lived and owned real estate, that no such person as Brown was known there, was competent, although no one witness testified that he knew everybody living there.—Commonwealth v. Meserve, 154 Mass. 64, 27 N. E. 997.

[q] (Mass. 1896) Witnesses may testify as to the mental capacity of one injured by defendant's machinery, though they were not acquainted with him till after the accident.—Laplante v. Warren Cotton Mills, 165 Mass. 487, 43 N. E. 294.

[r] (Mich. 1878) The fact that the injury to plaintiff on which he based his claim for malpractice against a surgeon was caused by his own imprudence in laying off his splints and going on crutches cannot be proved by the statements of a witness having no personal knowledge thereof.—Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 501.

[s] (Mich. 1888) In an action for the consideration of a contract to saw lumber for a specified price per thousand "as evidenced by a measurement of the same when shipped," testimony as to the method of measurement at the place of shipment, by a witness who showed no knowledge qualifying him to correct or explain such measurement, was properly excluded.—Eastman v. Cleaver, 72 Mich. 167, 40 N. W. 238.

[t] (Mich. 1891) Where plaintiff agreed to cut and deliver lumber for defendants at a certain dock, the settlement therefor to be made on the lumber tally on the lumber as shipped, a witness who kept tally on a scaleboard of the number of logs delivered, and on the board becoming full transferred to a book kept for the purpose sometimes the number of feet in each log and sometimes the number of logs and total number of feet, was competent, using the book as a memorandum, to testify to the number of feet of lumber which he scaled.—Welch v. Palmer, 85 Mich. 310, 48 N. W. 552.

[tt] (Minn. 1869) A county treasurer is a competent witness as to payment to him of a liability to the county since he is the authorized receiver and custodian of the county funds. —Shelly v. Lash, 14 Minn. 498 (Gil. 373).

[u] (Mo. 1886) A person who was present at an auction sale is competent to prove what occurred at the sale, although the auctioneer is not produced or his absence accounted for. —Austin v. Boyd, 23 Mo. App. 317.

[uu] (N. C. 1881) One who saw an instrument signed by the maker, who is absent from the state, and by the subscribing witness, who is dead, is a competent witness to testify to its execution.—Miller v. Hahn, 84 N. C. 226.

[v] (N. C. 1890) A witness is competent to testify to a fact of the truth of which he says that he feels "reasonably certain."—People v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 11 S. E. 665.

[vv] (Ohio, 1847) Under Act Jan. 30, 1822, relating to the sale of land for taxes, and providing that the clerk of the court shall make out a list of the judgments rendered against delinquents and deliver the same, together with an order of sale, to the county auditor, who shall then proceed to sell said lands, the auditor is a competent witness to prove that such list was delivered to him by the clerk.—Thevenin v. Slocum, 16 Ohio, 519.

[w] (Pa. 1819) On the trial of an indictment for uttering a forged bank note, it is not necessary to prove the forgery by the testimony of the president and cashier whose signatures are alleged to have been forged. A witness who has become acquainted with their handwriting in the course of official correspondence may testify, especially where he states that from his knowledge of the notes of the bank, the paper, type, and whole appearance the note was forged.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 6 Serg. & R. 568.

[ww] (Pa. 1890) The persons before whom a cause of action was settled by the parties, and who assisted in making it, are competent to testify to the terms of the settlement, and what was included in it.—Schubkagel v. Dierstein, 131 Pa. 46, 18 Atl. 1059, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 185.

[x] (S. C. 1885) Testimony of attorneys charged with a case is competent to establish the existence and contents of a lost judgment record.—Reynolds v. Rees, 23 S. C. 438.

[xx] (Tex. 1887) The commissioner of the general land office having knowledge of the manner in which the records of that office are kept, is a competent witness to explain what was the understood official meaning of certain entries in that office relating to a county certificate, and surveys under it.—Shinn v. Hicks, 68 Tex. 277, 4 S. W. 486.

[y] (Tex. 1894) It is error to allow a witness to testify that a break in a coupler could have been seen from the outside, when the witness saw the coupler for the first time after the accident, when the cars had been derailed and the coupler detached.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Sweeney, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 173, 24 S. W. 947.

[z] (Tex. 1895) The competency of a witness to testify as to her being the surviving wife of a deceased person is not affected by the fact that another suit is pending to establish that relation.—Ingersol v. McWillie, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 30 S. W. 56.

[zz] (Tex. 1895) A person who went on the last of three trains, which were a day apart, all carrying cattle, cannot testify that none of them were watered, it not appearing that he had any opportunity to know about the other trains.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. White (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 322.

[a] (Ga. 1879) Where a witness states that he knows a thing testified to from the best of evidence, the source of his knowledge may be inquired into and the testimony excluded if found to be based on hearsay evidence.—Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168.

[b] (Ill. 1875) The testimony of a postmaster, on direct examination, that a certain person bought a money order on a specified date, payable to certain parties, is inadmissible where he states on cross-examination that he knows the facts only from the money order record.—Protection Life Insurance Co. v. Foote, 79 Ill. 361.

[c] (Mich. 1891) In an action for the price of logs, it appeared that M. & R. scaled the logs; that M. took the measurements at one end, and called them out to R., together with any defects apparent to him, and that R. relying upon the correctness of his statements, took the measurements at the other end. M. did not testify at the trial. Held, that R.'s testimony as to the scaling was incompetent, for his measurements depended solely on the accuracy of M.'s, as to which there was no evidence.—Sovereign v. Mosher, 86 Mich. 36, 48 N. W. 611.

[d] (Mo. 1893) It is not competent to prove the duties of a brakeman by the testimony of one who has only been round trains a few times, when the brakemen had been attending to their business, and who testified that he had no other knowledge of their duties than what he had observed, and what he had been told by railroad men that they were supposed to be.—Farber v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 116 Mo. 81, 22 S. W. 631, 20 L. R. A. 350.

[e] (N. H. 1866) A witness who has not seen a carriage start may be allowed to testify, merely from hearing, as to the place from which it started.—State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 497, 88 Am. Dec. 224.

[f] (Ohio, 1875) The market price of an article may be proved by the testimony of witnesses whose knowledge is derived from persons or sources from which it may be acquired.—Mowry v. Cheeler, 5 Am. Law Rec. 587.

[g] (Pa. 1891) A witness cannot testify to facts based on measurements made by another, from whom alone he has derived his knowledge.—Holmes v. Chartiers Oil Co., 138 Pa. 546, 21 Atl. 231, 21 Am. St. Rep. 919, 27 Wkly. Notes Cas. 156.

[h] (S. C. 1895) One cannot testify as to an indebtedness set out in a contract which alone gave him any knowledge of it.—Gibbes v. McCraw, 45 S. C. 184, 22 S. E. 790.

[i] (Tex. 1892) In an action for the value of cotton lost in transitu, a witness for plaintiff testified that, at the time of the loss of the cotton in question, he was the manager of plaintiff's agent M., located at P., Tex.; that he knew the cotton was destroyed by fire at G., of his own knowledge, as far as it was possible for him to know it without actually seeing it burn. Held, that the evidence was properly admitted, it not appearing therefrom that witness was not at G. the day of the fire, and that, while he did not see the fire, his statement may have been based on information derived from a source that would bind defendant.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Sherwood, 84 Tex. 125, 19 S. W. 455, 17 L. R. A. 643.

[j] (Tex. 1895) Testimony of the general manager of a railroad while it was in the hands of a receiver as to what the company's books show as to the extent of the betterments of the road during the receivership is admissible to show the extent of such betterments, where he stated that his information was derived from the books and from the general disposition of the funds which passed under his control as such general manager.—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Warner (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 503.

[a] (Iowa, 1864) Evidence of a conversation had with a deceased person, whose executor is the adverse party, is admissible, although the witness cannot recollect the entire conversation.—Nash v. Gibson, 16 Iowa, 305.

[b] (Kan. 1896) A witness who has not kept the books or the pay rolls, and who has no recollection of the facts independently of them, cannot state the contents of such books or pay rolls.—Paola Gas Co. v. Paola Glass Co., 56 Kan. 614, 44 Pac. 621, 54 Am. St. Rep. 598.

[c] (La. 1860) Although a witness does not recollect the whole conversation of a party, he may nevertheless be allowed to testify to what he does recollect.—Garrett v. Crooks, 15 La. Ann. 483.

[d] (La. 1895) The admissions of defendant will not be excluded merely because the witness testifying thereto cannot recollect all that was said.—State v. Vallery, 47 La. Ann. 182, 16 South. 745, 49 Am. St. Rep. 363.

[e] (Me. 1864) If a witness can give the substance of a conversation in relation to the matter in issue, his testimony is not to be excluded because he cannot give all the conversation which took place at the same time in relation to other matters.—Pope v. Machias Water Power & Mill Co., 52 Me. 535.

[f] (Mass. 1843) Where a witness is offered to prove the testimony of deceased, a witness given on a former trial of the same cause, he cannot be permitted to testify if he states that he can only give the substance of such testimony but not the language of the deceased witness.—Warren v. Nichols, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 261.

[g] (Miss. 1888) A statement, voluntarily made by defendant, relative to the circumstances of the homicide, to a newspaper reporter, is admissible when the latter testifies that he took the statement down accurately, and read it to defendant, who agreed to its correctness, though the witness does not remember, independently of the article, what defendant said.—Jackson v. State, 66 Miss. 89, 5 South. 690, 14 Am. St. Rep. 542.

[h] (N. J. 1843) A witness is competent to prove the evidence given by a witness, since deceased, on a former trial of a cause, if he testifies that he has a distinct recollection, independent of his notes, of the deceased having been sworn as a witness, of what he was produced to prove, and of the substance of what he then stated, although, for the language used by him, he must rely on his notes taken at the time, and which he believes to be correct.—Sloan v. Somers, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 66.

[j] (Ohio, 1856) It is essential to the competency of a witness called to give evidence of another witness on a former trial in a criminal case, but since deceased, that he heard the deceased person testify on the former trial, and that he has such accurate recollection of the matter stated that he will, on his oath, assume, and undertake to narrate in substance, the matter sworn to by the deceased person, in all its material parts, or that part thereof which he may be called on to prove.—Summons v. State, 5 Ohio St. 325.

[k] (Tex. 1884) A witness is not rendered incompetent to testify to his best recollection of a certain conversation by the fact that he is not certain as to what was stated or has doubts about the correctness of his memory.—Simpson v. Brotherton, 62 Tex. 170.

Mode of testifying, see post, §§ 811, 812.

[a] (Cal. 1874) A conversation between a person indicted for murder and his victim, while alive, held partly in Chinese and partly in English, may be proved, that part of it held in English by persons present who understood English only, and that part of it held in Chinese by persons present who understood Chinese, provided both the accused and his victim understood both languages.—People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 236, distinguishing Same v. Gelabert (1870) 39 Cal. 663.

may testify as to its existence, though at the time the parties spoke some German, which he did not understand, it not appearing that any part of the contract was made in that language.—Roberson v. Reiter, 38 Neb. 198, 56 N. W. 877.

[c] (Tex. 1876) The deposition of a witness translating a Spanish document showed that he had once filled the post of Spanish translator in the general land office, and wrote and spoke the Spanish language. Held, that it was no objection to his deposition that it had not first been shown that he was "a Spanish scholar and competent to translate the Spanish language into English."—Blythe v. Houston, 46 Tex. 65.

[a] (Ala. 1853) To render a witness competent to testify to the general character of the accused, it is not necessary that he should know what a majority of his neighbors said or thought of him, nor that he should have heard some one say what a majority of them said or thought of him; the only test of his competency is whether he knows the general character of the accused among his neighbors, or those acquainted with him.—Dave v. State, 22 Ala. 23.

[b] (Ala. 1854) To authorize a witness to testify to the general character of a person in respect to his habits, he should first state that he is acquainted with that person's general character in the particular to which he deposes; but if his testimony shows that fact, whether brought out on preliminary examination or examination in chief, it will be sufficient.—Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53.

[c] (Ala. 1859) Eight or ten years' acquaintance enables a witness to speak to the character of a party, though they live 20 miles apart.—Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 380, 73 Am. Dec. 422.

[d] (Ala. 1879) On a trial for selling liquor to a person of known intemperate habits all persons having sufficient knowledge of said person's general character are competent to testify as to whether he was or was not generally known as a person of intemperate habits.—Tatum v. State, 63 Ala. 147.

[e] (Ala. 1891) Defendant's reputation cannot be shown by witnesses whose only knowledge has been acquired after commission of the crime.—Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 583, 8 South. 812.

[f] (Cal. 1886) Until it is shown that a witness has lived in the same county with or knows defendant's general reputation in the county, it is not proper to question him in regard thereto.—People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601, 11 Pac. 481.

[g] (Ill. 1894) It is not necessary that a witness who testified as to the reputation of another for carefulness, prudence, and skill in a certain occupation should be experienced in such occupation.—Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 51 Ill. App. 512, judgment affirmed (1894) 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244.

[h] (La. 1896) The peaceable character of defendant cannot be established by witnesses who have not resided in his neighborhood for 7 and 11 years.—State v. Fontenot, 48 La. Ann. 305, 19 South. 111.

[i] (Tex. 1896) On a prosecution for threatening the life of another, it was error to allow a witness, who had stated that he did not know defendant's general reputation in the county in which he lived for carrying out his threats, to testify that defendant was a dangerous man.—Woods v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 459, 36 S. W. 96.

[j] (Vt. 1883) It was in the court's discretion to allow defendant to prove the financial reputation of the insolvent, though not residing in the same town, if frequently there on business.—Larkin v. Batchelder, 56 Vt. 416.

§ 85. Conversations, admissions, declarations, and confessions.

[a] That a witness did not hear all of a conversation about which he is called to testify is no ground of objection to his stating so much of it as he did hear.

—(Ga. 1872) Westmoreland v. State, 45 Ga. 225;

(S. C. 1856) State v. Gossett, 9 Rich. Law, 428;

(Va. 1888) Sutton v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 128, 7 S. E. 323.

[b] (Ala. 1890) A witness who hears the terms of a contract discussed in the presence of the parties a few minutes after they are agreed on, and before the persons present have dispersed, is competent to prove the contract, although he did not actually hear it made.—Perryman v. Wolffe, 93 Ala. 290, 9 South. 148.

[c] (Ga. 1879) A witness in a murder trial who was in the gunsmith's shop at the time the accused bought a pistol testified as to his understanding of a statement made by the accused at the time, but admitted that he did not hear the words distinctly. Held, that it was competent for him to testify as to the substance of the statement as he understood it, and that such testimony was not inadmissible as being a mere inference, his doubt as to whether he heard it correctly detracting only from the force and value of his evidence.—Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 37 Am. Rep. 76.

[d] (Ga. 1890) A jailer overheard the accused say, while alone in his cell, "Lord, have mercy on me for what I have done. The only thing I regret is killing my father." The jailer could not say he heard all the accused said—he might have said something before he got there. Held, that the statement was admissible.—Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S. E. 814.

[e] (Ky. 1887) Testimony as to conversations which took place in an adjoining room where the witness could not see who were talking nor recognize their voices is admissible where the witness states that defendant and others who were talking passed through the room where he was, and this latter testimony sufficiently connects the defendant with the conversation.—Short v. Commonwealth, 4 S. W. 810.

[f] (La. 1877) The admissions, confessions, or declarations of a person accused of crime cannot be received in evidence against him, unless the witness who testifies to them is able to state at least the substance of them; and a remark made by the accused from the jail window to a boy outside is inadmissible in evidence where the witness did not hear the preceding or subsequent portion of the conversation in the course of which the remark was made.—State v. Hughes, 29 La. Ann. 514.

[g] (La. 1885) A confession of guilt by an accused is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the witness does not know the name of the confessor, where on defendant and another being shown to him he at once pointed out defendant as the one who confessed.—State v. King, 37 La. Ann. 662.

[h] (Mass. 1872) On the trial of two persons for adultery with each other, a witness may testify that he overheard one of them in speaking to the other, admit the adultery, although he did not overhear the rest of their conversation.—Commonwealth v. Pitsinger, 110 Mass. 101.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) A witness is not competent to testify to a conversation in which a confession was made, if he did not understand the whole of it.—People v. Miniscl, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 719.

[j] (N. C. 1876) The testimony of a witness who states that he heard the bargain made between the parties is competent to prove what the bargain was, although he did not hear the whole of the conversation in the course of which it was made.—Davis v. Smith, 75 N. C. 115.

[k] (N. C.) A witness may give the substance of declarations made by a party to an action in the course of a conversation, altogether he did not hear the entire conversation, if the portion heard embraced a distinct fact, pertinent to the issue.—(1883) State v. Pratt, 88 N. C. 639; (1886) Same v. Carson, 95 N. C. 593.

[l] (Pa. 1874) On a trial for murder the testimony of a witness, who was a prisoner confined in jail with the accused, was admissible to prove a conversation between the witness and the accused in which the latter confessed his guilt, although such conversation was carried on through a soil pipe in the jail, and the witness had no other means of recognizing the accused than his voice.—Brown v. Commonwealth, 76 Pa. (26 P. F. Smith) 319.

[m] (S. C. 1832) The rule that all the declarations and admissions by the accused must be taken together does not exclude evidence of a conversation overheard between him and another, though the witness did not hear it all.—State v. Covington, 2 Bailey, 569.

[n] (S. C. 1891) After accused made a confession, the person to whom it was made brought another to accused, and told the latter to repeat the confession in order that the third person might reduce it to writing, which was done. Held, that such third person was competent to prove that the confession was voluntary.—State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

[o] (Tex. 1896) On a trial for an assault with intent to murder, where it was shown in proof of the identity of accused that he conversed with prosecutor both before and after the shot, evidence that witnesses could recognize him by his voice was admissible.—Givens v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 563, 34 S. W. 626.

Of surveyors and their assistants in boundary proceedings, see "Boundaries," vol. 8, cc. 655–660, §§ 157–159.

[a] (U. S. 1831) A party may prove his possession of land by any competent witness, whether he were present at the resurvey or not; but he is not competent to testify as to the lines, objects, and boundaries laid down on the resurvey, unless he was present.—Greenleaf's Lessee v. Birth, 30 U. S. (5 Pet.) 132, 8 L. Ed. 72.

[b] (U. S. 1813) The surveyors of the county, who officially know that certain lands are covered with prior surveys, are competent witnesses to prove the same.—Jones v. Bache, Fed. Cas. No. 7,454 [3 Wash. C. C. 199].

[c] (Ark. 1860) The testimony of a county surveyor is admissible, in a proceeding by a widow to recover dower assigned to her, to show what land was included in the assignment of dower, between the points stated by the report of the commissioners of assignment.—Farr v. Farr, 21 Ark. 573.

[d] (Ky. 1809) In an action to recover land the surveyor is a competent witness for either party.—Bowling v. Helm, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 88.

[e] (Md. 1790) In an action on the case for overflowing land, the surveyor who located the land and made the plats in the cause may give evidence of the place where the water overflowed, though he was not sworn as a witness on the survey.—King v. Tarlton, 2 Har. & McH. 473.

[f] (Md. 1827) A person cannot establish his claim to land by the testimony of witnesses as to the location of the plots returned upon the survey, where such witnesses were neither examined upon nor attended the survey.—Wall v. Forbes, 1 Har. & G. 441.

[g] (Md. 1828) A witness who declined to give evidence of a particular boundary, although in the execution of the warrant of resurvey he was at the place where the boundary stood, and was called on by plaintiff to testify in relation to it, may yet, at the trial, be called on to testify thereto, though not sworn at the survey.—Stoddert's Lessee v. Manning, 2 Har. & G. 147.

[h] (Md. 1828) A witness who was not on the resurvey, and did not show to the surveyor a certain division line, is not competent to give evidence in relation to such line.—Stoddert's Lessee v. Manning, 2 Har. & G. 147.

[i] (Md. 1867) Acts 1852, c. 177, which modifies the old rule that no one not sworn on a survey should be competent to testify in court as to the location of lines or objects on the certificate of such survey, by providing that witnesses may be examined who were not sworn on the survey, does not render one not on the survey a competent witness.—Morrison v. Hammond's Lessee, 27 Md. 604.

[a] (Iowa, 1876) Where a witness called to testify respecting a custom of trade, showed that his knowledge of it was not later than a year before the time of giving his testimony, he was incompetent.—Hale v. Gibbs, 43 Iowa, 380.

[b] (Kan. 1885) A person who knows the usage between commission merchants may testify thereto, though he be not himself a commission merchant.—Gregg v. Garverick, 33 Kan. 190, 5 Pac. 751.

[c] (Mass. 1890) Testimony as to the usages of trade existing at the time of the transactions is properly excluded when it appears that the witness offered was a member of the board of trade for 23 years prior to 1882, but that the transactions in suit were conducted under its rules adopted in 1883.—Farnum v. Pitcher, 151 Mass. 470, 24 N. E. 590.

[d] (Miss. 1859) That a custom may be admissible to explain a contract it must be proved by witnesses who have had actual experience in the matter, and not by those who can merely give a speculative opinion as to the existence of the custom.—Shackelford v. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co., 37 Miss. 202.

[e] (Mo. 1886) The fact that an Indian agent is not a lawyer does not render him incompetent to testify as to the existence, nature, and universality of customs affecting the property rights of Indian women.—Wear v. Sanger, 91 Mo. 348, 2 S. W. 307.

[f] (Mo. 1886) Evidence of the meaning of the term "merchantable measurement" in a lumber contract may be properly given by lumber dealers as well as lumber manufacturers, since such term does not involve a custom, but merely the meaning of a technical term as applied to the measurement of lumber.—Gaunt v. Pries, 21 Mo. App. 540.

[g] (N. Y. 1856) The customary dealing of banks may be proved by persons who deal with them, though not employed in any bank.—Griffin v. Rice, 1 Hilt. 184.

[h] (N. Y. 1893) A person is not competent to testify as to an alleged custom of trade, unless he is either engaged in such trade, or it is shown that he knows what the custom is.—Kugelman v. Levy (Com. Pl.) 4 Misc. Rep. 519, 24 N. Y. Supp. 559.

[i] (Or. 1892) A person who has purchased and shipped potatoes from a certain island, and can testify to a custom in shipping potatoes therefrom, from his own experience and his observation of the practice of others for three years, as well as one who has lived on the island for 10 years, raising and selling potatoes during that time, is competent to testify to such custom.—Holmes v. Whitaker, 23 Or. 319, 31 Pac. 705.

[j] (R. I. 1859) Where a policy insured "808 bundles rods" and exempted the company from liability for partial loss on bar iron, persons connected with the iron trade, whether manufacturers, retail dealers, or workers in iron, as well as insurers of iron or merchants effecting insurance on it, are competent to testify that by a usage in the iron trade the words "bundles rods" meant bar iron, but a usage to treat "bundles of rods" as bar iron under a proviso of a policy exempting insurer for a partial loss thereon can be proved only by the testimony of insurers, insurance brokers, and merchants accustomed to settle losses on insurance contracts on such subjects.—Evans v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 6 R. I. 47.

[k] (Tex. 1895) A person testifying that he had often ordered a "car load" of meat, from a certain city, but always specified the number of pounds to be shipped, is not qualified thereby to testify as to the existence of a custom in such city in regard to the number of pounds in a car load.—Woldert v. Arledge, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 484, 33 S. W. 372.

Evidence, see post, § 197.

[a] (U. S. 1802) Under the law of Virginia, a slave cannot be a witness if a free white man be a party.—Thomas v. Jamesson, Fed. Cas. No. 13,900 [1 Cranch, C. C. 91].

[b] (U. S. 1827) A colored man is not a competent witness in Alexandria, D. C., against a colored man indicted jointly with white men for a riot.—United States v. Birch, Fed. Cas. No. 14,596 [3 Cranch, C. C. 180].

[c] (U. S. 1837) Slaves are competent witnesses in criminal prosecutions, in Alexandria, D. C., against negroes or mulattoes.—United States v. Farrell, Fed. Cas. No. 15,074 [5 Cranch, C. C. 311].

[d] (U. S. 1840) A Malayan, baptized and educated in the Christian religion, is not a Christian white person, within the Maryland laws, and the testimony of negroes and mulattoes is admissible against him.—United States v. Dow, Fed. Cas. No. 14,990 [Taney, 34].

[e] (Cal. 1860) Section 14 of the act concerning crimes and punishments creates an exception to the general rule of section 13 of said act; and in a criminal suit against a white man, no black person or mulatto, although the injured party, can give evidence.—People v. Howard, 17 Cal. 63.

[ee] (Cal. 1860) The "injured party," within the meaning of section 13 of the act concerning crimes and misdemeanors, is the immediate and direct sufferer from the offense committed.—People v. Howard, 17 Cal. 63.

[f] (Del. 1841) Negro testimony is admissible in a case between negroes, or against a negro.—Elliott v. Morgan, 3 Har. 316.

[g] (Del. 1841) In an indictment against a white man for kidnapping, the negro kidnapped is allowed to testify, though there were white persons present participating in the crime.—State v. Whitaker, 3 Har. 549; Same v. Griffin, Id. 560.

[h] (Del. 1842) Though white persons were present at the commission of an alleged crime, if they were not in a situation or position to see the act, and did not in fact observe all that happened at the time when the crime charged is alleged to have been committed, the person on whom the crime was committed, though a negro, is a competent witness to prove it.—State v. Cooper, 3 Har. 571.

[i] (Del. 1859) A negro is a competent witness for a white person in a suit against a negro, though the witness would not be competent to testify for defendant.—Burton v. Roe, 2 Houst. 49.

[j] (Del. 1867) A negro, on whom an assault and battery has been committed by a white man, is a competent witness in the trial of the latter for the offense, although another white man was present at the time the act was committed.—State v. Rash, Houst. Cr. Cas. 271.

[k] (Ga. 1852) Against a free white person, negro testimony is inadmissible. It is competent, however, to state that certain acts were done, in consequence of information received from a negro.—Grady v. State, 11 Ga. 253.

[m] (Ind. 1857) On the trial of an information against a colored man, he offered two witnesses, whom the court refused to admit, unless defendant would admit that they were negroes, and that he himself was a mulatto. Held, that the witnesses should have been admitted or rejected according to the rules of law.—Weaver v. State, 8 Ind. 410.

[n] (Iowa, 1856) Since the provisions of Code 1851, § 2388, forbidding a negro to testify in any case where a white person is a party, were not for the exclusive benefit of the white person, a waiver by such white person by offering a negro as a witness does not render the negro competent to testify.—Motts v. Usher, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 82.

[q] (Mo. 1836) Under the statute providing that negroes shall not be witnesses in cases where all the parties are not negroes, in an action for freedom against a negro, it is no objection to the admission of the testimony of a negro that defendant vouches a white man for warranty of title.—Meechum v. Judy, 4 Mo. 361, affirmed Eidenmiller v. Kump (1875) 61 Mo. 342.

[r] (N. C. 1821) A slave tried for a capital crime may be convicted on the testimony of a slave, though uncorroborated by pregnant circumstances.—State v. Ben, 8 N. C. 434.

[u] (Tenn. 1838) No person disqualified as a witness by reason of his being a free man of color or slave, under Act 1794, c. 1, § 32, can be a witness, in a state prosecution, for a defendant who belongs to one of the disqualified classes. —Jones v. State, 19 Tenn. (1 Meigs) 120.

[a] (U. S. 1836) A mulatto, born of a white woman, is a competent witness against a Christian white person.—United States v. Crandell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,885 [4 Cranch, C. C. 683].

[b] (Ala. 1857) The son of a mulatto is incapable, by statute, of being a witness against a white man.—Smyth v. Oliver, 31 Ala. 39.

[c] (Ala. 1859) A person whose great-grandmother was the daughter of a mulatto by a negress is not a competent witness for or against a white (Code, § 2276), although his father, maternal grandfather, and great-grandfather were whites.—Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 380, 73 Am. Dec. 422.

[d] (Ala. 1859) A person whose maternal grandmother was the daughter of two mulattoes, each of whom had a full-blooded black for one parent, cannot testify against a white under Code, § 2276.—Heath v. State, 34 Ala. 250.

[e] (Ind. 1862) In a suit wherein one party is white and the other colored the white party cannot introduce a colored witness who has one-eighth or more of negro blood, against the other. —Graham v. Crockett, 18 Ind. 119.

[a] (Del. 1846) A colored person is competent to prove his book of original entries, to make it evidence in a suit, though against a white person.—Webb v. Pindergrass' Adm'x, 4 Har. 439.

[b] (Del. 1858) A colored witness is competent to testify to a confession made to him by a white man as regards a homicide committed in the absence of any witness.—State v. Downham, Houst. Cr. Cas. 45.

[c] (Ga. 1851) On a trial against a free white citizen, the state may give in evidence the confessions of a negro, even when extorted by the pain of punishment, provided they are proven by a white person, not as independent testimony, but as an inducement and in illustration of what was said and done by defendant, who was present.—Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 511.

[d] (Miss. 1857) On an indictment for the murder of a slave by a slave, the principal witness for the prosecution, also a slave, and all of one master, was charged by his master with a knowledge of the matter, which he denied. Afterwards the master tied him and struck him one blow, and informed his slaves that he would find out who did the killing, and that whoever did it should be hung. The witness thereupon stated that he saw the accused commit the homicide, and that the accused threatened to kill him, if he ever divulged it; and he also gave his master at the same time a minute account of the transaction. Four months afterwards, his testimony at the trial was substantially the same. His testimony was corroborated, in several important particulars, by other witnesses, but was in conflict with some others as to the time of day when certain material facts transpired. Held, that he was a competent witness. —Ned v. State, 33 Miss. 364.

[e] (Mo. 1841) Although a negro cannot testify against a white person, a conversation between the prisoner and a negro, if otherwise unobjectionable, may be proved by a white person, but not by the negro.—Hawkins v. State, 7 Mo. 190.

[f] (N. J. 1826) Where a witness is incompetent because he is a slave, his declarations, even to show his condition, cannot be legally received as evidence.—Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 275.

[g] (N. C. 1828) On the trial of a white man as an accessory, the principal being a negro, the testimony of negroes is admissible on the question of the principal's guilt, but not to prove the incitement by the accessory.—State v. Chitten, 13 N. C. 49.

[h] (N. C. 1841) On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, where the will was propounded by two legatees, one of whom was a colored woman, and the other a white woman, and the caveators are colored persons, the caveators may prove by other colored persons the declarations of the colored woman, one of the parties propounding, in relation to the subject-matter of the issue, since they come within the exception of 1 Rev. St. c. 31, § 81, disabling colored people within certain degrees from being witnesses except against each other.—Ragland v. Huntingdon, 23 N. C. 561.

[i] (Va. 1836) A person who is in custody and applies for a habeas corpus may show, by his own affidavit, probable cause to believe that he is detained in custody without lawful authority, and though, upon the return of the writ, it appears that the applicant is a person of color, and claimed as a slave, still the affidavit does not cease to be proper. The person of color is not admitted to give evidence against a white person, but his affidavit is received merely as a foundation for further proceedings.—De Lacy v. Antoine, 7 Leigh, 438.

[a] (U. S. 1802) A slave may be a witness on a prosecution against a free mulatto in Alexandria county, D. C.—United States v. Bell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,564 [1 Cranch, C. C. 94].

[b] (U. S. 1803) A slave is not a competent witness for a free mulatto in a public prosecution.—United States v. Swann, Fed. Cas. No. 16,425 [1 Cranch, C. C. 148].

[c] (U. S. 1806) Under the law of Maryland a slave is a competent witness for a free black man on a criminal prosecution.—United States v. Shorter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,284 [1 Cranch, C. C. 371].

[d] (U. S. 1806) Under the law of Maryland slaves are competent witnesses for free negroes indicted for assault and battery.—United States v. Terry, Fed. Cas. No. 16,454 [1 Cranch, C. C. 318].

[e] (U. S. 1808) A slave is not a competent witness against a freeborn mulatto not subject to any term of servitude by law.—United States v. Hill, Fed. Cas. No. 15,365 [1 Cranch, C. C. 521].

[f] (U. S. 1829) In Washington county, D. C., a slave is not a competent witness against a free mulatto not in a state of "servitude by law."—United States v. Gray, Fed. Cas. No. 15,252 [3 Cranch, C. C. 681].

[g] (Mo. 1851) On the trial of an indictment against a free woman of color for leasing a house to be kept as a bawdy house, a slave who cohabits with her as her husband is a competent witness for her.—Coleman v. State, 14 Mo. 157.

[a] (U. S. 1803) Manumitted slaves are good witnesses for or against a free mulatto in Washington county, D. C.—United States v. Barton, Fed. Cas. No. 14,533 [1 Cranch, C. C. 132].

[b] (U. S. 1805) Under the law of Maryland a free negro is a competent witness against a free white man.—United States v. Fisher, Fed. Cas. No. 15,101 [1 Cranch, C. C. 244].

[c] (U. S. 1806) A free black man, born of a white woman, is a competent witness against a white man.—Minchin v. Docker, Fed. Cas. No. 9,628 [1 Cranch, C. C. 370].

[d] (U. S. 1808) Under Acts Md. 1717, c. 13, freeborn negroes, not subject to any term of servitude by law, are competent witnesses in all cases. Color alone is no objection to a witness.—United States v. Mullany, Fed. Cas. No. 15,832 [1 Cranch, C. C. 517].

[e] (U. S. 1810) A freeborn negro is a competent witness in a case of freedom.—Queen v. Hepburn, Fed. Cas. No. 11,503 [2 Cranch, C. C. 3], affirmed (1819) 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 290, 3 L. Ed. 348.

[f] (U. S. 1813) Under the law of Maryland a slave is not a competent witness against a free black person, in a capital case; but free blacks, unless they are in a state of servitude by law, are competent witnesses against free blacks.—United States v. Butler, Fed. Cas. No. 14,699 [2 Cranch, C. C. 75].

[g] (U. S. 1813) A freeborn mulatto is a competent witness against a white person.—United States v. Douglass, Fed. Cas. No. 14,988 [2 Cranch, C. C. 94].

[h] (U. S. 1814) A colored person who has obtained his freedom by being removed from Virginia to Maryland contrary to Acts Md. 1796, c. 67, is not a competent witness against a white person.—United States v. Minifie, Fed. Cas. No. 15,782 [2 Cranch, C. C. 109].

[i] (U. S. 1821) A free colored man who has resided in the District of Columbia eight years, and publicly acted as a freeman, and so generally reputed to be, is a competent witness for the United States against a free colored person. —United States v. Neale, Fed. Cas. No. 15,859 [2 Cranch, C. C. 241].

[j] (U. S. 1835) A free negro or mulatto born of a free colored woman is not a competent witness against a free negro or mulatto born of a white woman.—United States v. Beddo, Fed. Cas. No. 14,556 [4 Cranch, C. C. 664].

[k] (U. S. 1835) Under the law of Maryland a mulatto born of a white woman, and not in a state of servitude by law, is a competent witness for a white man.—United States v. Davis, Fed. Cas. No. 14,925 [4 Cranch, C. C. 606].

[l] (U. S. 1840) Under the statutes of Maryland negroes and mulattoes, free or slave, are not competent witnesses in any case wherein a Christian white person is concerned; but they are competent witnesses against all other persons.—United States v. Dow, Fed. Cas. No. 14,990 [Taney, 34].

[m] (Ala. 1835) In suits between a white man and a free person of color, or of mixed blood within the third degree, where the amount in controversy is under $20, and the former is sworn, the latter has also the right to use his own oath.—Ivey v. Hardy, 2 Port. 548.

[n] (Del. 1841) A convict slave is a free man for the purpose of giving evidence as well as of punishment.—State v. Griffin, 3 Har. 559.

[p] (Md. 1810) A free black person is an incompetent witness in a case where the parties were free white Christians.—Rusk v. Sowerwine, 3 Har. & J. 97.

[q] (N. Y. 1806) A free black man is a competent witness to prove facts which may have happened while he was a slave.—Gurnee v. Dessies, 1 Johns. 508.

[r] (N. Y. 1813) Although the manumission of a slave by an infant, with the consent of his guardian, is voidable, yet such manumission renders the slave in the meantime a competent witness for his former master, the infant's power of revoking the gift on coming of age being an objection to his credit only.—Rogers' Ex'rs v. Berry, 10 Johns. 132.

[s] (N. C. 1868) A freedwoman is a competent witness against a freedman, who, though passing as her husband in slavery, has never married her since emancipation.—State v. Taylor, 61 N. C. 508.

[u] (S. C.) A free person of color is incompetent as a witness, in any action involving the rights of white persons. — (1821) White v. Helmes, 1 McCord, 430; (1831) Groning v. Devena, 2 Bailey, 192.

[v] (Va. 1835) In an action by a white man against a free negro, a free negro is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—1 Rev. Code, c. 111, § 5.—Winn v. Jones. 6 Leigh, 74.

[a] (Ark. 1869) The civil rights bill (Act Cong. April 9, 1866), permitting a colored man to testify against a white man, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it invades the rights of the several states to prescribe who shall be competent witnesses in their courts.—Kelley v. State, 25 Ark. 392.

[b] (Ark. 1869) Under the civil rights bill (Act Cong. April 9, 1866), a colored man can testify against a white man notwithstanding Gould's Dig. c. 181, § 25.—Kelley v. State, 25 Ark. 392.

[c] (Del. 1867) The provision of Act Cong. April 9, 1866, that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the right in every state to give evidence to the same extent as white persons, is unconstitutional in so far as it assumes to compel, regulate, or control the admission of evidence in the state of Delaware.—State v. Rash, Houst. Cr. Cas. 271.

[d] (Ga. 1866) The color of a witness is no longer an objection to his competency in the courts of this state.—Clarke v. State, 35 Ga. 75.

[e] (Ky. 1867) The laws of this state in reference to the competency of negroes as witnesses are not affected by the civil rights bill.—Bowlin v. Commonwealth, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 5, 92 Am. Dec. 468.

[f] (N. C. 1869) Rev. Code, c. 107, § 71, which makes persons of color incapable of being witnesses, except against each other, was repealed by the constitution, allowing them to vote and hold office.—State v. Underwood, 63 N. C. 98.

Obligation of oath, see post, § 104 [h].

[a] (Ala. 1836) It is no objection to the admissibility of a will in evidence, in an action between an Indian and a white man, that the will was proved on the testimony of an Indian alone; it appearing that all parties entitled to object to the probate of the will were Indians.—Carroll v. Pathkiller, 3 Port. 279.

[b] (Cal. 1860) Section 14 of the act concerning crimes and punishments creates an exception to the general rule of section 13 of said act; and in a criminal suit against a white man, an Indian, although the injured party, cannot give evidence.—People v. Howard, 17 Cal. 63.

ing competent "every human being" who understands the nature of an oath, and 13 Stat. 361, 533, and 12 Stat. 588, providing that in the federal courts no witness shall be excluded on account of color, and that, in other respects, the competency of witnesses shall be determined by the law of the state in which the court is held.—Bruguier v. United States, 1 Dak. 5, 46 N. W. 502.

[d] (Miss. 1844) An Indian is a competent witness in a suit between white men, and is under no other restrictions than a white person.—Harris v. Newman, 11 Miss. (3 Smedes & M.) 565; Coleman v. Tish-ho-mah, 12 Miss. (4 Smedes & M.) 40.

Religious belief, see post, § 102 [qq].

[a] (Cal. 1854) Section 394 of the act concerning civil cases provides, "No Indian or negro shall be allowed to testify as a witness in any action or proceeding in which a white person is a party." Section 14 of the act regulating criminal proceedings, provides, "No black or mulatto person, or Indian, shall be allowed to give evidence in favor of, or against, a white man." Held, that the words "white," "negro," "mulatto," "Indian," and "black person," must be taken in their generic sense, and exclude all persons other than white from testifying against whites; and hence a Chinaman is incompetent to testify.—People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399.

[b] (Cal. 1859) A Chinaman is an "Indian" within Code, § 394, excluding "Indians" as witnesses.—Speer v. See Yup Co., 13 Cal. 73.

[c] (Cal. 1865) The words "white person," in the act which provides that "no Indian, or person having one-half or more of Indian blood, or Mongolian, or Chinese, shall be permitted to give evidence in favor of or against a white person," refer to the defendant only in a criminal action; and a Chinaman, who is on trial for crime, may introduce Chinese witnesses in his behalf.—People v. Awa, 27 Cal. 638.

[d] (Cal. 1869) The testimony of a Chinaman, born in China, was inadmissible against a negro born within the United States in the trial of an indictment against the negro, section 14 of the act of 1863 providing that "no Chinese shall be permitted to give evidence for or against any white person," and the civil rights bill of April 9, 1866, giving "all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed," the right to "full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens."—People v. Washington, 36 Cal. 658.

[e] (Ga. 1883) A Chinaman, whose capacity to understand the nature of an oath and to testify are made clear on being tested, may be sworn, under Code, § 3852 et seq., in like manner as other witnesses.—Green v. State, 71 Ga. 487.

Evidence, see post, § 196.
Impeachment of capacity of witness, see post, §§ 1101, 1102.

[a] (Mass. 1858) The testimony of a witness who declares himself unable to answer questions put to him on cross-examination, on the ground that his memory at times fails him in consequence of mental injury resulting from a sunstroke, and such is his present condition, is not to be stricken out by the presiding judge, but may be submitted to the jury.—Lewis v. Eagle Ins. Co., 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 508.

[b] (Minn. 1881) Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 7, provides that "all persons except as hereinafter provided, having the power and faculty to perceive and to make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses." Section 9 provides that persons "who are of unsound mind or intoxicated at the time of their production for examination" shall not be competent as witnesses. Held, persons intoxicated and of unsound mind are not wholly disqualified, but are competent if they have such an understanding as enables them to retain in memory the events of which they have been witnesses, and understanding sufficient to appreciate the obligation of an oath.—Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 435, 8 N. W. 164.

[c] (Tenn. 1871) Testimony of a person 80 years of age is insufficient on an issue in chancery as to the fairness of a conveyance, his memory being too impaired to recollect whether he made alleged payments, amounting to $1,300, in 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, or 1865, or whether he got any of the money from the grantor, his son-in-law.—McCutchen v. Pigue, 4 Heisk. 565.

§ 97. Age and maturity of mind.

Deaf and dumb child, see post, § 101 [c].
Determination of competency, see post, § 202.
Nature and obligation of oath, see post, §§ 105–107.

[a] (Ala. 1841) An infant under the age of seven years may be sworn as a witness in a criminal case, if he has sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath.—State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275.

[b] (Ala. 1874) A female child, eight years of age, upon whom an alleged criminal assault was made, is a competent witness for the prosecution, notwithstanding her tender years.—Wade v. State, 50 Ala. 164.

[c] (Ala. 1883) The fact that a female child of seven years of age was held incompetent to testify on a prosecution for attempt to have carnal intercourse with her does not affect her competency on a new trial, when she is above eight years old.—Kelly v. State, 75 Ala. 21, 51 Am. Rep. 422.

[d] (Ark. 1867) There is no precise age within which children are absolutely excluded as witnesses. If they are of sufficient natural intelligence, and comprehend the nature and effect of an oath, their testimony should be admitted.—Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 92; Warner v. Same, Id. 447.

[e] (Cal. 1858) If over 14, prima facie, a child is competent to testify; otherwise if under 14.—People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 66.

[f] (Ga. 1878) A child seven years of age, who understands the nature of an oath, is a competent witness, though not punishable for perjury, under Code, § 4295.—Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 35.

[g] (Ga. 1887) A boy of 10 years of age is a competent witness if he understands the nature of an oath, and of this the court is to be the judge.—Moore v. State, 79 Ga. 498, 5 S. E. 51.

[h] (Ill. 1893) Where a child of 13 years, when called as a witness, states that she knows it would not be right to tell a lie, and the judge thereupon instructs her as to the consequences of testifying falsely, the child is a competent witness; the question of her knowledge going rather to her credibility than to her competency.—McAmore v. Wiley, 49 Ill. App. 615.

[i] (Iowa, 1889) Where a witness, a boy 12 years of age, possesses the ordinary intelligence of boys of that age, and his answers through an interpreter to questions relative to his understanding of the obligations of an oath are satisfactory to the court, the admission of his testimony cannot be alleged as error.—State v. Severson, 78 Iowa, 653, 43 N. W. 533.

[j] (Ky. 1890) In a suit for divorce the son of plaintiff by a former marriage was a competent witness for her, though he was only 11 years old.—Green v. Green, 11 Ky. Law Rep. 763.

[k] (Me. 1842) A child of any age, capable of distinguishing between good and evil, may be examined on oath; and the credit due to his statements is to be submitted to the jury, who should regard the age, the understanding, and the sense of accountability for moral conduct, in coming to their conclusion.—State v. Whittier, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 341, 38 Am. Dec. 272.

[m] (Mich. 1862) In a criminal trial a child seven years of age may testify; but his credibility is a matter for the jury to consider.—Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 372.

[n] (Mich. 1880) In a suit for divorce for alleged adultery, it is improper to call children of the parties, of a tender age, to testify to facts tending to show a want of chastity in defendant.—Crowner v. Crowner, 44 Mich. 180, 6 N. W. 198, 38 Am. Rep. 245.

[o] (Mich. 1880) Testimony of a child, a few months over six years old, identifying defendant as one engaged in a robbery, is properly admitted; the judge being satisfied that the child is sufficiently conscious of the duty of speaking the truth, and the jury being properly cautioned in acting on the same.—McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286, 6 N. W. 669, 38 Am. Rep. 265.

[p] (Mo. 1874) Wag. St. p. 1374, § 8, excluding as a witness "a child under 10 years of age who appears incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined or of relating them truly," does not exclude, in a trial for murder, a child of nine years who, after a little delay, was able to give intelligible answers, although at first, from the novelty of the surroundings, she was prevented therefrom by nervous agitation.—State v. Scanlan, 58 Mo. 204.

[r] (Mo. 1891) The common-law rule that a child under 14 years of age is prima facie incapable of testifying is modified by Rev. St. 1889, § 8925, providing that a child of 10 years is incompetent to testify, unless the court satisfies itself that it is capable of receiving just impressions of the facts concerning which it is called to testify.—Brashears v. Western Union Tel. Co., 45 Mo. App. 433.

[s] (Neb. 1891) A child nine years of age is a competent witness if he understands the nature and obligations of an oath.—Davis v. State, 31 Neb. 247, 47 N. W. 854.

[t] (N. J. 1819) A witness over 14 years of age will not be interrogated respecting his capacity, unless some reason creating suspicion be shown.—Den v. Vancleve, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 589.

[u] (N. Y. 1889) A witness only seven or eight years old, who understands that she will be punished if she tells an untruth, is competent.—Agnew v. Brooklyn City R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 756, judgment affirmed, 117 N. Y. 651, 22 N. E. 1132.

[v] (Tex. 1877) The question of the competency of a child is not decided by any precise age, but by apparent capacity.—Brown v. State, 2 Tex. App. 115.

[w] (Tex. 1889) An objection to the boy's testimony, "because of ignorance," is properly overruled, when such testimony is as clear and intelligent as that of most witnesses of mature years and ordinary education, and is strongly corroborated.—Hawkins v. State, 27 Tex. App. 273, 11 S. W. 409.

§ 98. —— Discretion of court.

[a] (Cal. 1858) No precise age is fixed under which a child is incompetent; it depends on the discretion of the court, in view of all the circumstances.—People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 66.

[b] (Ga. 1873) Where the court examines a child to test its competency as a witness, and pronounces it incompetent, it must be a very flagrant case of error to authorize an appellate court to reverse the judgment.—Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524.

[c] (La. 1867) The law has fixed no qualification of age as to the competency to testify in criminal matters. The competency of a witness as to age depends on his intelligence, judgment, capacity, and understanding, all of which must be left to the discretion of the judge and the jury.—State v. Denis, 19 La. Ann. 119.

[d] (La. 1876) Under the age of 14 a child will not be presumed to have a sufficient understanding to be a witness, and inquiry is made by the judge to ascertain his capacity to be sworn, and his admission or ejection must depend on the sound discretion of the judge. The law fixes no precise age when the witness shall be excluded. In the present case, a ruling allowing a child only 6 years old, who appeared capable, on examination by the judge, was sustained.—State v. Richie, 28 La. Ann. 327, 26 Am. Rep. 100.

[e] (Md. 1895) In an action for divorce, it is within the discretion of the court to allow children of the parties, of tender years, to testify.—Freeny v. Freeny, 80 Md. 406, 31 Atl. 304.

[f] (Mo. 1882) The finding of the trial court, after personal inspection and oral examination, that a child under 10 years of age is competent to testify, will not be reviewed on appeal.—State v. Jefferson, 77 Mo. 136.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8925, declaring as "incompetent to testify" "a child under ten years of age who appears incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly," a child under ten is presumptively incompetent, but the issue of competency is one for the court, whose ruling thereon will not be reversed unless it affirmatively appear that there has been an abuse of discretion.—Ridenhour v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 102 Mo. 270, 13 S. W. 889, 14 S. W. 760.

[h] (Mo. 1891) Where a witness, nine years old, had never been in the courthouse before, did not know when he was born nor the nature of an oath, but did know that people were sworn in order to make them tell the truth, and said that he himself would tell the truth, and his testimony indicated intelligence, the question of his capacity as a witness is for the judge.—State v. Doyle, 107 Mo. 36, 17 S. W. 751.

[i] (Mo. 1896) Rev. St. 1889, § 8925, makes a child under 10 years of age who appears incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts, or of relating them truly, incompetent to testify. Held, that it is within the discretion of the court to allow a child under 10 years of age to testify.—State v. Nelson, 132 Mo. 184, 33 S. W. 809.

[j] (N. J. 1810) If a witness is under the age of 14, his capacity is a proper subject for the determination of the justice; and where, in fact, the witness was upwards of 14, but it did not so appear at the trial, the court will refuse to reverse on account of the rejection of the witness.—Van Pelt v. Van Pelt, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 657.

[k] (N. J. 1812) It is discretionary with the court to admit a person under 14 years of age as a witness.—Anonymous, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 930.

[l] (N. M. 1895) A child 10 years old, of natural intelligence, and who understands the nature of an oath, may, in the discretion of the court, be a witness in a criminal case.—Territory v. De Gutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68.

[m] (N. Y. 1895) It is discretionary with the court to permit a child under the age of 12 years to testify in a criminal case.—People v. Smith, 86 Hun, 485, 33 N. Y. Supp. 989.

[n] (Or. 1881) It is for the trial court to decide the competency of a child as a witness, and its decision is not reviewable unless clear abuse of discretion be shown.—State v. Jackson, 9 Or. 457.

[o] (Tex. 1889) Code Cr. Proc. art. 730, subd. 2, provides that "children or other persons who, after being examined by the court, appear not to possess sufficient intelligence to relate transactions with respect to which they are interrogated, or who do not understand the obligation of an oath," are incompetent to testify in criminal cases. Held, that an objection that a boy 11 years of age was incompetent to testify "because of youth" was in the discretion of the trial court, and its action thereon, after examining the boy to determine his competency, would not be revised on appeal, unless abuse of such discretion was shown, under Willson, Cr. St. § 2435.—Hawkins v. State, 27 Tex. App. 273, 11 S. W. 409.

[a] (U. S. 1882) One who, though a lunatic, is able to apprehend the obligation of an oath, and give a correct account of matters he has seen or heard, is admissible as a witness.—District of Columbia v. Arms, 107 U. S. 519, 2 Sup. Ct. 840, 27 L. Ed. 618.

[b] (Ala. 1853) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that he is subject to fits of mental derangement, if he is sane at the time he is offered.—Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

[c] (Ala. 1892) Although one alleging that he is of unsound mind, and suing by his next friend, under Code, § 2580, admits his mental incapacity, yet it is a question for the court to determine whether or not he is competent to testify.—Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 South. 72, 17 L. R. A. 407.

[d] (Ala. 1893) A witness should not be excluded on the ground of mental incapacity, if he has sufficient capacity to understand an oath, and to narrate the transaction in what appears to be an intelligent, rational manner, but the question as to his credibility should be left to the jury.—Walker v. State, 97 Ala. 85, 12 South. 83.

[e] (Cal. 1893) The discharge of a person from an insane asylum by the resident physician and secretary, though the certificate does not state that she is restored to reason, is prima facie evidence that she is so restored, or that she was improperly committed, and is therefore a competent witness, these being the only grounds for her discharge under the statute.—Clements v. McGinn, 33 Pac. 920.

[f] (Cal. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, declaring that persons "who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination" cannot be witnesses, the fact that a person has been committed to an asylum as insane does not render her an incompetent witness, but the question of competency is for the court, and her testimony is properly received, in the absence of anything to show her of unsound mind.—Clements v. McGinn, 33 Pac. 920.

[h] (Ill. 1895) The fact that a witness has been judicially declared to be of feeble mind, and not capable of transacting business, does not render his testimony inadmissible, where the nature and extent of his mental impairment are not shown, and the testimony of other witnesses shows that, at the time of his testifying, he had an intelligent appreciation of his responsibility as a witness, and a fair recollection and understanding of the matters about which he testified.—Tucker v. Shaw, 158 Ill. 326, 41 N. E. 914.

[i] (Ind. 1893) In an action for assault and battery, plaintiff is not rendered incompetent to testify by an allegation in his complaint that the injuries received have impaired his mind, and by the reception of evidence in support of such allegation.—Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 24 L. R. A. 483.

[j] (Kan. 1878) One who has been adjudged restored to sanity may testify as to facts that occurred while he was under guardianship as insane.—Sarbach v. Jones, 20 Kan. 497.

[k] (Minn. 1881) An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff had theretofore been adjudged insane, and had been confined for two years in a lunatic asylum, whence she was afterwards discharged, is not such an admission of plaintiff's insanity at the time of the trial as will disqualify her as a witness.—Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 435, 8 N. W. 164.

[m] (N. Y. 1870) An inquisition of lunacy found against one is prima facie evidence of his incompetency as a witness, and unless it be overcome by evidence of his sanity, he should not be permitted to testify, even as against one not a party to the proceedings in lunacy.—Hoyt v. Adee, 3 Lans. 173.

[o] (N. Y. 1876) An insane person may be competent to testify to facts not relating to himself according as the court is satisfied with the degree of his understanding; and a person who has been insane and is apparently recovered may testify to facts occurring during the period of this insanity, provided that in both mentioned cases the facts testified to are objectively demonstrable, and constitute a basis from which to begin such testimony.—People v. New York Hospital, 3 Abb. N. C. 229.

[p] (Tex. 1891) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 730, subds. 1, 2, providing that persons who are insane when they are offered as witnesses, or who were insane when the events happened of which they are called to testify, are incompetent as witnesses, an insane woman cannot testify as to rape alleged to have been committed on her.—Lopez v. State, 30 Tex. App. 487, 17 S. W. 1058, 28 Am. Rep. 935.

[q] (Va. 1874) The fact that a witness is a lunatic is not sufficient per se to exclude him; he must be at the time of his examination so affected by his malady as to deprive him of the understanding necessary to enable him to retain in memory the events of which he has been a witness, and to give him a knowledge of right and wrong.—Coleman v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711.

[r] (Va. 1874) All persons examined as witnesses must be fully possessed of their understanding; that is, such understanding as enables them to retain in memory the events of which they have been witnesses and gives them a knowledge of right and wrong; and therefore idiots and lunatics, while under the influence of their malady, not possessing this share of understanding, should be excluded.—Coleman v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711.

Credibility of witness, see post, § 1117.
Impeachment of witness, see post, § 1102.

[a] (N. Y. 1819) A witness who is in a state of intoxication is incompetent to be sworn or to testify.—Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. 143.

[b] (N. Y. 1819) Where a witness is objected to on the ground that he is intoxicated, it is within the discretion of the court to decide whether he is in such condition that he ought to be admitted to testify.—Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. 143.

[c] (Pa. 1824) It is no objection to a witness' competency that he has been found a habitual drunkard, under Act February 25, 1819.—Gebhart v. Shindle, 15 Serg. & R. 235.

[d] (Pa. 1845) Whether a witness is incompetent by reason of intoxication, is a matter within the sound discretion of the court.—Gould v. Crawford, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 89.

[e] (Wash. 1895) One who uses opium is a competent witness, but, his evidence being unreliable, the jury should be carefully cautioned as to the credence to be given it.—State v. White, 10 Wash. 611, 39 Pac. 160, 41 Pac. 442.

Mode of testifying, see post, § 809.
Obligation of oath, see post, § 104 [c].

[a] (Ind. 1840) A deaf and dumb person, who can be communicated with by signs, is a competent witness, if he has sufficient discretion.—Snyder v. Nations, 5 Blackf. 295.

[b] (Mo. 1893) A person deaf and dumb from birth is not presumed to be an idiot.—State v. Howard, 118 Mo. 127, 24 S. W. 41.

[c] (N. M. 1884) A nine year old deaf and dumb child, who has never been educated in an institute for deaf mutes, who cannot be made to understand anything of the nature of an oath, and who can do nothing more than give an account of what he saw, without affording any means of examination or cross-examination, is not a competent witness.—Territory v. Duran, 3 N. M. (Gild.) 189, 3 Pac. 53.

[d] (S. C. 1893) It was not error to admit the testimony of a deaf and dumb person without expert testimony as to his competency, where persons who had employed him testified that he was very intelligent, and that they had no trouble in communicating with him by signs.—State v. Weldon, 39 S. C. 318, 17 S. E. 688, 24 L. R. A. 126.

[e] (Vt. 1882) A dumb plaintiff may be a witness in his own behalf, although he cannot be cross-examined with facility.—Quinn v. Halbert, 55 Vt. 224.

RELIGIOUS BELIEF IN GENERAL, § 102.
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS, § 103.
NATURE AND OBLIGATION OF OATH IN GENERAL, § 104.
CHILDREN, § 105.
—— SUFFICIENCY, § 106.
—— INSTRUCTIONS BY COURT OR OTHERS, § 107.

Credibility of witness, see post, § 1119.
Evidence, see post, § 198.

[a] (U. S. 1827) Persons who do not believe in the existence of a God, or in a future state of existence, are not competent witnesses.—Wakefield v. Ross, Fed. Cas. No. 17,050 [5 Mason, 16].

[b] (U. S. 1834) A man who does not believe in the existence of a God, other than Nature, nor in a future state of existence, is not a competent witness.—United States v. Lee, Fed. Cas. No. 15,586 [4 Cranch, C. C. 446].

[c] (U. S. 1836) When a witness is objected to on the ground of his disbelief of a God, and of a future state of rewards and punishments, and he declares that he believes in a future state of existence, and of a Supreme Being who will punish him, either in this world or the next, for his evil deeds, and it appears in evidence that he has so declared before the trial, and that he sent his children to the Sunday school, and his wife and children regularly to church, the court will permit him to be examined as a witness, leaving his credibility to the jury.—United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,675 [5 Cranch, C. C. 38].

[e] (U. S. 1843) A witness must believe in the existence of a God, and in rewards and punishments. If, according to his faith, these rewards and punishments are inflicted in this life, he is competent, and this fact may go to his credibility.—United States v. Kennedy, Fed. Cas. No. 15,524 [3 McLean, 175].

[f] (Ala. 1841) It is not an objection to a witness that he does not believe in "future" rewards and punishments, if he believes in the existence of a God, and that he will punish falsehood and perjury in this world.—Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 354.

[g] (Cal. 1861) Under Prac. Act, § 392, the competency of a witness is not affected by his religious sentiments or convictions.—Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 605.

[h] (Conn. 1796) Evidence may be admitted to prove a witness to be an atheist.—Beardsly v. Foot, 2 Root, 399.

[hh] (Conn. 1828) A person who disbelieves in any punishment in a future state is not a competent witness.—Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66.

[i] (Del. 1835) A person, to be sworn as a witness, must believe in a God and a future state of rewards and punishments.—Perry's Adm'r v. Stewart, 2 Har. 37.

[ii] (Ga. 1871) Code, § 3797, which provides that religious belief shall go only to the credit of a witness, does not justify asking a witness if he believes in Christ as the Savior.—Donkle v. Kohn, 44 Ga. 266.

[jj] (Ill. 1820) All persons who believe in God and a future state, though they disbelieve in a punishment hereafter for crimes committed here, are competent witnesses.—Noble v. People, 1 Ill. (Breese) 54.

[jj] (Ill. 1856) A person who has no religious belief, nor belief in a Supreme Being, and who, though recognizing his amenability to human law in case he testify falsely, yet does not feel accountable morally here or hereafter, cannot be admitted as a witness.—Central Military Tract R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 541.

[k] (Me. 1840) After declarations of a person tending to show that he does not believe in a Supreme Being have been admitted, an honest change of opinion after the making of such declarations may be shown, in order that the witness may qualify under St. 1833, c. 58, making a belief in the Supreme Being a prerequisite to the admission of a witness to testify.—Smith v. Coffin, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 157.

[l] (Me. 1841) St. 1833, c. 58, contemplates that a belief in a Supreme Being is a prerequisite to the admission of a witness to testify; but, after his admission, no inquiry should be allowed as to his religious opinions.—Smith v. Coffin, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 157.

[ll] (Mass.) The disbelief of a future state of existence goes only to the credibility of a witness.—(1818) Hunscom v. Hunscom, 15 Mass. 184; (1834) Commonwealth v. Buzzell, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 163.

[m] (Mass. 1829) A person believing in the being of a God, and in his attributes as a righteous avenger of wickedness, and in the existence of a future state, is competent to be sworn as a witness. — Commonwealth v. Bachelder, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 191.

[mm] (Mass. 1835) Upon objection to a witness for defect of religious faith, he stated at first that he believed in a God, and afterwards that he did not consider an oath more binding upon his conscience than a simple promise, that he attached no religious obligation or sanctity to an oath, and that he had no idea of a God who knows the secrets of all hearts, and who rewards and punishes men according to their conduct. Held, that such witness was incompetent.—Commonwealth v. Barnard, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 431.

[nn] (Mass. 1860) The rule of the common law that a witness cannot be examined as to his religious belief, either on the voir dire or on cross-examination, is unaffected by Gen. St. c. 131, § 12, the purpose of which was to render persons who were disbelievers in any religion competent witnesses, and to cause their disbelief to be proved only to affect their credibility. —Commonwealth v. Burke, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 33.

[o] (Mich. 1858) By Comp. Laws, § 4336, it is provided that no person shall be deemed incompetent as a witness in any court on account of his opinions on the subject of religion, nor shall any witness be questioned in relation to his opinions thereon before or after he is sworn. Held, that under this statute it is incompetent to question a witness in reference to his belief in the existence of a God.—People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305.

[p] (N. H. 1828) A person who is proved to have openly and repeatedly avowed that he had no belief in the existence of a God cannot be admitted to testify in a court of justice.—Norton v. Ladd, 4 N. H. 444.

[pp] (N. H. 1879) One is competent to testify who believes in the existence of God, and that divine punishment, here or hereafter, will follow perjury.—Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 219.

[q] (N. J. 1889) A person's belief as to the punishment of perjury by the Deity is to be classed among his religious principles, and hence the fact that a party in a suit does not believe that God will punish perjury does not render such party incompetent as a witness, when offered in his own behalf.—State v. Powers, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom) 432, 17 Atl. 969.

[r] (N. Y. 1820) On an issue as to whether a person offered as a witness had such religious belief as would entitle him to testify, where it appeared that he had within three months before the trial repeatedly and deliberately declared his unbelief, he cannot, on objection being made, be admitted to deny the declarations or to state his recantation of them.—Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. 98.

[rr] (N. Y. 1820) A person who does not believe in the existence of a God or in a future state of rewards and punishments cannot be a witness in a court of justice under any circumstance.—Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. 98.

[s] (N. Y. 1820) On an issue as to the religious belief of a person offered as a witness, where it was shown that he had within three months before the trial repeatedly and deliberately declared his unbelief, he may be restored to competency on giving satisfactory evidence of a change of mind some time before the trial, so as to repel the presumption arising from his former declarations.—Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. 98.

[ss] (N. Y. 1820) An adult of sound mind, when called as a witness, cannot be questioned as to his religious creed.—Jackson v. Gridley, 18 Johns. 98.

[t] (N. Y. 1823) The proper test of a witness' competency, when objected to on the ground of his religious belief, is "whether he believes in the existence of a God, who will punish him if he swears falsely."—Butts v. Swartwood, 2 Cow. 431.

[uu] (N. C. 1856) One who believes in the existence of a Supreme Being, who will punish men in this world for every sin committed, though he does not believe that punishment will be inflicted in the world to come, is a competent witness.—Shaw v. Moore, 49 N. C. 25.

[v] (Ohio, 1840) A person who believes in the existence of God, and that an oath is binding on the conscience, is competent to testify, though he does not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments.—Brock v. Milligan, 10 Ohio, 121.

[vv] (Pa. 1841) The rule excluding witnesses embraces those who believe future punishments not to be eternal.—Cubbison v. McCreary, 2 Watts & S. 262.

[w] (Pa. 1841) The true test of the competency of a witness on the ground of his religious principles is whether he believes in the existence of a God, who will punish him if he swear falsely.—Cubbison v. McCreary, 2 Watts & S. 262.

[ww] (Pa. 1856) A belief in a future state of rewards and punishments, or a belief in the inspired character of the Bible, are not essential to the competency of a witness. It is enough if he believes in a God, who will punish false swearing.—Blair v. Seaver, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 274.

[x] (Pa. 1867) To be competent as a witness, one must have a conscience alive to the conviction of accountability to a higher power than human law. Solely his regard for the good of society, or his fear of punishment, is not sufficient.—Commonwealth v. Winnemore, 2 Brewst. 378.

[xx] (Pa. 1886) Act May 21, 1885, permitting defendants in criminal cases to testify, removes every form of incompetence, as well that arising from defect of religious belief as from interest or otherwise.—Commonwealth v. Kauffman, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 410.

[y] (Tenn. 1852) He is a competent witness who states that he does not believe in a state of future rewards and punishments after death, and that the only punishment inflicted for wrongs in this life is the pangs of conscience; but he believes in the existence of God, and believes the Bible.—Bennett v. State, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 411.

[yy] (Vt. 1841) A person who disbelieves in the existence of a God is not a competent witness.—Arnold v. Arnold's Estate, 13 Vt. 363; Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535.

[z] (Vt. 1842) If the objection to the competency of a witness who believed that there is no God has been removed by a change of views, he should be examined.—Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535.

[a] (Ill. 1890) Under Const. art. 2, § 3, which provides that "no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity on account of his religious opinions, but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations," the absence of belief in his accountability to the Deity does not disqualify a citizen from testifying in a court of justice.—Hronek v. People, 134 Ill. 139, 24 N. E. 861, 23 Am. St. Rep. 652, 8 L. R. A. 837.

[b] (Ill. 1890) Under Const. 1870, art. 2, § 3, providing that "no person shall be denied any civil or political rights, privilege, or capacity on account of his religious opinions," the matter of a person's religious belief or unbelief does not affect his competency as a witness.—Ewing v. Bailey, 36 Ill. App. 191.

[c] (Ky. 1882) The exclusion of a witness in a criminal case on account of his disbelief in God and a future state of rewards and punishments is unconstitutional.—Bush v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 244.

[a] (Cal. 1861) A foreigner, a witness, did not at first understand the meaning of the word "obligation" as applied to an oath. Held that, after he was made to understand it by an explanation, no objection to his competency could be made on this ground.—Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 605.

[b] (Conn. 1809) A person who does not believe in the obligation of an oath and in a future state of rewards and punishments, or any accountability for his conduct after death, is not a competent witness to prove the execution of a will, and his opinions may be proved from his own declarations out of court; nor, in such a case, can the witness be allowed to deny or explain in court the declarations imputed to him.—Curtiss v. Strong, 4 Day, 51, 4 Am. Dec. 179.

[c] (Ind. 1840) A deaf and dumb person may be a competent witness, if he understands that perjury is punished by law, though he has no conception of the religious obligation of an oath.—Snyder v. Nations, 5 Blackf. 295.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) Section 4, art. 1, of the constitution, which allows parties to use as a witness any person not disqualified by interest, assumes that the person shall possess enough of understanding to appreciate the nature and feel the obligation of an oath.—Kilburn v. Mullen, 22 Iowa, 498.

[e] (La. 1893) Where a witness states that she does not know the consequences if she should testify falsely, and the judge certifies that she exhibits as much intelligence as an ordinary person of her class, her statement does not show that she is ignorant of the nature of an oath, and she is competent.—State v. Langford, 45 La. Ann. 1177, 14 South, 181, 40 Am. St. Rep. 277.

[f] (Mass. 1861) No exception lies to the decision of a judge of the superior court on the question whether a witness has sufficient knowledge of right and wrong, and of the nature and obligation of an oath, to qualify him to testify, if no erroneous view is taken of any legal principle.—Commonwealth v. Mullins, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 295.

[g] (Minn. 1876) Where a witness understands that he is brought into court to tell the truth, that it is wrong to tell a lie, and that he will be punished if he does tell a lie, he has sufficient understanding of the obligation of an oath to be competent.—State v. Levy, 23 Minn. 104, 23 Am. Rep. 678.

[h] (Neb. 1880) On a trial for murder an Indian was called as a witness for the prosecution, and, in answer to many questions, put through an interpreter, by the attorneys for the accused, intended to test his capacity to understand the obligation of an oath, answered, in substance, to all that he meant to tell the truth, but failed to answer the questions propounded. Held that, as it did not appear that he had "capacity to understand the obligation of an oath" (Code Civ. Proc. § 328), his testimony was inadmissible.—Priest v. State, 10 Neb. 393, 6 N. W. 468.

[i] (Tex. 1858) A state's witness having disqualified herself on her voir dire with regard to her knowledge of the nature and obligation of an oath, the state was permitted to take her to a private office, and instruct her thereupon. She was thereupon returned into court, and replying that she then understood the test, was held competent as a witness. Held, that the proceeding was erroneous.—Taylor v. State, 22 Tex. App. 529, 3 S. W. 753, 58 Am. Rep. 656.

Competency in general, see ante, §§ 97, 98.

[a] (D. C. 1894) A child of sufficient intelligence to have a just appreciation of the difference between right and wrong, and a proper consciousness of the punishment for false swearing, is competent to testify.—Williams v. United States, 3 App. D. C. 335.

[b] (Ga. 1885) A child six years old, on whom a rape is alleged to have been committed, is not a competent witness, where it does not appear from her preliminary examination that she understands the obligation of an oath and the punishment imposed for its violation, or that she has any conception of future punishment for wrongs done in this life.—Johnson v. State, 76 Ga. 76.

[c] (Ind. 1882) Rev. St. 1881, § 1798, provides that all persons who are competent to testify in civil actions are competent witnesses in criminal cases. Sections 496, 497, provide that all persons shall be competent witnesses in a civil case, except children under 10 years of age, unless it appears that they understand the nature and obligation of an oath. Held, that in a criminal case a child over 10 years of age is a competent witness, though he does not understand the nature and obligation of an oath.—Holmes v. State, 88 Ind. 145.

[d] (Iowa, 1867) A bill of exceptions recited that a witness introduced by defendant was objected to by plaintiff, "and, being questioned by the court, she stated that she would be nine years old next fall." The trial was in May. Objection of plaintiff sustained, for the reason that the witness did not understand the nature of an oath, to which defendant excepted. Held, that the presumption from her age of her capacity to understand the obligation of an oath would not be very strong.—Kilburn v. Mullen, 22 Iowa, 498.

[e] (Ky. 1894) An infant under 12 is a competent witness if, in the opinion of the court, she has sufficient intelligence to truthfully narrate the facts to which her attention is directed, though she may be totally ignorant of God and of the evil of testifying falsely.—White v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky. 180, 28 S. W. 340.

[f] (Mich. 1887) It is necessary to the admissibility of the testimony of a child under seven that the court should be satisfied, by an examination of the child, that he is capable of appreciating the obligation of his oath, and to admit the testimony of such a child without an examination which will satisfy the court upon this point is reversible error.—Hughes v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 603.

[g] (Mo. 1884) That a child otherwise competent has never received religious instruction does not disqualify him as a witness.—Cadmus v. St. Louis Bridge & Tunnel Co., 15 Mo. App. 86.

[h] (N. Y. 1839) Where a witness called to testify is of tender years, the opposite party may require that he shall be examined as to his understanding of the nature and obligation of an oath.—People v. McNair, 21 Wend. 608.

[i] (N. Y. 1890) Where a child of tender years, called as a witness, is unable to comprehend the nature of an oath, there is no error in refusing, even in a criminal case, to receive his unsworn statement for what it is worth.—People v. Frindel, 58 Hun, 482, 12 N. Y. Supp. 498.

[j] (Pa. 1867) A child, believing that falsehood will be punished in a future state, may be sworn as a witness, though ignorant of the meaning of an oath.—Commonwealth v. Ellenger, 1 Brewst. 352.

[k] (Pa. 1869) A child eight years old, who testified that she went to Sunday school and that, if she did not tell the truth, she would be punished hereafter, might be sworn as a witness, though she did not know what the Bible was, nor understand the nature of an oath.—Commonwealth v. Carey, 2 Brewst. 404.

[l] (S. D. 1895) Whether a boy 11 years old is able to discriminate between right and wrong, and knows the nature of an oath, so as to render him competent as a witness, are questions for the trial court.—State v. Reddington, 7 S. D. 368, 64 N. W. 170.

[m] (Tex. 1873) A child of 10 years, who, upon examination on voir dire, said "that she did not know what God and the laws of the country would do to her if she swore falsely, but that she would tell the truth," is not thereby disqualified from testifying.—Davidson v. State, 39 Tex. 129.

[n] (Tex. 1882) A child nine year old, whose examination shows an utter want of anything like a knowledge of the nature or character and consequences of an oath, is not a competent witness.—Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 127.

[o] (Va. 1883) Where the court has decided on a prior trial that a child understands the nature of an oath, and therefore is competent, he cannot be examined before the jury on a subsequent trial as to his competency.—Oliver v. Commonwealth, 77 Va. 590.

[p] (Va. 1889) A conviction will not be set aside on the ground that the prosecutrix, who was 12 years of age, could not understand the nature of an oath, where she was very critically examined by the court, and the jury were instructed that they were judges of her credibility.—Smith v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 924, 9 S. E. 148.

[q] (W. Va. 1893) An infant of such tender years and mind as to be legally irresponsible for her conduct, and to have no conception of the legal or moral obligation of an oath, nor of the pains and penalties for false swearing, is not a competent witness.—State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565, 16 S. E. 803, 19 L. R. A. 605.

[a] (U. S. 1895) On a trial for murder, a boy nearly five and a half years old, being offered as a witness, stated on his voir dire that he knew the difference between the truth and a lie; that if he told a lie, the bad man would get him; that he was going to tell the truth; that his mother had told him that morning to "tell no lie." To the question what would be done with him in court if he told a lie, he replied that they would put him in jail, and to a question as to what the clerk said to him when he held up his hand, he answered: "Don't you tell no story." Held competent.—Wheeler v. United States, 159 U. S. 523, 16 Sup. Ct. 93, 40 L. Ed. 244.

[b] (Ala. 1879) A child aged nine years, who, when examined, said that she did not know what the Bible was, that she had been to church but once, that she had heard of God, but did not know who he was, and that, if she swore to a lie, she would be put in jail, but did not know whether she would be punished in any other way, is an incompetent witness.—Carter v. State, 63 Ala. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 4.

[c] (Ala. 1882) A child 11 years old, who said she had never heard of God, heaven, or hell, and did not know that she would be punished if she swore falsely otherwise than by being put in jail, should not be allowed to testify.—Beason v. State, 72 Ala. 191.

[d] (Ala. 1889) A child 7½ years of age is a competent witness, where it appears, on her examination by the judge, that she has an intelligent comprehension of the belief that falsehood is not only morally wrong, but will be severely punished in the future.—McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 South. 35, 16 Am. St. Rep. 25.

[e] (Ala. 1889) A boy 14 years of age, who states on his examination that he knows it is wrong to lie, but did not know that he would be punished if he swore to a lie, is not a competent witness.—McKelton v. State, 88 Ala. 181, 7 South. 38.

[f] (Ala. 1894) A child under 10 years of age, when examined by the court to test her competency, stated that if she swore falsely, or did wrong, she would go to hell, but if she did right, and told the truth, she would go to heaven. Held, that the answers were sufficient to show that the witness was competent, though no questions were asked touching her belief in a Supreme Being.—Grimes v. State, 105 Ala. 86, 17 South. 184.

[g] (Ala. 1895) A child 10 years old, who, when asked what would become of her when she died if she swore falsely, replied, "I will go to hell," and made the same reply when asked what would be done with her here, was competent to testify.—Williams v. State, 109 Ala. 64, 19 South. 530.

[h] (Ill. 1873) A child nine years of age, who testified on her voir dire that she "understood the nature of an oath, and that if she did not swear the truth she would get into hell fire," is competent according to the most rigid rule.—Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17.

[i] (Ind. 1858) A person under 10 years of age (that being the statute period of presumption) who does not know how perjury will be punished, but believes it will be, who knows that it is not right to swear a lie, and says she would tell the truth if sworn, and always, if mother wanted her to, and that her mother had told her to in this case, may be presumed to have been competent; the court below having admitted her.—Blackwell v. State, 11 Ind. 196.

[j] (Minn. 1876) A child produced as a witness, who understands that he is brought to court to tell the truth, that it is wrongful to tell a lie, and that he will be punished if he tells a lie, has sufficient understanding of the obligation of an oath to be competent.—State v. Levy, 23 Minn. 104, 23 Am. Rep. 678.

[k] (Mont. 1895) In a criminal case a boy 15 years old, who states that the oath taken required him to tell what was so, and that what was so was the truth, and what was not so was falsehood, and if he did not tell the truth he would be punished, is a competent witness.—State v. Cadotte, 17 Mont. 315, 42 Pac. 857.

[l] (N. Y. 1890) A lad of 11 years, who testified that he believed in heaven, the home of God, and hell, the home of the Devil; that at death the good would go to the former, and the bad to the latter; that it was bad to lie, both in and out of court; for the former his parents would whip him, and for the latter he would be sent to prison—was competent to testify.—Jones v. Brooklyn, B. & W. E. R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 253, judgment affirmed 121 N. Y. 683, 24 N. E. 1098.

[m] (N. Y. 1894) A witness 10 years old, who states that he had been taught that it was wrong to tell a lie, and that a witness who testified falsely was subject to punishment, shows sufficient ability to comprehend the nature and effect of an oath.—People v. Linzey, 79 Hun, 23, 29 N. Y. Supp. 560.

[n] (S. C. 1886) A boy of 12 could repeat the Lord's prayer, and had heard it said that bad men caught those who lied, cursed, etc. He had never heard of God, the devil, heaven, hell, or the Bible, and had no idea of what became of the good or the bad after death. Held, that he was not a competent witness.—State v. Belton, 24 S. C. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 245.

[o] (Tenn. 1871) The answer of an illiterate child, 13 years old, that she would go to the bad world if she told a lie, showed her competent as a witness.—Vincent v. State, 3 Heisk. 120.

[p] (Tenn. 1871) The belief of a child of tender years, but good intelligence, that "the bad man would get him" if he swore to a lie, showed a sufficient sense of the obligation of an oath to render him competent as a witness.—Logston v. State, 3 Heisk. 414.

[q] (Tex. 1877) Where a witness 10 years of age stated on her voir dire that she attended Sunday school and knew it was wrong to tell a lie, and the opposing counsel did not further test her understanding, it was not reversible error to permit her to testify over an objection to her competency.—Johnson v. State, 1 Tex. App. 609.

[r] (Tex. 1877) Where a boy seven years of age, offered as a witness, stated that if he told a lie the devil would get him and he would go to Huntsville, meaning the penitentiary, and it appeared that the boy was implicated in the crime for which the defendant was on trial, and the court instructed the jury that they might take into consideration the age, experience, and all other matters in their judgment likely to affect the truth and correctness of the witness' testimony, and that they could not convict on the uncorroborated testimony of the boy, whether or not he was an accomplice, no abuse of discretion was shown in permitting him to testify.—Mason v. State, 2 Tex. App. 192.

[s] (Tex. 1894) A child 10 years old, who on her voir dire answered that she would go to jail if she told a lie, and to hell when she died, shows sufficient comprehension of the nature of an oath to be permitted to testify.—Comer v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 547.

[t] (Tex. 1894) It is not an abuse of discretion for a trial judge to permit a boy 12 years old to testify in a criminal cause, when it appears that the boy, on his voir dire, stated that "it was wrong to tell a lie, and that, if he told a lie, he would be punished."—Parker v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 111, 21 S. W. 604, 25 S. W. 967.

[u] (Tex. 1895) A boy 13 years of age, who understands the difference between truth and falsehood, comprehends the orthodox idea of future reward and punishment, and knows that it is wrong to swear to or tell a lie, is a competent witness.—Partin v. State (Cr. App.) 30 S. W. 1067.

[v] (Tex. 1896) A boy 10 years of age, having an idea of future rewards and punishments, should also be shown to know the penalties of perjury, in order to render him a competent witness.—Murphy v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 24, 35 S. W. 174.

[a] (Mass. 1886) In the trial of a criminal case, where a witness, a girl of 13, has been called, and withdrawn because apparently ignorant of the nature of an oath, and afterwards the judge examines the witness, finds her competent to be sworn, and permits her to testify, defendant cannot object on the ground that she has been instructed by a Christian minister as to the nature of an oath since the last adjournment of the court.—Commonwealth v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 577, 8 N. E. 408, 56 Am. Rep. 709.

[b] (N. H. 1876) When a child offered as a witness appears not informed as to the nature of an oath, the judge may instruct him, and then, being satisfied that he understands, may receive his testimony.—Day v. Day, 56 N. H. 316.

[c] (N. Y. 1818) An infant of intelligence, who does not understand the nature of an oath, will be instructed by the court, and will thereupon be permitted to testify.—In re Stone, 3 City H. Rec. 2.

[d] (Pa. 1870) A child of eight may be allowed to be instructed by the crier and to be sworn, although she had stated that she did not know how to read, or what the Bible was; she having replied that she must tell the truth when on the stand, and if not she would "go to the big fires of hell."—Commonwealth v. Carey, 2 Brewst. 404.

[e] (Tex. 1859) A child seven years old, called as a witness, said that she did not know what was done when she held up her hand, and that she did not know what would be done with her if she told a story. Held, judging from this, and from the manner in which she gave her testimony afterwards, and notwithstanding the trial judge attempted to instruct her as to the nature of an oath, that she was incompetent.—Holst v. State, 23 Tex. App. 1, 3 S. W. 757, 59 Am. Rep. 770.

[a] (U. S. 1827) Seamen are deemed in law credible, as well as competent, witnesses, and their testimony is to be weighed like other witnesses.—United States v. Freeman, Fed. Cas. No. 15,162 [4 Mason, 505].

[b] (Ark. 1892) The fact that a principal was induced to testify by an offer of leniency of punishment does not affect his competency, but only his credibility.—Vaughan v. State, 57 Ark. 1, 20 S. W. 588.

[c] (Ind. 1859) Where a witness is offered by defendant generally, and testifies that she had had conversations with defendant in regard to the testimony, and that one witness had informed her of what another had testified to, it was error to entirely exclude that witness.—Horne v. Williams, 12 Ind. 324.

[d] (Ky. 1827) The character of a witness, and not his conduct, decides his competency.—Allen v. Young, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 136, 17 Am. Dec. 130.

[e] (Ky. 1895) In an action by an administrator to set aside a mortgage there was a judgment for plaintiff. On appeal the judgment was reversed, with directions to settle the mortgagee's account. Held, that the fact that the mortgagee testified on the trial of the action does not preclude him from testifying before the commissioner to whom the matter of his account was referred.—Lebus v. Whalen, 30 S. W. 22.

[g] (Mo. 1848) The questions of the competency and credibility of witnesses are distinct and independent questions, and the fraudulent conduct of a witness, which might affect his credibility, does not destroy his competency.—Rose v. Bates, 12 Mo. 30.

[h] (Mont. 1895) The fact that respondent in disbarment proceedings was enabled to defraud his client by reason of a corrupt scheme entered into by them to defraud the county, does not prevent the client from testifying as to such scheme.—State v. Cadwell, 16 Mont. 119, 40 Pac. 176.

[i] (N. J. 1861) Since the passage of the act of 1859 (Nix. Dig. p. 928), failure to answer interrogatories within the time required by law does not disqualify the party as a witness in his own behalf.—Voorhees v. Jones, 29 N. J. Law (5 Dutch.) 270.

[j] (N. J. 1864) It is no objection to the competency of a codefendant to testify that he has not answered the bill, but has suffered a decree pro confesso against him, and although complainant may, at his discretion, require him to answer, yet, if he does not, he cannot thereby deprive his codefendant of his testimony, or disqualify himself as a witness in the cause.—Giveans v. McMurtry, 16 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 468.

[k] (S. C. 1895) The fact that a witness, in attesting a deed, has declared that it was signed, sealed, and delivered in his presence, will not preclude him from testifying, in an action on the deed, to facts which will show nondelivery.—Johnson v. Johnson, 44 S. C. 364, 22 S. E. 419.

[l] (Tex. 1895) In a proceeding by a ward to set aside a sale of his property by his guardian under order of court, the guardian is competent to testify that no consideration was paid him by the purchaser, though in his report as guardian he had stated under oath that he had received the purchase money.—Hampton v. Hampton, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 497, 29 S. W. 423.

Evidence, see post, § 199.

[a] (U. S. 1811) Where incompetency depends on an infamous punishment, and the same is not inflicted where it might have been, the witness is not rendered incompetent.—United States v. Brockius, Fed. Cas. No. 14,652 [3 Wash. C. C. 99].

[b] (U. S. 1880) Conviction of an infamous crime does not affect the competency of a witness.—United States v. Biebusch (C. C.) 1 Fed. 213, 1 McCrary, 42.

[d] (Ill. 1861) One who confesses himself guilty of a felony, and accuses others of the same crime in order to shield himself from punishment, is an approver, and as such is an incompetent witness; but a confession of other felonies will not make the party confessing an approver.—Myers v. People, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 173; Gray v. People, Id. 344.

[e] (La. 1861) In civil matters, under Civ. Code, art. 2260, those whom the law deems infamous are not competent witnesses.—State v. Benoit, 16 La. Ann. 273.

[f] (Mass. 1817) Evidence of the testimony of a witness in a former trial, who has since been convicted of an infamous crime, is inadmissible.—Le Baron v. Crombie, 14 Mass. 234.

[g] (N. Y. 1827) Where an accomplice is charged with any other felony than that in relation to which the prosecutor moves for his admission as a witness, this fact of itself is sufficient ground for rejecting him.—People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. 707.

[h] (N. Y. 1869) Under the statutes declaring any person "sentenced upon conviction for felony" incompetent to testify (2 Rev. St. p. 701, § 23), and defining felony as "an offense for which the offender, on conviction, shall be liable by law to be punished by death or imprisonment in state prison" (Id. p. 702, § 38), one who has been convicted of and sentenced for the crime of burglary in the third degree is incompetent as a witness, although, being at the time of conviction and sentence under 16 years of age, he is, under exceptions of later statutes in behalf of juvenile offenders, sentenced to the house of refuge, instead of to state prison.—People v. Park, 41 N. Y. 21, affirming Park v. People, 1 Lans. 263.

[i] (Ohio, 1869) The admission of a witness that on a former examination touching the same subject-matter he committed perjury, provided he has not been legally convicted of the perjury, only affects his credit, not his competency.—Brown v. State, 18 Ohio St. 496.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 115.

[a] (Ala. 1878) The statutes have not changed the common-law rule that a person duly convicted of burglary or grand larceny is rendered infamous; and such a person is not a competent witness.—Taylor v. State, 62 Ala. 164.

[b] (Ala. 1882) Code, §§ 4613, 4614, authorizing the taking of depositions of persons confined in the penitentiary, do not enlarge the competency of such persons as witnesses.—Planters' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Tunstall, 72 Ala. 142.

[d] (Ky. 1886) 2 Rev. St. c. 107, § 5, provided that no person convicted of a felony anywhere in the United States should be competent as a witness, unless he had been pardoned. Gen. St. c. 29, art. 8, § 8, provides that persons convicted of perjury or false swearing, or subornation of perjury, shall be disqualified as a witness. Held, that the former statute was repealed by the General Statutes, and that a person convicted of grand larceny is not thereby disqualified as a witness.—Commonwealth v. McGuire, 84 Ky. 57.

[e] (Mo. 1886) A person who was disqualified from testifying by Gen. St. 1865, c. 20, § 66, which provided that "a person convicted" of one of certain offenses should be incompetent "to be sworn as a witness," was not made competent by reason of the omission of the words, "to be sworn as a witness," from the statute in the Revision of 1879, the latter statute having no implied retroactive effect.—State v. Sutherland (Sup.) 1 S. W. 753.

[d] (U. S. 1811) In Pennsylvania a person convicted of an assault and battery with intent to murder, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, is a competent witness.—United States v. Brockius, Fed. Cas. No. 14,652 [3 Wash. C. C. 99].

[e] (U. S. 1812) A witness is incompetent to testify in a proceeding in court who has been convicted of a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of an insolvent debtor.—United States v. Porter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,072 [2 Cranch, C. C. 60].

[f] (Ala. 1876) The common-law rule that a person convicted of arson is thereby rendered incompetent to testify as a witness does not extend to a conviction under Rev. Code, § 3699, for the offense of "arson in the third degree."—Harrison v. State, 55 Ala. 239.

[g] (Ala. 1877) Only a conviction by a state tribunal renders the convict incompetent to testify on the ground of infamy, not a conviction before a mayor for violation of a municipal ordinance against stealing.—Cheatham v. State, 59 Ala. 40.

[h] (Ala. 1882) A conviction of the statutory offense of embezzlement does not render a witness infamous, unless the particular act would have been larceny at common law.—Planters' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Tunstall, 72 Ala. 142.

[i] (Ala. 1883) A conviction under Code 1876, § 4239, of the offense of placing an obstruction on a railroad track, does not render a witness incompetent.—Clifton v. State, 73 Ala. 473.

[j] (Conn. 1793) A person who has been convicted of theft cannot testify.—State v. Gardner, 1 Root, 485.

[k] (Conn. 1810) A conviction of treason, felony, or any species of the crimen falsi renders the convict incompetent to testify.—Sheldon v. Ackley, 4 Day, 458.

[l] (Del. 1859) On the trial of an indictment for rape, an accomplice is not competent as a witness for the accused where that accomplice has been already convicted.—State v. Turner, Houst. Cr. Cas. 76.

curtilage.—Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 South. 847.

[n] (Ind. 1851) By the statute in force previously to 1843, a person who was convicted of the crime of forgery was not rendered infamous.—Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 652.

[o] (Ky. 1875) One made infamous by conviction for dealing faro is not thereby rendered incompetent to testify as a witness.—Holloway v. Commonwealth, 74 Ky. (11 Bush) 344.

[p] (Ky. 1890) Gen. St. c. 29, art. 8, relates to the crimes of "Perjury and False Swearing." Sections 3 to 7 inclusive, relate to specific kinds of false swearing. Section 8 provides that "if any person be convicted of either of the offenses described in the five preceding sections" he shall ever afterwards be disqualified from being a witness in any case. No other provisions are contained in the statutes disqualifying witnesses. Held, that one convicted of manslaughter is not disqualified.—Commonwealth v. Minor, 89 Ky. 555, 13 S. W. 5.

[pp] (Ky. 1894) A conviction for an infamous crime, other than perjury, false swearing, or subornation of perjury, does not disqualify a witness.—Combs v. Commonwealth, 25 S. W. 590.

[q] (Me. 1836) In a libel for divorce, the particeps criminis, if unmarried, is a competent witness for libelant, since the offense is not adultery.—Moulton v. Moulton, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 110.

[r] (Mass. 1844) A person convicted of the offense of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, is not a competent witness.—Commonwealth v. Rogers, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458.

[rr] (Mass. 1846) A conviction of the offense of obtaining goods by false pretenses does not render the party an incompetent witness.—Utley v. Merrick, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 302.

[s] (Mass. 1851) A conviction of the offense of maliciously obstructing the passage of cars on a railroad does not render the convict an incompetent witness.—Commonwealth v. Dame, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 384.

[ss] (Miss. 1848) Under the statute, which provides that no conviction for any offense except perjury and subornation of perjury shall disqualify a witness to testify, but that it shall go to his credibility only, a person "condemned to be hung" for murder is a competent witness.—Keithler v. State, 18 Miss. (10 Smedes & M.) 192.

[t] (Mo. 1851) Conviction of keeping a bawdy house goes to the credibility only, and not to the competency, of a witness.—Deer v. State, 14 Mo. 348.

[ttt] (N. J. 1810) Conviction under the timber act of New Jersey does not disqualify a person to testify in an action against a person for cutting timber on the same land at the same time.—Holler v. Fiirth, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 723.

[u] (N. Y. 1860) 2 Rev. St. p. 701, declares that no sentence on a conviction for any offense other than a felony shall render a person incompetent to testify. Section 702 declares that the term "felony" means an offense for which the offender shall be liable to be punished by death or by imprisonment in the state's prison. Section 690 defines petit larceny, and declares the punishment shall be imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding six months or by fine. Held, that being sentenced on a conviction for petit larceny did not disqualify as a witness.—People v. Shay, 10 Abb. Prac. 413, affirmed Shay v. People, 22 N. Y. 317.

[uu] (N. Y. 1869) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 701, § 23, providing that no person sentenced on a conviction for felony shall be competent to testify, and section 30, declaring that the term "felony" shall be construed to mean an offense for which the offender shall be liable to be punished by death or imprisonment in a state prison, a prisoner under 16 years of age, convicted of burglary in the third degree, is liable to imprisonment in a state prison, and is incompetent as a witness, though he has been sentenced to the house of refuge.—Park v. People, 1 Lans. 263, affirmed People v. Park, 41 N. Y. 21.

[vv] (N. C. 1875) The fact that one has been convicted of murder and is under sentence of death does not render him incompetent as a witness.—Ex parte Harris, 73 N. C. 65.

[w] (Ohio, 1854) A person, convicted of forgery and sentenced therefor to hard labor in the house of refuge, so long as his sentence is not reversed or annulled, is not a competent witness.—Poage v. State, 3 Ohio St. 229.

[ww] (Pa. 1831) A conviction without an attainder does not destroy the competency of a witness.—Skinner v. Perot, 1 Ashm. 57.

[x] (Pa. 1845) A receiver of stolen goods, who by the law is made guilty of a misdemeanor, is not, by reason of the conviction, incapacitated as a witness.—Commonwealth v. Murphy, 3 Clark, 290, 5 Pa. Law J. 217.

[y] (Pa. 1859) A witness, convicted of a conspiracy to cheat and defraud creditors, is not thereby disqualified.—Bickel's Ex'rs v. Fasig's Adm'r, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 463.

[yy] (Pa. 1871) One who has been convicted and is undergoing his sentence for embezzlement as a public officer is a competent witness, notwithstanding the punishment is of the same kind as that inflicted for infamous offenses.—Schuylkill County v. Copeley, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 386, 5 Am. Rep. 441.

[z] (Pa. 1871) Infamous crimes are treason, felony, and every species of the crimen falsi, such as forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, and offenses affecting the public administration of justice. This is clearly the limitation of the term "infamous crimes," as understood in Pennsylvania. There are many offenses, involving both falsehood and fraud, which are punished as infamous crimes are usually punished, and yet are not infamous crimes, and will not exclude the offenders as witnesses.—Schuylkill County v. Copeley, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 386, 5 Am. Rep. 441.

[zz] (Tex. 1877) A conviction for a felony disqualifies the party as a witness, unless he has been pardoned. A conviction for a misdemeanor does not, though the misdemeanor be theft of property worth less than $20.—Welsh v. State, 3 Tex. App. 114.

[f] (Mass. 1844) A conviction of larceny before a justice of the peace, in a case within his jurisdiction, and a performance of the sentence, render the convict an incompetent witness, although the complaint on which the justice proceeded was so defective that judgment might have been arrested or reversed on error.—Commonwealth v. Keith, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 531.

[g] (Mo. 1878) The fact that the sentence of a person who had been convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses has been suspended by an appeal and order of supersedeas does not render him a competent witness.—Ritter v. Democratic Press Co., 68 Mo. 458.

[h] (N. Y. 1877) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 681, § 1, disqualifying as a witness any person who "shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury," a person is not rendered incompetent until sentence has been pronounced upon him.—Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 25 Am. Rep. 148.

[k] (Tex. 1888) Under the statutes, the offense of willfully driving stock from its accustomed range, with intent to defraud, is a felony; and where a defendant is found guilty, and fined for such offense, and takes no appeal, he is a convicted felon, and incompetent, although no formal sentence has been passed on him.—Woods v. State, 26 Tex. App. 490, 10 S. W. 108.

[l] (Tex. 1893) Under Pen. Code, art. 27, providing that "an accused person is termed a convict after final condemnation by the highest court of resort which, by law, has jurisdiction of his case, and to which he has thought proper to appeal," one against whom judgment of conviction for a felony has been entered, but against whom sentence has not been pronounced, or, if sentence has been pronounced, has an appeal pending in the appellate court, is not a convict, so as to disqualify him as a witness.—Jones v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 135, 22 S. W. 404.

[m] (Tex. 1896) Where notice of appeal has been given by the person convicted of a felony, and entered on the short minutes of the court by the judge, and such person testifies that he desires to prosecute the appeal, the conviction does not render him incompetent as a witness.—Robinson v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 104, 35 S. W. 651.

[n] (Va. 1890) Though a witness on a trial for arson was charged as an accomplice in the indictment, and has been found guilty by the jury, he is a competent witness for the state where he has not yet been sentenced.—Brown v. Commonwealth, 86 Va. 935, 11 S. E. 799.

[a] (U. S. 1892) At common law, and on general principles of jurisprudence, when not controlled by express statute giving effect within the state which enacts it to a conviction and sentence in another, such conviction and sentence can have no effect by way of penalty or of personal disability or qualification beyond the limits of the state in which the judgment is rendered. A conviction in North Carolina will not make the convict incompetent to testify in Texas.—Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429, reversing United States v. Logan (C. C. 1891) 45 Fed. 872.

[b] (U. S. 1891) Persons convicted and punished for an infamous offense in the state courts are competent witnesses in the United States courts, their credibility being a question for the jury.—United States v. Logan (C. C.) 45 Fed. 872.

[c] (U. S. 1892) On a criminal trial in the federal courts of Pennsylvania, a person who has been convicted and sentenced in the courts of that state for murder is incompetent to testify except when his disability has been removed by a pardon.—United States v. Hall (D. C.) 53 Fed. 352.

[e] (Mass. 1822) A conviction of an infamous crime in a foreign country or another state does not render the subject of such conviction an incompetent witness in the courts of this state.—Commonwealth v. Green, 17 Mass. 515.

[f] (Nev. 1880) A witness is incompetent to testify in a criminal trial who has been convicted of an infamous crime in another state.—State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 64, 37 Am. Rep. 458.

[g] (N. H. 1838) A conviction of a crime in another state is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of impeaching the credit of a witness.—Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 22.

[h] (N. H. 1838) But a conviction in another state of a crime which by the laws of such state disqualifies the party from being heard as a witness, and which, if committed in New Hampshire, would have operated as a disqualification, is sufficient to exclude him from testifying there, in the same manner as if it had been committed, and the conviction had taken place, in their jurisdiction.—Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 22.

[i] (N. Y. 1877) A statute that no person convicted of felony shall be competent to testify does not extend to convictions in other states, but only to persons who have been convicted in a court of the state where such law exists.—National Trust Co. v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366, 5 S. W. 210.

[o] (Tex. 1887) A judgment, showing the conviction of the witness for forgery in Kansas, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the disqualification of the witness, although it does not, on its face, show that forgery is a felony in Kansas, but its introduction must be followed up by proof that forgery is a felony in Kansas, notwithstanding the fact that it is such in Texas under Pen. Code, arts. 442 and 443.—Pitner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366, 5 S. W. 210.

[p] (Tex. 1887) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 730, which disqualifies as witnesses "all persons who have been or may be convicted of felony in this state, or in any other jurisdiction," a witness is disqualified where he has been convicted of a felony, although such conviction was not had within the territorial limits of the state.—Pitner v. § 114. Proceedings in which evidence is inadmissible and nature of evidence.

[a] (Ark. 1884) The disqualification of one convicted of a crime to testify applies to civil cases only; the Criminal Code being silent on the subject.—Werner v. State, 44 Ark. 122.

[b] (Ky. 1890) Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 8, providing that no prisoner in the penitentiary of the state or any other country shall testify, does not apply to the procedure in criminal actions, but is limited to civil causes.—Commonwealth v. Minor, 89 Ky. 555, 13 S. W. 5.

[c] (N. Y. 1863) The disqualification of a witness who has been convicted of felony, unless pardoned, extends to all cases where the declaration is to be used in a judicial proceeding for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact; and it applies to both written and oral evidence.—People v. Robertson, 26 How. Prac. 90.

[d] (Tex. 1881) A letter written by a penitentiary convict, and acknowledged by him after his conviction, cannot be used as a standard of comparison in evidence, since the fact of conviction disqualifies the writer from acknowledging the letter for the purposes of evidence.—Long v. State, 10 Tex. App. 186.

[a] (U. S. 1884) Cr. Proc. Act Utah, 1878, provides that "the rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings, except as otherwise provided in this act." Civ. Prac. Act, § 374, provides that "all persons, without exception, otherwise than as specified in this chapter, may be witnesses in any act or proceeding. Facts which, by the common law, would cause the exclusion of witnesses, may still be shown for the purpose of affecting their credibility." Section 378, which was repealed by Act March 9, 1882, provided that "persons against whom judgment has been rendered upon a conviction for felony, unless pardoned by the governor, or such judgment has been reversed on appeal, shall not be witnesses." Held, that by such repeal convicted felons were made competent witnesses in criminal as well as civil cases.—Hopt v. People of Territory of Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262.

[e] (Ind. 1856) All objections to the competency of a witness by reason of crime were removed by the practice act of 1852.—Muir v. Gibson, 8 Ind. 187.

[f] (Ind. 1873) Since the adoption of Code, § 243, persons who have been convicted of treason, murder, rape, arson, burglary, robbery, manstealing, forgery, or perjury are not for that reason incompetent to testify in civil suits; but such conviction may be shown to affect their credibility.—Glenn v. Clore, 42 Ind. 60.

[g] (La. 1861) The act of 1855 permits convicts to testify for and against each other.—State v. Benoit, 16 La. Ann. 273.

[h] (La.) Under Acts 1886, No. 29, providing that a competent witness in all criminal matters shall be a person of proper understanding, conviction of an infamous crime is no longer a disqualification of a witness in criminal cases.—(1889) State v. Mack, 41 La. Ann. 1079, 6 South. 808; (1890) Same v. McManus, 42 La. Ann. 1194, 8 South. 305.

[i] (Me. 1863) The deposition of a person, taken while he is under sentence of death, having been convicted of murder, is made legal testimony by chapter 53 of the Laws of 1861, which provides that "no person shall be incompetent to testify in consequence of having been convicted of any criminal offense."—Woodman v. Churchill, 51 Me. 112.

[j] (Mass. 1854) Under St. 1852, c. 312, § 60, convicts in the state prison, brought into court by writ of habeas corpus, are competent witnesses.—Newhall v. Jenkins, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 562.

[k] (Miss. 1848) Under the statute which provides that no "conviction" for any offense, except perjury and subornation of perjury, shall disqualify a witness to testify, but shall only go to his credibility, a person convicted of murder, as principal, and sentenced to be hung, may testify against his accessory.—Keithler v. State, 18 Miss. (10 Smedes & M.) 192.

[l] (N. Y. 1871) Under Laws 1869, c. 678, a prisoner is a competent witness on his own behalf, even though he has been sentenced on a conviction for felony, and has not been pardoned.—Delamater v. People, 5 Lans. 332.

[m] (N. Y. 1874) Laws 1847, c. 460, § 150, authorizing a convict to be sworn and making him "a competent witness against any fellow-prisoner for any offense actually committed while in prison," permits a convict to testify to any facts material to the issue on the trial of any such offense. He is not restricted to the particular acts constituting the crime.—Donohue v. People, 56 N. Y. 208.

[n] (N. Y.) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 832, declaring that a person "convicted of crime or misdemeanor is notwithstanding a competent witness in a civil or criminal action," a person convicted and sentenced is competent, as well as one convicted only.—(1881) Sacia v. Decker, 1 Civ. Proc. R. 47; (1883) People v. McGloin, 91 N. Y. 241, 12 Abb. N. C. 172, 1 N. Y. Cr. R. 154, 16 Wkly. Dig. 255, affirming (1882) 28 Hun, 150, 1 N. Y. Cr. R. 105.

[o] (N. Y. 1881) Code, § 832, making those convicted of crimes competent witnesses, was applicable, before the passage of Laws 1879, c. 542, to civil cases only, and the testimony of one so testifying should be struck out on motion.—Perry v. People, 86 N. Y. 353, 62 How. Prac. 148.

[p, q] (N. Y. 1888) Under Pen. Code, § 714, providing that no conviction for crime disqualifies a witness, one who confesses that he has previously committed perjury in regard to the same things about which he testifies is not incompetent.—People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 251, 16 N. E. 68, affirming 48 Hun, 36.

[r] (Tenn. 1888) Acts 1887, c. 79, § 1, provides that in a criminal trial defendant may testify. Defendant was on trial for murder. Held, that an objection to his testimony, on the ground of previous conviction of larceny and judgment of infamy, was improperly sustained.—Morgan v. State, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 472, 7 S. W. 456.

[s] (Tex.) A defendant who has been convicted of a felony is not incompetent to testify as a witness in his own behalf, under Code Cr. Proc. art. 730, subd. 5, which declares incompetent as witnesses "all persons who have been convicted of a felony, unless the convict has been pardoned," as Laws 1889, p. 37, declares that "any defendant in a criminal action shall be entitled to testify in his own behalf therein."—(1889) Williams v. State, 28 Tex. App. 301, 12 S. W. 1103; (1890) Shannon v. State, 28 Tex. App. 474, 13 S. W. 599.

[t] (Va. 1845) On the trial of a convict from the penitentiary for a felony committed there, a convict confined there for felony is made by statute a competent witness for the prosecution.—Johnson v. Commonwealth, 2 Grat. 581.

[u] (Wis. 1882) Rev. St. § 4073, providing that a person who has been convicted of a criminal offense is, notwithstanding, a competent witness, but the conviction may be proved to affect his credibility, applies to all convicts, including those still in prison.—Sutton v. Fox, 55 Wis. 531, 13 N. W. 477, 42 Am. Rep. 744.

—(U. S. 1824) United States v. Rutherford, Fed. Cas. No. 16,210 [2 Cranch, C. C. 528];

(Ark. 1884) Werner v. State, 44 Ark. 122;

(S. C. 1882) State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 453.

(U. S. 1876) Wallamet R. T. Co. v. Oregon S. N. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 17,106.

[b] (U. S. 1892) The granting of a full and unconditional pardon by the president of the United States to a person convicted of a felony restores his competency as a witness, and this result is not affected by a recital in the pardon that it was granted for the reason, among others, that his testimony was desired by the government, in a cause then pending in a court of the United States.—Boyd v. United States, 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077, reversing United States v. Boyd (C. C. 1890) 45 Fed. 851.

[c] (Ala. 1868) The pardon of a person convicted of a crime restores his competency as a witness, although it does not appear that he has been restored by the warrant of pardon to the rights of citizenship or any other rights forfeited by his conviction.—Yarborough v. State, 41 Ala. 405.

[d] (Cal. 1874) A document signed by the governor, in which, under Act March 7, 1868, he, on account of the good conduct of a person confined in the state's prison under sentence for a crime, releases him from imprisonment before the expiration of his term, and restores him to the rights of citizenship, does not remove the disability to testify annexed by law to a conviction for a felony.—Blanc v. Rodgers, 49 Cal. 15.

[f] (La. 1849). Even if a sentence for felony in another state renders a witness incompetent in Louisiana, such disability, if not annexed to the conviction by express statute, will be removed by a pardon.—Klein v. Dinkgrave, 4 La. Ann. 540.

[g] (Mo. 1886) A mere release and discharge from the penitentiary is not a pardon, restoring competency to testify.—State v. Kirschner, 23 Mo. App. 349.

[h] (N. Y. 1819) Convictions during a certain month for three distinct larcenies, for each of which sentence of a certain period was imposed, render a witness incompetent, notwithstanding a pardon reciting a single conviction for larceny in the same court in the same month, and a sentence for a period of time equal to the three sentences combined, since it could not be justly inferred that the pardon was intended to apply to the whole or either of such convictions.—In re Hutchins, 4 City H. Rec. 119.

[i] (N. Y. 1851) A conviction of perjury disqualifies a person from being a witness, even though pardoned by the governor.—Houghtaling v. Kelderhouse, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 241.

[j] (Pa. 1837) A pardon by the president of the United States of one convicted of passing a counterfeit note and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, liberating the prisoner on payment of costs, restores the prisoner's competency as a witness.—Hoffman v. Coster, 2 Whart. 453.

[k] (Pa. 1857) A pardon, although stating the date of a conviction incorrectly, is sufficient to restore the competency of a witness, if it is possible to show that it was intended to cover, and does cover, the offense of which the record shows the witness to be guilty.—Commonwealth v. Ohio & P. R. Co., 1 Grant, Cas. 329.

[l] (Pa. 1877) The fact that an executive pardon for larceny omitted to direct the restoration of the property or payment of its value does not disable the convict from testifying against persons charged with a murder wherein he was a confessed accomplice.—Hester v. Commonwealth, 85 Pa. 139.

that one convicted of that offense "shall be forever disqualified from being a witness in any matter in controversy," and Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 158), providing that such person shall not be a competent witness for any purpose, though his sentence may have been fully complied with, "unless the judgment of conviction be judicially set aside or reversed."—Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424, 47 Am. St. Rep. 908, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 447.

[n] (S. C. 1846) An instrument in writing, issued by the president under the seal of the United States, directing that one who had been sentenced to the penitentiary for robbing the mail be forthwith released from prison, is a pardon, which annulled the sentence and restored the prisoner to his competency as a witness.—Jones v. Harris, 1 Strob. 160.

[o] (Tenn. 1872) Pardon by the governor is not such a restoration "to full citizenship" under Code, § 1994, as will render the convicted person competent as a witness under section 3812.—Evans v. State, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 12.

[p] (Tex. 1886) It cannot be objected to the admission of the testimony of one whose competency as a witness has been restored by a pardon that the facts to which he would testify came to his knowledge after conviction and before pardon.—Thornton v. State, 20 Tex. App. 519.

[q] (Tex. 1886) A pardon described the offense as "cow-stealing." The record of conviction showed the "theft of a steer." The term of court was described in the record as the June term, 1878, and in the pardon as the September term, 1878. Held, that the pardon should be deemed to remove the disqualification to testify.—Hunnicutt v. State, 20 Tex. App. 632.

[r] (Tex. 1886) A full pardon, granted to a person convicted of a felony, will restore the convict's competency as a witness, though a conditional pardon for the same offense had theretofore been granted to and accepted by the convict.—Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430.

[s] (Tex. 1886) Where a pardon offered in reply to an objection that a witness is incompetent by reason of a conviction of felony, recites a date of conviction different from that stated in the record of the conviction, and it appears that there could not have been a term of the court in which the conviction was had at the date recited in the pardon, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that the pardon was intended to, and did in fact, cover the particular offense of which the witness had been convicted.—Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430.

[t] (Tex. 1886) It cannot be objected to a pardon, offered in reply to an objection that a witness is incompetent by reason of a conviction of felony, that it was granted for the purpose of avoiding a decision of the court of appeals to the effect that a former pardon granted to the witness, being conditional, did not restore his competency, since the reasons for which pardons are granted are no concern of the courts.—Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430.

[u] (Tex. 1886) A conviction of crime will not be disturbed, as against public policy, because convicted felons were pardoned in order to render them competent to testify against defendant.—Martin v. State, 21 Tex. App. 1, 17 S. W. 430.

[v] (Tex. 1894) A pardon will restore the person's competency as a witness on the trial of an action, the right of which accrued before the pardon was granted.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Howell (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 98.

[a] (Mass. 1834) A pardon remitting to the convict "the residue of the punishment he was sentenced to endure" does not restore his competency as a witness; aliter, of a full pardon.—Perkins v. Stevens, 41 Mass. (24 Pick.) 277.

[b] (N. Y. 1803) A pardon makes one sentenced to the state prison for forgery competent as a witness, notwithstanding a clause in the pardon declaring that nothing contained therein is intended to relieve the prisoner from the legal disabilities arising from his conviction and sentence, but solely from imprisonment. Such clause is repugnant, and will be treated as surplusage.—People v. Pease, 3 Johns. Cas. 333.

[c] (Tex. 1885) A pardon to which a condition subsequent is annexed will not render a felon competent as a witness.—Carr v. State, 19 Tex. App. 635, 53 Am. Rep. 395.

[e] (Tex. 1889) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 730, providing that all persons who have been pardoned for a felony are competent to testify in criminal actions, a pardon granted "subject to the revocation by the governor of Texas whenever it shall be deemed by said governor that he has violated any of the criminal laws of the state" will not restore the holder to competency as a witness.—McGee v. State, 29 Tex. App. 596, 16 S. W. 422.

§ 118. Effect of serving out term.

[a] (U. S. 1892) A full pardon by the governor of Texas of a person convicted of crime therein, though granted after he has served out his term of imprisonment, takes away all disqualifications as a witness, and restores his competency to testify to any facts within his knowledge, even if they came to his knowledge before his disqualification was removed by the pardon.—Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429, reversing United States v. Logan (C. C. 1891) 45 Fed. 872.

[b] (U. S. 1824) A convict who has served out a sentence for felony may be restored by pardon to competency as a witness.—United States v. Jones, Fed. Cas. No. 15,493 [Brunner, Col. Cas. 462].

[c] (U. S. 1835) In the District of Columbia, serving out the term of imprisonment in the penitentiary for felony does not restore the party to his competency as a witness.—United States v. Brown, Fed. Cas. No. 14,661 [4 Cranch, C. C. 607].

[d] (U. S. 1892) Act Pa. March 31, 1860 (Purd. Dig. p. 469, pl. 357), provides that, when any person convicted of a felony, or misdemeanor punishable with imprisonment at labor, has endured his punishment, the punishment so endured shall have the like effect and consequences as a pardon by the governor. Held, that this was a legislative pardon, and operated to remove the disability in the same manner as a pardon by the executive, and therefore enabled such persons to testify in criminal trials in the federal courts.—United States v. Hall (D. C.) 53 Fed. 352.

[e] (La. 1861) A pardoned convict can testify in a criminal prosecution, but one who has served out his time of punishment cannot. The endurance of the penalty does not remove the infamy.—State v. Benoit, 16 La. Ann. 273.

[f] (Md. 1805) Where a witness is objected to on the ground of his having been transported to this country to serve several years on a conviction of felony, the party objecting must prove that such witness did not serve out the several years; otherwise, he becomes a competent witness.—Cole's Lessee v. Cole, 1 Har. & J. 572.

[g] (N. H. 1856) A full pardon, granted after a convict has suffered the entire punishment imposed on him upon his conviction, removes the common-law disability of incompetency as a witness.—State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388.

[h] (Tex. 1885) A pardon after a prisoner has served his full term in the penitentiary has the same effect as though granted during the term, and restores his competency as a witness.—Hunnicutt v. State, 18 Tex. App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 330.

[i] (W. Va. 1878) A convict, who has been at liberty after the length of time for which he was sentenced to the penitentiary has elapsed, is presumed to have suffered punishment, and to be restored to competency as a witness under the statute.—State v. Williams, 14 W. Va. 851.

[a] (Ala. 1827) The relationship of kindred to a party is no objection to the competency of a witness to testify for such party.—High v. Stainback, 1 Stew. 24.

[b] (Ala. 1829) A son-in-law of a testator is incompetent to testify for the executor in an action brought by him, although it does not appear that he is interested.—McKinney's Ex'rs v. McKinney's Adm'rs, 2 Stew. 17.

[c] (Cal. 1860) A witness is not disqualified by the fact that his wife was a daughter of plaintiff.—Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533.

[d] (La.) A father-in-law may be a witness for his son-in-law.—(1822) Bernard v. Vignaud, 10 Mart. (O. S.) 482; (1833) Hamblin v. Hook, 6 La. 73.

[e] (La. 1836) Ascendants, while competent for the wife in an action of separation from bed and board to prove cruel treatment, cannot establish her claims for property.—Taylor v. Felps, 10 La. 114.

[f] (La.) The mother-in-law may testify for the son-in-law, and vice versa. Their connection affects their credibility only.—(1847) Groves v. Steel, 2 La. Ann. 480, 46 Am. Dec. 551; (1849) Rachal v. Rachal, 4 La. Ann. 500.

[h] (La. 1851) Where a daughter-in-law sues jointly with her children for property in which she has no distinct interest, her mother-in-law, incompetent for them, is equally so for her.—Hall v. Hill, 6 La. Ann. 745.

[i] (N. J. 1818) By the statute a slave born after 1804 is in the situation of a person bound to service by overseers of the poor, and, on his indictment for murder, the master is a competent witness.—State v. Aaron, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 231, 7 Am. Dec. 592.

[a] (Del. 1860) In a bastardy suit, the father of the mother of the child, who is a minor, is a competent witness for the state.—Smith v. State, Houst. Cr. Cas. 107.

[b] (Fla. 1891) Under Act Feb. 4, 1874, which renders a witness competent, notwithstanding his interest in the event of the action, neither a father nor a mother is disqualified by the parental relation as a witness for or against a son.—Haworth v. Norris, 28 Fla. 763, 10 South. 18.

[c] (Iowa, 1849) A father is a competent witness in behalf of his son in a criminal case.—Cass v. State, 2 G. Greene, 353.

[d] (La.) A father is incompetent for his child, legitimate or illegitimate. Civ. Code, art. 2260. The mere fact of a witness being the ascendant of the party for or against whom he is called disqualifies him. The law makes no distinction as to legitimacy.—(1833) Deslonde v. Le Breret, 5 La. 96; (1842) Leeds v. Caldwell, 1 Rob. 256; (1844) Macarty v. Roach, 7 Rob. 357.

[e] (La. 1839) The father of a party cited in warranty by defendant is incompetent for plaintiff.—Guerin v. Bagneries, 13 La. 14.

[f] (La. 1852) A father cannot interrogate his son as administrator of a succession.—Guier v. Guier, 7 La. Ann. 103.

[g] (La. 1855) In a criminal proceeding, the son is a competent witness for his father, though it is otherwise in a prosecution by the state to recover a civil penalty.—State v. Thompson, 10 La. Ann. 122.

[h] (La. 1860) A natural son is not a competent witness in controversies which relate to the succession of his deceased natural father.—Lazare v. Jacques, 15 La. Ann. 599.

[i] (Me. 1824) In an action by a father for labor and services performed by his son, the latter is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Keen v Sprague, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 77.

[j] (Miss. 1849) A daughter is a competent witness in her mother's behalf, during the lifetime of the mother, in a suit between a third person and her mother, the latter claiming the property in controversy, although her testimony might go to show title in her deceased father to the property.—Parker v. McNeill, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 355.

[k] (N. H. 1841) In a prosecution under the bastardy act, it is no objection to a witness that he is the father of complainant.—Marston v. Jenness, 12 N. H. 137.

[m] (N. Y. 1829) In a suit to charge an administratrix with assets, her son was competent to testify to the payment of certain of the debts of the intestate by the administratrix in the due course of administration.—Vultee v. Rayner, 2 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Hall) 407.

[n] (S. C. 1823) A parent is a competent witness to prove a gift by himself to his child.—Smith v. Littlejohn, 2 McCord, 362.

[o] (Va. 1889) In a suit to set aside a deed to the children of one W., the latter, having no interest in the controversy, is competent to testify on behalf of his children.—Grayson v. George, 85 Va. 908, 9 S. E. 13.

§ 121. Attorney and client.

(Ga. 1857) Merchants' Bank of Macon v. Rawls, 21 Ga. 289.

[c] An attorney is a competent witness against his client as to all matters not privileged.
—(Ark. 1866) Milan v. State, 24 Ark. 346;
(Ind. 1891) Lloyd v. Davis, 2 Ind. App. 170, 28 N. E. 232;
(Mo. 1894) State v. Hedgepeth, 125 Mo. 14, 28 S. W. 160.

[d] (Ala. 1848) An attorney, who is to receive a certain fee, is a competent witness for his client.—Morrow v. Parkman, 14 Ala. 769.

[e] (Ala. 1852) On grounds of public policy an attorney at law may be a witness for his client, when he has no other interest in the event of the suit than such as concerns his fees, and they are not contingent in their nature.—Quarles v. Waldron, 20 Ala. 217.

[f] (Del. 1879) An attorney who has never represented his client in a particular litigation may testify in the client's behalf as to a matter learned by him independently of any communication with or information from the client.—Hollis v. Vandergrift, 5 Houst. 521.

[g] (Fla. 1875) It is not a valid objection to the competency of a witness produced on the part of defendant that he had been the attorney of plaintiff.—Buckmaster v. Kelley, 15 Fla. 180.

[h] (Ga. 1853) By the act of 1850 "to regulate the testimony of attorneys at law," an attorney is disqualified as a witness only in the case pending to which his client is a party, and leaves him, as to all other cases, subject to the common-law rule.—Swift v. Perry, 13 Ga. 138.

[i] (Ga. 1854) The statute by which attorneys were prohibited from giving testimony for or against their clients does not include proving service of notices, interrogatories, and such matters which could be proved by the client himself.—Rogers v. Hoskins, 15 Ga. 270.

[j] (Ga. 1855) An attorney is not incompetent to testify to a fact, unless the knowledge of it was acquired by him during the relationship of client and attorney, and by reason of the relationship.—Watkins v. Smith, 17 Ga. 68.

[k] (Ga. 1859) St. 1850, rendering attorneys incompetent in certain cases as witnesses for their clients, does not prevent the attorney general from testifying for the state.—Hines v. State, 26 Ga. 614.

[l] (Ga. 1860) Where an attorney at law acts as an agent for another, and not in his capacity as attorney, his testimony is admissible.—Jones v. Keer, 30 Ga. 93.

[m] (Ga. 1860) In a suit on a foreign judgment, the fact that a witness was an attorney in the suit in which the judgment was obtained does not make him incompetent, when he testifies to no fact that he acquired from his client, or during the existence and by reason of the relation of attorney and client.—Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34.

[n] (Iowa, 1849) An attorney employed to collect a debt, and who engages another attorney to commence suit on it, is not incompetent to testify for plaintiff.—Walsh v. Murphy, 2 G. Greene, 227.

[o] (Ky. 1860) An attorney is a competent witness in behalf of his client, and also, with the client's consent, against him; but, while the relation subsists, it is a question for the attorney's own mind, and not for the court, whether he shall testify, when thus allowed.—Hall v. Renfro, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 51.

[p] (La. 1826) Under Act Jan. 30, 1816, No. 4, § 2, a party cannot call his own counsel as a witness, but he may the counsel of his opponent.—Cox v. Williams, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 139.

[q] (La.) Though, under the laws of Louisiana, an attorney is competent for his client, his position as a witness is one of extreme delicacy for himself and the court; and it is always desirable, for the harmony of the profession, the independence of the bench, and public confidence in the administration of justice, that he should not testify, except in extreme cases when all other means of proof are impossible, and then he should withdraw from the case.—(1847) Succession of Harkins, 2 La. Ann. 923; (1852) Madden v. Farmer, 7 La. Ann. 580; (1855) Boissy v. Lacou, 10 La. Ann. 29.

[r] (Mass. 1848) It is no objection to the competency of a witness called for plaintiff that the witness was the attorney who made the writ, that he was actively engaged in the trial as one of the counsel for plaintiff, and that he opened the cause to the jury.—Potter v. Inhabitants of Ware, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 519.

[s] (N. Y. 1848) The practice of attorneys and counselors testifying for their clients is to be disapproved.—Little v. McKeon, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 607.

[t] (N. C. 1849) It has been the universal practice to permit an attorney in a cause to give evidence at the instance of his client; but it is a practice not to be encouraged.—Brunswick County v. Woodside, 31 N. C. 496.

[u] (Pa.) An attorney is a competent witness for his client, though it is more proper for him to retire from the case when he finds it necessary that he should be a witness.—(1843) Morrison v. McElfresh, 7 Leg. Int. 194; (1849) Bell v. Bell, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 235.

[v] (Pa. 1847) All the courts can do is to discountenance the practice of attorneys testifying in behalf of their clients, and, where the evidence is indispensable, to recommend the counsel to withdraw from the cause.—Mishler v. Baumgardner, 1 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 304.

[w] (Pa. 1863) In an action on the sheriff's official bond, for a defective levy, by execution creditors, their attorney is a competent witness in their behalf.—Linton v. Ford, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 294.

[x] (Pa.) An attorney who has opened his client's case to the jury, and examined the witnesses for his clients, is not thereby rendered incompetent as a witness.—(1872) Follansbe v. Walker, 72 Pa. 228, 13 Am. Rep. 671; (1873) Armstrong v. Walker, 30 Leg. Int. 69.

[y] (Vt. 1846) Defendant, being indebted to plaintiff on a note secured by mortgage, tendered to plaintiff's attorney the amount due and demanded the note, to which the attorney replied that he could not find the note, but offered to give a receipt for it and to discharge the mortgage, which defendant refused. Held, that the attorney to whom the tender was made was a competent witness for plaintiff in an action of ejectment founded on the mortgage. —Holton v. Brown, 18 Vt. 224, 46 Am. Dec. 148.

[a] As between plaintiff and defendant, an attorney is a competent witness to prove his authority to appear in the suit.

—(N. J. 1831) Folly v. Smith, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 139;

(N. Y. 1818) Caniff v. Myers, 15 Johns. 246; (1823) Gaul v. Groat, 1 Cow. 113; (1823) Tullock v. Cunningham, Id. 256; (1823) Pixley v. Butts, 2 Cow. 421.

[b, c] (Del. 1872) In an action for money had and received, plaintiff's attorney is competent to testify as to a demand by him and defendant's refusal to pay. — Crooks v. Purnell, 4 Houst. 305.

[d] (Ga. 1857) In an action for the recovery of land, defendants in the declaration signed on the back thereof an acknowledgment of the service of the within writ, "and waive the necessity of a copy of it, and service thereof by the sheriff." Held, that the attorney for defendant is a competent witness for plaintiff to testify to the intention of the parties in executing such acknowledgment.—Ingram v. Little, 21 Ga. 420.

[e] (Ga. 1881) An attorney cannot testify to invalidate a confession of judgment made by him, but can to explain who were embraced therein.—McBride v. Bryan, 67 Ga. 584.

[f] (Ill. 1861) An attorney in the suit may legally be sworn and testify to a calculation made by him as to the amount due for interest, although the testimony of an indifferent witness would be preferable.—Stratton v. Henderson, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 68.

[g] (Iowa, 1858) In an action on a note, plaintiff's attorney is a competent witness to prove that the note has been lost since bringing the suit, and that the copy of it annexed to the petition is a true copy thereof.—Abbott v. Striblen, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 191.

[h] (Ky. 1851) Where notes had been lodged with one attorney by the holder, and afterwards forwarded by him to another attorney for the holder, and by the latter filed with and made part of an answer in equity, which answer, with the notes, was lost or abstracted from the files, the two attorneys are competent witnesses of the amount and genuineness of the notes, and of the fact that they had been made part of the answer.—Southard v. Cushing's Adm'r, 50 Ky. (11 B. Mon.) 344.

[i] (La. 1825) Counsel, though incompetent witnesses, may make affidavit as to how the proceedings have been conducted.—Caulker v. Banks, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 532.

[j] (La. 1832) A client may prove that his claim has not been paid to his attorney by the attorney himself.—McCrummen v. Stewart, 4 La. 500.

[k] (Md. 1801) As an administrator, by filing as an exhibit in a suit in chancery an account against his intestate in favor of A., thereby acknowledges such account, the attorney of the administrator and A. is competent to prove that the administrator directed such account to be used as an exhibit and insisted on in such suit.—Forbes v. Perrie's Adm'r, 1 Har. & J. 109.

[l] (Miss. 1843) An attorney at law, who assented to an assignment of a judgment belonging to his client, for whom he was under acceptances to be paid out of moneys that he might collect, is a competent witness to prove the circumstances under which his assent to the assignment was given, and to testify generally in reference to it.—Clark v. Kingsland, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 248.

[m] (Miss. 1855) The attorney who brought the first suit was a competent witness for plaintiff in the second suit to show that defendant had admitted the mistake in the first judgment, and promised to pay the amount due plaintiff, where it appeared that this witness had given a receipt to plaintiff for one note for collection, and was responsible to that amount, but it did not appear that that was one of the notes sued for in this action, nor that it was not the note on which the former judgment was rendered, and which was paid.—Dunlap v. Edwards, 29 Miss. (7 Cushm.) 41.

[n] (Mo. 1866) In an action for maliciously suing out an attachment, an attorney is a competent witness to prove what was the opinion and advice of another attorney consulting with him, given to the party suing out the attachment.—Alexander v. Harrison, 38 Mo. 258, 90 Am. Dec. 431.

[o] (Mo. 1875) An attorney at law is a competent witness in a criminal case to prove facts necessary to sustain an application for change of venue.—State v. Lack, 58 Mo. 501.

[p] (N. Y. 1818) An attorney who has appeared under a power is competent to prove the execution of the power to himself.—Caniff v. Myers, 15 Johns. 246.

[q] (Ohio, 1828) An attorney who enters an appearance for several joint defendants, on the authority of a part of the number, is a competent witness to that fact for the remaining defendants.—Cox's Adm'rs v. Hill, 3 Ohio (3 Ham.) 411.

[qq] (Ohio, 1828) An attorney who has appeared for a party without authority is a competent witness to prove that fact.—Cox's Adm'rs v. Hill, 3 Ohio (3 Ham.) 411.

[s] (Pa. 1851) Defendant in a suit had made certain admissions as to the contract on which the suit was founded, before the institution of the suit, to a person who was plaintiff's counsel at the time of such admissions, though not in the suit, which admissions were made at an interview had in consequence of a note from such counsel. Held, that such person was a competent witness for plaintiff to prove such admissions, having no interest in the result of such suit.—Edwards v. Goldsmith, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 43.

[t] (Pa. 1849) Plaintiff's attorney, who has opened the case and examined his witnesses, will not be permitted to impeach the credit of defendant's witness by testifying to a conversation between them since his engagement in the case.—Mishler v. Baumgardner, 4 Clark, 266, 1 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 304.

[u] (Pa. 1892) It is proper to show by the testimony of an attorney, when this can be done without contradicting the record, that the matters at issue on a former trial between the parties were not the same as those on the present trial.—Susquehanna Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Mardorf, 152 Pa. 22, 25 Atl. 234, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 189.

[v] (S. C. 1849) In an action against the sheriff for official neglect in not arresting a party as in duty bound, plaintiff's attorney is a competent witness for plaintiff to disprove that the sheriff suspended proceedings on the order for bail by his (the attorney's) instructions.—Simonton v. Yongue, 3 Strob. 538.

[w] (Vt. 1845) A judgment recovered by a sheriff on a jail bond, having been paid to his attorneys, was by them with his consent paid to the real party in interest. In an action by the judgment debtor against the sheriff to recover back this payment, after the judgment had been reversed by the supreme court, these attorneys were competent witnesses; they having no interest in the litigation.—Catlin v. Allen, 17 Vt. 158.

§ 123. —— Contingent fees or other interest.

—(N. C. 1810) Slocum v. Newby, 5 N. C. 423; (Pa. 1788) Newman v. Bradley, 1 Dall. 240, 1 L. Ed. 118; (1814) Miles v. O'Hara, 1 Serg. & R. 32; (1828) Boulden v. Hebel, 17 Serg. & R. 312.

[c] (Conn. 1840) The mere fact that an attorney was retained to appear and defend in a certain suit, and that he did not appear and defend therein, without showing that his client had any available defense, or sustained any damage by his negligence, does not show such an interest in him as will render him an incompetent witness for his client in another suit.—Carrington v. Holabird, 17 Conn. 530.

[d] (Kan. 1889) An attorney may testify in behalf of his client, and the fact that his compensation as an attorney in the action is contingent on the result of the litigation does not render him incompetent. The interest he may have in the action goes to his credibility, but not to his competency.—Central Branch Union Pac. R. Co. v. Andrews, 41 Kan. 370, 21 Pac. 276.

[e] (La. 1824) An attorney cannot, by renouncing his fee and having his name struck off the record, become a witness for his client.—English v. Latham, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 88.

[f] (La.) An attorney is not disqualified by an interest consisting of his honorarium; so, though he is to receive a percentage on the amount recovered, he is still competent.—(1833) Sprigg v. Beaman, 6 La. 59; (1834) Flower v. O'Conner, 7 La. 198.

[g] (La. 1852) Where prescription was pleaded as a defense to a suit on a note, plaintiff's attorney, in whose hands the note was placed for collection before maturity, cannot testify to an interruption of prescription; the effect of such testimony, if admitted, being to relieve said attorney from liability to his client for negligence, in case the suit was not sustained.—Madden v. Farmer, 7 La. Ann. 580.

[i] (Me. 1832) A second suit having been brought for the same cause of action, the attorney of record for plaintiff in the first action is competent to testify that he received of defendant the sum sued for, and discharged him of the demand, notwithstanding the attorney also claims the money under an alleged assignment from plaintiff to himself.—McLaine v. Bachelor, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 324.

[j] (N. C. 1810) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that he is counsel for plaintiff, and intends, if the debt sued for be recovered, to charge a commission for receiving and remitting the money.—Slocum v. Newby, 5 N. C. 423.

[k] (Pa. 1844) If the act of an attorney of plaintiff be set up as a defense against the claim, the attorney's contingent liability to his client is not sufficient to render him an incompetent witness.—Orphans' Court v. Woodburn, 7 Watts & S. 162.

[m] (Pa. 1866) An attorney, who has made himself liable by negligence in regard to collecting a note, is not thereby disqualified from testifying in a suit on the note against an indorser.—Braine v. Spalding, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 247.

[n] (S. C. 1857) An attorney, who withdraws from a case and takes no further part therein, on becoming a witness for his client, is not rendered incompetent because no order of substitution or release of his interest in the costs is entered.—Price v. Moses, 10 Rich. Law, 454.

[o] (Tenn. 1859) Where by the admissions of a party a champertous contract was established between him and his attorney, such attorney is not a competent witness to prove the falsity of his client's statements, and that no such contract was entered into.—Dowell v. Dowell, 8 Head, 502.

[p] (Tenn. 1865) An attorney with whom a champertous contract is alleged to have been made for his services in behalf of a plaintiff is a competent witness for plaintiff to disprove the champerty. The fact of the alleged participation in the champertous contract would go to the credit of the attorney as a witness, but would not render him incompetent.—Benton v. Henry, 2 Cold. 83.

[d] (Ill. 1892) In an action against a man and his wife, the wife is not a competent witness for the defense, after the suit has been dismissed as to her.—Kusch v. Kusch, 143 Ill. 353, 32 N. E. 267.

[e] (Ill. 1893) The fact that a husband is biased in favor of one of the parties to a suit, but has no legal interest therein, does not make his wife an incompetent witness on the trial.—R. J. Gunning Co. v. Cusack, 50 Ill. App. 290.

[f] (Ky. 1832) Where the husband is the beneficial, though not the nominal, plaintiff in a suit, his wife is an incompetent witness.—Pyle v. Maulding, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 202.

[g] (La. 1856) The rule which in civil matters disqualifies the husband from testifying for or against the wife, and vice versa, is founded on considerations of policy and morality, and is without exception.—Tulley v. Alexander, 11 La. Ann. 628.

[h] (N. Y. 1840) A husband cannot be a witness in favor of his wife, though he has no personal interest in the suit.—Hosack v. Rogers, 8 Paige, 229, affirmed Hosack's Ex'rs v. Same, 25 Wend. 313.

[i] (N. Y. 1851) The rule excluding husband and wife from testifying is founded on reasons of public policy, and not on the interest of the witness.—Hasbrouck v. Vandervoort, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 596, affirmed (1853) 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 153.

[j] (N. Y. 1862) Husband and wife cannot testify either for or against each other, except where they are parties to the suit.—Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Daly, 194.

[k] (N. Y. 1863) Before the act of 1860, as well as since the amendment of 1862, a husband and wife are not in general admissible as witnesses for or against each other.—Moffat v. Moffat, 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 468; Same v. Mount, 17 Abb. Prac. 4.

[m] (S. C. 1848) A wife cannot be a witness against the interest of her husband, in a suit to which her husband's trustee is the nominal party, and which the trustee defends on behalf of the husband.—Edwards v. Pitts, 3 Strob. 140.

[n] (Vt. 1863) The wife of a defendant is not a competent witness against a trustee, when the examination would lead her to testify in regard to matters in which her husband is concerned.—Brown v. Burrington, 36 Vt. 40.

[o] (Vt. 1874) If a wife be directly interested in the event of a suit, although she be not a party to the record, her husband is not a competent witness in the cause.—Wheeler v. Wheeler's Estate, 47 Vt. 637.

[p] (Va. 1874) In a controversy between an unmarried woman on the one part, and husbands and wives on the other, in relation to a transaction between them, in which all are interested, as the husbands and wives are incompetent, from their relation to each other, to testify in their own behalf in the case, the unmarried woman is not a competent witness in her own behalf.—Statham v. Ferguson's Adm'r, 25 Grat. 28.

[r] (Wis. 1866) There being no statutory provision to the contrary, a wife, except as allowed at common law, is not a competent witness in an action against her husband to which she is not a party.—Farrell v. Ledwell, 21 Wis. 182.

[s] (Wis. 1883) A husband and wife are not competent witnesses for or against one another, except (1) where both are parties to the action; (2) where one is charged with personal violence upon the other; and (3) where one has acted as the agent of the other, as to matters within the scope of such employment.—Carney v. Gleissner, 58 Wis. 674, 17 N. W. 398.

§ 4, providing that any party to any judicial proceeding shall have the right to use as a witness, or take the testimony of, any other person not testifying on account of interest who may be cognizant of any fact material; and that parties to suits may be witnesses as provided by law.—Karney v. Paisley, 13 Iowa, 89.

Invalidity of marriage, see post, § 178.

[a] (Mo. 1874) The marriage of a woman, pending a suit brought by her, does not render her incompetent as a witness.—Charles v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co., 58 Mo. 458.

[b] (Utah, 1886) A wife is not competent to testify against her husband, although it appears that they entered into the marriage relation for the sole purpose of suppressing testimony.—United States v. White, 4 Utah, 499, 11 Pac. 570.

§ 127. Husband or wife of co-party.

[a] (Idaho, 1891) In an action for conspiracy to defraud against two defendants, though, under Rev. St. § 5958, "a husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent," the wife of one of the defendants may be examined as a witness for plaintiff, under instructions by the court that her testimony is only to be considered as against the other defendant than her husband.—Shields v. Ruddy, 2 Idaho, 884, 28 Pac. 405.

[c] (Mass. 1860) At the trial of an action against two defendants for a joint assault and battery, it was in evidence that one singly assaulted plaintiff, and then, at a point over 40 feet distant from that scene, the other singly assaulted him, but that both defendants were present throughout the whole affray. Held, that the wife of one defendant was not a competent witness for the other. The common-law rule is not changed by St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, making her competent to testify when she is a party.—Blake v. Lord, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 387.

[d] (Miss. 1881) The wife of one who was unnecessarily made a codefendant in a suit in equity is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Leach v. Shelby, 58 Miss. 681.

[f] (Pa. 1895) Where, in an action against a firm for goods sold, one of the members (a married woman) defaults, her husband is a competent witness for plaintiff on the trial of issues raised by the other defendant, since a recovery against the other party sued was in her interest and not against it.—Frack v. Gerber, 167 Pa. 316, 31 Atl. 640, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 280.

[g] (Tex. 1855) A., having purchased a slave of B., was sued therefor by C., his daughter. A. alleged a fraudulent combination between B. and C., and prayed that B. should be made a party defendant, which was done by the court below. Held, that B. was not a necessary party, and his being made a party did not prevent his wife from being a competent witness.—Hall v. Murphy, 14 Tex. 637.

[i] (Wis. 1877) Where two or more defendants must rely on the same defense, so that proof of a good defense as to one establishes a defense as to the other, the wife of one cannot be a witness in behalf of the other, unless the circumstances are such as will permit her to testify directly for her husband. Thus, where the issue was whether a deed of conveyance, under which both defendants claimed as grantees therein, was ever delivered to them by the grantor, the wife of one defendant (not being herself a party) cannot testify as a witness for the other.—Stewart v. Stewart, 41 Wis. 624.

Particular actions or issues, see post, §§ 157–165.

[a] (U. S. 1839) Complainant's wife cannot be examined as a witness against defendant in a bill for injunction to restrain defendant from removing plaintiff's slave who had been sold to defendant for a term of years after which he is to be free.—Thomas v. Mackall, Fed. Cas. No. 13,903 [5 Cranch, C. C. 536].

[b] (U. S. 1858) The wife of a party to an interference is incompetent to testify in his behalf.—Nicholas v. Harris, Fed. Cas. No. 10,243 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 302].

[c] (Ala. 1851) In an action for malicious prosecution against a husband, his wife is not a competent witness for him, and her testimony, given on the preliminary examination, is therefore inadmissible.—Gardner v. Randolph, 18 Ala. 685.

[d] (Ark. 1877) It is error to permit the husband of a plaintiff, in an action for breach of promise of marriage, to testify in behalf of his wife, even as to matters occurring before the marriage.—Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684.

[e] (Cal. 1887) In an action for the recovery of personal property, the admission of the testimony of plaintiff's wife against him, without his consent, is ground for reversal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, which prohibits the examination of a wife for or against the husband without his consent save in specified exceptions.—Fitzgerald v. Livermore, 13 Pac. 167.

[f] (Ga. 1860) In a hearing by arbitrators on the subject-matter of a bill in equity, which was submitted to them, the husband of complainant was allowed to testify against the objection of the wife. Held, that the admission of his testimony was not error, especially as he testified to nothing untrue or prejudicial to her interest.—Wade v. Powell, 31 Ga. 1.

[k] (Ind. 1881) Act March 11, 1861, § 2, amending the exemption law, provides that, where the execution defendant is absent from the state, his wife may make out the schedule required by the act, and shall be entitled to claim and hold for her husband exempt property. Act March 11, 1867, declares that the wife shall not be a competent witness either for or against her husband in any action, with certain exceptions, and repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith. Held, that in replevin by the husband and wife for exempt property seized under execution against the husband, such action not being within said exception, the wife was not a competent witness. —Roberts v. Porter, 78 Ind. 130.

[m] (La. 1869) Under Code, § 2260, expressly providing that the wife shall not testify for or against the husband, or the husband for or against the wife, the husband could not be a witness for his wife in a suit against her to enforce a written notarial contract of sale executed by her.—Willis v. Kern, 21 La. Ann. 749.

[n] (La. 1871) The husband is not a competent witness on the trial of an injunction suit in which his wife is plaintiff, because his testimony must be either for or against the wife, and therefore within the prohibition of Civ. Code, § 2281.—McDonald v. Thompson, 23 La. Ann. 556.

[o] (La. 1876) In a suit by one claiming to be the owner of property, to enjoin its sale under execution as the property of a partnership with which such alleged owner is not connected, the husband of one of the members of the partnership is not rendered incompetent to testify in behalf of plaintiff by the rule of law which prohibits the husband and wife from testifying for or against each other.—Chevallier v. Dyas, 28 La. Ann. 359.

[s] (Neb. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 331, providing that the wife can in no case be a witness against her husband, except in a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, and Id. § 328, declaring that "neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case, as to any communication made by the one to the other while married," a wife cannot be examined as a witness against her husband, over his objection, in a suit by the latter against his son to obtain the rescission of a deed alleged to have been executed by the father to the son. —Lihs v. Lihs, 44 Neb. 143, 62 N. W. 457.

[t] (N. J. 1846) In a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by a married woman and her trustee, of land originally bought by the husband, and by him directed to be conveyed in trust, which mortgage was made subsequently to the trust deed to secure a debt of the husband, the husband is not a competent witness for defendants.—Robbins v. Abrahams, 5 N. J. Eq. (1 Halst. Ch.) 465.

[u] (N. Y. 1855) The wife cannot be examined as a witness against her husband when both are sued for labor and materials furnished her.—Main v. Stephens, 4 E. D. Smith, 86.

[w] (N. Y. 1864) Upon a collateral reference, e. g., after decree, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due thereon, the testimony is in the nature of affidavits, and husband and wife may testify for each other.—Laing v. Titus, 18 Abb. Prac. 388.

[x] (R. I. 1863) The testimony of a husband and wife is not admissible in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien on their estate in which they are parties.—Briggs v. Titus, 7 R. I. 441.

[y] (S. C. 1821) On the trial of an issue between the garnishee and attaching creditors of an absent debtor whether certain goods attached were the goods of the absent debtor or of the garnishee, the wife of the absent debtor is not a competent witness.—Forretier v. Guerrineau's Creditors, 1 McCord, 304.

[yy] (Tenn. 1859) Where the genuineness of a note is put in issue by a plea of non est factum, in an action by the payee, plaintiff and his wife are not competent witnesses.—Barton v. Trent, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 167.

[z] (Tenn. 1873) In an action by a wife to establish a resulting trust in land purchased by her husband, the husband is incompetent as a witness.—Hyden v. Hyden, 65 Tenn. (6 Baxt.) 406.

[zz] (Wis. 1867) An infant having brought an action to recover the value of services above his maintenance, defendant's wife is not a competent witness for him generally in the cause, however admissible might be her testimony as to any agreement made with her as his agent.—Mountain v. Fisher, 22 Wis. 93.

§ 129. Wife of party suing or sued in representative or official capacity.

—(Del. 1886) Bradley v. Kent's Ex'r, 7 Houst. 372, 32 Atl. 286;
(Pa. 1854) Malaun's Adm'r v. Ammon, 1 Grant, Cas. 123.

[b] (Ark. 1894) In an action by a father, as next friend, for his child, his wife is a competent witness, as he is merely the manager of the suit; and the fact that he is liable for costs does not disqualify her, under Mansf. Dig. § 4955, providing that the husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Rexroad, 59 Ark. 180, 26 S. W. 1037.

[c] (Ill. 1894) Where a husband sues as administrator, his wife is not a competent witness for him.—Sun Acc. Ass'n v. King, 53 Ill. App. 182.

[d] (Kan. 1896) The wife of one who is interested in an action only as the next friend of a minor plaintiff is a competent witness in the case.—Potter v. Stamfli, 2 Kan. App. 788, 44 Pac. 46.

[e] (La. 1888) In an action by the father of a minor for the child's benefit, the mother is not disqualified to testify under Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2281, which forbids a husband and wife to testify for or against each other.—Lapleine v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co., 40 La. Ann. 661, 4 South. 875, 1 L. R. A. 378.

[f] (Me. 1856) In a suit brought by an infant by prochein ami, it is no objection to the admissibility of a witness that she is the wife of the prochein ami.—Leavitt v. City of Bangor, 41 Me. 458.

[g] (Mo. 1854) The widow of a decedent, being at the time of trial the wife of the administrator, is a competent witness for him as to facts which came to her knowledge before he was appointed administrator.—Stein v. Weidman's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 17.

[h] (Vt. 1864) Where an infant prosecutes a suit by his father as his natural guardian, the latter, not being a party to the subject-matter of the litigation, is not a party to the suit in such a sense as to exclude his wife from testifying.—Bonett v. Stowell, 37 Vt. 258.

§ 130. Nature of evidence in general.

[a] (Ala. 1836) The deposition of a husband taken in a cause to which his wife is a party cannot be used in the cause for or against her.—Sadler v. Houston, 4 Port. 208.

[b] (Ga. 1879) A wife is an incompetent witness to testify, either for or against her husband, as to papers consigned by him to her care, and kept exclusively by her under lock and key.—Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410.

[c] (Ill. 1875) In a suit against a husband for the price of goods purchased by him in the presence and on the selection of his wife, the latter is not a competent witness in his behalf to prove that the goods were furnished on the credit of a third person, in payment of a debt of such third person to the husband.—Trepp v. Barker, 78 Ill. 146.

[d] (Ind. 1874) In an action of replevin against a married woman, her husband is not a competent witness to testify as to his purchase of the property sought to be recovered, and his sale of it to plaintiff, or to rebut testimony tending to show a gift of the property to the wife, such testimony being against the wife.—Stanley v. Schultz, 47 Ind. 217.

[e] (Ind. 1877) The rule that the testimony or admissions and statements of a wife are not admissible in evidence either for or against her husband does not extend to the exclusion of declarations made by her to the husband, in the presence of a third person, relative to a material matter, and in which declarations the husband either directly or indirectly acquiesces.—Gebhart v. Burkett, 57 Ind. 378, 26 Am. Rep. 61.

[f] (Iowa, 1862) Revision 1860, § 3983, disqualifying a wife from testifying in behalf of her husband, renders both the testimony of a wife and evidence of her declarations inadmissible in favor of her husband.—Karney v. Paisley, 13 Iowa, 89.

[g] (Kan. 1881) A. and wife were sued on a note and mortgage. Judgment was had against A. On a subsequent trial of the issues between plaintiff and A.'s wife, her answer having denied the execution of the note and mortgage, held, that A. could not testify in his wife's behalf that she did not execute the note and mortgage.—Jenkins v. Levis, 25 Kan. 479.

[h] (Ky.) A husband is incompetent to testify, where his evidence tends to establish the right of his wife to the property in controversy.—(1823) Wall v. Nelson, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 395; (1829) Caperton v. Callison, 24 Ky. (1 J. J. Marsh. 396; (1832) Hopkins v. Smith, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 263.

[i] (Ky. 1835) The wife cannot be a witness against her husband, still less can her declarations be received as evidence against him, even where they might conduce to prove a scienter.—Tacket v. May, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 79.

[j] (La. 1853) The declarations of the wife are not admissible in evidence against her husband.—Dubois v. Ferrand, 8 La. Ann. 373.

[k] (Mich. 1852) The declarations of a husband are not competent against the wife in a suit affecting her present estate, as his declarations are subject to the same rules of exclusion which govern his testimony as a witness.—Dawson v. Hall, 2 Mich. 390.

[l] (N. Y. 1862) On an accounting, one of the executors offered himself as a witness to prove that certain property had never been in the actual possession of the executors, but had been given by the testator in his lifetime to his daughter (the wife of the witness) who was also a residuary legatee under the will. Held, that the testimony offered was not in violation of the common-law rule that a husband cannot give testimony in favor of his wife, and must be admitted.—Sneckner v. Taylor, 1 Redf. Sur. 427.

[m] (N. C. 1800) Where plaintiff claimed a slave by virtue of a gift from his father, who had afterwards conveyed the slave by deed to defendant, the wife of the alleged donor was not a competent witness for plaintiff, as the husband could not contradict his own deed, and she was not competent to prove the fact which he could not be admitted to prove.—Anonymous, 3 N. C. 127.

[n] (N. C. 1861) The declarations of a woman made shortly after the birth of a child, that it had been born alive, are not competent to prove her husband's title to an estate by the curtesy.—Gardner v. Klutts, 53 N. C. 375, 80 Am. Dec. 881.

[o] (Pa. 1814) A feme covert, through whose heirship in fee plaintiffs (herself and her husband) derive the title on which the suit is brought, is not a competent witness to discredit the title.—Moody's Lessee v. Fulmer, 3 Grant, Cas. 17.

[p] (Pa. 1869) Where a bill had been filed against the husband and wife, and on the examination it was proposed to ask the husband where certain stocks standing in the name of the wife were obtained, and to whom they belonged, held, that such evidence was inadmissible, under the laws prohibiting husband and wife from testifying against each other.—Bast v. Anspach, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 25.

[q] (Pa. 1871) A husband or wife may testify directly against each other as to facts which are in their nature secret, and affecting the person.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 182, 3 Leg. Gaz. 185, 8 Phila. 385.

[r] (Pa. 1873) The wife of defendant in an attachment against stock standing in his name cannot be allowed to testify that the stock belongs to her.—Boyle v. Haughey, 10 Phila. 98.

[s] (Pa. 1887) A married woman is an incompetent witness, in an action brought by her for goods alleged to have been given to her by her husband, and which he afterwards sold to the person against whom the action is brought, for the reason that by proving title in herself she would be testifying against the interest of her husband, who, although not a party to the record, would be interested in the result of the action, which might make him liable on an implied warranty of title in the sale.—Pleasonton v. Nutt, 115 Pa. 266, 8 Atl. 63.

[t] (Pa. 1894) Where a contest of a will which excluded testator's half-sisters, K., S., and P., from any share in his estate, is instituted by S.'s husband, who engaged an attorney, and settled the contest for a certain amount, his declarations to the attorney during the contest that he represented P. as well as S. and K. are admissible on the trial of the claim of P. against the estate of S. for a share of money so obtained; the husband of S., as well as S., being deceased.—In re Seip's Estate, 163 Pa. 423, 30 Atl. 226, 43 Am. St. Rep. 803, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 401; Appeal of Probst, 163 Pa. 423, 30 Atl. 226, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 401.

[u] (Vt. 1895) In an action to recover the proceeds of property sold under execution against plaintiff's brother, plaintiff claimed a prior lien thereon by virtue of a chattel mortgage executed by his brother to himself to secure a note. Held that, to prove the consideration for said mortgage, the wife of plaintiff's brother was competent to testify that she saw plaintiff give her husband money, and heard the remark that the sum paid made up the amount of the note, since her husband was not a party to the suit and could not be affected by any judgment rendered therein.—Wheeler v. Campbell, 68 Vt. 98, 34 Atl. 35.

[v] (Va. 1886) A deed of trust on its face purported to be for the equal benefit of husband and wife. On a bill to restrain the sheriff from selling under execution issued against the husband, held, that depositions of the debtor and his wife, to show that the latter's interest was more than one-half, were inadmissible, under Code 1873, c. 172, §§ 21, 22, disqualifying husband and wife from testifying for or against each other.—Scott v. Rowland, 82 Va. 484, 4 S. E. 595.

[w] (Va. 1892) Part of the deferred purchase price for land sold under a decree in a chancery suit was paid with money belonging to the purchaser's wife, and the commissioner executed a receipt acknowledging payment from the wife. Held, in an action against the husband and wife by the creditors of the husband to subject such land to the lien of their judgments, that the husband was not competent to testify that the money receipted for as the wife's was in fact furnished by her father, who was secured by a deed of trust for any money which he might be compelled to pay, as surety, on the deferred purchase-money bonds executed by the husband at the chancery sale.—Bowman v. Reinhart, 89 Va. 435, 16 S. E. 279.

[x] (W. Va. 1889) A wife is incompetent to prove any transaction or communication personally between her husband and herself to create or sustain a resulting trust, or any admissions of his of its existence, not only as against his heirs, but also his creditors seeking to subject it.—Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46.

[a] In an action to set aside a conveyance by a husband to his wife, she is a competent witness to establish the consideration and the good faith of the transaction.
—(Ill. 1882) Payne v. Miller, 103 Ill. 442;

[b] (Ill. 1889) A husband is a competent witness for his wife in an action by his creditors to set aside a conveyance from him to his wife.—Fleming v. Weagley, 32 Ill. App. 183.

[c] (Ind. 1861) Judgment creditors brought suit to set aside for fraud a mortgage of their debtor, joining with him as defendant in the suit the mortgagee and his assignee. The debtor was defaulted; the others answered by a general denial. Held that, nevertheless, the wife of the debtor was not a competent witness as to communications made to her by the mortgagee, showing his knowledge of fraudulent intent in the mortgagor, for such evidence tended to authorize the recovery of judgment against her husband.—Perrin v. Johnson, 16 Ind. 72.

[d] (Ind. 1876) On the trial of an action brought by a husband and wife to recover the possession of real estate to which plaintiffs claimed title under a conveyance made to them jointly, both the husband and the wife were competent witnesses for plaintiffs to disprove the charge that said conveyance was made to plaintiffs jointly to defraud creditors of the husband.—McConnell v. Martin, 52 Ind. 434.

[e] (Iowa, 1856) In a suit to set aside fraudulent conveyances, the wife of the alleged fraudulent grantor is a competent witness.—Adams v. Foley, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 44.

[f] (Iowa, 1884) In an action against a husband and wife to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance from him to her, he is not competent to testify that he had no other property, though the testimony was against himself, as well as against her.—Stephenson v. Cook, 64 Iowa, 265, 20 N. W. 182.

[g] (Mass. 1866) A bill in equity against a debtor and his wife charged her with holding property of the debtor transferred without consideration and for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Her husband was absent from the country, and had not been duly served with process. Held, that plaintiff should not be restrained from taking the deposition of the wife, she being a party to the suit.—Crompton v. Anthony, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 33.

[h] (N. J. 1840) A wife may testify that a conveyance executed by her and her husband was fraudulent, provided that there is no objection as to interest, nor charge of criminality.—Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 87.

[i] (N. Y. 1858) In an action against a husband and wife to compel the application of real property standing in her name to his debt, on the ground that it really belonged to him, and was bought in the name of the wife to defraud creditors, the wife is not a competent witness either against her husband or herself.—Macondray v. Wardle, 26 Barb. 612, 7 Abb. Prac. 3.

[j] (S. C. 1834) In a proceeding by creditors to set aside a sale of slaves by their debtor in his life time in fraud of his creditors after the death of the debtor, it was held, that the wife of the debtor was a competent witness to prove the declarations of the husband that the sale was voluntary, as the husband himself, if living, would have been a competent witness in the case.—Bell v. Colel, 2 Hill, Eq. 108, 27 Am. Dec. 448.

[k] (Tenn. 1895) In an action to set aside a deed from husband to wife as in fraud of creditors, while the husband and wife are not competent to testify as to the execution and delivery of such a deed four years before the husband's insolvency, the wife is competent to prove as an independent fact that the deed was in her possession from the time it was executed, without regard to the person from whom she obtained it.—Phœnix Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Shoemaker, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 72, 31 S. W. 270; Memphis Nat. Bank v. Same, 31 S. W. 270.

Offenses by husband or wife against the other, see post, §§ 174–176.

[a] (Ill. 1878) In an action on a fire policy by the insured, the declarations of a third person, who also had a policy on the property made to his wife, tending to establish that he caused the building to be destroyed by fire, cannot be proved by the wife's testimony.—Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Foster, 90 Ill. 121.

[b] (N. J. 1840) A wife cannot testify, in a suit to which her husband is not a party, to any matter for which her husband may be indicted.—Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 87.

[c] (N. J. 1864) A husband cannot, in a collateral proceeding, give testimony which directly charges the wife with an offense in its nature indictable, although the wife has already been tried and acquitted of such offense.—State v. Wilson, 31 N. J. Law (2 Vroom) 77.

[d] (N. J. 1889) A wife cannot testify that certain names entered in an hotel register are in the handwriting of her husband, when such testimony would tend to convict him of a crime. —Rice v. Rice (Ch.) 18 Atl. 457.

[e] (Pa. 1870) Although the general rule is that husband or wife may not testify against each other, yet in collateral proceedings they may testify to facts tending to criminate each other.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 8 Phila. 385.

Particular prosecutions, see post, §§ 157–165.
Statutory removal of disqualification, see post, §§ 139, 140.

—(Ala. 1885) Donnelly v. State, 78 Ala. 453; (1889) Hussey v. Same, 87 Ala. 121, 6 South. 420;
(Conn. 1854) Lucas v. State, 23 Conn. 18;
(La. 1896) State v. Pain, 48 La. Ann. 311, 19 South. 138;
(Mo. 1894) State v. Willis, 119 Mo. 485, 24 S. W. 1008;
(N. Y. 1873) Wilke v. People, 53 N. Y. 525;
(Ohio, 1877) Schultz v. State, 32 Ohio St. 276; (1889) Thurman v. Same, 2 O. C. D. 466.

[b] (U. S. 1887) In the courts of the United States a wife is not a competent witness for or against her husband in a criminal case; and this is on the score of public policy.—United States v. Jones (D. C.) 32 Fed. 569.

[c] (Ala. 1886) A wife's testimony against her husband in a prosecution for vagrancy is, under section 4218, Code 1876, not admissible. —Merriwether v. State, 81 Ala. 74, 1 South. 560.

[d] (Cal. 1895) It was not error to permit a witness for the state to testify without objection merely that she was defendant's wife, that she resided at the place where and at the time when the crime charged was alleged to have been committed, where the time and place were not disputed, and defendant testified to the same facts.—People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 41 Pac. 1040.

[f] (Ind. 1871) In a prosecution under Act Feb. 23, 1859, with reference to carrying concealed weapons, a wife cannot be a witness against her husband, and hence she cannot make an affidavit against him on which to found such a prosecution.—Taulman v. State, 37 Ind. 353.

[g] (Ind. 1875) Where a husband and wife are indicted for an offense, the declarations of the husband are not admissible in evidence against the wife.—Kingen v. State, 50 Ind. 557.

[h] (N. J. 1884) Under an indictment for unlawfully taking away a child under 15 with intent to seduce her, defendant's mere allegation that she was his wife does not render her an incompetent witness for the state.— State v. Gordon, 46 N. J. Law (17 Vroom) 432.

[i] (N. Y. 1845) The wife of a prisoner may be a witness on the question of insanity.— People v. Griffen, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. 126.

[j] (N. Y. 1861) In a prosecution for perjury, the conjugal relation will not prevent a woman from testifying as to whether she has had intercourse with other men than her husband. —Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 80 Am. Dec. 255.

[k] (N. Y. 1872) A husband or wife of a prisoner is not admissible as a witness on the prisoner's behalf on the trial of the indictment.— In re Foster, 13 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 372, note.

[m] (N. Y. 1882) Where it is shown to the court, by affidavit, that a wife was introduced before the grand jury that found an indictment against her husband, without his consent, and against his will, and that her testimony was vitally material, the indictment will be set aside.—People v. Moore, 65 How. Prac. 177.

[n] (Pa. 1842) Where on a charge of conspiracy to obtain a divorce the indictment does not allege the commission of personal violence nor the intention to commit it, the wife will not be permitted to testify against her husband.—Commonwealth v. McEwen, 1 Clark, 140.

[o] (Pa. 1896) An indictment of a woman for larceny will be quashed where it appears that the only testimony offered before the committing magistrate and the grand jury was that of her husband. — Commonwealth v. Woodcroft (Quart. Sess.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 554.

[p] (Tex. 1871) Under Pasch. Dig. art. 3113 (Code Cr. Proc. art. 648), providing that the husband and wife can in no case testify against each other except in criminal prosecutions for an offense committed by one against the other, but they may in all criminal prosecutions be witnesses for each other, where a husband or wife is put on the witness stand to testify in behalf of the other, each is subject to as rigid a cross-examination as any other witness, with the exception only that they cannot be examined in regard to anything against the other about which there had been no testimony on the examination in chief.—Creamer v. State, 34 Tex. 173.

[a] (Cal. 1883) On a trial for burglary, the wife of a party charged with the same offense in a separate information is competent to testify to matters tending to implicate her husband. Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, and Pen. Code, § 1322, providing that the wife is not a competent witness for or against her husband, apply only to actions in proceedings in which "one or both are parties."—People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 30 Pac. 813.

[b] (Iowa, 1887) A woman against whose husband an indictment is pending is a competent witness for the state on the trial of an indictment of another person for the same offense; and Code 1873, §§ 3641, 3642, providing that neither a husband nor wife shall in any case be a witness against the other, does not apply. —State v. Rainsbarger, 71 Iowa, 746, 31 N. W. 865.

[d] (Pa. 1870) Where on a joint indictment there is a separate trial, the husband or wife of defendant not on trial is not necessarily an incompetent witness for the commonwealth; if willing to be examined, he or she is competent.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 182, 3 Leg. Gaz. 185, 8 Phila. 385.

[e] (Pa. 1871) When two defendants are jointly indicted for procuring an abortion, and one of them marries the female on whose body the miscarriage was alleged to be procured, and then demands a separate trial, which is granted, and the trial of the other defendant proceeds on such trial, the wife of the other defendant is a competent witness.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 182, 3 Leg. Gaz. 185, 8 Phila. 385.

[f] (Pa. 1871) Where two defendants are jointly indicted for conspiracy, or any other offense, where both defendants are necessarily involved, the wife of the defendant not on trial is not a competent witness for the commonwealth on the trial of the other.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 182, 3 Leg. Gaz. 185, 8 Phila. 385.

[g] (S. C. 1855) A wife cannot testify in matters tending to criminate her husband, who is jointly indicted with another person, but is not brought to trial.—State v. Bradley, 9 Rich. Law, 168.

[h] (S. C. 1866) Where three are jointly indicted for a capital offense, and two only are tried, the third not having been arrested, the wife of the one not on trial is a competent witness for the state.—State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. Law, 87.

§ 135. Impeachment, contradiction, and corroboration.

[a] (U. S. 1839) If husband and wife are called as witnesses in the same suit, and contradict each other, it will not destroy the competency of either.—Stein v. Bowman, 38 U. S. (13 Pet.) 209, 10 L. Ed. 129.

[b] (Ark. 1852) The husband having testified for the state, the wife is a competent witness for the defense to show that he testified under a bias against defendant, but not to contradict him.—Cornelius v. State, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 782.

[c] (Ga. 1858) The testimony of a wife, the only tendency of which is to discredit her husband, is not admissible.—Keaton v. McGwier, 24 Ga. 217.

[d] (N. J. 1871) A husband or a wife, in a suit in which neither is a party, can be asked a question for the purpose of disgracing or discrediting the testimony of the other, when the matter inquired into is not an indictable offense.—Ware v. State, 35 N. J. Law (6 Vroom) 553.

[e] (N. Y. 1816) The testimony of a wife is not admissible to impeach the testimony of her husband either directly or collaterally.—In re Francis, 1 City H. Rec. 121.

[f] (N. Y. 1857) The testimony of the wife of an accomplice may be taken into consideration in determining the credibility of the testimony of the husband.—Haskins v. People, 16 N. Y. 344.

[g] (N. C. 1878) The wife is a competent witness to contradict her husband's testimony for the state against a third person indicted for assaulting him; Battle's Revisal, c. 43, § 16, does not apply to such case.—State v. Parrott, 79 N. C. 615.

[h] (N. C. 1889) The defense having on cross-examination sought to impeach the testimony of the complaining witness, a daughter of defendant, as to declarations made to her mother, defendant's wife, it is not a violation of the rule that a wife's evidence is not competent against her husband for the state to introduce, in corroboration of the complaining witness, a third person, who overheard the conversation; it appearing that the corroborating witness mentioned only one declaration by the wife, which was part of the res gestæ of the crime.—State v. Parish, 104 N. C. 679, 10 S. E. 457.

[i] (Ohio, 1858) On a trial for rape, or for an assault with intent to commit a rape, the acts and declarations of the husband of the woman on whom the offense is alleged to have been committed are not admissible to discredit the wife examined as a witness.—McCombs v. State, 8 Ohio St. 643.

[j] (Tex. 1883) A woman is not incompetent as a witness because her husband, not a party to the cause, has also testified as a witness, although her testimony contradicts his.—Clubb v. State, 14 Tex. App. 192.

Incriminating evidence, see post, § 1032.

Compelling disclosure of evidence of wife by bill of discovery, see "Discovery," vol. 16, c. 1970, § 11 [a].

[a] On the prosecution of a husband for an assault committed on his wife, the wife is not only competent, but she may be compelled, to testify against the husband.
—(Ala. 1891) Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 53, 10 South. 427;

[b, c] (Ind. 1868) A husband cannot be required to testify against his wife.—Kyle v. Frost, 29 Ind. 382.

[d] (Ind. 1877) Where the rights of a party to an action wherein, either with or against him, a husband and wife are also parties, may depend on the testimony of either, such party may compel either of them to testify as a witness, though such testimony must necessarily affect the rights of the other.—Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 343.

[e] (Kan. 1871) Under the statute of 1871, the wife of an accused is a competent witness for the state; the court cannot compel her to testify, but will permit her to do so voluntarily.—State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232, 12 Am. Rep. 469.

[f] (La. 1880) Under Code, art. 2281, the wife may be made a witness against herself, to show that property bought in her name was bought with her husband's funds, and that her title is simulated and fraudulent.—Hennen v. Hacker, 32 La. Ann. 668.

[g] (Me. 1874) Rev. St. c. 187, § 5, provides that in all criminal trials "the husband or wife of the accused shall be a competent witness." Held, that in such case a husband or wife may be compelled to testify either for or against the other.—State v. Black, 63 Me. 210.

[h] (Miss. 1882) On an indictment of a husband for an assault and battery on his wife, she may be compelled to testify against him.—Turner v. State, 60 Miss. 351, 45 Am. Rep. 412.

[i] (Neb. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 331, which provides that the husband or wife cannot be a witness against each other, except in criminal proceedings, for a crime committed by one against the other, neither can, in an action to set aside a deed from husband to wife, be required to testify as to facts which, it is claimed, would show the conveyance to be fraudulent.—Niland v. Kalish, 37 Neb. 47, 55 N. W. 295.

[j] (N. Y. 1841) A married woman may be compelled to testify in any case where her husband would not be disqualified.—Copous v. Kauffman, 8 Paige, 583.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) In an action for assault and battery on the wife, brought in the name of the husband and wife, defendants cannot call on her to testify under the statute of 1847, or section 344 of the Code of Procedure, which authorize one party to call on the other to testify.—Pillow v. Bushnell, 5 Barb. 156.

[o] (Pa. 1874) Act 1869, permitting a wife to be called by her husband as a witness, provides for the competency of the witness, not for the effect of her testimony; and she may be compelled on cross-examination to testify against him.—Ballentine v. White, 77 Pa. (27 P. F. Smith) 20.

[p] (Pa. 1887) A husband and wife joined in an action for damages suffered by the wife; the husband being merely a nominal party. Held, that he was not such a party as to give the opposite side a right to compel him to testify to matters against the interest of his wife.—Burrell Tp. v. Uncapher, 117 Pa. 353, 11 Atl. 619, 2 Am. St. Rep. 664.

(b) STATUTORY REMOVAL OF DISQUALIFICATION.

EFFECT OF STATUTORY REMOVAL OF INCOMPETENCY ON GROUND OF INTEREST, § 138.
OFFENSES AND CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS, § 139.
—— CROSS-EXAMINATION, § 140.
TESTIMONY BY EITHER HUSBAND OR WIFE, BUT NOT BOTH, § 141.

[a] (Ala. 1877) Plaintiff's husband is a competent witness where his testimony does not relate at all to communications between them.—Chapman v. Holding, 60 Ala. 522.

[b] (Ill. 1883) The exception to Act Feb. 14, 1867, § 5, permitting a wife to testify for or against her husband, "where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant," does not refer to cases where the wife has been married, but subsequently divorced, or her husband has died, but merely to cases where she has never been married—when the action does not concern a right resulting from marriage.—Smith v. Long, 106 Ill. 485.

[c] (Ill. 1883) A wife cannot testify for her husband, except in the cases enumerated in the statute.—Keep v. Griggs, 12 Ill. App. 511.

[d] (Ill. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, § 5, which permits a husband to testify for his wife in an action in which the wife would, if unmarried, be a party, a husband may testify for his wife, in an action brought by her to recover three times the amount lost by him at gambling, since Rev. St. 1893, c. 38, § 132, allows such an action to be brought by any person.—Johnson v. McGregor, 157 Ill. 350, 41 N. E. 558, affirming (1894) 55 Ill. App. 530.

[e] (Ind. 1879) In an action on an account for work and labor, defendant's wife is a competent witness, under Act March 15, 1879, prescribing when husband and wife are competent witnesses for and against each other, to prove the contract as set out in the answer, where her testimony does not relate to any communications made between her and defendant during the marriage.—Brown v. Norton, 67 Ind. 424.

[f] (Ind. 1882) The act making husband and wife competent witnesses for or against each other applies to occurrences before as well as after its passage.—Wilson v. Wilson, 86 Ind. 472.

[g] (Me. 1860) Laws 1859, c. 102, relating to the competency of husband and wife as witnesses does not render them competent when their testimony would be incompetent on other grounds than that of the relationship.—Drew v. Roberts, 48 Me. 35.

[h] (Me. 1861) By St. 1859, c. 102, the wife is made a competent witness for her husband, in a suit against him by an administrator, she not being a party to the record.—Thompson v. Wadleigh, 48 Me. 66.

[i] (Mass. 1860) In an action by a married woman against an administrator for services rendered to his intestate, plaintiff's husband is a competent witness for her under Laws 1857, c. 305, § 1, providing that in all cases in which the wife is a party or one of the parties she and her husband shall be competent witnesses for or against such other except as to private conversations with each other.—Fowle v. Tidd, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 94.

[j] (Minn. 1860) The exception in Comp. St. p. 681, § 53, allowing the testimony of the wife against her husband, is inserted only to save those cases where at common law a wife could testify against her husband, and not to introduce any new rule, or extend any old one.—State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335 (Gil. 251).

[n] (Mo. 1883) In an action against a husband the wife was not a competent witness, though her testimony was to the effect that the right was in her and not in her husband; as the statutes permitting her to testify when a party have not created an exception to the common-law rule such as would permit her to testify for her husband.—Brinsmade v. Groll, 14 Mo. App. 444.

[o] (Mo. 1888) In an action for dower and specific performance of an alleged oral gift of land to plaintiff's husband from his father, where the heirs of the deceased father and son are defendants, the husband of plaintiff's daughter, an heir to an undivided interest in the land, either under her father or grandfather, is a competent witness for plaintiff, being an interested party to the suit, under Rev. St. § 4012, providing that a party may compel an adverse party to testify in his behalf.—O'Bryan v. Allen, 95 Mo. 68, 8 S. W. 225.

[p] (Mo. 1894) A wife is not a competent witness to prove what was said in a conversation between her husband and another, nor to prove any fact done in connection with such conversation, and which might be influenced thereby.—McFadin v. Catron, 120 Mo. 252, 25 S. W. 506.

[q] (Neb. 1894) Comp. St. 1893, c. 53, empowering a married woman to "sue and be sued in the same manner as if she were unmarried," does not repeal Code Civ. Proc. § 331, providing that in civil actions neither husband nor wife can testify against the other.—Greene v. Greene. 42 Neb. 634, 60 N. W. 937, 47 Am. St. Rep. 724.

[r] (N. J. 1871) Act March 18, 1859 (Nix. Dig. p. 1044, § 34), providing that no wife should be admitted as a witness for or against her husband, and Act April 17, 1868 (Nix. Dig. p. 1045, § 36), providing for the admission of a married woman and her husband in suits brought by or against her, do not apply to suits by or against the husband, and a wife is not a competent witness in such suit.—Van Houten's Ex'r v. Post, 21 N. J. Eq. (6 C. E. Green) 355.

[s] (N. Y. 1872) Under Laws 1867, c. 887, providing that a husband and wife may be witnesses in actions between them, with certain exceptions, applies to all trials thereafter had in actions pending when the law took effect.—Southwick v. Southwick, 49 N. Y. 510.

[t] (Ohio, 1874) Under the amendatory act of April 18, 1870, a husband and wife are competent witnesses for and against each other except as to communications made by one to the other, and acts done by one in the presence of the other during coverture, and not in the known presence of a third person.—Westerman v. Westerman, 25 Ohio St. 500.

[u] (Ohio, 1881) Under Act April 18, 1870 (67 Ohio Laws, p. 113), husband and wife are not competent witnesses for and against each other except as to the matters therein specified. —Howard v. Brower, 37 Ohio St. 402.

[v] (Pa. 1867) The statute allowing a party to call his adversary as a witness does not permit him to examine the wife of the adversary. —O'Rourke v. McGrath, 1 Brewst. 802.

[w] (Pa. 1887) Act April 15, 1869, declaring that it shall not change the law so as to allow husband and wife to testify against each other, and Act May 23, 1887, providing that husband or wife shall not be competent or permitted to testify against each other, only render them competent witnesses in each other's favor, and not as against each other.—Sahms v. Brown, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 488.

[a] (U. S. 1873) Act July 2, 1864, which says that there shall be no exclusion of any witness in civil actions, because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, does not make a wife competent to testify in favor of her husband.—Lucas v. Brooks, 85 U. S. (18 Wall.) 436, 21 L. Ed. 779.

[b] (U. S. 1889) The husband of a defendant to a bill to establish complainant's title as heir of a decedent to certain land, which the wife claims under an alleged trust deed, who joins his wife in a cross-bill asking that the alleged trust be enforced for her benefit, and assents to any decree which will place the property under her sole control, and preserve it for her benefit, is a competent witness for her, under Act Ill. Feb. 19, 1867 (Pub. Laws 1867, p. 183), which provides (sections 1 and 5) that no one shall be disqualified as a witness in civil actions by reason of interest, and that a husband may testify for his wife in cases where she would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant. —Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047.

[c] (U. S. 1874) In Wisconsin, the husband is not a competent witness for his wife in civil suits. The exclusion is not based solely on interest, but rests upon principles of public policy, and, as the statute only removes the ground of interest, the ground of public policy still renders him incompetent.—In re Jones, Fed. Cas. No. 7,444 [6 Biss. 68].

[e] (Ala. 1881) Since the statute removing, with certain exceptions, all disqualifications based on the ground of interest, in civil cases, a husband and wife are competent witnesses to prove for each other any fact which did not come to their knowledge through their conjugal relation, or any transaction not confidential.— Gordon v. Tweedy, 71 Ala. 202.

[f] (Cal. 1863) Prac. Act, § 422, provided that parties might testify in their own behalf; but this did not permit a husband and wife who were parties to a suit, to testify for or against each other before the amendment to section 395 in 1863.—Dawley v. Ayers, 23 Cal. 108.

[g] (Conn. 1850) Under the late statute of Connecticut, regarding the competency of witnesses, the wife of a party is a competent witness in his behalf.—Merriam v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co., 20 Conn. 354, 52 Am. Dec. 344.

[h] (Fla. 1891) Act Feb. 4, 1874, removing the disqualification because of interest, does not remove the common-law disability of husband and wife to testify in an action in which the other is interested.—Haworth v. Norris, 28 Fla. 763, 10 South. 18.

[i] (Ill. 1871) The rule that a statute removing incompetency of witnesses by reason of interest does not remove it as to husband and wife applies to Act 1867, § 5, defining the cases wherein a husband or wife may testify against each other. Held that, in a suit for malicious prosecution, plaintiff's wife is an incompetent witness to prove the want of probable cause, by showing that the alleged slanderous words, upon which the prosecution had been based imputing to defendant adulterous intercourse with the witness before her marriage to plaintiff, were untrue.—Mitchinson v. Cross, 58 Ill. 366.

[j] (Ind. 1871) The statute admitting parties and persons interested in the result of the action to testify has not changed the rule that husband and wife are incompetent witnesses for or against each other. Where the husband is made a party to answer to an assignment by him of a cause of action to plaintiff, and the assignment is not questioned, the wife may testify as to other matters; but where the husband has a pecuniary interest in the result of the action, she cannot be a witness.—Stanley v. Stanton, 36 Ind. 445.

[k] (Me. 1858) Under Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, that "no person shall be excused or excluded from being a witness in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity by reason of his interest in the event thereof as party or otherwise," the husband is not rendered a competent witness in a suit in which the wife is a party.—McKeen v. Frost, 46 Me. 239.

[l] (Mass. 1857) St. 1856, c. 188, by which parties are made competent witnesses, does not render the wife of a party a competent witness in his behalf, since the act in terms does not include the husband or wife of a party.— Barber v. Goddard, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 71; Ray v. Smith, Id. 141.

[ll] (Mass. 1857) St. 1852, c. 312, § 60, abolishing the disqualification of witnesses on the ground of interest in the suit, does not change the common-law rule as to the competency of the wife of one of the parties as a witness.—Barber v. Goddard, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 71; Ray v. Smith, Id. 141.

ing from interest, the wife of a person interested in the result of a suit, but not a party to the record, is a competent witness in his behalf.—Peaslee v. McLoon, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 488.

[mm] (Mass. 1866) The incompetency of the wife to be a witness against her husband is not affected by the statute provisions removing disqualification by reason of interest, and enabling parties to testify, and these do not affect the exclusion made on grounds of public policy.—Kelly v. Drew, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 107, 90 Am. Dec. 138.

[n] (Miss. 1858) Under Rev. Code, p. 510, art. 190, declaring parties to the record and in interest to be competent as witnesses, the wife is competent as a witness for the husband.—Lockhart v. Luker, 36 Miss. 68.

[o] (Mo.) Under Gen. St. c. 144 (Wag. St. p. 1372) § 1, which enacts that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event of the same," husband and wife are competent witnesses against each other.—(1872) Moore v. Moore, 51 Mo. 118; (1873) Berlin v. Berlin, 52 Mo. 151; (1874) Darrier v. Darrier, 58 Mo. 222.

[oo] (Mo. 1873) Under 2 Wag. St. p. 1372, § 1, which provides that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise," the wife is a competent witness when she is joined with her husband in a suit, except as to communications between herself and her husband.—Buck v. Ashbrook, 51 Mo. 539.

[pp] (N. H. 1866) In a case where the interests of the husband are directly involved, and would be concluded by any verdict therein, though he is not a party, the wife is not a competent witness, although the disqualification arising from interest has been removed by statute.—Young v. Gilman, 46 N. H. 484.

[q] (N. J. 1862) The rule excluding husband and wife from being witnesses for or against each other does not rest solely or mainly on their identity of interest, but on grounds of public policy, hence their competency as witnesses is not affected by the act of 1859 (Nix. Dig. p. 558), since that act was designed solely to remove the disqualification resulting from interest in the event of the suit.—Bird v. Davis, 14 N. J. Eq. (1 McCart.) 467.

[qq] (N. Y. 1851) The provisions of the Code, making persons competent as witnesses with the exception of those who are parties to a suit or for whose immediate benefit it is brought or defended, do not abrogate the rule of the common law which prohibits husband and wife from being witnesses for or against each other; therefore the husband cannot be a witness in a suit in which his wife is a party or in the event of which she has a certain and direct interest.—Hasbrouck v. Vandervoorst, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 81, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 596, affirmed (1853) 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 153.

[r] (N. Y. 1860) Under the Code, husband and wife are competent witnesses in their own behalf, when coplaintiffs or codefendants; and in like cases they are also competent witnesses for each other.—Marsh v. Potter, 30 Barb. 506.

[rr] (N. Y. 1860) In actions between a husband or wife and a third person, the one is not a competent witness for or against the other.—Marsh v. Potter, 30 Barb. 506.

[s] (N. Y. 1860) Code, § 399, is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the wife to be a witness in her own behalf, and the husband in his own behalf, whether they are coplaintiffs or codefendants, or whether the action is brought by one against the other. The real parties to actions, when husband and wife, are competent witnesses, either for the adverse parties or for themselves.—Shoemaker v. McKee, 19 How. Prac. 86.

[ss] (N. Y. 1861) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 399, permitting parties to be examined as witnesses in their own behalf, excepting certain instances, not including husband and wife, they may be examined as other witnesses except as to any communications made by one to the other.—Barton v. Gledhill, 12 Abb. Prac. 246.

[t] (N. Y. 1862) The Code does not allow a husband to use his wife as a witness in a case in which she is not a party.—White v. Stafford, 38 Barb. 419.

[tt] (N. C. 1869) Acts 1866, c. 43, § 1, provides that a person shall not be excluded from testifying by reason of interest, and section 2 makes parties competent and compellable to give evidence. Held, that the statute changes the common law only in the particulars specified, and did not make a wife a competent witness for her husband.—Rice v. Keith, 63 N. C. 319.

[u] (Pa. 1870) Under P. L. 1859, p. 30, which allows a party excluded on account of interest or policy to testify, a wife may testify for, but not against, her husband.—Yeager v. Weaver, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 425.

[uu] (Pa. 1872) The exception in the witness act of 1869 does not include a husband and wife testifying for each other.—Appeal of Dellinger, 71 Pa. (21 P. F. Smith) 425.

[v] (Pa. 1887) The act of March 24, 1877, and the act of 1885, permitting defendants in certain cases to testify, did not render their wives competent.—Commonwealth v. Brink, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 23.

[vv] (Tenn. 1871) The act of 1870, that "no person shall be incompetent to testify because he or she is a party to the issue," is a restriction and not an enlargement of the act of 1869, implying, by limitation to matters "before marriage," that a wife is not competent to testify for or against her husband when they "sue or are sued jointly." The act of 1869 is an enlargement of the act of 1868, tantamount to that of 1870.—Goodwin v. Nicklin, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 256.

[w] (Tenn. 1878) Acts 1868, c. 75, and Acts 1870, c. 78 (Rev. Code, § 3818a et seq.), provide, with limited exception, that no person shall be incompetent to testify because he or she is a party to or interested in the cause. Rev. Code, § 3813f, provides that, where the husband and wife sue or are sued jointly, the wife shall not be held incompetent as to the matter in controversy "that transpired while she was a feme sole or before marriage, although the husband may have acquired an interest in the subject-matter in the controversy by the marriage." Held, that a husband or wife who is a party to and directly interested in a suit may be a witness, but the husband or wife, although nominally before the court, may be incompetent to testify for or against such party, on the ground of public policy; but he or she is competent to prove facts which came to his or her knowledge from other sources, and not by means of the marital relation, though they may relate to transactions of the other.—Patton v. Wilson, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 101.

[ww] (Tex. 1878) Act May 10, 1871 (Pasch. Dig. art. 6826), removing a party's disabilities from interest, does not render husband and wife competent; for the exclusion of their testimony rested on grounds of public policy, not on interest only.—Gee v. Scott, 48 Tex. 510, 26 Am. Rep. 331.

[x] (Tex.) Prior to the adoption of the Revised Statutes, the enactment making parties competent witnesses did not render the husband and wife competent as witnesses for or against each other.—(1881) Kaufman v. Alexander, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 532; (1882) Conner v. Holland, Id. 405.

[xx] (Vt. 1832) The provision in the act of February 23, 1797, making each party to an action on book account a competent witness therein, does not extend to the wife of either.—Carr v. Cornell, 4 Vt. 116.

[zz] (W. Va. 1877) Code 1868, c. 130, §§ 22, 23, providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness by his being a party or interested in the result, and that husband and wife shall not be examined for or against each other, except in an action or suit between husband and wife, make no material change in the competency of husband or wife, except to allow them to be witnesses for or against each other in suits between themselves.—Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59; Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 122.

[a] (Dak. 1882) The United States statute permitting defendant in a criminal prosecution to testify in his own behalf does not render his wife a competent witness.—United States v. Crow Dog, 3 Dak. 106, 14 N. W. 437.

[b] (Dak. 1882) The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 446, permitting a wife to testify in her husband's behalf with his consent, made applicable by Code Cr. Proc. to criminal prosecutions, does not render a wife competent in a criminal prosecution by the United States for a crime committed against its laws within the territory of Dakota.—United States v. Crow Dog, 3 Dak. 106, 14 N. W. 437.

[c] (Fla. 1894) Under Acts 1891, c. 4029, § 1, providing that in the trial of civil actions neither husband nor wife shall be excluded as witnesses where either is an interested party to the suit; and Rev. St. § 2863, providing that "the provisions of law relative to the competency of witnesses in civil cases shall obtain also in criminal cases,"—the wife may testify against the husband in a prosecution against him for murder.—Everett v. State, 33 Fla. 661, 15 South. 543.

[e] (Ind. 1879) On a prosecution for arson in burning stacks of wheat and hay, defendant's wife is a competent witness, under Act March 15, 1879, to testify to matters other than communications made between her and defendant during the marriage.—Hutchason v. State, 67 Ind. 449.

[f] (Kan. 1892) A husband, on a criminal prosecution, cannot object to his wife's testifying against him, where she does not object, since while, under Code Cr. Proc. § 215, the court cannot compel the wife to testify against her husband, it may permit her to do so voluntarily.—State v. Geer, 48 Kan. 752, 30 Pac. 236.

[g] (Md. 1881) Acts 1864, c. 109, and 1876, c. 357, have not made a wife competent to testify for her husband on his indictment for murder.—Turpin v. State, 55 Md. 462.

[i] (Miss. 1879) Under Code 1871, § 760, a wife is not a competent witness against her husband who is on trial for felony, against his consent.—Byrd v. State, 57 Miss. 243, 34 Am. Rep. 440.

[j] (N. H. 1869) Gen. St. c. 209, § 22, permitting husband or wife to testify for each other "in any case" where it does not lead to a violation of marital confidence, means in any civil case; none but civil cases having been mentioned in the preceding sections.—State v. Moulton, 48 N. H. 485.

[k] (N. H. 1871) Under Laws 1869, c. 23, allowing respondents in criminal cases to testify in their own behalf, the wife cannot be a witness on the trial of an indictment against her husband.—State v. Straw, 50 N. H. 460.

[l] (N. Y. 1879) Since proceedings issued under Laws 1861, c. 127, to secure the conviction of a husband as a disorderly person on complaint of his wife, are criminal in their nature, and Code, § 828, permitting a husband or wife to be witnesses against each other in certain cases applies only to civil actions, she is an incompetent witness against him in such a proceeding.—People v. Crandon, 17 Hun, 490.

[m] (Ohio, 1870) Neither Cr. Code, § 139, removing the incompetency of a witness "by reason of his interest in the event, etc.," nor Civ. Code, § 310 et seq., relating to testimony in civil cases, renders a husband or wife a competent witness for or against the other in criminal prosecutions.—Steen v. State, 20 Ohio St. 333.

[n] (Ohio, 1877) A wife's incompetency to testify for her husband in a criminal prosecution is not removed by either of the Codes of Procedure.—Schultz v. State, 32 Ohio St. 276.

[o] (Ohio, 1890) Under Rev. St. p. 7284, providing that a husband and wife shall be competent witnesses to testify on behalf of each other in criminal prosecutions, the wife may testify in a prosecution against her husband, though no third person was present at the time to which such testimony refers.—State v. Payton, 10 Ohio Dec. 826, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 337.

[r] (R. I. 1893) Under Pub. St. c. 214, § 40, providing that the husband or wife of any respondent in a criminal prosecution, offering himself or herself as a witness, shall not be excluded from testifying because he or she is the husband or wife of such respondent, a wife offering herself as a witness must testify as though the relationship did not exist; and such right is not affected by section 36, providing that the husband and wife are competent witnesses in civil cases, provided that neither shall be permitted to give any testimony tending to criminate the other.—State v. Kenyon, 18 R. I. 217, 26 Atl. 199.

[t] (Tex. 1881) Since, under Code, art. 735, if either husband or wife is competent as a witness against the person on trial, the other is also, on the trial of D. for theft of a barrel of sugar, testimony of the wife of W. (who was not being prosecuted) that D. and W. together took the barrel from a car, is admissible.—Daffin v. State, 11 Tex. App. 76.

[a] (Mich. 1890) The fact that a witness for defendant is his wife does not shield her from such cross-examination as could properly be made of any other witness.—People v. Gosch, 82 Mich. 22, 46 N. W. 101.

[b] (Ohio, 1894) Rev. St. § 7284, makes husband and wife competent witnesses for each other in criminal cases, but provides that they shall not testify concerning any communication by one to the other, or act done by either, not made or done in the known presence of a third person, competent as a witness. Held, in a murder trial, that where the wife, who has been called as a witness for the husband, testifies, without objection, that, shortly before the homicide, and not in the presence of others, she and her husband had a fuss, she may be asked, on cross-examination, as to what they were fussing about, and what the husband said.—Haberty v. State, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 262.

[c] (Tex. 1869) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 648, making the husband and wife competent witnesses for each other in criminal prosecutions, but not against each other, where a wife is examined in her husband's behalf in a criminal prosecution, she cannot be cross-examined, as such cross-examination might defeat the object of the rule.—Griffin v. State, 32 Tex. 164.

[d] (Tex. 1876) Where the wife testifies in her husband's behalf, in a criminal case, she may be cross-examined touching her testimony on a former examination or trial of the same case.—Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154.

[e] (Tex. 1889) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 735, providing that a husband and wife may testify for each other in criminal cases, but that they shall in no case testify against each other, unless for an offense by one against the other, where a wife has testified in a murder trial as to threats of deceased against her husband, the defendant, and as to the latter's whereabouts on the day of the murder, she cannot be cross-examined by the state as to a gun and pistol of defendant, as to which she was not testified in chief.—Johnson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 17, 11 S. W. 667.

[a] (Ky. 1883) The statute provides that in actions wherein the wife is the meritorious cause, either she or her husband, but not both, can testify. Held, that if she testifies in such an action, this precludes him.—Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky. 10.

[b] (Ky. 1888) Under Civ. Code, providing that in actions which might have been brought by or against the wife had she been unmarried, either the husband or wife may testify, but not both, the husband may testify in a suit to set aside a deed to his wife as in fraud of his creditors.—Howard v. Tenney, 87 Ky. 52, 7 S. W. 547.

[c] (Ky. 1891) The provision of Civ. Code, § 606, that, in actions which might have been brought by or against the wife if she had been sole, either the husband or wife may testify, but not both of them, will not operate in a suit to set aside a conveyance to the wife as fraudulent, where the deposition of the wife has been taken on behalf of plaintiff, to render incompetent the evidence of the husband on behalf of defendants.—Truitt v. Curd, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 118, 16 S. W. 364.

[d] (Ky. 1892) In an action by a wife to set aside a sale of land under an execution issued against her husband, there is no error in admitting the wife's testimony as to her purchase, ownership, and possession of the land, her husband not testifying.—Raison's Adm'x v. Williams, 13 Ky. Law Rep. 656, 18 S. W. 8.

[e] (Ky. 1892) In an action by the husband and wife as joint owners of land for damages occasioned by the excavations of an adjacent owner, only one of them is entitled to testify, Civ. Code, § 606, providing that in such actions "either, but not both, of them may testify."—City of Covington v. Geyler, 93 Ky. 275, 19 S. W. 741.

[f] (Ky. 1895) In an action against husband and wife, where both cannot testify, the husband should be allowed to withdraw his wife's deposition and to testify.—Westview Sav. Bank & Building Co. v. Zooks, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 334, 30 S. W. 1016.

SEPARATE INTERESTS OF HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 147.
—— TESTIMONY OF HUSBAND IN GENERAL, § 148.
—— SUFFICIENCY OF INTEREST OF HUSBAND, § 149.
—— TESTIMONY OF WIFE IN GENERAL, § 150.
—— INTEREST OF HUSBAND, § 151.
—— ACTIONS FOR TORTS, § 152.

Competency of husband or wife of party or other person interested, see post, §§ 415–424.

Effect of statutes removing incompetency on ground of interest, see ante, § 138.

§ 142. Interest as affecting competency in general.

[a] (Ga. 1887) A witness is not incompetent because he is the husband of a legatee who is one of the plaintiffs, and because he takes a specific legacy under the will; he being no party to the action, and his legacy not being in question.—Watts v. Baker, 78 Ga. 622, 3 S. E. 773.

[b] (Me. 1859) The objections to the admissibility of the husband and wife, as witnesses for each other at common law, rest not solely on the grounds of interest, but on reasons of public policy.—Dwelly v. Dwelly, 46 Me. 377.

[c] (N. Y. 1845) In a suit to which the trustee of a married woman is a party, her husband, although he has no interest in the subject-matter of the trust, cannot be a witness for the trustee.—Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. 15.

[d] (N. Y. 1853) The rule that husband and wife shall not be witnesses for or against each other rests on grounds of public policy, and the relation that exists between them, entirely independent of any pecuniary interest that the party offered as a witness may have in the event of the suit.—Hasbrouck v. Vandervoort, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 153.

[e] (N. Y. 1853) A husband cannot be a witness for the plaintiff in a suit brought by his wife's trustee under a marriage settlement against a third party, with reference to the trust property; even though the husband's interest under the settlement be only contingent and remote, and he has released that.—Hasbrouck v. Vandervoort, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 153.

[f] (S. C.) In cases where the interests of husband and wife are either legal or equitable, they are incompetent witnesses for or against each other.—(1848) Footman v. Pendergrass, 2 Strob. Eq. 317; (1849) Mayrant v. Guignard, 3 Strob. Eq. 112.

[g] (Vt. 1884) A husband may testify in an action brought by him as administrator, although his wife is the only heir.—Willey v. Hunter, 57 Vt. 479.

§ 143. Interest or joinder as ground for admission of testimony in general.

[a] (Fla. 1891) Since Act March 7, 1879, which renders married women competent to testify in actions in which their husbands are interested, does not in any manner affect the competency of the husband as a witness, the latter cannot testify in favor of his wife in an action by both to set aside a deed alleged to have been obtained from them by the fraud of the grantee, so far as the wife's right to a surrender of the deed because of her dower interest is affected; but, so far as the husband's right to a surrender of the deed is concerned, both his wife and himself are competent witnesses.—Haworth v. Norris, 28 Fla. 763, 10 South. 18.

[c] (Ind. 1870) In an action against husband and wife, for slanderous words spoken by the wife, the husband and wife are competent witnesses in their own behalf.—Mousler v. Harding, 33 Ind. 176, 5 Am. Rep. 195.

[d] (Ind. 1883) In an action by a husband and wife to enjoin the sale of land claimed by them by the entireties, on an execution against the husband, each of the plaintiffs is a competent witness.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

[e] (Mo. 1872) Under Wag. St. p. 1373, § 5, a substantial party to a cause should not be excluded from testifying in his own favor, because the wife or husband is also a party and has rights to be protected.—Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441.

[f] (Mo. 1889) In an action for an injury to real property of which plaintiffs (husband and wife) are seised in entirety, both have such an interest therein as to be competent witnesses.—Edmondson v. City of Moberly, 98 Mo. 523, 11 S. W. 990.

[g] (N. Y. 1862) By the amendment of 1860 to Code Civ. Proc. § 399, a husband and wife are competent witnesses for or against each other in all cases where they are parties to the action.—Matteson v. New York Cent. R. Co., 62 Barb. 364.

[h] (Tenn. 1879) Where husband and wife are parties to a suit, either may testify, as if the marital relation did not exist between them, except as to facts which have come to their knowledge by reason of the mutual relation.—Orr v. Cox, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 617.

[i] (Tex. 1879) The rule that a husband and wife cannot testify for or against each other does not preclude each from testifying in their own behalf in an action against them in which both have a real interest.—Cairrell v. Higgs, 1 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 56.

[j] (Tex. 1881) Where husband and wife are jointly made parties in regard to subject-matters in which they have a joint interest, they are competent witnesses.—Cameron v. Fay, 55 Tex. 58.

[k] (Wis. 1885) In an action brought by a father, as administrator, to recover, for the benefit of himself and his wife, damages for the death of their child caused by negligence, both are competent witnesses.—Strong v. City of Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 22 N. W. 425.

[b] (Iowa, 1862) Under the statutes, a wife cannot testify for her husband, unless he has waived the statute prohibition; the fact that she is a party with her husband does not render her a competent witness, where she would not be competent if he were sued alone.—Russ v. The War Eagle, 14 Iowa, 363.

[c] (Mo. 1874) Under Wag. St. pp. 1372, 1373, § 5, relative to the competency of witnesses, a wife is a competent witness when she is a substantial party to the action.—Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93.

[d] (Mo. 1876) In a proceeding by husband and wife to enjoin a sale under a deed of trust given on land of the wife, and to set aside the deed as being procured by fraud, the testimony of the wife is admissible as being the chief party in interest.—Quade v. Fisher, 63 Mo. 325.

[e] (Ohio, 1859) Where a wife is properly joined with her husband as a party in an action, she is as competent a witness as any other party, notwithstanding her marital relation.—Keith v. New York Cent. R. Co., 2 Ohio Dec. 125, 1 West. Law Month. 451.

[f] (Vt. 1845) If the husband and wife are both parties to an action on book account, the wife is a competent witness on the trial before the auditor.—Andrus v. Foster, 17 Vt. 556.

[a] (Del. 1891) A husband is a competent witness in an action against his wife for labor alleged to have been performed for her at his instance, under the statute making it lawful for husband and wife to testify in all civil actions in which either or both are or may be parties.—Nichols v. Vinson, 9 Houst. 274, 32 Atl. 225.

[b] (Ind. 1877) Although a husband's testimony may incidentally affect interests of his wife, yet, if he is the party primarily and principally liable, he is competent as a witness.—Wood v. Bibbins, 58 Ind. 392.

[c] (Ind. 1877) Where husband and wife are sued jointly on a note and mortgage on the wife's separate lands, and each files a separate answer, under which issues are joined, the husband is a competent witness in his own behalf, although his evidence may inure to the benefit of his wife.—Haskit v. Elliott, 58 Ind. 493.

[d] (Ind. 1880) The fact that the wife has an interest and is coplaintiff with the husband in a suit to recover land does not render him incompetent as a witness in his own behalf, where he also has a substantial interest.—Clouse v. Elliott, 71 Ind. 302.

[e] (Kan. 1889) As the husband and wife are jointly interested in an appeal by both from an award in condemnation proceedings of part of the homestead, owned by the wife, but occupied by both as a residence, the husband is a competent witness on the trial of the appeal, under Code Civ. Proc. § 323, authorizing the husband and wife to testify when they are joint parties, and have a joint interest in the action.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 42 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 1059.

[f] (La. 1882) In a suit to evict the wife from property transferred to her by her husband, in satisfaction of her rights against him, the latter may be a witness in his own interest as warrantor.—Shantz v. Stoll, 34 La. Ann. 1237.

[g] (Mo. 1879) In an action by a husband and wife to set aside a deed of trust on her land, the fact that his testimony will necessarily affect her interest does not disqualify him as a witness.—Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399.

[h] (Mo. 1885) When a husband and wife sue jointly a railroad company for their son's death, they being equally interested in the judgment, the husband is a competent witness.—Bell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 86 Mo. 599.

[i] (N. Y. 1859) In an action brought by husband and wife to cancel a mortgage executed by them and to restrain the foreclosure of the mortgage, the husband offered himself as a witness to prove usury in the consideration. Held, that the husband was a competent witness on his own behalf, notwithstanding the wife's interest in the event of the suit by reason of her inchoate right of dower in the mortgaged premises.—Babbott v. Thomas, 31 Barb. 277.

[j] (N. Y. 1867) Where the husband has a direct pecuniary interest in the result, he is a competent witness in his own behalf, in an action brought by himself and wife.—Maverick v. Eighth Ave. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 378.

[b] (Ind. 1863) The issue in the case was claimed to have involved the interest of the wife of A. in the subject-matter of the suit as lessee. Defendants had set up a superior outstanding title in the wife as trustee for A. This was denied by plaintiffs. A. and wife were made parties defendant, and failed to answer. Held, that A.'s wife had no interest in the suit which would prevent A. from testifying.—Meni v. Rathbone, 21 Ind. 454.

[d] (Ind. 1867) Where a complaint shows the cause of action to be wholly in the husband, he is a competent witness in his own behalf, although the wife may be joined as a plaintiff.—Lockwood v. Joab, 27 Ind. 423.

[e] (La. 1875) Where, on seizure of a married woman's property on execution, a third person intervenes, claiming the same as between such third opponent and plaintiff, the husband was a competent witness; the wife not being a contestant in that controversy.—Schmidt v. Williston, 27 La. Ann. 315.

[f] (Va. 1886) W., who owed S., delivered to S. a note payable to S.'s wife. She gave nothing for the note, and S. was not her agent. The note was never delivered to her, but was lost or destroyed. S. sued W. on the original cause of action. Held, that his wife having no interest in the suit, he was a competent witness.—Wright v. Smith, 81 Va. 777.

[g] (Va. 1892) Though a wife is made a party defendant in a suit, where she has no separate interest in the result, the husband is a competent witness in his own behalf.—Ratliff v. Vandikes, 89 Va. 307, 15 S. E. 864.

[a] (Ind. 1881) Where husband and wife sue jointly and have separate interests, each is a competent witness, though the testimony may benefit the other.—Lafayette v. Larson, 73 Ind. 367.

[b] (La. 1889) Where an insolvent debtor fails to put on his schedule property standing in the name of his wife, and the creditors require, by opposition, that said property be placed thereon, the husband is a competent witness in his own interest, as to his good faith in framing his schedule, and the wife is a competent witness in favor of her separate interest.—Cosgrove v. His Creditors, 41 La. Ann. 274, 6 South. 585.

[c] (N. Y. 1887) In an action by a husband to compel the transfer from his divorced wife of a policy of insurance, on the ground that it had been assigned to her as security for a loan which had been paid, testimony as to a conversation relating to the policy between plaintiff and defendant after its transfer to defendant was permissible in view of the rights of property conferred on married women by the statutes.—Simmons v. Henry, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 204.

[a] A husband cannot be a witness either for or against his wife, in a suit concerning the wife's separate estate.

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where property is levied on as belonging to the husband, in a controversy by his wife in which she claims it as her separate property, the husband is an incompetent witness for her.—Hodges v. Branch Bank at Montgomery, 13 Ala. 455.

[d] (Ala. 1856) The rule which renders husband and wife, unless in a few excepted cases, incompetent to testify for or against each other, has its foundation, not only in the identity of their legal rights, but in a wise public policy; and there is nothing in any of the statutes of this state, securing to married women their separate estates, which requires that an exception should be made of cases in which the husband is called on to testify to his acts in the capacity of trustee for his wife.—Wilson v. Sheppard, 28 Ala. 623.

[e] (Ala. 1870) The husband is a competent witness for his wife to prove what disposition he has made of money belonging to her separate estate.—Robison v. Robison, 44 Ala. 227.

[g] (Ark. 1896) Where a wife claims the property in attachment against the husband, the husband is not competent to testify against the wife.—George Taylor Commission Co. v. Bell, 62 Ark. 26, 34 S. W. 80.

[h] (Colo. 1882) Gen. Laws, c. 104, explicitly permits a husband to testify in a cause where the separate property of his wife is concerned.—Hanna v. Barker, 6 Colo. 303.

[i] (D. C. 1886) In an action against the wife alone on a contract relating to her separate estate, her husband cannot testify for or against her; Rev. St. §§ 876, 877, having no application to such a case.—Holtzman v. Wagner, 5 Mackey, 15.

[k] (Ga. 1875) The husband is a competent witness for the wife to support her claim to property in a civil suit.—Porter v. Allen, 54 Ga. 623.

[m] (Ill. 1884) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 5, expressly providing that a husband or wife shall not testify for each other except in actions involving her separate property, the husband was a competent witness in trover by the wife for property claimed by her as her separate estate.—Stout v. Ellison, 15 Ill. App. (15 Bradw.) 222.

[n] (Ill. 1889) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 5, which declares that a husband shall be a competent witness where the litigation concerns the separate property of his wife, he is a competent witness, though his wife's title is not admitted.—J. Obermann Brewing Co. v. Ohlerking, 33 Ill. App. 356.

[o] (Iowa, 1891) On the trial of a wife's claim against an insolvent husband, the husband may be examined as to the details of the transaction, to see if it in fact constituted a borrowing of money; and it is competent for him to explain the reason for antedating the notes given for such debt.—Rea v. Jaffray & Co., 82 Iowa, 231, 48 N. W. 78.

[u] (Tex. 1881) A husband is a competent witness in a suit by him to recover the possession, or for the conversion, of the separate property of his wife.—Turnley v. Texas Banking & Ins. Co., 54 Tex. 451.

[v] (Vt. 1858) In an action of book account in favor of a husband and wife, to recover a debt due the latter before coverture, the husband is a competent witness.—Perry v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 390.

[a] (Ind. 1863) Where the husband and wife are both parties to an action, but the subject-matter in controversy is claimed by the wife, and, under the issues in the cause, the husband discloses no such interest as would render him a competent witness in his own behalf, his testimony ought not to be admitted.—Hollowell v. Simonson, 21 Ind. 398.

[b] (Ind. 1866) In a suit by husband and wife to recover the rent of lands belonging to the wife, defendant testified, in his own behalf, to a contract of renting made with the husband, with the wife's consent. The wife then offered her husband as a witness to contradict defendant's testimony. Held, that he was not a competent witness; the evidence being offered on a matter in which the husband had no interest.—Jones v. Bassett, 27 Ind. 58.

[c] (Ind. 1873) Where, in a lease executed by a husband and wife, it is stipulated that the rent is payable to the wife, and the premises are to be surrendered to her, an action for the rent brought in their joint names concerns only her separate estate, and the husband has no interest in the action except that he would be liable for costs if they could not be made out of her property, and therefore the husband is not a competent witness in such action.—Woodward v. Lindley, 43 Ind. 333.

[d] (Ind. 1878) In a joint action by a husband and his wife to foreclose a mortgage executed for their use, to indemnify the mortgagee against loss by reason of another mortgage which was a lien on other land conveyed to plaintiff by the mortgagor, the husband is a competent witness in his own behalf, although the deed from the mortgagor was made to the wife alone.—Scarry v. Eldridge, 63 Ind. 44.

[e] (La. 1886) One cannot testify in a suit wherein his wife has an interest and he no separate interest.—Beltran v. Gauthreaux, 38 La. Ann. 106.

[f] (Mo. 1875) In ejectment for land of which the wife is not the separate owner, the husband is a substantial party, and may testify, so far as his own interests are concerned.—Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 420.

[g] (Mo. 1877) A husband is not a competent witness in a suit to which his wife is a party, unless he has substantial interest in the controversy, or acted as her agent in the transaction which is the foundation of the suit.—Haerle v. Kreihn, 65 Mo. 202.

[h] (Mo. 1882) In a suit by husband and wife to set aside a deed executed by the wife's father, under whom she claims as heir, the husband has no interest in the land so as to be a competent witness.—Wood v. Broadley, 76 Mo. 23, 43 Am. Rep. 754.

[i] (Mo. 1890) In an action against the daughters of a decedent, whose husbands are joined with them, to restrain an action brought by them to recover land belonging to their late father, the husbands are competent witnesses for defendants, being substantial, and not merely nominal, parties by virtue of their right of possession of lands inherited by their wives.—Brownlee v. Fenwick, 103 Mo. 420, 15 S. W. 611.

[j] (Mo. 1890) In an action against the daughters of a decedent, whose husbands are joined with them, to restrain an action brought by them to recover land belonging to their late father, the husband of a deceased daughter, whose children are parties to the suit though he is not, is a competent witness.—Brownlee v. Fenwick, 103 Mo. 420, 15 S. W. 611.

[k] (Mo. 1891) On the foreclosure of a deed of trust, the land was sold to the heirs of the deceased cestui que trust, one of whom was the trustee's wife. Held, that such trustee was a competent witness for the heirs, in an action by them to which he was a party, brought to redeem the land from a sale on foreclosure of a special tax bill, since a husband is a competent witness in litigation involving the title to his wife's general property to which he is made a party.—McKee v. Spiro, 107 Mo. 452, 17 S. W. 1013.

[m] (Vt. 1893) Under Act No. 45, Acts 1886, providing that a wife may sue alone on actions arising out of her separate property, and that a gift from a husband is not her separate property, a husband is properly made a party in a suit by a wife for trespass to property which is a gift to her from him, so as to render him a competent witness under Act No. 140, Acts 1884, making husband and wife competent witnesses when properly joined as parties to an action.—Minard v. Currier, 67 Vt. 489, 32 Atl. 472.

[n] (Va. 1886) Where the husband is joined as a nominal codefendant in a suit against his wife on a matter arising out of her contract, she is a competent witness in her own behalf, but he is not a competent witness for her.—Farley v. Tillar, 81 Va. 275.

[o] (Wis. 1863) Where an objection that a husband is improperly joined in an action that concerns the separate property of the wife is waived, the husband is a competent witness on behalf of plaintiffs.—Hackett v. Bonnell, 16 Wis. 471.

[p] (Wis. 1882) Where a husband and wife join in an action affecting only the wife's separate property, the husband is a competent witness for his wife, under Rev. St. § 4068, providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness "by reason of his interest" as a party, and that "every party" shall be a competent witness, except as otherwise provided.—Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 14 N. W. 14.

[a] (U. S. 1889) Under Rev. St. § 877 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 667], providing that on the trial of any cause in the District of Columbia the wife shall not be competent to give evidence for or against her husband in any criminal proceeding, in an action by a wife against the heirs of her deceased husband to establish her claim as a creditor of his estate on account of the alleged investment by him of her property in his own name, the wife is a competent witness.—Stickney v. Stickney, 131 U. S. 227, 9 Sup. Ct. 677, 33 L. Ed. 136.

[b] (Ark. 1878) Where a wife interpleads in an action of replevin against the husband to recover property, claiming the property as her separate estate, she is a competent witness in her own behalf.—Berlin v. Cantrell, 33 Ark. 611.

[c] (Cal. 1885) The wife is a competent witness in an action by her husband concerning community property.—Moseley v. Heney, 66 Cal. 478, 6 Pac. 134.

[d] (Conn. 1887) A wife may testify against her husband in proceedings before insolvent commissioners in which the wife seeks to establish a claim against his insolvent estate, such commissioners acting as courts of equity as well as courts of law.—Appeal of Spitz, 56 Conn. 184, 14 Atl. 776, 7 Am. St. Rep. 303.

[e] (Fla. 1890) Act Feb. 4, 1874, removed the disqualification of a wife to testify because of being interested in, or a party to, an action, in all cases not falling within its proviso. Act March 7, 1879, provides that married women shall not be excluded as witnesses in civil actions wherein their husbands are parties and allowed to testify. Held, that a wife is a competent witness, as to her own interests, in an action not within the proviso of the act of 1874, and which is brought in her own right by herself and husband.—Williams v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. Ry. Co., 26 Fla. 533, 8 South. 446.

[f] (Ill. 1871) Where a suit is brought by the husband to recover for the loss of the wearing apparel and ornaments of the wife, as she was, at common law, virtually the owner thereof and could only be devested of such ownership by their sale or gift by the husband, she is interested in the property in suit so as to render her a competent witness therein under the exception to section 5 of the act relating to the competency of witnesses, which declares that, where the suit relates to the separate property of the wife, either may be a witness.—Northern Line Packet Co. v. Shearer, 61 Ill. 263.

Henderson, 20 Ind. 297.

[j] (Ind. 1871) On the trial of a suit by husband and wife to contest a will, the wife being an heir at law of the testator, she is a competent witness in her own behalf.—Call v. Byram, 39 Ind. 499.

[m] (La. 1872) A wife suing for a separation of property is a competent witness in her own behalf.—Meyer v. Smith, 24 La. Ann. 153.

[n] (La. 1893) In an action by a wife to recover land she is a competent witness as to the threats of her husband which induced her to sign the notarial act.—Vicknair v. Trosclair, 45 La. Ann. 373, 12 South. 486.

[o] (Mich. 1884) When the title to the separate property of either husband or wife is in controversy, How. Ann. St. § 7546, permitting either to testify to the facts which lie at the foundation of the ownership of the property as fully as if the marriage relation did not exist, renders admissible the testimony of the wife to prove a promise by her husband, made, not in the presence of a third person, to repay, from the proceeds of certain property of his when he should sell it, money which, in consideration of this promise, she let him have.—Hunt v. Eaton, 55 Mich. 362, 21 N. W. 429.

[p] (Mo. 1877) In a suit by a wife who has united with her husband in a mortgage on her land to secure his debt, brought to compel another creditor of her husband to resort to other security which he holds, in preference to her lands, the wife is a competent witness.—Wilcox v. Todd, 64 Mo. 388.

[r] (N. Y. 1862) Where husband and wife are codefendants in a case where their interests are not conflicting, and where they are contracting parties with each other, and might have been antagonistic parties in a suit between themselves, and she is not required to disclose any communication made by one to the other, the wife may be examined as a witness in her own behalf.—Schaffner v. Reuter, 37 Barb. 44.

[s] (Ohio, 1872) In an action by a married woman to establish as against a third party her title to property which she claimed in her own right, plaintiff is a competent witness in her own behalf under Code, § 314, as amended Feb. 16, 1866 (1 Swan & S. 588).—Robinson v. Chadwick, 22 Ohio St. 527.

[u] (Vt. 1894) A wife is a competent witness in support of a claim by her against her husband's estate in insolvency, especially where it does not appear that the proceeding will be determinative of the question of his discharge.—Purdy v. Purdy's Estate, 67 Vt. 50, 30 Atl. 695.

[v] (Va. 1880) In a suit to reach the separate estate of a wife for a liability created by her indorsement of her husband's note, her testimony is admissible, notwithstanding the rule of law prohibiting husband and wife from testifying for or against one another.—Frank v. Lilienfeld, 33 Grat. 377.

[a] (Ark. 1881) In suit against husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage on a homestead, she may defend to avoid preclusion of dower, and, so far, may testify for herself, but not in aid of her husband's defense.—Klenk v. Knoble, 37 Ark. 298.

[b] (Conn. 1831) A testator devised to his grandchildren, children of his daughter A., all his estate, real and personal, to be equally divided between them at her decease. The use of such estate he devised for the support of A. and her children during her life; and to carry this provision into effect he appointed B. and A. trustees, who accepted the trust, and took into their possession the estate devised. C. supplied A. and her children with necessaries in sickness, on the credit of this fund; A. being then a feme covert whose husband was a bankrupt, and she and her children having no property except that so devised. On a bill in chancery brought by C., against the trustees, to obtain satisfaction of her claim out of such fund, held, that the declarations of A., though a married woman, were admissible to substantiate plaintiff's claim, since the object of the bill was not to charge the husband, but a trust fund in which he had no interest and over which he had no control.—Donalds v. Plumb, 8 Conn. 447.

[d] (Ind. 1865) Defendant in an action of replevin offered his wife as a witness to prove that the property in controversy was her separate property. Held, that as the wife was not a party to the suit, and the proposed evidence was only admissible to support a plea of property in another, it was evidence for the husband, and the witness was incompetent under the statute.—Harrell v. Hammond's Adm'r, 25 Ind. 104.

[e] (Ind. 1874) In an action against husband and wife, where her property interests as well as those of the husband are involved, she is a competent witness in her own behalf, and her testimony for herself is not to be disregarded because it may incidentally benefit her husband.—Rogers v. Rogers, 46 Ind. 1.

[f] (Ind. 1881) Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 132, § 1, where a married woman, a plaintiff, is the owner in her own right of the cause of action, and the husband is a nominal plaintiff, the wife is a competent witness.—Farman v. Chamberlain, 74 Ind. 82.

[g] (Kan. 1874) Where a married woman replevies property she may testify in the case, although defendaut may claim that he as an officer seized and now holds the property as the property of her husband, and that he seized the same by virtue of an execution issued against the property of her husband.—Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kan. 107.

[h] (La. 1893) In a suit for separation of property to which the husband's syndic is made a party, and the creditors intervene, the husband has no interest in the suit, and the wife is a competent witness for her own interest.—Sembre v. Sembre, 45 La. Ann. 117, 11 South. 942.

[i] (Minn. 1883) In an action by a judgment creditor of a husband to subject land conveyed to his wife on a purchase and payment of the price thereof by the husband to the judgment, to the extent of the wife's interest therein, in which the husband is not made a party, the wife is a competent witness for plaintiff, without the consent of the husband, as her testimony is not "for or against her husband."—Leonard v. Green, 30 Minn. 496, 16 N. W. 399.

[j] (Mo. 1894) Under Rev. St. § 8922, relating to the competency of husband and wife as witnesses, a wife, being the real party in interest, is competent for all purposes except as to communications from her husband.—Scrutchfield v. Sauter, 119 Mo. 615, 24 S. W. 137.

[k] (Mo. 1894) A wife is a competent witness to testify respecting her interest in attached property, although her husband may also be benefited by her testimony, under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, providing that no one shall be disqualified as a witness by being interested as a party or otherwise.—Toovey v. Baxter, 59 Mo. App. 470, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 39.

[l] (N. Y. 1864) Under the married women's acts, and the provisions of the Code of Procedure in 1860, a wife may, as a party to an action, testify on her own behalf like any other party, irrespective of the interest of her husband, except that she cannot be required to disclose communications made by one to the other.—Wehrkamp v. Willet, 4 Abb. Dec. 548.

[m] (Pa. 1871) In ejectment by a husband and wife for property belonging to the wife which had been sold at sheriff's sale as the property of her husband, the wife was a competent witness under the act of 1869, allowing a party to be a witness in his own cause; her testimony was not against her husband, as he did not warrant the title of the sheriff's vendee.—Rowley v. McHugh. 66 Pa. (16 P. F. Smith) 269.

[n] (Pa. 1873) Under the act of April 15, 1869, permitting the parties to an action to testify, but declaring that the act shall not alter the law so as to allow husband and wife to testify against each other, the wife of a defendant in an attachment against stock standing in her husband's name cannot testify that it belonged to her.—Boyle v. Haughey, 30 Leg. Int. 424, 5 Leg. Gaz. 406.

[o] (Pa. 1893) In a proceeding by an execution creditor to reach property alleged by the debtor to belong to his wife, and claimed by her as such, the wife is a competent witness as to her ownership, since she is not interested against the husband, within the meaning of Act May 23, 1887, which renders husband and wife incompetent where they offer to testify "against each other."—Norbeck v. Davis, 157 Pa. 399, 27 Atl. 712, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 150.

[q] (Vt. 1859) In an appeal from a decree of the probate court admitting a will to probate, the appellants, who contested the will, were husband and wife, the latter being one of the heirs at law of the testatrix, but the husband was neither an heir at law nor a legatee. Held, that the wife was a competent witness for the appellants.—Robinson v. Hutchinson, 31 Vt. 443.

[r] (Va. 1882) A husband has no such interest in a suit brought by himself and wife to recover from an insurance company the amount of a policy on her father's life for her benefit, as to prevent the wife from being a competent witness in her own behalf, the statute prohibiting each from testifying for or against the other, but permitting each to testify in his or her own behalf. In such a suit, the husband incurs no liability for costs.—Hayes v. Virginia Mut. Protection Ass'n, 76 Va. 225.

[t] (Va. 1891) Where a wife and her husband are both parties to an action, but she alone is interested in the result, she is competent as a witness.—Thomas v. Sellman, 87 Va. 683, 13 S. E. 146.

[u] (Wis. 1863) A married woman is a competent witness for a plaintiff who claims as her vendee, in an action against an officer to recover possession of personal property seized under an execution against her husband; for the latter will not be concluded by the judgment in the action.—Lewis v. McDougall, 17 Wis. 517.

[a] In an action by husband and wife for injury to the wife, the husband is a competent witness for plaintiffs.

—(Ill. 1890) City of Rock Island v. Deis, 38 Ill. App. 409;

(Wis. 1862) Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240, 82 Am. Dec. 670.

(Mo. 1889) Harrington v. City of Sedalia, 98 Mo. 583, 12 S. W. 342.

[b] (U. S. 1874) Under the act of Congress of July 6, 1862, enacting that "the laws of the state in which the court shall be held shall be the rule of decision as to the competency of witnesses in the courts of the United States," and under the acts of the legislature of Wisconsin, passed in 1863 and 1868, one of which says that "a party to a civil action * * * may be examined as a witness in his or her behalf on the trial; * * * and in case of an action for damages for personal injury to a married woman, this section shall be so construed as to allow such married woman to be a witness on her own behalf, in the same manner as if she was single"; and another of which says that "a party to any civil action * * * may be examined as a witness in his own behalf or in behalf of any other party"—a married woman may in the circuit court for Wisconsin, in an action on the case by her husband and herself, for injuries done to her person, be examined as a witness for the plaintiffs. It is unimportant whose will be the damages—whether the husband's or wife's—if recovered. The competency of the witness must be determined by the statutes.—Northwestern Union Packet Co. v.

[c] (Ark. 1891) In a joint suit for personal injuries by a husband and wife, where no objection is made to the joinder, either plaintiff, being competent as a witness in his or her own behalf, is not rendered incompetent by the fact of marriage to the other.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Amos, 54 Ark. 159, 15 S. W. 362.

[d] (Ark. 1891) The wife is a competent witness in an action by herself and her husband for personal injuries to her.—Little Rock & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Harkey, 15 S. W. 456.

[e] (Dak. 1875) In a suit by husband and wife for a personal injury to the wife, both may testify under Code Civ. Proc. 1867-68, §§ 319, 320, providing that a party may be examined on his own behalf, or in behalf of any other party, though it is also provided by section 320 that neither husband nor wife can be a witness for or against the other, except as to facts in the exclusive knowledge of such husband or wife, in which case but one can testify. —Sanders v. Reister, 1 Dak. 151, 46 N. W. 680.

[f] (Ill. 1874) Since a married woman is authorized to bring suit in her own name for a malicious prosecution as if she were sole, and is entitled to the proceeds of whatever judgment she may recover, as her separate property, free from the control or interference of her husband, her husband is a competent witness to testify in her behalf in a suit by her for a malicious prosecution against her for a criminal offense, under Act Feb. 14, 1867, providing that, where the litigation concerns the separate property of the wife, the husband may testify for or against her.—Anderson v. Friend, 71 Ill. 475.

[g] (Ill. 1875) The husband of a plaintiff, in an action for slanderous words spoken of her, is a competent witness on her behalf.—Hawver v. Hawver, 78 Ill. 412.

[i] (Ind. 1872) In an action by husband and wife against a married woman and her husband for slanderous words spoken by the feme covert defendant of the feme covert plaintiff, each of the married women is a competent witness in her own behalf.—Bennifield v. Hypres, 38 Ind. 498.

[j] (Ind. 1872) In an action of slander against a husband and wife for words spoken by the wife, the husband is not competent to testify as a witness to the words spoken by the wife. —Bonham v. Keen, 40 Ind. 197.

[k] (Ind. 1881) Under Act March 11, 1867, § 1, where a husband and wife sue jointly for a personal injury sustained by the latter, the wife is a competent witness.—Farman v. Lauman, 73 Ind. 568.

[l] (La. 1890) A claim for damages for injury to a married woman, being under the régime of the community, is an asset of the community, on which suit must be brought in the husband's name, and the wife is not a competent witness in such suit.—White v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 990, 8 South. 475.

[m] (Mass. 1857) Under St. 1855, c. 188, a wife is a competent witness in support of an action brought by her husband and herself jointly, for a personal injury to her.—Snell v. Inhabitants of Westport, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 321.

[n] (Mo. 1887) In an action for killing a child, the mother, who is one of the coplaintiffs, may testify in their behalf.—Reilly v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 94 Mo. 600, 7 S. W. 407.

[p] (Ohio, 1877) Where words defamatory of the character of a married woman are published in the presence and hearing of her husband, he is a competent witness to prove the speaking of the words in an action of slander brought by husband and wife.—Duval v. Davey, 32 Ohio St. 604.

[q] (Vt. 1884) In an action by husband and wife for assault and battery on the wife, the husband is a competent witness.—Simkins v. Eddie, 56 Vt. 612.

[r] (Va. 1886) By Acts 1876-77, p. 333, all real and personal estate thereafter acquired by any married woman, whether by gift, grant, purchase, inheritance, devise, or bequest, shall be and continue her separate estate. She may sue and be sued as if she were a feme sole, but her husband must be joined with her. Under Code, c. 172, §§ 21, 22, husband or wife may testify in his or her own behalf, but they cannot testify for or against each other. Held, that an action by husband and wife for damages for personal injuries to the wife is not within the act of 1876-77, the damages not being her separate property, and she is not a competent witness.—Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 122.

[s] (Wis. 1880) In an action by husband and wife for injuries to the person of the wife caused by defendant's negligence, the husband is the real party in interest, and may be examined as a witness for plaintiffs, whatever may be the rule as to actions in which he is only a nominal party.—Kaime v. Village of Omro, 49 Wis. 371, 5 N. W. 838.

[t] (Wis. 1884) In an action by husband and wife for a personal injury to the wife, the husband, being a party to the record, is a competent witness.—Hoverson v. Noker, 60 Wis. 511, 19 N. W. 382, 50 Am. Rep. 381.

(d) AGENCY OF HUSBAND OR WIFE FOR THE OTHER.

IN GENERAL, § 153.
EXISTENCE OF AGENCY, § 154.
NATURE OF ACTION OR ISSUE AND SCOPE OF EVIDENCE, § 155.
KNOWLEDGE OF TRANSACTION, § 156.

Effect of death of husband, see post, § 182 [f, q].

[a] (Ark. 1871) A wife is competent, under the laws of Arkansas, to testify, on behalf of her husband, in an action on a contract which she made as his agent.—Magness v. Walker, 26 Ark. 470.

[b] (Ark. 1879) A husband or wife cannot testify for or against one another in civil cases even when either one acts as agent for the other.—Watkins v. Turner, 34 Ark. 663.

[d] (Ill. 1883) The statute which permits a wife to testify concerning business transactions conducted by her as her husband's agent places her on the footing of a feme sole, so far as respects her competency to testify concerning such transactions.—Poppers v. Miller, 14 Ill. App. (14 Bradw.) 87.

[e] (Ind. 1871) A husband acting as agent for the wife in the transaction of her business is not a competent witness for the wife, to prove the transactions of such agency.—Kemp v. Dickson, 1 Wils. 42.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) Supplementary proceedings were brought for the discovery of assets of a judgment debtor which was a corporation of which A. was the sole incorporator, it being alleged that A. and M., his wife, had the corporate property and were concealing it. A., on the examination, detailed the incorporation and business of the judgment debtor, and the transfer of its property, first to a partnership and then to a new corporation. To a question as to when and how this transfer was made, M. objected to witness giving any testimony against her, for the reason that, being her husband, he was not competent to testify against her. The only statement referring to M. in his answer was that he was her agent, and that she had some of the notes of the companies, taken in the course of business for money lent. On the cross-examination, M.'s attorneys inquired as to the transactions by witness as agent for M. with the companies, and as to the amounts advanced by him as her agent to these companies. In this connection, the books of the judgment debtor and several of its notes to M. were called out and introduced, and, upon cross-examination as to this new matter, a statement was elicited on which it was claimed by the judgment creditor that there was no consideration for the notes. On the examination of M., she disclaimed any personal knowledge of the transactions of A. as her agent with the companies, uniformly answering, "Ask my agent." Held, that the record did not show that A. was permitted to testify against his wife, over her objection.—Estey v. Fuller Implement Co., 82 Iowa, 678, 46 N. W. 1098, 47 N. W. 1025.

[h] (Mass. 1866) Under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, plaintiff's wife is a competent witness to prove her conversations with defendant and his agent in her husband's absence, when the contract or cause of action at issue was made or transacted with her.—Burke v. Savage, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 408.

[i] (Mich. 1886) In a suit by a wife against the assignor of a mortgage which had been purchased by her through her husband, defendant set up a settlement of the demand with the husband, who he alleged was her general agent, and offered the husband as a witness for that purpose. Held, that the husband was incompetent as a witness without the wife's consent, under How. Ann. St. § 7546.—Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625, 28 N. W. 740.

[j] (Mo.) To render a married woman competent as a witness when her husband is a party, it must appear that the matter as to which she is called to testify was a business transaction conducted by her as agent of her husband.—(1868) Hardy v. Matthews, 42 Mo. 406; (1882) Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Tinsley, 75 Mo. 458.

[k] (Mo. 1873) The husband may be a witness for the wife concerning matters wherein he acted as her agent.—Chesley v. Chesley, 54 Mo. 347.

[l] (Mo. 1876) In a proceeding by husband and wife to enjoin a sale under a deed of trust given on land of the wife and to set aside the deed as being procured by fraud, the testimony of the husband is admissible, as being the wife's agent.—Quade v. Fisher, 63 Mo. 325.

[m] (Mo. 1879) A wife is a competent witness for her husband as to matters wherein she acted as his agent.—Degenhart v. Schmidt, 7 Mo. App. 117.

[n] (Mo. 1890) The admission of testimony of a husband in support of the title of his wife to the goods for which she sues in replevin, where it is not shown that he was her agent in the purchase of the goods or in any transaction connected with her acquisition of them, so as to make him a competent witness on her behalf, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4014, is error.—Reno v. Kingsbury, 39 Mo. App. 240.

[o] (Mo. 1894) After a husband has testified to his wife's agency for him, she is a competent witness, under the statute, as to anything done by her in the discharge of such agency.—College Hill Press Brick Works v. Thompson, 59 Mo. App. 98.

[p] (Mo. 1895) It is competent for a wife, acting as the agent of her husband, engaged in selling goods and keeping the books in his store, to detail such transactions as she may have had while so engaged.—Harding v. Brown, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 13.

[q] (N. H. 1872) Where a wife has acted as agent for the husband, in a matter requiring no special confidence, and where none is conferred, and where any other person could have acted as well, she may state the facts learned in the course of the agency.—Clements v. Marston, 52 N. H. 31.

[r] (N. J. 1868) Under the statutes, a complainant in forcible entry and detainer against a husband and wife is incompetent as a witness.—Yetman v. Dey, 33 N. J. Law (4 Vroom) 32.

[s] (Vt. 1859) A wife is not a competent witness in a case in which her husband is either plaintiff or defendant (she herself not being a party), even in reference to a transaction where she acted as agent of her husband, and at which no one but her and the other party was present.—Seargent v. Seward, 31 Vt. 509.

[t] (Vt. 1888) A married woman is a competent witness for her husband, to testify to the terms of a contract, where the parties had no personal interview in making it, and she acted as the agent both of defendant, in carrying his proposition to her husband, and of her husband, in carrying his acceptance to defendant.—Martin v. Hurlburt, 60 Vt. 364, 14 Atl. 649.

[u] (Wis. 1862) In all cases where the wife acts as the agent of her husband, she is a competent witness, especially since the enactment of Laws 1858, c. 134, in his behalf, in relation to all business transacted by her for him, within the scope of her agency.—Birdsall v. Dunn, 16 Wis. 235.

[v] (Wis. 1863) In an action by a married woman on a contract made for her by her husband, the husband is a competent witness as to the terms of the contract.—Hobby v. Wisconsin Bank, 17 Wis. 167.

[w] (Wis. 1878) A wife who has acted as her husband's agent is a competent witness for him to prove any act done by her, or fact occurring, within the scope of such agency.—Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567.

[x] (Wis. 1878) Certain questions were put to the defendant's wife, offered as a witness for him; her agency had not been otherwise shown, and the answers to the questions could not have any tendency to show it. Held, that there was no error in rejecting the evidence.—Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567.

[y] (Wis. 1886) A husband, in supplementary proceedings against his wife, is not a competent witness for or against her, except as to matters transacted by him as her agent.—Blabon v. Gilchrist, 67 Wis. 38, 29 N. W. 220.

(Vt. 1864) Town v. Lamphire, 37 Vt. 52.

[c] (Ill. 1876) Sending the wife to collect payment on a sale made by the husband is not a transaction had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband, which, under Rev. St. 1874, p. 489, § 5, permits her to testify for him.—Robertson v. Brost, 83 Ill. 116.

[d] (Ill. 1877) In an action by a wife to recover upon an alleged contract to board certain relatives of the defendant's intestate, testimony of the husband that he went with her when she made the bargain, and afterwards "about the matter of pay," held not to establish an agency sufficient to let in his testimony in regard to admissions of the deceased, under Rev. St. p. 489, c. 51.—Waggonseller v. Rexford, 2 Ill. App. (2 Bradw.) 455.

[e] (Ill. 1887) In an action by an innkeeper on an account for board, where plaintiff's wife testifies that he was absent most of the time, and that she conducted the hotel in his absence, this is sufficient proof of her agency to make her a competent witness for plaintiff under Rev. St. c. 51, § 5.—Mitchell v. Hughes, 24 Ill. App. 308.

[f] (Ill. 1887) The wife of a party is not, under the laws of Illinois, his agent in such a sense as to make her a competent witness to prove a contract made between him and another for boarding the latter's parents, merely because she did the work and kept the accounts.—Gifford v. Wilkins, 24 Ill. App. 367.

[g] (Ill. 1891) The fact that a wife sometimes tends a dog kept by her husband and his landlord on certain premises does not render her competent, as the agent of the husband, to testify, either generally or on behalf of the landlord, in an action brought against them both for personal injuries occasioned by a bite of the dog.—Garrison v. Barnes, 42 Ill. App. 21.

[h] (Kan. 1878) When, in one's absence from home, his wife acts in protection of property claimed by him and within the home limits, although without any express direction or agreement, she is acting as his agent, and will be a competent witness in an action by or against him, as to what she does.—Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 30 Am. Rep. 419.

[i] (Mass. 1845) A wife who keeps her husband's accounts is a competent witness for him, in a suit in which he introduces his book of original entries, to testify that she made the entries by his direction and in his presence; and after she has so testified, he may be permitted to testify as to the times when the entries were made, and that the charges contained in them are just and true.—Littlefield v. Rice, 51 Mass. (10 Metc.) 287.

[j] (Mass. 1869) Under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, providing that, whenever the "contract or cause of action was made or transacted with the wife of any one of the parties in the absence of her husband, she may be a witness," on trial of a writ of entry to recover land to which defendant claims title under a deed of plaintiff and plaintiff's wife, she is a competent witness to testify in plaintiff's behalf that she did not sign the deed in his absence.—Morony v. O'Laughlin, 102 Mass. 184.

[k] (Mo. 1887) The statute which makes a married woman competent in her husband's behalf as to transactions in which she acted as his agent applies to a case where she acted as his agent prior to their marriage.—Teckenbrock v. McLaughlin, 25 Mo. App. 524.

[l] (Mo. 1887) In an action against a husband for supplies furnished to his wife, evidence that the person to whom the goods were furnished was defendant's wife, and that she was cohabiting with him as such, is sufficient proof of her agency to qualify her as a witness for defendant, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4014, providing that the wife shall not be disqualified as a witness in any "matters of business transactions when the transaction was had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband."—Sauter v. Scrutchfield, 28 Mo. App. 150.

[m] (Mo. 1889) As a wife, in the purchase of necessaries for the household, may bind the husband on the ground of implied agency, she may testify on his behalf touching such transaction without other proof of her agency.—McAllister v. Barnes, 35 Mo. App. 668.

[n] (Mo. 1895) A wife purchasing necessaries is, by operation of law, the agent of her husband in the purchase, and is therefore a competent witness against his estate in a suit for such necessaries.—Reed v. Crissey, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 742, 63 Mo. App. 184.

[o] (Vt. 1861) When it became material to show the state of plaintiff's accounts at a given time, and it was shown that the books were kept by the wife, but from original memoranda kept by the husband from day to day, she was not a competent witness for plaintiff, under the act of 1858, to show the state of the accounts at that time.—Eastabrooks v. Prentiss, 34 Vt. 457.

[q] (Vt. 1891) In an action for work done, defendant claimed that he had paid $25 to plaintiff on account, and testified that one morning he gave his wife the money to give plaintiff, and then went out, and on his return saw plaintiff standing at a table, with some money in his hand, and heard him say, "It is all right." Held, that the wife was her husband's agent in the transaction, and therefore a competent witness as to such payment.—Pierce v. Bradford, 64 Vt. 219, 23 Atl. 637.

the house, she is a competent witness to prove such acts, and in this regard it is immaterial whether his liability be placed on the ground of her implied agency to contract for the necessaries, or on that of his marital duty.—Bach v. Parmely, 35 Wis. 238.

[s] (Wis. 1876) On taking a conveyance of certain property from defendant's intestate, plaintiff caused to be assigned to him a certain mortgage belonging to her husband, executed by one L. Afterwards plaintiff reconveyed to the intestate his said property, and, about a year thereafter, L. paid his mortgage debt to plaintiff's husband, and received from him a satisfaction of the mortgage theretofore executed by the intestate. In the transactions concerning those conveyances, plaintiff's husband acted generally as her agent. Held, that in this action he could not testify that he did not act as her agent in receiving the payment of L.'s mortgage.—Menk v. Steinfort, 39 Wis. 370.

[t] (Wis. 1876) A wife requested by her husband to call into their house the indorser of a note held by the husband, "and asked him whether he was going to pay the note," is not the husband's agent in such a sense as to be a competent witness for him to show admissions made to her by the indorser; still less to show a contract made by such indorser and herself (acting for her husband), which would render the former liable on the note, without demand of payment from the maker.—Hale v. Danforth, 40 Wis. 382.

[u] (Wis. 1884) Where a person gave a note to his wife, and told her to collect it for him, she is his agent, and, in an action by him on the note, may testify as to payments made to her taking the note out of the bar of the statute of limitations.—Engmann v. Immel's Estate, 59 Wis. 249, 18 N. W. 182.

[v] (Wis. 1896) Evidence that a memorandum of a contract of sale was entered in the books of account of the vendee by his wife, acting as his bookkeeper, at his direction, in the presence of the parties, and then read over to them by her, will not render the wife competent to testify what the contract was.—Hazer v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 66 N. W. 720.

[a] (Ala. 1874) In detinue against the husband, for a watch and chain which his wife received from plaintiff, in pawn or pledge, as a security for money loaned by her to him, his wife is a competent witness for defendant to prove what contract she made with plaintiff, and that she acted as her husband's agent in making it.—Sumner v. Cooke, 51 Ala. 521.

[b] (Ill. 1889) In an action for trespass, it appeared that defendant's servants entered plaintiff's house, and carried away certain property therefrom, plaintiff's wife being the only person present other than the trespassers. Held, that the acts of the trespassers were not "matters of business transactions, where the transactions were had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband," within the statute, so as to make the wife a competent witness.—Poppers v. Wagner, 33 Ill. App. 113.

[c] (Kan. 1889) Where an action is brought by the wife, and the husband, who is not a party or interested in the action, is introduced as a witness in her behalf, the examination of such witness must be confined strictly to transactions in which the husband acted as the agent of the wife.—Council Grove, O. C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Center, 42 Kan. 438, 22 Pac. 574.

[d] (Mass. 1866) The wife of defendant in an action of tort for a malicious prosecution is not a competent witness under St. 1865, c. 207, which makes the wife of a party competent "whenever the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial was made or transacted with the wife of any one of the parties in the absence of her husband," though she acted as his agent in the transaction out of which the malicious prosecution arose.—Bliss v. Franklin, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 244.

[e] (Mass. 1868) In an action on an account annexed, each item of the account as to which a separate issue is raised is a cause of action as to which, under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, the wife of either party is a competent witness on the trial, if it was transacted with her in the absence of her husband.—Packard v. Reynolds, 100 Mass. 153.

[f] (Mass. 1869) A statute enabling a wife to testify when the cause of action in issue was made or transacted with her (St. 1865, c. 207, § 2) does not extend to enable her to testify that she made payment, on behalf of her husband, of the demand in suit.—Bruce v. Mathews, 101 Mass. 64.

[g] (Mass. 1869) In an action against a railroad company for causing the death of plaintiff's cow, the fact that plaintiff's wife was the only person who saw and knew the circumstances does not render her a competent witness under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, admitting a married woman to testify when the contract or cause of action in issue was made or transacted with her in the absence of her husband.—Baxter v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 102 Mass. 383.

[h] (Mass. 1870) In an action for breaking and entering plaintiff's dwelling house and insulting his wife in his absence, she is not a competent witness under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, making her a witness where "the contract or cause of action in issue was made or transacted with her."—Bunker v. Bennett, 103 Mass. 516.

[i] (Mo. 1884) Under a statute making a married woman a competent witness "in all matters of business transactions when the transaction was had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband," a married woman may testify for her husband as to acts done by or with her while acting as such agent, although the act was in fact outside the scope of her agency.—Curry v. Stephens, 84 Mo. 442.

[j] (Mo. 1886) Revised Statutes disqualifies as a witness a husband in a suit wherein his wife is a party, unless the suit is connected with business conducted by him as her agent. Held not to make the husband an unqualified witness for her whenever any question arises as to her ownership of property where he chances to be her agent.—White v. Chaney, 20 Mo. App. 389.

[k] (Mo. 1891) The right of a wife to testify for her husband on the score of agency is confined to a suit which is connected with the business conducted by her as agent; and the fact that a wife purchased household furniture as agent for her husband does not render her a competent witness for him to prove the value of the property in an action by him for damages for its destruction through the negligence of defendant (a third person).—Flannery v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 44 Mo. App. 396.

[l] (Vt. 1895) Plaintiff's husband, having acted as agent in letting her farm on shares, is competent to testify, in an action for breach of the agreement to cultivate the same in a good and husbandlike manner, as to the particulars in which the farm was not so carried on.—Reynolds v. Chynoweth, 68 Vt. 104, 34 Atl. 36.

[m] (Wis. 1872) In an action on an insurance policy, where the wife of the insured, having acted as his agent to take care of the property, and give notice of a loss, is a competent witness as to facts connected with the loss, defendant company is not entitled to show by her that he did not hold the legal title to the land, such fact not being within the scope of her agency. —O'Conner v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 31 Wis. 160.

[n] (Wis. 1889) In an action by a married woman to recover for injuries resulting from defects in a sidewalk, the agency of the husband being established, he may testify to what he did as such agent regarding the service of the requisite notice on the city clerk and the taking of measurements.—Smalley v. City of Appleton, 75 Wis. 18, 43 N. W. 826.

[a] (Vt. 1861) In order for the wife to be a competent witness for the husband under the act of 1858 (see Sess. Laws 1858, p. 23), her evidence must be as to matters conducted by her as agent of the husband, and of which he has no personal knowledge.—Eastabrooks v. Prentiss, 34 Vt. 457.

[b] (Vt. 1868) A wife may testify to matters which were transacted by her as agent of her husband, although they occurred at her house, and the husband might have known in relation to them.—Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501.

[c] (Vt. 1892) Acts 1886, No. 45, provides that, as to business transactions conducted by a wife as the agent of her husband, she is a competent witness for him. Held, that the wife cannot testify to payments made by her in his presence and by his directions, since only transactions of which he has no personal knowledge are contemplated by the statute.—Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 24 Atl. 1013.

[d] (Wis. 1876) In an action by a married woman, her husband may testify in her behalf as to acts done by him as her agent, whether done in her presence or in her absence.—Menk v. Steinfort, 39 Wis. 370.

[a] (U. S. 1880) As long as the fact of the husband's first marriage is contested, the second wife is an incompetent witness to prove such first marriage. Where it has by other evidence been duly established to the satisfaction of the court, she may be admitted to prove her marriage with him.—Miles v. United States, 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481, reversing United States v. Miles (1877) 2 Utah, 19.

[b] (Del. 1859) Where a husband or wife is a party to a suit and immediately interested in the result thereof, neither is a competent witness for the other to prove the fact of their marriage.—Burton v. Roe, 2 Houst. 49.

[c] (Md. 1861) On the issue of marriage to determine legitimacy, the mother of the child whose legitimacy is in question is a competent witness to prove the fact of her marriage.—Craufurd v. Blackburn, 17 Md. 49, 77 Am. Dec. 323.

[d] (Mass. 1825) In a question of the settlement of a female pauper, depending on the validity of her marriage, the pauper and her supposed husband are competent to testify concerning the marriage.—Inhabitants of Raynham v. Inhabitants of Canton, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 293.

[e] (N. Y. 1851) Plaintiff's husband is competent to prove her marriage to sustain the objection that she is a married woman suing without her husband or any next friend.—Willis v. Underhill, 6 How. Prac. 396.

[h] (Ohio, 1864) The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 314, declaring that husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other, "except in actions where the wife, were she a feme sole, would be plaintiff or defendant, in which action the wife may testify. Either the husband or wife may testify, but not both"—does not, in an action against husband and wife for services rendered to the wife before her marriage with her codefendant husband, exclude her from being a witness against plaintiff to prove the fact that when the services were rendered she was the wife of a former deceased husband, since after the death of her former husband, and previous to her marriage with her present husband, had she been sued for the services, she would have been the sole defendant.—Nuser v. Beach, 15 Ohio St. 172.

[i] (Pa. 1867) A man is a competent witness to prove that his second marriage was void by reason of a former marriage.—In re Shaak's Estate, 4 Brewst. 305.

[j] (Pa. 1892) On the claim of children to a share in an estate as grandchildren of decedent, their mother is a competent witness to the fact of her marriage to decedent's son, also deceased.—In re Drinkhouse's Estate, 151 Pa. 294, 24 Atl. 1083, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 38.

[l] (S. C. 1869) When, in a civil action, it is material to prove that a man and woman, who are not parties to the suit nor interested therein, were husband and wife at a certain time, the wife is a competent witness to prove that fact. —Leaphart v. Leaphart, 1 S. C. 199.

[m] (Tex. 1860) The husband is not a competent witness to prove a marriage contract in favor of his wife, since they cannot be witnesses for or against each other.—McDuffie v. Greenway, 24 Tex. 625.

[c] (Md. 1895) On an issue as to the legitimacy of a woman's children born while she was living in lawful wedlock with her husband, the testimony of the alleged father is inadmissible. —Scanlon v. Walshe, 81 Md. 118, 31 Atl. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 488.

[d] (Md. 1895) A husband or wife is incompetent to testify that children born to the wife during wedlock are bastards. —Scanlon v. Walshe, 81 Md. 118, 31 Atl. 498, 48 Am. St. Rep. 488.

[e] (Mass. 1848) Where the complainant in a prosecution under Rev. St. c. 49, relative to the maintenance of bastard children, marries after the commencement of the proceedings, and the husband comes in and joins with her in the prosecution, the wife is not thereby rendered incompetent as a witness.—Hyde v. Chapin, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 77.

[f] (N. Y. 1861) Neither under the Code nor at common law is a husband or wife competent to prove nonintercourse during periods of access to each other.—Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 80 Am. Dec. 255.

[g] (N. Y. 1869) In an action for the partition of real estate, in which the legitimacy of the children is put in issue by the heirs at law of the husband, the widow, even though she be a party to the suit, is a competent witness on behalf of the children.—Van Tuyl v. Van Tuyl, 8 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 5.

[h] (N. C. 1852) The mother is an incompetent witness to show whether a child alleged to be a bastard was born in wedlock, or whether, if born in wedlock, the facts exist which would still render it a bastard.—State v. Herman, 35 N. C. 502.

[i] (N. C. 1867) The colored mother of a bastard child has such an interest in proceedings in bastardy, within the meaning of Acts 1866, c. 40, § 9, regulating the competency of witnesses, as to render her a competent witness against a white man, whom she alleges to be the father of the child.—State v. Henderson, 61 N. C. 229.

[j] (N. C. 1877) On trial of an issue involving a question of legitimacy of an alleged heir, the mother of the individual may be received to testify that she was always true to her husband, his reputed father, and no other man could have been his father.—Warlick v. White, 76 N. C. 175.

[k] (Pa. 1801) On an indictment for bastardy it appeared that prosecutrix had married a person other than defendant three weeks before the birth of the child, having previously sworn the child to defendant. Held, that prosecutrix was a competent witness to prove intercourse with defendant.—Commonwealth v. Stricker, 1 Browne, Appendix, 47.

[l] (Pa. 1856) Nonaccess cannot be proved either by the husband or the wife, whether the action be civil or criminal, or whether the proceeding is one of settlement or bastardy, or to recover property claimed as heir at law.—Page v. Dennison, 1 Grant, Cas. 377.

[m] (Pa. 1857) The mother of a child begotten before marriage but born after is incompetent to prove that the child was not begotten by the man who became her husband.—Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 420, 72 Am. Dec. 644.

[n] (Pa. 1874) The policy of the law, as used in the statute declaring that "no interest or policy of the law shall exclude a party from being a witness," etc., does not include the public policy which prevents a husband or wife from proving nonaccess. — Tioga County v. South Creek Tp., 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 433.

[o] (Pa. 1874) The rule precluding a husband or wife from proving nonaccess for the purpose of bastardizing the issue applies where, on the day following the marriage, the husband abandoned the wife, and the child was born shortly afterwards at the house of her employer, whom she sought to charge with its paternity.—Tioga County v. South Creek Tp., 75 Pa. (25 P. F. Smith) 433.

[p] (Pa. 1887) In a trial on an indictment for fornication and bastardy, in which the prosecutrix was a married woman, the jury were instructed that a married woman, while the relation of coverture existed, would not be permitted to bastardize her child; that neither she nor her husband could testify as to the husband's nonaccess. But if they were satisfied by other evidence beyond a reasonable doubt of the nonaccess of the husband, they could then consider her testimony as to the paternity of the child. Held not error.—Easley v. Commonwealth, 11 Atl. 220.

[q] (Pa. 1892) A mother is competent to show that her son was born "eleven or twelve years" before her marriage, and is a bastard, and that his father was one other than her husband.—Appeal of McDonald, 147 Pa. 527, 23 Atl. 892, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 166.

[r] (S. C. 1868) On a trial as to the validity of a will by which the testator had made no provision for his wife and child, where the allegation was that the husband's mind had been influenced by insinuations as to his wife's infidelity, it was competent for the widow to testify that the testator was the father of the child, and such testimony was not superseded because the paternity of her child might be inferred from other evidence.—Moseley v. Eakin, 15 Rich. Law, 324.

[b] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 4008, which provides that no prosecution for adultery can be commenced but on the complaint of the husband or wife, does not render a husband incompetent as a witness against his divorced wife and her husband on the trial of an indictment against them for adultery committed before the divorce was granted, and before the marriage of defendants.—State v. Russell, 90 Iowa, 569, 58 N. W. 915.

[c] (Mich. 1870) Comp. Laws, § 4342, declaring that the husband and wife shall not be competent to testify in a proceeding instituted by either for adultery, does not apply to a criminal proceeding. The fact that a prosecution for adultery is commenced on the complaint of the husband or wife does not make the complainant a party. The state is the "party" instituting the "proceeding."—Parsons v. People, 21 Mich. 509.

[d] (Vt. 1876) On an indictment for adultery, the husband of the woman with whom the act was committed may testify to circumstances that do not directly criminate, but only tend to criminate, her. Thus, the prosecution having shown that, after respondent had been seen to enter the woman's shop, the husband was seen to try unsuccessfully to enter, and respondent, shortly followed by the woman, soon after to come out, the husband may be allowed to testify that he had sometimes tried the door and found it locked.—State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 202, 24 Am. Rep. 124.

[a] (Mich. 1896) On a prosecution for adultery, the husband of the one with whom he is alleged to have committed the offense may testify to his marriage to her.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819.

[b] (Mich. 1896) A wife who has instituted a prosecution of her husband for adultery cannot testify that she is his wife; 2 How. Ann. St. § 7546, providing that in a proceeding instituted by the husband or wife in consequence of adultery they shall not be competent to testify.—People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819.

[c] (Mich. 1896) In a prosecution of a man for adultery, his wife cannot testify for the state as to her marriage to, and cohabitation with, defendant.—People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250, 68 N. W. 157.

[d] (N. C. 1890) Under Code, § 588, which makes the husband and wife incompetent "to give evidence for or against the other in any action or proceeding on account of adultery, except to prove the fact of marriage," the husband of the female defendant in an indictment for fornication and adultery is a competent witness to prove her marriage to him.—State v. McDuffie, 107 N. C. 885, 12 S. E. 83.

[e] (Wis. 1839) On the trial of an indictment for adultery by a married woman, her husband was an incompetent witness even to prove the fact of her marriage to him, because of the disgrace involved to his family, and because, in the territory, adultery was a ground of divorce, and the husband might use a record of conviction of the wife for adultery, procured by his testimony, as evidence in his favor in a suit for divorce.—Mills v. United States, 1 Pin. 73.

As offense by husband or wife against the other, see post, § 176.

Effect of consent, see post, § 177 [c].

Testimony of unlawful wife, see post, § 178.

[a] A man's lawful wife is not a competent witness for the state in a prosecution against him for bigamy.

(Tex. 1894) Boyd v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 470, 26 S. W. 1080.

[b] (Ala. 1870) In a trial for bigamy, the true wife cannot be admitted as a witness to prove her own marriage, or her husband's confession that he had subsequently married another woman.—Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 24.

[c] (Iowa, 1882) Under laws of Iowa, in a prosecution for bigamy, the lawful wife is a competent witness to prove the marriage.—State v. Hughes, 58 Iowa, 165, 11 N. W. 706.

[f] (Tex. 1883) Code, art. 735, provides that husband and wife may be witnesses for one another in criminal cases. Held that, on a trial for bigamy, defendant, the husband, in rebuttal of the state's evidence of the first marriage, might compel the woman with whom it was charged to have been contracted to testify, although against her consent.—Dumas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 464, 46 Am. Rep. 241.

[g] (Utah, 1889) Under Comp. Laws, pp. 114, 115, § 1, providing that in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, etc., the lawful husband or wife shall be a competent witness, but shall not be compelled to testify without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be, the grand jury investigating a charge of polygamy may ask one claiming to be the lawful wife of the accused, for the purpose of ascertaining whether she was the lawful wife, whether another was married to the accused on the day of witness' marriage; and the court may enforce an answer to the question.—Ex parte Hendrickson, 6 Utah, 3, 21 Pac. 396.

[c] (Ind. 1891) Rev. St. 1881, § 501, providing that the wife shall not be competent to testify in an action by the husband for her seduction, does not apply to evidence of statements by her to her seducer in a conversation between him, the husband, and herself.—Mainard v. Reider, 2 Ind. App. 115, 28 N. E. 196.

[d] (N. H. 1844) The mother is not a competent witness to prove nonaccess by the husband; but, that being proved by other evidence, she is a competent witness to prove the criminal conversation.—Parker v. Way, 15 N. H. 45.

[e] (N. Y. 1873) Under Laws 1867, c. 887, plaintiff in an action for criminal conversation is not a competent witness to prove his marriage.—Dann v. Kingdom, 1 Thomp. & C. 492.

[f] (N. Y.) Plaintiff in an action for criminal conversation is not prohibited from testifying in his own behalf by Code Civ. Proc. § 831, which provides that "a husband or wife is not competent to testify against the other upon the trial of an action * * * founded upon the allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage or disprove the allegation of adultery," as the wife is not a party.—(1889) Smith v. O'Brien, 53 Hun, 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 174, judgment affirmed (1891) 127 N. Y. Supp. 684, 28 N. E. 256; (1890) Woods v. Gledhill, 56 Hun, 220, 9 N. Y. Supp. 266.

[g] (Or. 1885) In an action for criminal conversation with plaintiff's wife, plaintiff may prove the fact of his marriage by his own testimony.—Jacobsen v. Siddal, 12 Or. 280, 7 Pac. 108, 53 Am. Rep. 360.

[h] (Pa. 1887) A husband as plaintiff in an action for criminal conversation is incompetent as a witness to prove his wife's adultery.—Sahms v. Brown, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 488.

[i] (Pa. 1892) In an action for debauching plaintiff's wife, plaintiff is not a competent witness as to the wife's adultery.—Cornelius v. Hambay, 150 Pa. 359, 24 Atl. 515.

[j] (Wis. 1890) In an action for criminal conversation, plaintiff's wife is a competent witness for defendant to any matter in controversy except as to confidential communications between them during the marriage.—Smith v. Merrill, 75 Wis. 461, 44 N. W. 759.

[a] (N. Y. 1839) 1 Rev. St. p. 624, §§ 8, 10, provides that, when a father shall abscond leaving his wife and children chargeable to any town or likely to become so, the overseers of the poor may apply to any two justices for a warrant to seize his goods. Held, that the fact that a father has so absconded could not be established solely by the testimony of his wife.—Downing v. Rugar, 21 Wend. 178, 34 Am. Dec. 223.

[b] (N. C. 1872) On the trial of an indictment for abandonment, the wife is a competent witness to prove the fact of abandonment, but not to prove the marriage.—State v. Brown, 67 N. C. 470.

§ 164. Enticing and alienating.

[b] (Minn. 1880) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 10, providing that a wife cannot be examined "for or against her husband without his consent; nor can either during the marriage, or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"—a wife cannot testify against her husband in an action by him against a defendant for enticing her away.—Huot v. Wise, 27 Minn. 68, 6 N. W. 425.

[a] (Ind. 1878) In a habeas corpus proceeding by the mother of an illegitimate child, after her marriage, to obtain the custody of the child from one to whom it had been apprenticed, the husband of the mother was not a competent witness in her behalf.—Copeland v. State, 60 Ind. 394.

[b] (N. Y. 1839) On a writ of habeas corpus by a husband to obtain the custody of his wife and child, the wife is competent to testify to acts of cruelty on the part of her husband, making it unsafe and improper for her to return to him.—People v. Mercein, 8 Paige, 47.

(f) ACTIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE AND PROSECUTIONS FOR OFFENSES BY HUSBAND OR WIFE AGAINST THE OTHER.

—— ADULTERY, § 175.

§ 166. Actions between husband and wife in general.

[a] (Kan. 1872) A husband and wife are competent witnesses both for and against each other in an action where husband and wife, together with other persons, have been made parties, and in which the judgment may be rendered for or against any one or more of the plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of the defendants.—Ruth v. Ford, 9 Kan. 17.

[b] (La. 1886) A wife cannot be a witness in a suit against her husband for dissolution of the community and recovery of her moneyed claim against him.—Cooley v. Cooley, 38 La. Ann. 195.

[c] (Md. 1882) Under the provisions of Acts 1864, c. 109, and its supplements, a wife is a competent witness against a husband in an action by her to set aside a marriage contract affecting her marital rights in the property of the husband.—Classen v. Classen, 57 Md. 510.

[d] (Mo. 1874) A husband and wife are competent witnesses against each other in a suit by the husband to devest the wife of title to land.—Darrier v. Darrier, 58 Mo. 222.

[e] (Neb. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. tit. 10, § 331, prohibiting husband or wife to testify against the other "except in criminal proceedings for a crime committed against the other," a wife cannot testify in an action by herself against her husband for the use and occupation by him of her real estate, though Comp. St. 1893, c. 53, empowers married women to contract in relation to their separate property, and to sue and be sued, as if unmarried.—Skinner v. Skinner, 38 Neb. 756, 57 N. W. 534.

[f] (Neb. 1895) In an action by a wife against her husband and her son to cancel, for fraud, a joint deed of her husband and herself to the son, the husband being a mere nominal defendant, plaintiff may testify in her own behalf.—Buckingham v. Roar, 45 Neb. 244, 63 N. W. 398.

[g] (Neb. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 331, providing that neither husband nor wife shall be competent to testify against the other except in criminal proceedings, the wife is not a competent witness against the husband in an action by her against him for slander.—Bohner v. Bohner, 46 Neb. 204, 64 N. W. 700.

[h] (N. J. 1885) On a bill filed by a wife for moneys received for her by her husband, she cannot be a witness to prove the admissions of her husband.—Gray v. Gray, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 511.

[i] (N. Y. 1870) Under Laws 1867, c. 887, § 1, providing that the husband or wife of any party shall be competent to testify as any other witness, and section 2, providing that a husband or wife may not testify for or against the other in a criminal action or in any suit for divorce or other proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, except to prove the fact of marriage, the husband or wife may testify in any action between themselves in his or her own behalf.—Minier v. Minier, 4 Lans. 421.

[j] (Pa. 1893) In replevin for household goods, defendant disclaimed title, and averred that it was owned by plaintiff's wife, who was living with defendant, her sister. Plaintiff's replication denied title in his wife, and reaverred title and possession in himself. Held, that plaintiff was not competent as a witness as to the ownership of the property, since the issue was between himself and his wife, and neither is competent to testify "against the other," under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, subd. c.—Johnson v. Watson, 157 Pa. 454, 27 Atl. 772, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 346.

[k] (Va. 1890) In a suit brought by a wife against the husband to establish a resulting trust in her favor in lands standing in the name of the husband, complainant is not a competent witness.—Crabtree v. Dunn, 86 Va. 953, 11 S. E. 1053.

[m] (W. Va. 1883) Code, c. 130, §§ 22, 23, made no material change in the common-law rule governing the testimony of husband and wife, except in controversies between them. The words "action or suit" as used are synonymous with "controversy," and therefore they are incompetent witnesses for or against each other in a controversy between them and a third party, though they stand in the suit as plaintiff and defendant.—Anderson v. Snyder, 21 W. Va. 632.

[a] (Ky. 1873) Where plaintiff seeks to set aside his marriage on the ground of duress, he is not a competent witness.—Bassett v. Bassett, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 696.

[b] (La. 1895) In an action to annul a marriage on the ground that plaintiff's consent thereto was procured by threats of criminal prosecution, the status of the parties before the court being that of husband and wife, neither can testify, though the parents of both spouses are parties to the action.—Lacoste v. Guidroz, 47 La. Ann. 295, 16 South. 836.

[c] (Mass. 1859) On the trial of a libel to annul a marriage, one party cannot be admitted as a witness under the express provisions of St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, if the other is insane.—Little v. Little, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 264.

[d] (Mass. 1866) A party to the proceeding is a competent witness in a libel for sentence of nullity of marriage, under Gen. St. c. 107, § 4.—Foss v. Foss, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 26.

(N. Y. 1875) Roe v. Roe, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Jones & S.) 1.

[c] (Colo. 1880) Under Act Feb. 11, 1870, § 1, which provides that no person shall be disqualified as a witness by reason of his interest in the event, and section 5, which provides that no husband or wife shall be competent to testify for or against each other except where the action grows out of personal wrong or injury done by one to the other, the husband in a suit for divorce on the ground of desertion is a competent witness in his own behalf.—Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348.

[d] (D. C. 1883) Rev. St. §§ 876, 877, providing that parties to actions may be competent and compellable to testify except where charged with an offense, and except that the husband shall not be competent and be compellable to testify for or against the wife, or the wife to testify for or against the husband, in any proceeding necessitated in consequence of adultery, do not apply to suits for divorce.—Burdette v. Burdette, 2 Mackey, 469.

[e] (Fla. 1882) McClel. Dig. pp. 517, 518, which innovate upon the rule of the common law to the extent that interest in the event of an action, or merely being a party, will not exclude a witness from testifying, and permit married women in civil actions to testify in cases where their husbands are competent witnesses, do not make the husband or wife competent witnesses in a divorce case between them.—McGill v. McGill, 19 Fla. 341.

[f] (Ga. 1871) Under Code, § 3798, a husband is a competent witness in an action for divorce for desertion.—Castello v. Castello, 41 Ga. 613.

as witnesses in suits for divorce.—Morse v. Morse, 25 Ind. 156.

[h] (Ind. 1886) Special provisions contained in the statute, regulating proceedings in divorce cases, will govern, though different from the rules which obtain in ordinary civil actions; and therefore provisions in the statute making it improper in divorce causes to use interrogatories to the parties will govern, though proper in ordinary civil actions.—Simons v. Simons, 107 Ind. 197, 8 N. E. 37.

[i] (Kan. 1896) Under Gen. St. 1889, par. 4418, providing that a husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other, except concerning transactions in which one acted as agent of the other, or when they are joint parties, and have a joint interest in the action, and that in no case shall either be permitted to testify to any communication made by one or the other during the marriage, whether called while that relation subsists or afterwards, a husband and wife are incompetent to testify against each other in an action for divorce or for alimony.—Shepherd v. Shepherd, 4 Kan. App. 546, 45 Pac. 658.

[j] (La. 1834) A suit for separation from bed and board is an action of divorce. Acts 1827, No. 73, § 3, relative to such actions, and removing the disqualification of relationship under Civ. Code, art. 2260, applies to both species of divorce.—Savoie v. Ignogoso, 7 La. 281.

[l] (Me. 1859) Neither the husband nor wife can, under Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, §§ 77-83, testify as witnesses in a divorce suit to which they are parties.—Dwelly v. Dwelly, 46 Me. 377.

[m] (N. Y. 1828) In a suit brought by either husband or wife for a divorce, her affidavit is admissible against the husband as to any matter in the cause.—Kirby v. Kirby, 1 Paige, 261.

[o] (N. Y. 1862) In the trial of an action for limited divorce husband and wife are competent witnesses against each other.—P——— v. P———, 24 How. Prac. 197.

[p] (N. Y. 1866) Where, in an action for divorce, judgment is rendered for plaintiff, and a motion made to set aside the judgment, and a reference made to determine a disputed fact thereon, defendant is not a competent witness to testify on her own behalf before the referee.—Lincoln v. Lincoln, 29 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Rob.) 525.

[q] (Pa. 1871) In divorce cases, a husband or wife may testify in his or her favor, but cannot be compelled to testify against themselves.—Bronson v. Bronson, 8 Phila. 261.

[t] (Tex. 1882) Rev. St. art. 2247, providing that "the husband or wife of a party to a suit * * * shall not be incompetent to testify therein," does not give parties to divorce suits the right to testify in their own behalf.—Cornish v. Cornish, 56 Tex. 564.

§ 169. —— Personal service of subpœna or rule to take deposition or appearance and order of court.

[a] (Mich. 1882) The testimony of parties in a divorce proceeding should not be taken without an order of court for that purpose.—Stuart v. Stuart, 47 Mich. 566, 11 N. W. 388.

[b] (Pa.) Under Act April 15, 1869, and Act March 4, 1870, libelant is incompetent as a witness where personal service of the subpœna is not made on the respondent, or he does not appear and defend.—(1878) Ramsey v. Ramsey, 1 Leg. Chron. 47, 55, 5 Leg. Gaz. 53; (1877) Koch v. Koch, 1 Leg. Rec. Rep. 67.

[c] (Pa. 1890) Under Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 159), which provides that neither husband nor wife shall testify against each other except in proceedings for divorce in which personal service of the subpœna, or of a rule to take depositions, has been made upon the opposite party, or in which the opposite party appears and defends, libelant may testify to the facts set forth in her libel, when neither the subpœna has been served on respondent nor has he appeared, when notice of the meeting before the master had reached respondent by registered letter.—Kolp v. Kolp (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 1.

[d] (Pa. 1891) Act May 23, 1887, § 5 (P. L. 158), provides that neither the husband nor wife shall be permitted to testify against the other except in proceedings for divorce, in which personal service of the subpœna or a rule to take deposition has been made upon the opposite party, or in which the opposite party appears and defends. Held, that a wife cannot testify against her husband in divorce proceedings in which service was had upon the husband by publication, though she has by registered letter served upon her husband notice of her intention to testify.—Payne v. Payne (Com. Pl.) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 188.

[a] (D. C. 1883) In a suit brought by a wife for divorce for cruelty, she may testify as to what took place between herself and her husband in the absence of third persons; Rev. St. §§ 876, 877, regulating the competency of witnesses, not applying to such a case.—Burdette v. Burdette, 2 Mackey, 469.

[b] (Ind. 1881) By Acts 1879, p. 245, a wife is a competent witness against her husband in an action by her for divorce as to his habits of intoxication and general treatment of her, the only exceptions of said acts being in actions by him for her seduction, and as to communications to each other during marriage.—Smith v. Smith, 77 Ind. 80.

[c] (Me. 1834) In a libel by a wife for a divorce from bed and board on the ground of cruelty, a record of the husband's conviction for an assault and battery on the wife, in which it appears that there was a trial in the case and that the wife was a witness, is not admissible.—Woodruff v. Woodruff, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 475.

[d] (Miss. 1880) A wife is not competent to testify as a witness against her husband in a suit by her for divorce even as to acts of personal violence.—Anonymous, 58 Miss. 15.

[e] (N. J. 1880) The husband's testimony in a divorce suit is not competent to prove her handwriting on an intercepted letter to her alleged paramour.—Doughty v. Doughty, 32 N. J. Eq. (5 Stew.) 32.

[f] (N. Y. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 831, which provides that "a husband or wife is not competent to testify against the other upon the trial of an action * * * founded upon an allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage, or disprove the allegation of adultery," a wife who is plaintiff in an action for divorce on the ground of adultery is incompetent to testify to the jurisdictional facts required by section 1756, namely, the venue of the offense and the residence of the parties.—Dickinson v. Dickinson, 63 Hun, 516, 18 N. Y. Supp. 485.

[g] (N. C. 1873) In a suit for divorce, the husband is a competent witness to prove the impotence of his wife.—Barringer v. Barringer, 69 N. C. 179.

[h] (Pa. 1895) Under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. c, making either party in a proceeding for divorce competent to testify when personal service of the subpœna has been made, a wife may testify as to conduct and statements of her husband.—Seitz v. Seitz, 170 Pa. 71, 32 Atl. 578.

[i] (Tex. 1893) On an issue as to whether plaintiff in a divorce suit had contracted a venereal disease from defendant, evidence that defendant sent her a package of medicine, with written directions as to its use, is competent; sending such package being an act, and not a confession or admission, on his part, and the written instructions sent therewith constituting a part of the act, and being admissible as such.—Hanna v. Hanna, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 21 S. W. 720.

[a] (N. Y. 1869) Under the statutes enabling a wife to testify affecting her husband, she may testify in her own behalf, in her action for a divorce, to prove a marriage in fact; there having been no ceremonial marriage.—Bissell v. Bissell, 55 Barb. 325, 7 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 16.

[b] (N. Y. 1877) In a divorce suit, a husband or wife is not competent to testify to his or her previous marriage for the purpose of showing that the subsequent marriage to the opposite party in the divorce suit was void.—Finn v. Finn, 12 Hun, 339.

[c] (Pa. 1888) The libelant in a divorce proceeding is, under Act May 23, 1887, competent to prove the fact of marriage.—Burke v. Burke, 1 Lack. Jur. 12.

[b] (N. H. 1867) On a libel for a divorce on the ground of adultery, confessions of the libelee may be received, and, if corroborated, may justify a decree of divorce.—Burgess v. Burgess, 47 N. H. 395.

[c] (N. J. 1870) On a bill for divorce on the ground of adultery, testimony of defendant and of her alleged accomplice in guilt is competent.—Mayer v. Mayer, 21 N. J. Eq. (6 C. E. Green) 246.

[d] (N. J.) Neither husband nor wife can be a witness for or against the other in a suit for divorce on the ground of adultery.—(1878) Marsh v. Marsh, 29 N. J. Eq. (2 Stew.) 296; (1880) Doughty v. Doughty, 32 N. J. Eq. (5 Stew.) 32.

[e] (N. J. 1880) Acts 1880, p. 52, does not remove the disability of a wife, defendant in a divorce suit for adultery, to testify in denial of the charge.—Wells v. Wells, 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 4.

[f] (N. Y. 1844) The husband of a woman with whom another man had committed adultery is a competent witness to prove the fact, in a suit for a divorce, by the wife of the latter, under the laws of New York, where adultery was not a criminal offense.—Van Cort v. Van Cort, 4 Edw. Ch. 621.

[ff] (N. Y. 1857) Code, § 399, as amended in 1851, permitting a party to a proceeding to be examined as a witness in his own behalf, the same as any other witness, does not permit, in an action by the wife against the husband for divorce on ground of adultery, that she may testify against him.—Smith v. Smith, 15 How. Prac. 165.

[g] (N. Y. 1862) Code, § 399, permitting a party to be examined as a witness in his own behalf, does not permit a wife to testify against her husband in an action for divorce for adultery.—A. A. C. v. T. C., 25 How. Prac. 432.

[h] (N. Y. 1866) A wife who is defendant in an action by her husband for a divorce on the ground of adultery cannot testify in her own behalf.—Rivenburgh v. Rivenburgh, 47 Barb. 419.

[i] (N. Y. 1886) While, under Code, § 831, a husband is not competent to testify against his wife on the trial of an action founded on adultery, yet, in his divorce suit against her, founded on that ground, he is competent to testify to her insanity or to facts showing that he condoned her adultery.—Bailey v. Bailey, 41 Hun, 424.

[j] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for absolute divorce against the wife, an order requiring the wife to attend the trial for the purpose of enabling a witness to see whether or not the person he referred to in his testimony is defendant is a proper one, and does not violate the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 831, rendering a husband or wife incompetent to testify against the other on the trial of an action founded on the allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage; a simple appearance for identification cannot be held to be testifying within the meaning of such section.—Jacobson v. Jacobson, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 198.

[k] (N. Y.) Code Civ. Proc. § 831, as amended by Laws 1887, c. 103, permitting a husband or wife, on the trial of an action founded on an allegation of adultery, to testify against the other "to disprove the allegation of adultery," does not limit defendant's testimony to denials simply, but she may testify to any fact or circumstance, within her knowledge, competent and material on the question whether the act charged was committed.—(1887) Irsch v. Irsch, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 181; (1889) Stevens v. Stevens, 54 Hun, 490, 8 N. Y. Supp. 47; (1890) Steffens v. Steffens, 11 N. Y. Supp. 424, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 267, 16 Daly, 363.

[l] (N. Y. 1890) Plaintiff asked for separation on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment, and alleged that after she left defendant he declared that she could not return to him, and, for the purpose of injuring her, circulated false reports among her friends, charging her with adultery. Defendant, in his answer, alleged adultery on the part of plaintiff, and asked for divorce. Code Civ. Proc. § 831, provides that "a husband or wife is not competent to testify against the other upon the trial of an action * * * founded upon an allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage." Held, that plaintiff was not debarred, by reason of the counterclaim, from testifying as to the falsity of the report which he had circulated in regard to her adultery, so far as it was relevant to her cause of action, either before or after defendant introduced his evidence in support of his counterclaim.—De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 24 N. E. 906, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 831, providing that "a husband or a wife is not competent to testify against the other upon the trial of an action or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding founded upon an allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage," evidence by plaintiff in a suit for divorce, pointing to her husband's adultery, is incompetent, and will not be considered for any purpose, even if received without objection by defendant.—Fanning v. Fanning (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 90, 20 N. Y. Supp. 849.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) Code Civ. Proc. § 831, declares a husband or wife incompetent to testify on a trial of an action founded on an allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage or disprove the adultery. In an action by a wife for divorce for adultery, the husband testified that his wife desired a divorce so that she could marry a richer man; that at her request he went with her cousin to a house of ill fame, and went into a room with an inmate, but had no criminal intercourse with her; that said cousin at once told his wife, who next day got him his meals, and the day following amicably divided with him their household stuff. Held competent to disprove the adultery, and to explain otherwise damaging circumstances.—Huntley v. Huntley, 73 Hun, 261, 26 N. Y. Supp. 266.

[o] (N. Y. 1894) In a suit for divorce on the ground of adultery, in which defendant made a counter charge of adultery, testimony of plaintiff, if competent on either issue, was admissible.—McCarthy v. McCarthy, 143 N. Y. 235, 38 N. E. 288.

[p] (N. C. 1883) In an action for divorce on the ground of adultery, neither the husband nor the wife is a competent witness under 2 Battle's Revisal, c. 17, § 340, providing that in actions for divorce neither the husband nor the wife shall be a competent witness to prove the adultery of the other.—Perkins v. Perkins, 88 N. C. 41.

[q] (N. C. 1893) Code, § 1288, which provides that adultery cannot be shown either by the direct testimony of the parties, or the confessions of husband and wife, made to each other, does not render incompetent the testimony of a third person as to the declarations of the paramour of the accused party, and the conversation between such party and the paramour growing out of it, though amounting to an admission of criminality; nor does it render a third person incompetent to testify to a command uttered in her presence by the husband to the wife forbidding the house to the paramour, in connection with evidence of the wife's disregard of such command at the instance of the paramour.—Toole v. Toole, 112 N. C. 152, 16 S. E. 912, 34 Am. St. Rep. 479.

[a] (Ga. 1850) On application for a writ of ne exeat by a wife, against her husband, pending a suit for a partial divorce and alimony, her affidavit is admissible.—McGee v. McGee, 8 Ga. 295, 52 Am. Dec. 407.

§ 174. Prosecutions for offenses by husband or wife against the other.

[a] A husband or wife may testify for or against one another on a prosecution for personal injuries inflicted by one on the other.

[b] The wife of the accused, being the person injured, is a competent witness for the state in a trial for procuring an abortion by violence.—(Me. 1871) State v. Dyer, 59 Me. 303;

(Pa. 1895) Commonwealth v. Kreuger (Quart. Sess.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 181, 26 Pittsb. Leg. J. (N. S.) 182;

[e] (Iowa, 1893) Code 1873, §§ 3636, 3641, provide that persons of sufficient capacity to understand the obligations of an oath are competent witnesses in all cases, but that husband or wife shall in no case be a witness for or against the other, except in a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other. Held, that incest committed by a husband is a crime against his wife, and she was a competent witness against him.—State v. Chambers, 87 Iowa, 1, 53 N. W. 1090, 43 Am. St. Rep. 349.

[f] (Ky. 1881) Gen. St. c. 37, § 24, providing that neither husband nor wife shall be competent for a witness against each other, is applicable to criminal as well as civil proceedings. Therefore the admission of the testimony of the husband against the wife, on the trial of an indictment against the wife and another jointly indicted for willful and malicious cutting and wounding of the husband, is ground for reversal.—Turnbull v. Commonwealth, 3 Ky. Law Rep. 275.

[g] (La. 1890) On the trial of a husband for an attempt to murder his wife, she is a competent witness against him.—State v. Parker, 42 La. Ann. 972, 8 South. 473.

[h] (Md. 1851) The only exception to the rule that neither the husband nor wife can be witnesses for or against each other is where the husband commits an offense against the person of the wife.—Williamson v. Morton, 2 Md. Ch. 94.

[i] (Mich. 1893) An indecent assault by a husband on his nine year old daughter is not such a "personal" wrong or injury to the wife as to allow her to testify against the husband in a criminal prosecution.—People v. Westbrook, 94 Mich. 629, 54 N. W. 486, following Same v. Quanstrom (1892) 93 Mich. 254, 53 N. W. 165, 17 L. R. A. 723.

[j] (N. Y. 1850) Since a wife can be a witness against her husband in a criminal proceeding only when he is charged with committing or threatening an injury to her person, on an indictment against the husband for using criminal means, subornation of perjury, to wrong her in a judicial proceeding, she cannot be a witness on the part of the people.—People v. Carpenter, 9 Barb. 580.

[k] (N. Y. 1857) On the trial of an indictment for a personal injury by a husband to his wife, the wife is a competent witness in behalf of her husband.—People v. Fitzpatrick, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 26.

[l] (N. Y. 1857) On trial of an indictment for personal injury by the husband on his wife, the prosecution could not be compelled to call the prosecutrix as a witness.—People v. Fitzpatrick, 5 Parker Cr. R. 26.

[m] (N. Y. 1857) Where, on prosecution of a husband for a personal injury to his wife, the state refused to call the prosecutrix as a witness, the husband was entitled to call her as a witness in his behalf.—People v. Fitzpatrick, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 26.

[n] (N. Y. 1867) A wife is a competent witness for the prosecution on the trial of her husband for an attempt to poison her; and, being a competent witness, there is no rule whereby any part of her testimony should be excluded if admissible on other grounds.—People v. Northrup, 50 Barb. 147.

[nn] (N. C.) Husband or wife is competent against the other on a trial for assault and battery committed by the other on the witness, if the violence used involved or threatened lasting injury; otherwise not.—(1852) State v. Hussey, 44 N. C. 123; (1877) Same v. Davidson, 77 N. C. 522.

[o] (Pa. 1842) Where, in a charge of conspiracy to obtain a divorce, the indictment does not allege the commission of personal violence, or the intention to commit it, a wife will not be permitted to testify against her husband.—Commonwealth v. McEwen, 1 Clark, 140, 1 Pa. Law J. 388.

[p] (Pa. 1850) A female who has been seduced, and, after the birth of a child, married and deserted by her seducer, is not a competent witness against him on an indictment for seduction, under the statute of 1843.—Commonwealth v. Eichar, 4 Clark, 326, 1 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 551.

[r] (R. I. 1869) A wife is a competent witness against a person accused of producing abortion on her at her husband's command.—State v. Briggs, 9 R. I. 361, 11 Am. Rep. 270.

[s] (S. C. 1811) A wife may be admitted as evidence against her husband, in an indictment for an assault and battery committed on her by him, where no other person was present when the offense was committed.—State v. Davis, 3 Brev. 3, 5 Am. Dec. 529.

[t] (Tex. 1875) A wife cannot testify against her husband on his trial for theft of her property.—Overton v. State, 43 Tex. 616.

[v] (Tex. 1895) It is error, on the trial of a husband for slander of his wife, to permit the latter to testify against him, as Code Cr. Proc. art. 735, allowing either to do so in a "criminal prosecution by one against the other," applies only to cases of personal violence.—Baxter v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 516, 31 S. W. 394, 53 Am. St. Rep. 720.

[a] (Iowa, 1871) In a prosecution against a wife for adultery, the husband is a competent witness for the state; it is a "crime committed against" him, in the sense of the Revision, § 3983.—State v. Bennett, 31 Iowa, 24.

[b] (Minn. 1860) A prosecution of a married man for adultery is not within the exception of Pub. St. p. 681, § 53, allowing a wife to testify against her husband in "a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other," notwithstanding the provision of Pub. St. p. 728, § 1, that "no prosecution for adultery shall be commenced except on the complaint of the husband or the wife."—State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335 (Gil. 251).

[d] (Tex. 1880) Under a statute permitting husband and wife to testify against one another on a criminal prosecution, for an offense committed by one against the other, the one may testify against the other on an indictment of the other for adultery.—Roland v. State, 9 Tex. App. 277, 35 Am. Rep. 743.

Prosecutions for bigamy or polygamy in general, see ante, § 161.

[a] (U. S. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. Utah, § 1156, declares that, without the other's consent, neither husband nor wife shall be examined against the other, or be questioned during or after marriage as to any communication made between them, but that this rule does not apply to a civil action by one against the other, or to a criminal proceeding "for a crime committed by one against the other." Held, that a subsequent marriage by a married man is not a crime against the lawful wife which can be proved by her evidence of his confessions to her.—Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 11 Sup. Ct. 165, 34 L. Ed. 762, reversing United States v. Bassett (1887) 5 Utah, 131, 13 Pac. 237.

[b] (Iowa, 1880) Code 1873, § 3641, provides that neither the husband nor wife shall be a witness against the other, except in a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other. Held, that on an indictment for bigamy the legal spouse of defendant is a competent witness for the state.—State v. Sloan, 55 Iowa, 217, 7 N. W. 516.

[c] (La. 1860) The exception recognized as to the competency of the wife to testify against her husband, where she has sustained a personal injury, does not extend to cases of bigamy; in these the lawful wife is held to be incompetent.—State v. McDavid, 15 La. Ann. 403.

[d] (Mich. 1892) Bigamy on the part of a husband is not such a "personal" wrong or injury to the wife as to allow her to testify against the husband in a criminal prosecution, under 3 How. Ann. St. § 7546, forbidding her testimony except in cases growing out of such a wrong or injury, and forbidding it also in any proceeding instituted by her in consequence of adultery.—People v. Quanstrom, 93 Mich. 254, 53 N. W. 165, 17 L. R. A. 723.

[e] (Pa. 1869) A second wife is not a competent witness against the husband, indicted for bigamy, unless the fact of the former marriage is clearly proved and the defendant has failed to show its dissolution.—Commonwealth v. Wyman, 3 Brewst. 338.

[f] (Utah, 1887) Under Civ. Code, § 1156 (Laws 1884), permitting a husband or wife to testify in a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, on the trial of a husband, on an indictment for polygamy, the wife is a competent witness against him.—United States v. Bassett, 5 Utah, 131, 13 Pac. 237.

[g] (Utah, 1888) Under Civ. Code, § 1156 (Laws 1884, p. 359), permitting a husband or wife to testify in a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, the legal wife is competent to testify against her husband before the grand jury which found an indictment against him for polygamy.—United States v. Cutler, 5 Utah, 608, 19 Pac. 145.

(g) EFFECT OF CONSENT, INVALIDITY OF MARRIAGE, OR TERMINATION OF RELATION.

CONSENT OF OR AGREEMENT BY HUSBAND OR WIFE AS TO ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY BY THE OTHER, § 177.
INVALIDITY OF MARRIAGE, § 178.
TERMINATION OF RELATION IN GENERAL, § 179.
DIVORCE OR SEPARATION, § 180.
—— ADULTERY AND CRIMINAL CONVERSATION, § 181.
DEATH OF HUSBAND OR WIFE, § 182.

§ 177. Consent of or agreement by husband or wife as to admission of testimony by the other.

[a] (Me. 1859) A husband or wife cannot by agreement become competent witnesses in an action between them for a divorce.—Dwelly v. Dwelly, 46 Me. 377.

[b] (Mich. 1883) When a husband is present in court, and does not object to his wife's testifying, his consent is to be presumed.—Benson v. Morgan, 50 Mich. 77, 14 N. W. 705, distinguishing Hubbell v. Grant (1878) 39 Mich. 641.

[c] (N. J. 1858) A wife cannot testify against her husband on a charge of bigamy, even with his consent.—Wilson v. Hill, 13 N. J. Eq. (2 Beasl.) 143.

[d] (S. C. 1830) In a suit to which her husband is not a party, a wife is competent to testify against the interest of her husband, if he do not object.—Jackson v. Heath, 1 Bailey, 355.

Competency of concubine in general, see ante, § 108 [f].

Marriage pending suit and marriage for purpose of suppressing testimony, see ante, § 126.

[a] The common-law rule or a statutory prohibition against the husband or wife testifying one against the other does not include parties living unlawfully together, though they recognize each other as husband and wife.

(La. 1860) State v. McDavid, 15 La. Ann. 403;

[c] (Ala. 1846) Slaves, though living together as husband and wife, may be witnesses for or against each other, in a criminal case.—Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 990.

[d] (Ala. 1871) The marriage relations formerly allowed to be contracted between slaves having been declared lawful marriages as between persons who have continued to live as husband and wife since emancipation (Pamph. Acts, 175, Ord. No. 23, § 1), a wife by such a marriage of one formerly a slave is within the general rule forbidding a wife to be a witness for or against her husband.—Hampton v. State, 45 Ala. 82.

[e] (Ala. 1875) Where a freedman and freedwoman, living together as husband and wife, by the operation of the act of December 31, 1868, are to be regarded as legally married, neither is a competent witness against the other on the trial for an offense committed on a third person.—Jackson v. State, 53 Ala. 472.

[f] (Ga. 1861) On the trial of slaves or free persons of color, the husband or wife is not admissible as a witness for or against one another.—William v. State, 33 Ga. Supp. 85.

[g] (Ga. 1894) A woman to whom defendant was married during the life of his lawful wife, is a competent witness against him.—Wrye v. State, 95 Ga. 466, 22 S. E. 273.

[h] (La. 1854) The rule that a wife cannot testify for or against her husband does not prevent a woman who had lived with accused for four years as his mistress from testifying in his behalf.—State v. Johnson, 9 La. Ann. 308.

[i] (La. 1876) The objection to a wife testifying against her husband cannot be sustained, where the woman produced as a witness testifies on the voir dire that she has never been married to the accused, though she has lived with him as his wife.—State v. Brown, 28 La. Ann. 279.

[j] (Mich. 1869) After the prosecution in a criminal case has shown by a woman on the voir dire an actual marriage between defendant and the witness, prima facie valid and in good faith, on which defendant might reasonably and honestly rely as valid, and which on the trial he did rely on and claim as valid, it is not competent for the prosecution to introduce opposing testimony for the purpose of establishing the invalidity of the marriage, so as to make the alleged wife a competent witness against defendant.—Dixon v. People, 18 Mich. 84.

[k] (N. C. 1836) The concubinage of slaves does not constitute the marriage relation, and forbid the parties testifying against each other.—State v. Samuel, 19 N. C. 177.

[l] (N. C. 1868) Defendant in a criminal prosecution and a woman while slaves had cohabited as man and wife, and after their emancipation they observed the ceremonies prescribed by

St. 1866, c. 40, § 5. Held that the woman was the wife of defendant, and was not admissible as a witness in his behalf.—State v. Harris, 63 N. C. 1.

[n] (Utah, 1874) Under Prac. Act, § 379, which excludes the wife from testifying for or against her husband, except when the action is between themselves, when a witness is offered by a party to the suit, with the statement that "she is his plural or second wife," such witness will be excluded, and the court will not try the question of the validity of marriage, or the relations of the parties.—Freil v. Wood, 1 Utah, 160.

[o] (Vt. 1895) In an action for deceit against one who induced plaintiff to marry him by false representations that he was single, where it appeared that defendant was not divorced from his wife until after the second marriage, plaintiff could testify in her own behalf, since the parties were not husband and wife.—Morrill v. Palmer, 68 Vt. 1, 33 Atl. 829, 33 L. R. A. 411.

[a] (Ind. 1859) After the marriage relation ceases to exist, a husband or wife are competent as to anything the knowledge of which was not obtained through the privacy thereof.—Woolley v. Turner, 13 Ind. 253.

[a] The rule that neither the husband nor wife can be a witness for or against the other extends to cases where the wife is divorced from the husband.

—(Ill. 1859) Waddams v. Humphrey, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 661;

(Md. 1851) Williamson v. Morton, 2 Md. Ch. 94;

[b] (Ala. 1888) A divorced wife is competent to testify as to matters which have occurred after the divorce.—Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36, 5 South. 443.

[c] (Del. 1853) A wife, though separated by partial divorce, cannot be a witness against her husband.—Kemp v. Downham, 5 Har. 417.

[d] (Ind. 1872) Where the marriage relation has terminated by divorce, the wife may testify as to statements made to third persons by the husband during its existence.—Mercer v. Patterson, 41 Ind. 440.

[e] (Ky. 1877) The rule which excludes a husband or wife from testifying against the other does not apply to facts known to a divorced husband or wife, independent of the previous existence of the marriage.—Elswick v. Commonwealth, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 155.

[f] (Ky. 1890) On the trial of a husband for an attempt to poison his wife, since divorced, she is a competent witness against him, to prove that she saw him sprinkle some substance on food intended for her, and that the food produced at the trial, and proved to contain arsenic, is part of that prepared for her, and in the same condition as when she received it from him; though Civ. Code, § 606, provides that "neither husband nor wife shall be competent for or against each other, or concerning any communication made by one to the other during marriage, whether called while that relation subsists or afterwards."—Commonwealth v. Sapp, 90 Ky. 580, 14 S. W. 834, 29 Am. St. Rep. 405.

[g] (La. 1856) The voluntary separation of husband and wife does not affect the rule rendering them incompetent to testify for or against one another.—Tulley v. Alexander, 11 La. Ann. 628.

[h] (Md. 1849) The rule of evidence, that husband and wife cannot be witnesses for or against each other, is firmly established, and is founded partly on identity of interest, and partly on that principle of public policy which seeks to prevent discord in families, a policy of which no evasion will be permitted, even after divorce.—Bradford v. Williams, 2 Md. Ch. 1.

[i] (Mich. 1878) At the trial of a woman for murder committed in an attack by herself and others upon her husband and some associates, the husband is a competent witness, he and defendant having been living apart for some time under circumstances of great hostility, and divorce proceedings being then pending, under which a divorce was granted previous to the trial.—People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117.

[j] (Mo. 1894) A divorced wife is not disqualified as a witness for or against her former husband, except as to communications between them while the marital relation existed.—Toovey v. Baxter, 59 Mo. App. 470, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 39.

[k] (N. Y. 1847) After a wife has been divorced from her husband, she will not be permitted to testify against him in respect to transactions which took place prior to the divorce and during coverture.—Barnes v. Camack, 1 Barb. 392.

[m] (S. C. 1830) A husband is incompetent to testify for the benefit of an estate, of which his wife is a distributee, although they live apart, deal separately, and are under bonds not to interfere with the property of each other.—Terry v. Belcher, 1 Bailey, 568.

[o] (Tenn. 1858) In an action for assault and battery, where the difficulty was claimed by defendant to have arisen because of the abuse inflicted by plaintiff on his wife, who was defendant's sister, the wife, though divorced from plaintiff, is incompetent to testify as to the abuse inflicted on her during the continuance of their union.—Kimbrough v. Mitchell, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 539.

ted during coverture.—State v. Phelps, 2 Tyler, 374, overruling Same v. J. N. B. (1801) 1 Tyler, 36.

[t] (Vt. 1892) In replevin it is not error to permit plaintiff's divorced wife to testify to facts contradictory of plaintiff relating to a settlement between him and defendant in the witness' presence, during the existence of the marriage relation, where none of such facts are direct evidence of the commission of a crime by plaintiff.—French v. Ware, 65 Vt. 338, 26 Atl. 1096; Same v. Follett, Id.

[u] (Vt. 1892) Under the common law, a divorced wife is a competent witness to testify against her divorced husband to any facts or acts occurring during their marriage which did not come to her knowledge in confidence growing out of the marital relation, though they may tend to show that the husband has committed a fraud, to discredit him as a witness, or to indirectly, but not directly, show that he has been guilty of a crime.—French v. Ware, 65 Vt. 338, 26 Atl. 1096; Same v. Follett, Id.

[a] (Ill. 1868) A divorced wife is incompetent to testify in behalf of her former husband, in an action by him against another for seducing her.—Rea v. Tucker, 51 Ill. 110, 99 Am. Dec. 539.

[b] (Mass. 1850) In an action on the case brought by a husband for criminal conversation with his wife, the latter, after a divorce from the bonds of matrimony, is a competent witness for plaintiff, to prove the charge in the declaration.—Dickerman v. Graves, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 308, 53 Am. Dec. 41.

[c] (Mich. 1894) The applicability of 2 How. Ann. St. § 7546, prohibiting a husband or wife from testifying in a suit by one of them on account of adultery, is not affected by the fact that they have been divorced since the time of the alleged adultery.—Hanselman v. Dovel, 102 Mich. 505, 60 N. W. 978, 47 Am. St. Rep. 557.

[d] (N. Y. 1841) After a divorce a vinculo, a wife may be a witness for her former husband in an action of criminal conversation, brought by him against a third person, though the offense was committed during her marriage.—Ratcliff v. Wales, 1 Hill, 63.

[e] (N. Y. 1877) In an action for criminal conversation, the divorced wife of plaintiff is a competent witness for him, both to prove the marriage and the offense.—Wottrich v. Freeman, 71 N. Y. 601.

[f] (N. C. 1838) In an indictment for fornication and adultery, one who had been the husband of the feme defendant, but had been divorced from her on account of her adultery, is incompetent to testify against defendants as to the adulterous intercourse, or any other fact which occurred while the marriage subsisted. And if the testimony be received at the trial, after objection made to it, and defendants be found guilty, and the man alone appeals, it is not thereby rendered competent against him.—State v. Jolly, 20 N. C. 108, 32 Am. Dec. 656.

[a] (Ala. 1843) If one of two defendants in a suit against them as makers of a note dies pending the suit, his widow becomes a competent witness for plaintiff, although no entry has been made suggesting the death of her husband.—Saunders v. Hendrix, 5 Ala. 224.

[b] (Ark. 1874) After the husband's death, the wife is competent to testify as to such matters, touching his business, as came under her observation during his life, and were not learned by communications from him.—Spivey v. Platon, 29 Ark. 603.

[c] (Conn. 1808) A wife may be a witness for her husband in an action of book debt, after his death, though the charges accrued in his lifetime.—Stanton v. Willson, 3 Day, 37, 3 Am. Dec. 255.

[d] (Ga. 1873) In a suit by an administrator de bonis non to recover property of the intestate, sold by his predecessor as his own, on which there is a charge in favor of the latter's wife which defendants claim she has relinquished, the wife is a competent witness, notwithstanding the death of the husband.—Seabrook v. Brady, 47 Ga. 650.

[e] (Ill. 1888) In an action for partition and assignment of dower and homestead, in which complainant claims through his deceased wife, and defendants dispute her title except as to a one-fifth interest, and assert title as heirs of another deceased person, the husband is not incompetent, under Rev. St. c. 51, § 5, which renders a husband and wife incompetent to testify for or against each other in certain cases.—Best v. Jenks, 123 Ill. 447, 15 N. E. 173.

[f] (Ill. 1892) Rev. St. c. 51, § 5, makes a wife competent to testify in all matters of business in which she acted as agent of her husband. Held, that she is competent to testify as to such matters even after his death.—Robnett v. Robnett, 43 Ill. App. 191.

[g] (Ind. 1863) Where plaintiff having sold land to a feme covert, since deceased, sues to enforce his lien for the purchase money against her husband and heirs, the husband may be made a witness for plaintiff, but questions as to matters either for or against his wife, and perhaps also as to communications made to him by her during coverture, must not be put to him.—Haugh v. Blythe's Ex'rs, 20 Ind. 24.

[h] (Ind. 1864) A widow is a competent witness in favor of her husband's administrator, to give general evidence either for or against her husband.—Adams v. Adams' Adm'r, 23 Ind. 50.

[i] (Iowa, 1887) Code 1873, § 3641, forbidding a husband or wife to testify against each other, does not render a widow incompetent to testify for plaintiff in an action against her husband's executor on an account alleged to be due from the testator.—Parcell v. McReynolds, 71 Iowa, 623, 33 N. W. 139.

[j] (Ky. 1841) After the death of her husband, the wife is competent to prove his public acts, not affecting his character.—McGuire v. Maloney, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 224.

[k] (Ky. 1871) A surviving wife or husband may testify, in behalf of the administrator of the estate of the deceased, to facts known by the witness from other means of information than such as result from the marriage relation, where the witness is not otherwise incompetent, although the testimony may relate to transactions of the deceased husband or wife.—English's Adm'r v. Cropper, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 292.

[l] (La. 1876) The rule which forbids a husband or wife to testify does not operate after death of the other.—Reilly v. Succession of Reilly, 28 La. Ann. 669.

claims against him.—Lehman v. Levy, 30 La. Ann. 745.

[o] (Md. 1873) A woman claiming the right as widow to administer on the estate of a deceased person is not competent under Acts 1864, c. 109, as modified by Acts 1868, c. 116, to testify as to the fact of her marriage with the intestate.—Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 93.

[pp] (Mo. 1891) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8922, relieving the wife from the common-law disability to testify to matters where her husband was a party, but stipulating "that nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize or permit any married woman, while the relation exists, or subsequently, to testify to any admissions or conversations of her husband, whether made to herself or to third parties," a surviving wife, in an action by her on a policy of insurance on the life of her deceased husband, is incompetent to testify to the acts of the husband in making the application for the policy, or to his declarations, or want of declarations, while so doing.—Herndon v. Triple Alliance, 45 Mo. App. 426.

[qq] (N. H. 1860) Plaintiff was a married woman when she received an injury from an alleged defect in a highway in defendant town, but before suit was brought her husband died. Held, on the trial, that she was a competent witness.—Winship v. Enfield, 42 N. H. 197.

[r] (N. H. 1866) A surviving wife may testify as to matters in which her deceased husband was interested, unless she acquired her knowledge of the facts through confidential communications from her husband.—Ryan v. Follansbee, 47 N. H. 100.

[rr] (N. C. 1851) After the death of a husband, the wife is a competent witness to prove the execution of a deed made by him in favor of a third person.—Gaskill v. King, 34 N. C. 211.

[s] (Ohio, 1855) After the death of a husband, the widow is a competent witness against his administrator to prove the fact of work and labor performed for him by plaintiff, where her testimony does not violate her husband's confidence or in any way prejudice his reputation. —Stober v. McCarter, 4 Ohio St. 513.

[ss] (Ohio, 1859) Civ. Code, § 314, providing that husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify for or against each other or concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, whether called as a witness while that relation subsisted or afterwards, changes the common-law rule so that the husband and wife are not competent witnesses for or against each other, or the administrator or executor of either, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person.—Neil v. Cherry, 2 Ohio Dec. 417.

[t] (Pa. 1836) The wife, on the death of the husband, is competent to prove a warranty deed, signed by herself and husband, not to be fraudulent, under the statute of St. 13 Eliz. —Chambers v. Spencer, 5 Watts, 404.

[u] (Pa.) A widow is competent to testify against her husband's estate as to facts coming to her knowledge otherwise than through confidential communications of the husband.—(1884) In re Rindt's Estate, 2 Lehigh Val. Law Rep. 246; (1890) In re Tucker's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 345.

[uu] (S. C. 1832) The dissolution of a marriage by the death of the husband makes the wife a competent witness, in an action against the executor of her husband, to prove a gift by him in his lifetime.—Caldwell v. Stuart, 2 Bailey, 574.

[v] (S. C. 1851) A wife is not an incompetent witness merely because of the conjugal relation, to prove, after the husband's death, that a parol gift, alleged to have been made by the husband in his lifetime, was, in fact, a loan.—Hay v. Hay, 3 Rich. Eq. 384.

[vv] (Tenn. 1871) The widow of a trustee is not a competent witness as to his disposition of the trust fund.—State v. McAuley, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 424.

[w] (Tenn. 1878) Incompetency as a witness, arising, under Code, § 3813a et seq., from the relation of husband and wife, continues after that relation is terminated by death.—Patton v. Wilson, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 101.

[ww] (Vt. 1835) Where a co-signer of a note, who was but a surety for the other signer, and who was constituted an agent by the creditor to collect the note of the other signer, brought suit thereon to which the other signer interposed the defense that he had paid the amount to such agent for the creditor, after such agent died insolvent and his estate had been settled, his widow was a competent witness in support of the defense.—Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 503.

[x] (Vt. 1835) A widow may be called to testify to a transaction of her late husband, known to her by personal inspection. — Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 503.

[xx] (Vt. 1858) In an action by husband and wife to recover a debt due the latter before coverture, the wife died after one trial had taken place. Held, that the husband was a competent witness on a second trial to prove what the wife testified to on the former trial, provided the testimony itself was proper.—Perry v. Whitney, 30 Vt. 390.

[z] (Va. 1887) In an action by infants to set aside a deed of trust and sale of property in which they had an equitable title as heirs of their mother, the father was called as witness for the children, to prove that the grantees in the deed and purchasers at the sale had actual notice of the claim of plaintiffs to the property. The testimony was excluded, on the ground that the property in question had belonged to the wife. Held, that as the wife was not a party to the suit, the husband was a competent witness as to any transactions arising since her death and affecting plaintiff's title to the property.—Dugger's Children v. Dugger, 84 Va. 130, 4 S. E. 171.

[zz] (Va. 1894) Where a paper in the form of a will is attempted to be established as a contract, the widow of the one who executed it is incompetent to testify as to the value of the services rendered by the beneficiary.—Swann v. Housman, 90 Va. 816, 20 S. E. 830.

TRIAL JURORS, § 187.
COMMISSIONERS, MASTERS, REFEREES, AND ARBITRATORS, § 188.

§ 183. Competency in general.

[a] (Ala. 1880) Neither the personal testimony nor the affidavit of a probate judge is admissible in a proceeding tried before him.—Dabney v. Mitchell, 66 Ala. 495.

[b] (Ark. 1894) A judge presiding at a criminal trial cannot, against the objection of defendant, be sworn and testify as a witness for the prosecution.—Rogers v. State, 60 Ark. 76, 29 S. W. 894, 46 Am. St. Rep. 154, 31 L. R. A. 465.

[c] (Ark. 1894) The statutory provision that the Civil Code shall apply to the summoning and coercing the attendance of witnesses in all criminal actions does not render Sand. & H. Dig. § 2965, providing that "the judge or juror may be called as a witness by either party," applicable to a criminal trial.—Rogers v. State, 60 Ark. 76, 29 S. W. 894, 46 Am. St. Rep. 154, 31 L. R. A. 465.

[d] (Cal. 1890) It is not error to permit the prosecuting attorney to be called as a witness, and testify to facts within his knowledge, pertinent to the issue on trial.—People v. Hamberg, 84 Cal. 468, 24 Pac. 298.

[e] (Ga. 1892) The sole presiding magistrate in a justice's court cannot testify as a witness before a jury trying a case on appeal in the court over which he presides, as the law makes no provision for administering an oath to him as a witness, and he cannot be sworn before himself.—Baker v. Thompson, 89 Ga. 486, 15 S. E. 644.

[f] (Kan. 1886) A district judge is not competent as a witness in a cause tried before him.—Gray v. Crockett, 35 Kan. 66, 10 Pac. 452.

[g] (La. 1824) A district judge cannot be a witness in a cause where he presides, except, perhaps, in a jury case.—Ross v. Buhler, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 312.

[h] (La. 1845) A judge before whom a cause is tried is competent for either party. Act March 25, 1828, No. 83, § 6, provides the mode of swearing him and reducing his testimony to writing.—Babin v. Nolan, 10 Rob. 373.

[i] (Miss. 1895) A juror is a competent witness for a party in a suit on trial before himself and fellows, where he testifies only as to the character of the party calling him.—White v. State, 73 Miss. 50, 19 South. 97.

[j] (Mo. 1876) Neither a sheriff nor his substitute can be disqualified as a witness by reason of his having summoned the jury before whom he testifies.—Crowe v. Peters, 63 Mo. 429.

[k] (N. Y. 1851) One of a board of several referees, before whom a cause is tried, cannot be sworn and examined as a witness on the trial of such cause.—Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 374.

[l] (Pa. 1866) A juror in a criminal cause may be examined as a witness therein.—Howser v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 332.

[m] (Tenn. 1891) Where the child alleged to have been born of the intercourse between defendant indicted for abduction for purposes of prostitution and the girl after the alleged abduction is produced before the jury, it is not error to refuse to allow defendant to call the jurors as witnesses to testify that the child bears no resemblance to defendant.—Scruggs v. State, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 81, 15 S. W. 1074.

[n] (Vt. 1802) A juror may be a witness to a fact in the case in his knowledge before he was sworn as a juror, but not to anything indicating his opinion as to the merits.—Dunbar v. Parks, 2 Tyler, 217.

[a] (U. S. 1809) An officer to whose care a jury had been committed cannot be compelled to testify to the fact of the jury's separating after a cause was committed to them, and before they had agreed on their verdict.—Howard v. Cobb, Fed. Cas. No. 6,755 [Brunner, Col. Cas. 75, 3 Day, 309].

[b] (Ga. 1853) The clerk of the inferior court is a competent witness to prove that no license had been granted by that court to the accused on trial for retailing liquor.—Elkins v. State, 13 Ga. 435.

[d] (Mo. 1893) The prosecuting attorney is incompetent as a witness as to matters occurring in the grand jury room.—State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480, 22 S. W. 463.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) Where, on habeas corpus, it appears that the prisoner is held on process, the justice who issued the process, and the clerk of his court, are competent witnesses to prove on what papers the process issued; and there is no impropriety in their appearing as witnesses.—In re Heyward, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 701.

§ 185. Judges, justices of the peace, and other magistrates.

[a] (Ark. 1856) A justice who issues civil process is a competent witness to prove his own official character, in an indictment for resisting it.—Oliver v. State, 17 Ark. 508.

[b] (Conn. 1895) Where defendant pleads a prior judgment in bar, the deposition of the judge who tried the former action as to the issues therein tried is admissible, where the facts do not appear by the unaided record.—Perkins v. Brazos, 66 Conn. 242, 33 Atl. 908.

[c] (Ga. 1856) The justices of the inferior court are competent witnesses to testify for the court, on the question whether the inferior court is liable to a mandamus, on refusing to pay for a bridge.—Talbot County v. House, 20 Ga. 328.

[d] (Ga. 1856) The justices of the inferior court are competent witnesses to prove mistake or fraud in the consideration of a note signed by them, where payment thereof is sought to be enforced by mandamus against the county treasurer.—Rogers v. Mandeville, 20 Ga. 627.

[e] (Ill. 1861) A justice is a competent witness to prove and explain entries on his docket and to identify the cause and parties.—Haven v. Green, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 252.

[f] (La. 1825) The parish judge who received the sheriff's bond may prove its loss, though liable to a penalty for permitting the sheriff to act without giving bond.—Villere v. Armstrong, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 21.

[g] (La. 1841) A parish judge may prove a mortgagee's assent to the sale of the property under administration on terms fixed by the administrator.—Williams v. Bank of Louisiana, 17 La. 378.

[h] (Md. 1862) The magistrate who has taken the acknowledgment of a married woman to her deed is not a competent witness to contradict or impeach his certificate of such acknowledgment.—Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305, 81 Am. Dec. 597.

[i] (Md. 1864) It is against the policy of the law that justices of the peace should be permitted to contradict as witnesses what they have officially certified to as magistrates, and to that extent they are incompetent as witnesses. Beyond this there is no rule of law which precludes them from testifying to facts which do not contradict their official certificates, although those facts may incidentally operate on the legal effect of the instrument acknowledged before them. They may testify to the age and health of the grantor, to the payment or nonpayment of the consideration money, the reading or omission to read the instrument, or other collateral facts not conflicting with what they have certified.—Highberger v. Stiffler, 21 Md. 338, 83 Am. Dec. 593.

[j] (Mich. 1860) After judgment pronounced, and before the proceedings are entered in the docket, it is competent to prove the judgment by the oath of the justice, who produces his minutes of the trial, which are as complete as the entry on the docket is required to be.—Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 Mich. 267, 77 Am. Dec. 450.

[k] (Mich. 1884) When a plea of former judgment is set up as a defense, and the record fails to show why the judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, the testimony of the justice of the peace by whom the judgment was rendered may be admitted to show that the cause was dismissed, and not tried on its merits, because the claim was not then due.—Wood v. Faut, 55 Mich. 185, 20 N. W. 897.

[l] (Mich. 1889) Where the record of the former trial does not show on what ground the judgment was based, and the trial was by the court, evidence of the trial judge as to the ground on which he based his decision is admissible.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323, 42 N. W. 837.

[m] (Mo. 1848) A justice of the peace before whom a cause was tried is a competent witness to prove the grounds on which the cause was determined.—Taylor v. Larkin, 12 Mo. 103, 49 Am. Dec. 119.

[n] (Mo. 1880) At a second trial of a cause, the testimony of a witness at the first trial, since deceased, may be shown by the judge who presided at the first trial, who may also prove that such testimony was preserved in a bill of exceptions, signed by him.—Corby v. Wright, 9 Mo. App. 5.

[o] (N. Y. 1806) A judge who has taken the proof of the execution of a deed while out of the jurisdiction of the state is a competent witness as to that fact; but he is not bound to answer any question which may impeach his conduct as a public officer.—Jackson v. Humphrey, 1 Johns. 498.

[p] (N. Y. 1883) A justice cannot testify as to the grounds on which he based his decision, where such testimony was offered on the issue of whether a certain matter was res adjudicata, because embraced in a previous decision.—Agan v. Hey, 30 Hun, 591.

[q] (Ohio, 1859) Since a judgment rendered on a technical point is not a bar to a subsequent action for the same cause, the parol evidence of the magistrate is admissible to show on what ground he decided the case, where the record is silent in that respect.—Mahaffey v. Rogers, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 24, 6 O. C. D. 88.

[r] (Ohio, 1862) A magistrate before whom a deed is acknowledged, and who certifies that the grantor "acknowledged the same to be his voluntary act and deed," is not thereby precluded from testifying to the legal incapacity of the grantor at the time.—Truman v. Lore's Lessee, 14 Ohio St. 144.

(Md. 1893) Izer v. State, 77 Md. 110, 26 Atl. 282;

(Mass. 1858) Commonwealth v. Mead, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 167, 71 Am. Dec. 741;

(Mo. 1894) State v. Ragsdale, 59 Mo. App. 590;

(Or. 1895) State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042;

(Tex. 1882) Canton v. State, 13 Tex. App. 139, overruling Ruby v. Same (1880) 9 Tex. App. 353.

(N. J. 1800) Imlay v. Rogers, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 347.

[b] (U. S. 1813) Grand jurors may testify as to the confessions made by the prisoner before them, upon oath, when under examination as a witness against another person.—United States v. Charles, Fed. Cas. No. 14,786 [2 Cranch, C. C. 76].

[c] (U. S. 1888) 1 Rev. St. 1879, §§ 1791, 1793, 1794, providing that members of the grand jury may be compelled to disclose the names of witnesses who have appeared before it, and the evidence heard in the grand jury room, only (1) to show whether the testimony of a witness on trial is consistent with or different from that given before the grand jury; and (2) on trial for perjury committed before that body—establish much more than a rule of evidence. They declare the public policy of the state, and so are binding on the federal courts sitting in the state.—Fotheringham v. Adams Exp. Co. (C. C.) 34 Fed. 646.

[e] (Cal. 1867) An indictment founded on the testimony of the grand jurors before whom the perjury was alleged to have been committed is not founded on illegal evidence, although the witnesses were not required to testify by judicial order.—People v. Young, 31 Cal. 563.

[f] (Conn. 1888) Grand jurors may testify as to declarations made to them by the prisoner in the grand jury room, when they were made to the witnesses as individuals, and were no part of the grand jury proceedings.—State v. Coffee, 56 Conn. 399, 16 Atl. 151.

[g] (Fla. 1895) Rev. St. § 2814, providing that members of the grand jury may be required to testify whether the testimony of a witness examined before such jury is consistent with the evidence given by him before the trial court, and to disclose the testimony given before such jury by any person on the trial of a complaint against such person for perjury, or on his trial for such offense, does not alter or limit the rule making it discretionary with the trial court to permit a grand juror to be examined as to what a witness testified to before the grand jury.—Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 737, 18 South. 182, 48 Am. St. Rep. 267.

[i] (Ky. 1809) In an action for malicious prosecution, a grand juror is competent to prove that defendant appeared before the grand jury to prosecute an indictment against plaintiff, and the attorney for the commonwealth is not the only admissible witness.—White v. Fox, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 369, 4 Am. Dec. 643.

[j] (Ky. 1879) A grand juryman is a competent witness to prove that he is not a citizen, and therefore that he was not a competent juror.—Raganthall v. Commonwealth, 77 Ky. (14 Bush) 457.

[k] (La. 1896) A member of the grand jury cannot be permitted to impeach its finding by testifying that he, as a witness before that body to support the indictment, was not sworn.—State v. Comeau, 48 La. Ann. 249, 19 South. 130.

[l] (Me. 1827) Grand jurors may be examined as witnesses to the question whether 12 of the panel concur or not in the finding of an indictment as provided by Const. art. 1, § 7.—In re Low, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 380, 16 Am. Dec. 271.

[m] (Md. 1895) In an action for malicious prosecution, after the foreman of the grand jury testified that the criminal proceeding against plaintiff was dismissed, it was proper to refuse to permit him to state why it was dismissed.—Owens v. Owens, 81 Md. 518, 32 Atl. 247.

[n] (Mass. 1853) A member of the grand jury which found an indictment is a competent witness on the trial to prove that a certain person did not testify before the grand jury.—Commonwealth v. Hill, 65 Mass. (11 Cush.) 137.

[o] (Minn. 1871) The affidavit of one of the grand jury by whom an indictment was found is not admissible to prove that there was no legal evidence before the grand jury upon which it was found, nor that there was illegal evidence used by the grand jury, nor that the names of certain witnesses were indorsed on the indictment who were not sworn or examined by or before the grand jury during the examination or consideration of the charge set forth in the indictment.—State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241 (Gil. 218).

[q] (Miss. 1849) In an action of slander against one who has given testimony before the grand jury in relation to the charge which is the basis of the slander suit, the court may, in its discretion, permit the grand jurors to testify on the subject.—Sands v. Robison, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 704, 51 Am. Dec. 132.

[ss] (Mo. 1855) In an action of slander for saying that plaintiff's wife swore falsely before a grand jury, defendant justified by alleging the truth of the words spoken. Held, that a grand juror cannot be permitted to testify how a witness swore before the grand jury.—Tindle v. Nichols, 20 Mo. 326.

[u] (Nev. 1865) Grand jurors may be called to testify against a witness, who is indicted for perjury, to prove what was sworn to before them.—State v. Logan, 1 Nev. 509.

[uu] (N. H. 1873) The foreman or any member of the grand jury may be called and compelled to testify what a witness stated before the grand jury, for the purpose of contradicting such witness, or for any other purpose, when in the opinion of the court the cause of justice requires it to be done.—State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 484.

[v] (N. C. 1875) A member of a grand jury which founded an indictment is not incompetent as a witness on the trial of the prisoner; especially when such member declined to vote on the bill, on the ground he might be a witness.—State v. McDonald, 73 N. C. 346.

[vv] (Or. 1887) On a trial for murder, evidence of a grand juror as to statements made by defendant to the grand jury which indicted another person for the crime of which defendant is charged is admissible.—State v. Moran, 15 Or. 262, 14 Pac. 419.

[w] (Or. 1895) A person who served on a grand jury, called to contradict a witness as to testimony given by her before the grand jury, may testify as to her condition at the time she appeared before the grand jury.—State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042.

[x] (Pa. 1888) The oath of secrecy administered to grand jurors should not be so construed as to obstruct the due course of justice, and accordingly a grand juror may be examined to show that a presentment was not made upon the personal knowledge of the grand jury, but upon the testimony of witnesses without the knowledge of the court.—Commonwealth v. Green, 5 Lanc. Law Rev. 321, affirmed (1889) 126 Pa. 531, 17 Atl. 878, 12 Am. St. Rep. 894.

[xx] (Pa. 1888) An indictment cannot be impeached by the testimony of the grand jurors that when the bill was presented to them they ignored it; that thereupon the district attorney repeatedly addressed them, urging them to find a true bill; that he furnished them with further evidence; and that, at his urgent request, they reversed their former action and returned a true bill.—Zeigler v. Commonwealth, 14 Atl. 237.

[yy] (Tenn. 1871) The oath of secrecy on the part of a grand juror does not render him incompetent to testify as to the testimony of witnesses, given before the jury, in a subsequent action for malicious prosecution by a person against whom an indictment was found.—Jones v. Turpin, 53 Tenn. (6 Heisk.) 181.

[z] (Utah, 1886) Upon the trial of one for unlawful cohabitation, the testimony of one of the grand jury that found the indictment, that accused had made a voluntary confession before the grand jury, is admissible under Laws 1878, p. 89, providing that every member of the grand jury must keep secret whatever he himself, or any other grand juror, may have said, or how voted, but may be required by any court to disclose the testimony of a witness examined before them, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is consistent with that given by the witness upon the trial, or upon the trial of a charge of perjury.—United States v. Kirkwood, 5 Utah, 123, 13 Pac. 234.

[zz] (Utah, 1892) On a prosecution for gaming, the foreman of the grand jury may be called as a witness concerning an admission of gaming made by defendant when testifying before the grand jury concerning another offense, since Comp. Laws 1888, § 4921, enjoining secrecy as to proceedings before the grand jury, is intended only for the protection of the jurors and of the public.—People v. Reggel, 8 Utah, 21, 28 Pac. 955.

[a] (Ga. 1890) The testimony of jurors on a former trial may be received as to the existence of bloodstains on an article when it was exhibited to them at that time.—Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S. E. 814.

[b] (Iowa, 1865) On a trial for forgery, a juror who tried the action on the alleged forged instrument cannot testify as to what were the issues in such suit.—State v. Thompson, 19 Iowa, 299.

[c] (Iowa, 1875) While the evidence of a juror is admissible to show the identity of the subject-matter in different actions, it cannot be received to contradict the record.—Stapleton v. King, 40 Iowa, 278.

[d] (Iowa, 1875) The fact that one offered as a witness served on the jury on a former trial of the cause does not disqualify him.—Cramer v. City of Burlington, 42 Iowa, 315.

[e] (Mich. 1882) A juror may be called, like any other witness, to state what took place in open court during the trial of the case, but not to state what took place in the jury room.—Hewitt v. Chapman, 49 Mich. 4, 12 N. W. 888.

[f] (Mich. 1896) On an indictment for perjury committed on a trial of another for burglary, the jury in the burglary case may testify as to the evidence given by the accused in such case to show its materiality.—People v. Ostrander, 110 Mich. 60, 67 N. W. 1079.

[g] (N. H. 1870) A declaration in trespass to realty alleged, by way of aggravation of damages, the taking and conversion of a fence. The fact of the conversion appeared aliunde to have been submitted to the jury. Held, in a subsequent action between the same parties involving a controversy as to the fence, that the testimony of the jurors in the former action, that they did not include the fence in their assessment of damages, was inadmissible to show that the title thereto did not pass to defendant by the judgment therein.—Smith v. Smith, 50 N. H. 212.

[h] (Pa. 1873) On a second action plaintiff may prove by jurors in the first what issues were passed on.—Follansbee v. Walker, 74 Pa. (24 P. F. Smith) 306.

[i] (Pa. 1874) It is not permitted jurymen, when giving parol evidence as to whether defendant submitted evidence of set-off, to inquire into the principle on which they rendered their decision, or to show what was allowed or disallowed.—Lazarus' Adm'rs v. George, 3 Lux. Leg. Reg. 143.

[a] (Cal. 1867) A commissioner appointed to assess damages resulting from the widening of a street is a competent witness on a trial in the county court, on the question of confirming the report of the commissioners when it is objected to.—Appeal of Brooks, 32 Cal. 558.

[b] (Ind. 1854) The testimony of commissioners appointed to assign dower may be given to impeach the assignment made by them.—McCormick v. Taylor, 5 Ind. 436.

[c] (Me. 1853) The testimony of referees is admissible to identify matters submitted, and to show that they acted on them.—Buck v. Spofford, 35 Me. 526.

[d] (Md. 1793) In replevin for a cannon sunk in a wharf, the trustee appointed by a decree of chancery to sell the wharf is a competent witness to prove that when the wharf was sold the cannon were excepted.—Williams v. Donaldson, 3 Har. & McH. 127.

[e] (Mass. 1884) Where the issues in an action against a sheriff for wrongful attachment of property are tried by a referee, such referee cannot, in an action by the sheriff on the attaching creditor's indemnity bond, give his reasons for awarding judgment against the sheriff.—Wiggin v. Atkins, 136 Mass. 292.

[f] (Pa. 1865) In an action for breach of a contract to deliver logs, a former recovery in trover against a third party for their value was set up in defense, and the record thereof given in evidence. Held, that it was competent for plaintiff to show, by one of the arbitrators in the trover suit, that the award was made, and recovery had by plaintiff, for only a small portion of the lumber declared for in that action.—Converse v. Colton, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 346.

—— HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 194.

§ 189. Objections in general.

[a] (La. 1826) A party introducing an incompetent witness cannot object to the other party's cross-examining him to establish his defense.—Buard's Curator v. Buard's Heirs, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 134; Castleman v. Stone, Id. 282.

[b] (La. 1826) Not even when the witness so called, being incompetent from relationship, was the sole subscribing witness to the writing to be proved.—Buard's Curator v. Buard's Heirs, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 134.

§ 190. Time for objection and waiver thereof.

(N. Y. 1837) People v. McGarren, 17 Wend. 460;

[c, d] (La. 1856) A prisoner cannot be permitted to take chances on the testimony of a witness, availing himself of its benefits if favorable to him, and reserving the right to object to his testimony if unfavorable. Held, therefore, where a mulatto had been examined as a witness for the state, and on cross-examination it appeared that he had been a slave, and thereupon the prisoner's counsel asked the court to exclude his testimony, as it did not appear that he had been emancipated, that the objection came too late, there being no averment that the incompetency of the witness was not known before his examination in chief, and as the color of the witness would naturally have suggested an inquiry into his condition on his voir dire, there could have been no surprise when, on cross-examination, he testified to the fact of his having been a slave.—State v. Taylor, 11 La. Ann. 430.

[e, f] (Me. 1861) Objections to the competency of a witness, which become known after the examination is commenced, are waived if the witness is allowed to testify without objection.—State v. Damery, 48 Me. 327.

[g] (Mo. 1894) Objection to the competency of a witness is waived, if not made at the time he is introduced, and it cannot be made on motion for new trial.—State v. Crab, 121 Mo. 554, 26 S. W. 548.

[h] (S. C. 1829) It is too late after verdict to object to the competency of a witness.—State v. Scott, 1 Bailey, 270.

[i] (Va. 1893) An objection to the competency of a witness is not necessarily waived by failure to make it before his examination in chief.—Hill v. Postley, 90 Va. 200, 17 S. E. 946.

[j] (Wis. 1883) Where, on stipulation between the parties, a case is determined on evidence taken in another case, and no other testimony is taken, and in neither action is any objection to the competency of a witness who testified in the former suit made, the admission of such evidence cannot be considered error.—Byrnes v. Clark, 57 Wis. 13, 14 N. W. 815.

[b] (N. J. 1860) Where the introduction of a witness is objected to, it is no waiver of the objection that the witness is cross-examined, or that rebutting proof is introduced by the objecting party.—Meeker v. Boylan, 28 N. J. Law (4 Dutch.) 274.

[c] (Va. 1896) To cross-examine a person as to matters about which he has not testified in chief is, in effect, to make said person a witness for the party cross-examining, and to waive an objection as to his competency.—Miller v. Miller's Adm'r, 92 Va. 510, 23 S. E. 891.

[a] (Cal. 1879) A party, by the examination of her husband as a witness on her behalf, waives her objection to his examination by the opposite party on any of the issues in the action.—Stelnburg v. Meany, 53 Cal. 425.

[b] (Iowa, 1865) Revision, § 3983, prohibits either husband or wife from being a witness for or against the other, except in certain cases; but under section 3986, providing that "the prohibitions in the preceding sections do not apply to cases where the party in whose favor the respective provisions are enacted waives the right thereby conferred," a husband or wife who calls the other as a witness waives the right, which exists in his or her favor and not that of the opposite party, and the witness is competent.—Blake v. Graves, 18 Iowa, 312.

[c] (Iowa, 1876) An objection to the competency of husband or wife to testify against each other should be made when the witness is offered and sworn, and if not then made it will be deemed waived.—Watson v. Riskamire, 45 Iowa, 231.

[cc] (Iowa, 1879) On trial of an indictment for murder, an objection that defendant's wife testified against him before the grand jury comes too late when raised in the first instance after conviction.—State v. Houston, 50 Iowa, 512.

[d] (La. 1876) The objection that accused's wife testified in his behalf should have been made to her testifying at all; after testifying it was too late to have her testimony stricken out.—State v. Williams, 28 La. Ann. 604.

[dd] (Mich. 1878) The statutory rule (Comp. Laws, § 5969), that a husband may not testify against his wife without her consent, cannot be waived in her absence by omission of her attorney to object to the testimony.—Hubbell v. Grant, 39 Mich. 641.

[e] (N. Y. 1860) In a suit where the question was whether land standing in the name of the wife was rightfully attached as the property of the husband, plaintiff, having availed himself of the wife's testimony so far as it went to show that the property was treated as her husband's, could not then object to her as being an incompetent witness to state further facts on the same point in her husband's favor, if they were such facts as might have been properly proved by any other witness.—Tappan v. Butler, 20 N. Y. Super. Ct. (7 Bosw.) 480.

§ 193. Requisites and sufficiency of objection.

[a] An objection that certain evidence is incompetent is insufficient as an objection to the competency of the witness from whom it was received.

—(Iowa, 1894) Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69;

(Iowa, 1883) Dedric v. Hopson, 62 Iowa, 562, 17 N. W. 772.

[b] (Ind. 1848) The ground of objection to the competency of a witness must be pointed out to the court, or the overruling of the objection cannot be assigned for error.—White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Dow, Smith, 62.

[c] (Ind. 1860) If the particular ground of objection does not appear, the admission of a witness competent under certain circumstances will be deemed correct.—Fleming v. Potter, 14 Ind. 486.

[d] (Me. 1848) Where the exceptions state merely that "the witness was objected to," and was admitted, without stating any cause of objection, no question is presented for the consideration of the supreme court.—Glidden v. Dunlap, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 379.

[e] (Md. 1855) The presumption of law is in favor of the competency of witnesses, and a party making objections to such competency must state the ground on which they are based; a general indefinite objection will not avail.—Pegg v. Warford, 7 Md. 582.

[f] (Pa. 1854) A general objection to the competency of a witness is not good, if he be competent for any purpose.—Patterson v. Fay, 1 Phila. 473.

[a] (Ind. 1888) The wife being a competent witness to testify as to what she herself did or did not do concerning the petition in a divorce suit, though as to some matters she was not competent, an objection to her competency to testify at all is properly overruled.—Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 823.

[b] (Minn. 1883) An objection that a witness for plaintiff, being her husband, was not competent, cannot be considered on appeal where objection was not made at the trial to his competency, but only to the competency of the testimony proposed to be given by him.—Coles v. Shepard, 30 Minn. 446, 16 N. W. 153.

[c] (Wis. 1877) In an action by a husband and wife to recover damages for personal injuries to the wife, where the husband's claim for loss of services is joined, a general objection to the competency of the wife or husband as a witness is bad, and does not raise the question whether the examination of either as a witness could be restricted.—Holmes v. City of Fond du Lac, 42 Wis. 282.

[d] (Wis. 1878) After evidence showing that the wife of a party acted as his agent in respect to the matter in litigation, a general objection will not lie against her competency as a witness; but if she is asked any questions relating to a matter not fairly within the scope of her agency, specific objection should be taken on that ground.—Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567.

[e] (Wis. 1881) A husband may testify for his wife as to matters in which he acted as her agent; and his answering a question not admissible under that rule cannot be treated as error under a mere general objection at the outset to his competency.—Arndt v. Harshaw, 53 Wis. 269, 10 N. W. 390.

(b) EVIDENCE AND EXAMINATION OF WITNESS AS TO COMPETENCY.

IN GENERAL, § 195.
KNOWLEDGE AND DEGREE OF MENTAL CAPACITY, § 196.
RACE OR COLOR, § 197.
RELIGIOUS BELIEF AND OBLIGATION OF OATH, § 198.
INFAMY OR CONVICTION OF CRIME, § 199.
HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 200.

Leading questions to expert as to competency, see post, § 849 [a].

Best and secondary evidence, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 723, 724, § 478.

[a] (Ark. 1867) Where, on a criminal trial, the accused against whom a witness is called makes application to have the witness put on his voir dire, in order to show his incompetency, he should state the object and ground of the application.—Brown v. State, 24 Ark. 620.

[b] (La. 1856) Where the objection to the competency of a witness arises from his own examination, he may be further interrogated as to facts tending to remove the objection, though the testimony might, on other grounds, be inadmissible. When the whole ground of objection comes from himself only, what he says must be taken together as he says it.—State v. Taylor, 11 La. Ann. 430.

[c] (Md. 1855) The party offering a witness is not bound to show, until the contrary is at least prima facie established, that such witness is competent.—Pegg v. Warford, 7 Md. 582.

[d] (Minn. 1875) Preliminary examination of a witness by the opposite party is proper to show the incompetency of his testimony, but not to show matters in avoidance of the fact to be proved.—Lautenschlager v. Hunter, 22 Minn. 267.

[e] (N. H. 1867) The order at a law term for a trial by jury was as follows: "Issue to trial term. To be tried upon evidence as now taken." Held, that the record of a suit at law, brought by plaintiffs to recover the same premises in question, and not a part of the evidence taken before the order, was inadmissible to show the competency of one of the witnesses of defendant.—Bell v. Woodward, 47 N. H. 539.

[a] (U. S. 1895) Questions regarding the age, antecedents, business, and experience of a witness are largely within the discretion of the court, and there is no error in permitting a witness about to testify in relation to false entries in the report of a national bank to be asked whether he had any experience in bank business before he was made cashier of the bank in question.—Cochran v. United States, 157 U. S. 286, 15 Sup. Ct. 628, 39 L. Ed. 704.

[b] (Ala. 1841) The examination of an infant witness as to his qualifications must be had in open court, in presence of the prisoner and his counsel, and he cannot be admitted on a private examination had by the judge.—State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275.

[c] (Ala. 1847) It is not error for which judgment will be reversed that the court for its own information made inquiries of a physician as to the extent of knowledge usually possessed by midwives.—Milton v. Rowland, 11 Ala. 732.

[d] (Ala. 1850) Where a witness has testified that certain persons were partners, the party against whom the testimony is given may interrogate the witness as to the sources of his knowledge, and if it be found that his statement is opinion merely, it may then be rejected. —McGrew v. Walker, 17 Ala. 824.

[e] (Colo. 1890) In an action for the alleged wrongful attachment of a stock of goods, where there is a wide difference of opinion among witnesses as to its value, it is not improper for the trial judge to subject the witnesses to a searching examination as to their competency, to enable the jury to judge of the value of their evidence.—Keith v. Wells, 14 Colo. 321, 23 Pac. 991.

[f] (Conn. 1859) Where the competency of a witness, sane at the time he testified, was questioned on the ground that he was insane at the time of the transaction in regard to which he testified, the fact of his insanity at the time of the transaction is to be proved in the same manner as insanity in any other case, and evidence of his insanity before and after the time of the transaction is admissible for the purpose. —Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 177.

[g] (Ga. 1857) A plaintiff examined on voir dire as to what portion of work charged in his books was done of his own knowledge need not answer unless it is suffered to go to the jury. —Bailey v. Barnelly, 23 Ga. 582.

[h] (Ind. 1894) A witness who testifies to the age of a party is presumed to testify from personal knowledge unless the contrary is shown, and an objection on the ground that he had not showed himself possessed of any knowledge was properly overruled.—Ross v. State, 9 Ind. App. 35, 36 N. E. 167.

[i] (Iowa, 1883) On the question of damages to a farm by a railroad company taking a portion, a witness may testify as to what other lands sold for in the vicinity, and what he heard others say as to the price they received for lands sold by them, for the purpose of showing his knowledge of the value of land in that vicinity, thereby qualifying him to testify as to value.—Winklemans v. Des Moines N. W. R. Co., 62 Iowa, 11, 17 N. W. 82.

[j] (Mass. 1857) If the question whether a defendant, when making confessions of guilt, was so intoxicated as not to understand them, is submitted to the court as preliminary to the admission of a witness to the confessions, and is decided by the court on the testimony of that witness only, rejecting evidence of other witnesses that shortly before and after the conversation at which the confession was made defendant was intoxicated, it is ground of exception.—Commonwealth v. Howe, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 110.

[k] (Miss. 1876) A prisoner has a right to question a witness against him, to ascertain his competency, as, for want of intellectual capacity; and the presiding judge cannot deny the privilege on the ground that, on an independent occasion, to which the accused was not a party, the same witness was produced, and shown to have then been competent.—White v. State, 52 Miss. 216.

[l] (Or. 1891) In proving the market value of hops at a certain time and place, a witness was asked if he thought he knew what the price of hops was at Independence, November, 1888, and he answered: "Seventeen and a half cents. I knew of one man getting that who lived within two miles of Independence." Held not error to refuse to strike out the answer.—Bump v. Cooper, 20 Or. 527, 26 Pac. 848.

[m] (Tex. 1896) After a witness of the homicide has described the difficulty and the positions of deceased and defendant at the time, and testified that deceased had no weapon in his hand, it is not error to permit him to be asked whether he was in a position to have seen the weapon if deceased had had one.— McGrath v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 413, 34 S. W. 127, 941.

[n] (Vt. 1844) To exclude a witness from testifying, as being non compos, or an idiot, the fact must be proved by other testimony, and not by a preliminary examination of the witness; and even if the court have any discretion by which they may permit such preliminary examination, still it is not error for them to refuse to allow it.—Robinson v. Dana, 16 Vt. 474.

[b] (Del. 1847) On the trial of an indictment for kidnapping a free negro, the person kidnapped is not a competent witness to prove his own freedom, where there is no other proof of his being free.—State v. Jeans, 4 Har. 570.

[c] (Ind. 1864) It is the duty of the court to determine the competency of witnesses, and where the objection to the competency of the witness rests on the allegation that he has such an amount of negro blood as disqualifies him to testify, the court may, on inspection, determine prima facie his competency; but if his blood be not sufficiently apparent for such mode of determination, then the court may examine other witnesses, either to prove the blood of the witness from reputation amongst those who know him, or to establish the character of his blood by the testimony of experts. — Nave's Adm'r v. Williams, 22 Ind. 368.

[d] (La. 1812) Where the evidence of a party offering a person of color, objected to because presumed a slave, shows that he was emancipated by notarial act, it must, if insisted on, be produced, and cannot, without proof of its loss, be supplied by secondary evidence, e. g., the testimony of the former master that he had emancipated the witness.—State v. Cecil, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 208.

[g] (La. 1847) A person of color could not be admitted as a witness on testimony of one who alleged that he had formerly owned such colored person and had emancipated him, but the production of the written act of emancipation must be presented or its loss accounted for.—Roebuck v. Curry, 2 La. Ann. 998.

[h] (La. 1856) Where a witness testifies that he was once a slave, but is now free, he must be accepted as competent to testify.—State v. Taylor, 11 La. Ann. 430.

[i] (N. J. 1813) Evidence that a negro has been reputed free from his childhood is sufficient evidence of his freedom to admit him as a witness.—Potts v. Harper, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 1030.

[j] (N. J. 1826) A black color is presumptive evidence of slavery, which must be overcome before a person of such color can be admitted as a witness.—Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 275.

[k] (N. J. 1826) Where a person of color was reputed free, and for more than 20 years had been in the full and actual enjoyment of freedom, it was sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption of slavery arising from color.—Fox v. Lambson, 8 N. J. Law (3 Halst.) 275.

[l] (S. C. 1835) Where witnesses are objected to as incompetent on the ground that they are persons of color, and an issue is framed for the jury, the condition of the proffered witness is not to be determined solely by the visible mixture of negro blood, but by reputation, by his reception into society, and by his having commonly exercised the privileges of a white man.—State v. Cantey, 2 Hill, 614.

[a] The declarations of a witness are competent evidence of his disbelief of the existence of a Supreme Being.

—(Me. 1841) Smith v. Coffin, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 157.

(Vt. 1842) Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535.

[b] (U. S. 1836) A witness, objected to on the ground of his disbelief in a God and a future state of rewards and punishments, cannot be examined respecting his religious sentiments, but will be permitted to explain them.—United States v. White, Fed. Cas. No. 16,675 [5 Cranch, C. C. 38].

[c] (Conn. 1792) Parol evidence is admissible to prove a witness an infidel.—Bow v. Parsons, 1 Root, 480.

[d] (Del. 1837) The witness' belief may be proved by evidence of his declarations; and his own assertion of a change of belief, made at the time he is offered to be sworn, will not restore him to competency.—State v. Townsend, 2 Har. 543.

[e] (Fla. 1890) On a murder trial, it is not error for the trial judge to propound leading questions to witnesses of tender years for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the witnesses understand the obligations of an oath, and an objection to this mode of examination of the witnesses is frivolous.—Hodge v. State, 26 Fla. 11, 7 South. 593.

[f] (Ill. 1856) Religious disbelief may be established by testimony of others, or the court may decide on explanation by the party himself.—Central Military Tract R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. 541.

[g] (Iowa, 1883) Though a witness testifies as to his belief in God, he does not thereby waive his right to refuse to testify as to his belief in a future life.—Dedric v. Hopson, 62 Iowa, 562, 17 N. W. 772.

[i] (Md. 1880) A witness for plaintiff was objected to on the trial as incompetent on the ground that he had alleged his disbelief in God and in future punishment. He was sworn on his voir dire, and asked by the court whether he believed in God and in future punishment, and he replied that he did. The court then offered defendant the opportunity to contradict him, but the offer was declined, whereupon he was permitted to testify. Held, that this was not error.—Arnd v. Amling, 53 Md. 192.

[j] (Mass. 1829) If an objection is taken to a witness on account of his religious sentiments, such sentiments should be proved by other witnesses.—Commonwealth v. Batchelder, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 191.

[k] (Mass. 1836) After the incompetency of a witness, on account of a defect of religious belief, has been established by testimony, he cannot be sworn upon the voir dire, to restore his competency by his own declarations.—Commonwealth v. Wyman, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 432.

[l] (Mass. 1848) An objection to the competency of a witness on the ground of a want of religious belief may be proved by the testimony of witnesses.—Thurston v. Whitney, 56 Mass. (2 Cush.) 104.

[n] (Mass. 1860) The common-law rule that a witness cannot be examined as to his religious belief either on the voir dire or on cross-examination was not changed by Gen. St. c. 131, § 12, as the effect of that provision was to render disbelievers competent witnesses, and to allow their disbelief to be proved only to affect their credibility.—Commonwealth v. Burke, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 33.

[nn] (N. J. 1857) A witness' belief in God is to be presumed till the contrary appear.—Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 463, affirmed in error (1857) 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 601.

[o] (Ohio, 1833) A defendant may be compelled to answer inquiries relating to his religious belief when and so far as it is necessary to settle a right to property which depends on such belief.—Kisor v. Stancifer, Wright, 323.

[p] (Pa. 1854) Stronger evidence is required to exclude a witness for defect of religious belief than is required to set aside a juror.—McFadden v. Commonwealth, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 12, 62 Am. Dec. 308.

[q] (Pa. 1867) On objection to a witness as an atheist and a disbeliever in a state of future reward and punishment, the presumption is in favor of competency.—Commonwealth v. Winnemore, 1 Brewst. 356.

[r] (Pa. 1867) The presumption is in favor of a competent religious faith on the part of a witness, and the want of it must be clearly established by the party objecting to him in order to render him incompetent.—Commonwealth v. Winnemore, 2 Brewst. 378.

[s] (S. C. 1846) An acknowledgment of belief in God and his providence is sufficient to establish the competency of a witness who has been objected to on account of defective religious belief.—Jones v. Harris, 1 Strob. 160.

[t] (Tenn. 1858) On an inquiry as to the religious belief of a witness as bearing on the question of his competency, where evidence as to his declarations to others on the subject has been admitted, it may be shown in rebuttal that his declarations have been misunderstood.—Harrel v. State, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 125.

[tt] (Tenn. 1858) Incompetency of a witness for want of religious belief may be proved at the option of the party seeking to exclude him either by the voir dire or by evidence of his declarations previously made.—Harrel v. State, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 125.

[u] (Tenn. 1871) The incompetency of a witness on the ground of disbelief in a God may be proved by his declarations to others on the subject.—Anderson v. Maberry, 49 Tenn. (2 Heisk.) 653.

[v] (Tenn. 1871) It is error to require a witness, objected to for a defect of religious belief, to be examined on his voir dire, when the objector proposes to resort to proof aliunde.—Odell v. Koppee, 52 Tenn. (5 Heisk.) 88.

[a] (Ark. 1886) To prove that a witness for the defense had heretofore been convicted of larceny before a justice of the peace, parol testimony, and a document which purported to be not an exemplification of the docket entries of the justice, but a report of convictions in his court, required to be filed by law in the clerk's office, were introduced. Held error, as not being the best evidence available under the circumstances.—Scott v. State, 49 Ark. 156, 4 S. W. 750.

[b] (Me. 1861) The only evidence to show the incompetency of a witness on the ground of infamy is the record of his conviction and judgment thereon by a court having jurisdiction.—State v. Damery, 48 Me. 327.

[c] (Mass. 1822) Objections to the competency of a witness, founded on a conviction of crime, must be supported by the record of the conviction and judgment.—Commonwealth v. Green, 17 Mass. 515.

[d] (Mo. 1887) To sustain an objection that a witness for the state named R. W. had been hitherto convicted of grand larceny, defendant offered the record of the conviction of one R. B. Said W. testified that he had never been known by the name of B. Another witness testified that he was not certain that W. ever went by the name of B., but that witness had heard him called B. several times. Held, that the objection was properly overruled.—State v. Rose, 92 Mo. 201, 4 S. W. 733.

[e] (Pa. 1866) Where a witness for the commonwealth on a criminal trial testifies, in answer to questions by the prisoner's counsel, that he had been pardoned out of the penitentiary, where he had been imprisoned on conviction of burglary, the pardon is sufficiently proved to justify the admission of the witness.—Howser v. Commonwealth, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 332.

[f] (S. C. 1886) Where a witness is objected to on the ground that he has been convicted of a felony, the only evidence of such conviction being his own admission of the fact, his further statement that he has been pardoned is sufficient to establish his competency; but if the record of his conviction be introduced, like evidence of his pardon is necessary.—State v. Anderson, 24 S. C. 109.

[g] (Tenn. 1896) After accused's witness has admitted on cross-examination that he has been indicted for a certain crime in a certain court, the state may introduce in evidence the record in such case, containing the judgment declaring him infamous, and disqualifying him from testifying in the courts of this state.—Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. (12 Pickle) 209, 33 S. W. 1046.

[h] (Tex. 1877) A witness shown by production of the record to have been convicted of felony and sentenced for a term yet unexpired, and so disqualified, will not be presumed to have been pardoned merely because he is in attendance and apparently at large, but may be interrogated whether he has received a pardon.—Schell v. State, 2 Tex. App. 30.

[i] (Tex. 1879) The rule that pardon of a convict witness, relied on to restore competency, must be proved by the charter of pardon, is not changed by Pasch. Dig. art. 3110.—Cooper v. State, 7 Tex. App. 194.

[j] (Tex. 1894) Where defendant, on presentation by the state of a witness, is permitted without objection to elicit from him, for the purpose of showing his incompetency, that he had been convicted of a crime, and had not been pardoned, he should be held incompetent, the right to have his conviction shown by the records thereof being waived by the state.—White v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 177, 26 S. W. 72.

[k] (Tex. 1895) To render inadmissible the testimony of a witness on the ground that he has been convicted of a felony, the record of conviction must be produced. It is insufficient to prove the conviction by the cross-examination of the witness.—Bratton v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 477, 31 S. W. 379.

[a] (U. S. 1849) A woman offered as a witness, and objected to on the ground that she is the wife of the party calling her, cannot be examined to disprove the marriage, when there is sufficient evidence aliunde before the court to raise a presumption of marriage.—Rose v. Niles, Fed. Cas. No. 12,050 [Abb. Adm. 411].

[b] (Ala. 1890) In a prosecution for bigamy, the woman whom defendant was charged with having lawfully married having testified that she was his wife, there was no error in allowing the state to ask her if she was not the person he married at a certain time, so as to show, in connection with evidence that he was at that time already married, that she was not incompetent to testify against him.—Salter v. State, 92 Ala. 68, 9 South. 550.

[c] (Ga. 1881) A witness was objected to by defendant on the ground that she was his wife. The court allowed her to be sworn and asked whether she was living with defendant on March 9, 1866, the day Code, § 1667, took effect, legalizing the relationship of man and wife between persons of color. On an affirmative answer being given she was rejected and her answer stricken out. Held not error, as the court had a right to know that she was incompetent.—Williams v. State, 67 Ga. 260.

[d] (Pa. 1896) Where a woman testifies against defendant in a criminal case, and defendant claims that she is his wife, which she denies, the burden is on him to prove the same.—Commonwealth v. Mudgett 174 Pa. 211, 34 Atl. 588, affirming judgment (O. & T. 1895) 4 Pa. Dist. R. 739.

[e] (Wis. 1878) Proof of a wife's agency should generally be elicited by direct interrogatories on that subject.—Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567.

§ 201. Determination as to competency in general.

[a] (Cal. 1864) If a party to a suit objects to a witness who is offered against him on the ground that she is his wife, and sufficiently extablishes that ground by circumstantial evidence, and the court erroneously admits her as a witness, such error is cured by the statement made by her on cross-examination by such party, that she is not his lawful wife.—People v. Anderson, 26 Cal. 129.

[b] (Iowa, 1886) Where the examination of a witness is objected to on the ground that it does not appear that he has been before the grand jury, as required by Code 1873, § 4421, it is the duty of the court to determine from the indictment and the minutes of the evidence whether the facts are such as to entitle the state to examine him.—State v. Briggs, 68 Iowa, 416, 27 N. W. 358.

[c] (Mich. 1857) The court having ruled that a person offered as a witness could not be sworn, and afterwards offered to allow him to be sworn, the first ruling was not ground of error.—McBride v. Cicotte, 4 Mich. 478.

[d] (Mich. 1894) Where the record shows that the trial judge was satisfied that a witness mentally weak was competent to testify, and properly charged the jury as to the weight to be given her testimony, his refusal to directly pass on her competency before admitting her testimony is not ground for reversal.—Mead v. Harris, 101 Mich. 585, 60 N. W. 284.

[e] (Wis. 1878) The question whether a wife acted in a given transaction as her husband's agent (though she is probably a competent witness on that question) is to be determined by the court before she is admitted to testify in chief.—Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 28 Am. Rep. 567.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 98.

[a] (Kan. 1894) Civ. Code, § 323, subd. 2, provides that "children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined or of relating them truly" are incompetent as witnesses. Held, that the competency of a girl nine years of age might be determined during her examination, rather than before examination.—State v. Douglas, 53 Kan. 669, 37 Pac. 172.

[b] (Mo. 1890) The fact that the court permits a witness to testify, after objection made on account of his youth, is equivalent to a ruling that it is satisfied of witness' competency.—Ridenhour v. Kansas City Cable Ry. Co., 102 Mo. 270, 14 S. W. 760, affirming (1890) 102 Mo. 270, 13 S. W. 889.

[c] (Tex. 1882) The method of determining the competency of a child is within the discretion of the judge.—Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 127.

§ 203. Questions of law and fact.

[a] The competency of a witness is a question for the court, not the jury.

—(Ill. 1862) Kelly v. People, 29 Ill. 287;

(Ind. 1863) Duncan v. Welty, 20 Ind. 44;

(Mass. 1809) Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219, 229;

(Mo. 1844) Chouteau v. Searcy, 8 Mo. 733;

(W. Va. 1893) State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565, 16 S. E. 803.

[b] (Ala. 1875) It is error in a criminal case to receive the testimony of a witness objected to as being the wife of defendant, with a direction to the jury to disregard her testimony, if from the evidence they believe her to be defendant's wife.—Jackson v. State, 53 Ala. 472.

[c] (Conn. 1859) The question whether a person who is offered as a witness is insane at the time goes to the competency of the witness, and is a preliminary question to be decided by the court.—Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 177.

[d] (Ga. 1888) A witness having been examined on interrogatories by commission is, prima facie, mentally competent to testify; and evidence afterwards taken, tending to show that he was insane when examined, is for consideration of the jury, and not for the court; there being also testimony in favor of sanity.—City of Gainesville v. Caldwell, 81 Ga. 76, 7 S. E. 99.

[f] (Mich. 1877) The judge determines a witness' competency, unless it depends on a disputed question of evidence, which he may refer to the jury.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

[g] (Minn. 1895) Where a witness' sanity is attacked in order to impeach his competency or credibility, evidence of prior temporary delusions and of insanity of ancestors and relatives is insufficient to take the question of sanity to the jury, and it was hence not error to reject the same, in the absence of other evidence.—State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63.

[h] (Pa. 1853) The jury may infer the minority of a witness examined before them.—Snodgrass v. Bradley, 2 Grant, Cas. 43.

[i] (S. C. 1831) Whether one offered as a witness is or is not a mulatto, or person of color, is to be decided by a jury on the evidence of features and complexion afforded by inspection, the evidence of reputation as to parentage, and the evidence of station in society occupied by the party.—State v. Davis, 2 Bailey, 558.

[j] (Va. 1874) Whether a witness, by reason of being a lunatic, is incompetent, is a question of law for the court.—Coleman v. Commonwealth, 25 Grat. 865, 18 Am. Rep. 711.

[a] (Ark. 1876) On the rejection of a witness for incompetency as the wife of defendant, it is unnecessary to set out what the party offering him expected to prove by the witness.—Rickerstricker v. State, 31 Ark. 207.

[b] (Cal. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, declaring that "children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly," cannot be witnesses, the determination of the judge as to the competency of such a witness is not reviewable.—People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186.

[c] (Ind. 1894) A child was called as a witness for plaintiff, said he was 9 years old in answer to questions asked by the court and plaintiff, and was found incompetent by the court. Held, that a refusal to permit plaintiff to interrogate the child further, to prove by him that he was over 10 years old, would not be reviewed, plaintiff having asked the child no pertinent question.—Taylor v. McGrath, 9 Ind. App. 30, 36 N. E. 163.

[d] (Me. 1854) The question whether the mother of a bastard was constant in her accusation, so as to become a competent witness under Rev. St. c. 131, § 8, is one of fact to be determined by the presiding judge; and exceptions to his decision will not lie.—Jackson v. Jones, 38 Me. 185.

[e] (Mass. 1849) Where it does not appear that a witness, rejected as incompetent, knew or could testify to anything relevant to the issue on trial, such rejection is not a valid ground of exception.—Bates v. Barber, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 107.

[f] (Mass. 1852) The question whether a person is or is not an atheist, and so an incompetent witness, is a question of fact for the presiding judge alone, and his decision is not open to exception.—Commonwealth v. Hills, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 530.

[g] (Mass. 1870) The determination by the presiding judge of the fact whether "the cause of action in issue was transacted" with the wife in the absence of her husband, preliminary to her admission or exclusion under St. 1865, c. 207, § 2, is not the subject of an exception.—O'Connor v. Hallinan, 103 Mass. 547.

[h] (N. C. 1853) On an issue as to the qualifications of a witness, the trial court is the exclusive judge whether the witness understands the obligation of an oath, and has intelligence sufficient to give evidence.—State v. Perry, 44 N. C. 330.

[i] (N. C. 1857) An exception to the competency of a witness need not set out the testimony which the witness was called to give.—Wright v. Stowe, 49 N. C. 516.

[j] (Pa. 1889) Where a witness' testimony is rejected as incredible, the question of his competency is immaterial.—Appeal of Ahl, 129 Pa. 26, 18 Atl. 471, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 113.

[k] (Vt. 1842) Whether the objection to the competency of a witness who believed that there is no God has been removed by a change of views is a question of fact for the court, and is not matter of error.—Scott v. Hooper, 14 Vt. 535.

§ 205. Effect of incompetency in general.

[a] (Me. 1861) If the incompetency of a witness, because of infamy, becomes manifest by legal evidence at any stage of the trial, his testimony should form no part of the evidence to be considered, if seasonably objected to.—State v. Damery, 48 Me. 327.

§ 206. Effect as disqualifying adverse party.

[a] (N. J. 1862) A defendant is an incompetent witness under Nix. Dig. p. 928, when a husband and wife are plaintiffs.—Handlong v. Barnes, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 69.

[b] (N. J. 1891) A corporation, though physically unable to testify in its aggregate capacity, is not legally incapacitated from testifying through its officers and agents, and, in an action against it by an individual, cannot object to the testimony of the opposite party because of the provision of the New Jersey statute that no party shall be sworn where the opposite party is legally incapacitated from being a witness.—North Hudson County R. Co. v. May, 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 401, 5 Atl. 276.

[c] (Va. 1886) Code 1873, c. 172, § 22, provides that where one of the original parties to the contract under investigation is incompetent to testify for any cause, the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own behalf. In an action against the wife on a bond given by her husband as her trustee, held, that the payee's deposition should be excluded.—Lindsay v. McCormick, 82 Va. 479, 5 S. E. 534.

[d] (Va. 1886) One who is trustee for his wife is incompetent to testify to payments of the price of property purchased by him as trustee out of trust funds. And the husband being incompetent, so, also, was the special commissioner at a judicial sale, to whom the payments were made.—Lindsay v. McCormick, 82 Va. 479, 5 S. E. 534.

[e] (Va. 1892) In assumpsit against husband and wife jointly, both of whom are parties in interest, plaintiff cannot testify as to matters in the knowledge of both himself and the husband, where the latter is excluded as a witness because of his wife's interest.—Johnson v. Fry, 88 Va. 695, 12 S. E. 973, 14 S. E. 183.

[f] (Va. 1894) The obligor and obligee of a bond being dead, their declarations concerning it cannot be proved by the assignee of said bond, and his incompetence disqualifies opposing parties in interest from similar proof.—Ginter v. Breeden, 90 Va. 565, 19 S. E. 656.

§ 207. Nature and grounds of incompetency in general.

[a] To exclude a witness on the ground of interest, he must appear to be interested in favor of the party who calls him.

—(Ind. 1831) Sims v. Givan, 2 Blackf. 461;

(N. Y. 1806) Jackson v. Vredenbergh, 1 Johns. 159; (1811) Lansingburg v. Willard, 8 Johns. 428.

[b] (Mich. 1859) It is the interest of the party in the subject-matter as to which he is examined, and not the effect his evidence may have in the final determination of the issue, that renders him incompetent.—Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12.

[a] (U. S. 1868) Act Cong. June 25, 1868 (15 Stat. c. 71), providing that no claimant "shall be a competent witness in the court of claims in supporting" any claim, and that "no testimony given by such claimant shall be used," applies to testimony given before as well as after the act took effect; and the prohibition applies as well to defendants as to claimants.—In re Hubbell, 4 Ct. Cl. 37.

[b] (Ala. 1846) Since the passage of Acts 1845, p. 136, § 2, the defendant in execution cannot be received as a witness in a trial of the right of property, although the suit was in progress and the deposition taken before the passage of the act.—Yarborough v. Moss, 9 Ala. 382.

[c] (Me. 1867) Rev. St. c. 82, § 79, providing that parties should not be witnesses when the cause of action implied any offenses against the criminal law unless defendant first offered himself as a witness, was repealed by Pub. Laws 1864, c. 272, providing that no defendant shall be compelled to testify in suits when the cause of action implies an offense against the criminal law on the part of the said defendant, and if he shall offer himself as a witness, he shall be held to waive his privilege of not testifying where his testimony might criminate himself, but that his testimony should not be used against him in a criminal prosecution involving the same subject-matter.—Buckman v. Perkins, 55 Me. 490.

[d] (N. C. 1880) In a suit on a contract, the competency of a witness to testify as to the contract is to be determined by the law in force at the time of trial, regardless of the competency of the witness at any prior time.—Tabor v. Ward, 83 N. C. 291.

[a] (N. C. 1879) It is not admissible for plaintiff to prove by his own oath or to examine defendant to prove the nonpayment of a bond executed prior to August 1, 1868, in view of Acts 1879, c. 183, providing that no person who is a party to a suit on a bond executed previous to August 1, 1868, shall be a competent witness.—Cannon v. Morris, 81 N. C. 139.

[b] (N. C. 1880) Acts 1879, c. 183, making a party to a suit on a bond executed prior to August 1, 1868, a competent witness, does not apply to notes, and hence plaintiff was not incompetent to testify that he signed a note in 1860 for defendant's accommodation.—Smith v. Haynes, 82 N. C. 448.

[c] (N. C. 1880) Act March 11, 1879, provided that no person who was a party to a suit then existing, or which might thereafter be commenced on any judgment rendered, or on any bond under seal for the payment of money executed prior to August 1, 1868, should be a competent witness, "but the rules of evidence in force when said judgment was rendered, or said bond under seal was executed, shall be applicable to said suit." In a suit on a sealed note made in 1866, when parties to a suit were by law competent witnesses, held, that the last clause of the act should be interpreted to have reference to the rules of evidence in force when the note was executed, other than that which was made the especial subject of legislation in the act.—Tabor v. Ward, 83 N. C. 291.

[d] (N. C. 1881) A party to a sealed note executed prior to 1868 is an incompetent witness in an action thereon to prove payment of the note under Acts 1879, c. 183, providing that no party to a suit founded on any bond for the payment of money executed prior to August 1, 1868, shall be a competent witness.—Blue v. Gilchrist, 84 N. C. 239.

[e] (N. C. 1882) Acts 1879, c. 183, which renders incompetent as a witness a party to a suit "on any bond for the payment of money, or conditioned to pay money," executed prior to August 1, 1868, does not apply to official bonds to secure fidelity in the discharge of duty, but is confined to money obligations to pay a fixed sum.—Morgan v. Bunting, 86 N. C. 66.

[f] (N. C. 1884) Acts 1879, c. 183, making a party to a suit on a judgment rendered previous to August 1, 1868, an incompetent witness, does not apply to an action to recover the amount of firm debts paid by plaintiff after it was decided by arbitration that they should be paid by defendant.—Clanton v. Price, 90 N. C. 96.

[g] (N. C. 1885) Code, § 580, making one having an interest in a bond incompetent as a witness in an action founded on it, does not prevent an obligor in a bond from testifying that it has been paid, where the action is not on the bond, but to rescind a contract for fraud in representing the bond to be unpaid.—Borden v. Gully, 92 N. C. 127.

[i] (N. C. 1890) Where defendant pleads payment of a bond executed prior to 1868, but on the trial relies solely on the presumption of payment, a witness who is interested in the result of the action is not competent to testify, under Code, § 580, which provides that no person who has any interest in a bond executed prior to 1868 shall be a competent witness on the trial of an action on it, except where defendant "relies upon the plea of payment in fact," as merely pleading payment, without relying on the plea, does not prevent the application of the inhibitory part of the statute.—Alston v. Hawkins, 105 N. C. 8, 11 S. E. 164, 18 Am. St. Rep. 874.

§ 210. Balance of interest as between adverse parties in general.

As between grantor or vendor and adverse party, see post, §§ 290, 294.

—— mortgagor and adverse party, see post, § 276.

[a] Where the interest of a witness is equally balanced, he is competent to testify for every purpose.

(N. Y. 1839) Miller v. McCan, 7 Paige, 451.

[e] A witness with an equally balanced interest is competent, and if there is a preponderance of interest in favor of one party, the other party may, if he pleases, waive the objection and call him as a witness.

—(Ill. 1861) Muchmore v. Jeffers, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 199;

(Iowa, 1860) Kingsbury v. Buchanan, 11 Iowa, 387.

[f] (Cal. 1857) That a witness is to be paid out of the disputed property on which he works, it appearing that he will be paid at any rate, does not render him incompetent.—Live Yankee Co. v. Oregon Co., 7 Cal. 40.

[g] (Conn. 1838) A. having attached goods in the possession of B., as his property, to secure a debt against him, C. brought replevin against A., claiming that the goods were his, and that he had delivered them to B. as a bailee only. A. claimed that the goods had been sold to B., and had been paid for in the note of a third person, who it was admitted was insolvent, and in support of this claim A. offered B. as a witness. Held, that B. had a direct and certain interest, which his testimony would sustain; that his liability over to C. was doubtful and uncertain in amount; and that there was not, therefore, that balance of interest which would render him competent.—Barker v. Green, 13 Conn. 54.

[h] (Ga. 1832) Where a person offered as a witness will be liable in any event of the suit, but in one case for the whole amount sued for, and in the other only for contribution, he is incompetent.—Miller v. Hale, Dud. 119.

[i] (Ga. 1892) Under the evidence act of 1889 a witness not a party to the case, who is liable to plaintiff if the action fails, and is equally liable to defendant if it succeeds, is competent to testify in behalf of either party, as his interest is balanced.—Hidell v. Dwinell, 89 Ga. 532, 16 S. E. 79.

[j] (Ill. 1842) It is not a fatal objection that a defendant, used as a witness against a codefendant, has an interest in the event of the suit, unless his interest be against the party whose interest is sought to be prejudiced by his testimony; and even where he has an interest in favor of the party calling him, he may still be competent, if it appear that he has an equal interest on the other side.—Dyer v. Martin, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 146.

[k] (Ky. 1852) Where a verdict for either party would equally benefit a witness, he is not incompetent.—Adams v. Gardiner, 52 Ky. (13 B. Mon.) 197.

[l] (La.) A witness equally responsible, whatever the result, is competent; his interest is counterpoised. Where the opposite interests are unequal, their difference disqualifies him to defeat the larger liability. Where, however, in one event he would be liable for costs, and the other not, he is still competent if the agent of the party calling him.—(1826) Martial v. Cotterel, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 277; (1843) Bell v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 5 Rob. 423; (1845) McDonogh v. Delassus, 10 Rob. 489.

[m] (N. Y. 1809) A. and B. being indebted to C., he attached money in the hands of D. belonging to B. In an action brought by C. against D. for the money so attached, and held by him to answer to C., held, that A. was a competent witness for plaintiff; for though the recovery of plaintiff would so far go to discharge the debt due by the witness, yet he would be liable over for the same amount to B., so that his interest was balanced between the parties.—McLeod v. Johnston, 4 Johns. 126.

[n] (N. Y. 1841) Where the interest of the witness is prima facie balanced between the parties, the possibility that he may have a better defense against one than the other will not prevent his being sworn. — Starkweather v. Mathews, 2 Hill, 131.

[o] (N. C. 1847) A. owed B. a debt, which C. had promised to pay, and A. was offered as a witness in an action between B. and C. on C.'s promise. Held, as he was equally interested on both sides, that he was a competent witness.—Carraway v. Cox, 30 N. C. 79.

tent witness for plaintiff.—Ware v. Stephenson, 10 Leigh, 155.

[r] (Va. 1857) An interest in a witness in one way cannot be counterbalanced or outweighed by an equal or greater in the opposite, unless the latter is also direct and immediate.—Brown's Adm'r v. Johnson, 13 Grat. 644; Isbell's Ex'r v. Same, Id.

§ 211. Testimony admissible notwithstanding interest in general.

Testimony of salvors, see post, § 232.

[a] (U. S. 1871) The exception of the common law, by which a party is allowed to testify in his own behalf, ex necessitate rei, because his is the only testimony that the circumstances admit of being furnished, is confined to cases where defendant is a wrongdoer. It does not apply in a suit in the court of claims under the act of congress of 1866 (14 Stat. 44), brought to obtain relief for a loss of government funds. —Christian v. United States, 7 Ct. Cl. 431.

[b] (Ga. 1857) Interested parties to the record are incompetent as witnesses, and only admitted to prove what from the necessity of the case cannot be otherwise shown.—Brady v. Little, 21 Ga. 132; Field v. Reid, Id. 314.

[c] (Ga. 1857) In an action for the recovery of land, defendants in the declaration signed on the back thereof an acknowledgment of the service of the within writ, "and waive the necessity of copy of it, and service thereof by the sheriff." Held, that a codefendant who executed such acknowledgment is a competent witness to show his own intention in making such acknowledgment to waive the service of process. —Ingram v. Little, 21 Ga. 420.

[d] (Miss. 1852) A party to the record can give evidence in his own favor when no other can reasonably be expected, or when otherwise there would be a failure of justice.—Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. (2 Cushm.) 528.

[f] (Pa. 1842) A party to a suit is a competent witness to prove the service of notice on the opposite party.—Siltzell v. Michael, 3 Watts & S. 329.

[g] (Pa. 1845) A plaintiff is a competent witness to prove that a deposition was taken at the time called for in the notice and rule.—Black v. Moore, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 344.

[h] (Pa. 1845) Plaintiff, in an action against a justice of the peace, for marrying his daughter, a minor, without his consent, is incompetent to prove notice of the action.—Minor v. Neal, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 403.

[i] (Tex. 1854) An interested witness may testify where a question of practice is involved. —Gillespie's Adm'r v. Redmond, 13 Tex. 9.

[j] (Vt. 1834) Plaintiff is a competent witness to prove that articles for which suit is brought were not adjudicated on in a former suit of the same nature.—McLaughlin v. Hill, 6 Vt. 20.

[k] (Vt. 1838) A party may testify to the admissions of the other party.—Reed v. Talford, 10 Vt. 568.

§ 212. —— Proof preliminary to introduction of secondary evidence.

[a] In an action on a note alleged to be lost, testimony of plaintiff is admissible to prove the loss.

—(Del. 1834) Shrowders v. Harper, 1 Har. 444;
(Ill. 1850) Wade v. Wade, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 89;
(Ind. 1844) Bean v. Keen, 7 Blackf. 152;
(Miss. 1845) Davis v. Black, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 226;
(N. Y. 1822) Chamberlain v. Gorham, 20 Johns. 144.

(Ill. 1840) Dormady v. State Bank, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 236;
(S. C. 1818) Sims v. Sims, 2 Mill, Const. 225; (1831) Davis v. Benbow, 2 Bailey, 427; (1839) Mothershed v. Cliburn, 1 Rice, 293;
(Vt. 1826) Wright v. Jacobs, 1 Aikens, 304.

[b] Parties and persons interested are competent witnesses in respect to facts and circumstances necessary to lay a foundation for secondary evidence of a writing.

—(Ala. 1846) Juzan v. Toulmin, 9 Ala. 662, 44 Am. Dec. 448;
(Ark. 1857) Moore v. Maxwell, 18 Ark. 469;

(N. J. 1832) Stafford v. Stafford, 1 N. J. Eq. (Saxt.) 525.

[c] The testimony of a party or person interested in a cause may be received, to prove to the court the loss of a deed, in order to lay a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence to prove the contents of the deed.

—(Ga. 1842) Maynor v. Lewis, Ga. Dec. 205, pt. 2; (N. H. 1831) McNiel v. McClintock, 5 N. H. 355; (1844) Bachelder v. Nutting, 16 N. H. 261.

(Conn. 1810) Coleman v. Wolcott, 4 Day, 388.

[d] The affidavit of a party may be received to prove the loss of a writing in order to admit secondary evidence of its contents.

—(U. S. 1828) Tayloe v. Riggs, 26 U. S. (1 Pet.) 591, 7 L. Ed. 275;
(La. 1869) Yale v. Oliver, 21 La. Ann. 454;
(Ohio, 1853) Wells v. Martin, 1 Ohio St. 386.

(Mo. 1862) Gould v. Trowbridge, 32 Mo. 291.

[e] A party to a suit is not a competent witness to the loss of a penal bond with a view to the introduction of secondary proof of its contents.

—(N. C. 1813) Cotton v. Beasley, 6 N. C. 259;
(Vt. 1825) Penfield v. Cook, 1 Aikens, 96.

[f, g] (Ala. 1845) The sureties to a bond for an attachment are competent witnesses on plea in abatement to establish that an affidavit was made and was lost, so that another may be substituted.—Ex parte Simpson, 7 Ala. 842.

[h] (Cal. 1858) The affidavit of a party is admissible, though the court has also the right to examine him orally, to prove the destruction of a writing, though the existence and contents of the paper must be established by testimony competent under the ordinary rules of evidence. —Bagley v. Eaton, 10 Cal. 126.

[i] (Cal. 1861) In a suit by the assignees of a firm upon certain indebtedness originally contracted by defendant with the firm, a member of the firm is a competent witness for the assignee to prove the loss of the firm book of original entries, in order to let in the ledger to which such entries were subsequently transferred.—Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569.

[j] (Conn. 1848) There is no distinction, as affecting the competency of a party to prove the loss of an instrument, between cases where the action is on the instrument and where the question arises indirectly.—Fitch v. Bogue, 19 Conn. 285.

[k] (Fla. 1851) The affidavit of a party, as to the loss of a deed, document, or other writing, after evidence of the existence thereof by other testimony, is admissible.—Porter v. Ferguson, 4 Fla. 102.

[l] (Ill. 1870) On an application for assignment of dower by a widow whose husband derived title as purchaser under execution which is alleged to have been lost and cannot be found, the ex parte affidavits of the clerk of the court from which the execution issued, and of the widow and administratrix of the sheriff who made the sale, are inadmissible to prove that proper search has been made for the lost execution, with the view to lay the foundation for secondary evidence, since the persons making such affidavits are competent witnesses and can be called to testify before the court in respect to the facts sought to be proved.—Becker v. Quigg, 54 Ill. 390.

[m] (Ky. 1820) To prove the loss of a lease under which plaintiff claimed in an action of forcible detainer, the plaintiff is a competent witness.—Hamit v. Lawrence, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 366.

[n] (Ky. 1831) The rule which permits a party for the purpose of introducing inferior testimony to depose to the loss of a paper extends only to papers the custody or control of which the party has or may be presumed to have.—Drake v. Vaughan, 29 Ky. (6 J. J. Marsh.) 143.

[o] (La. 1838) A party's affidavit is admissible to show the loss of his title papers and support the facts rendering it probable.—Gravier's Curator v. Rapp, 12 La. 162.

[p] (Me. 1852) In an action by an administrator for money loaned to defendant, for which he was alleged to have given notes now lost, plaintiff's affidavit, stating that he had reason to believe that the testator at the time of his death was possessed of notes and that affiant had made diligent search, that he had inquired at the banks and of relatives of the intestate and other persons with whom many of intestate's effects were left or were likely to have been left, and at places that he had reason to suppose that any such effects might have been left or deposited, but had been unable to find any, is inadmissible as facts for the consideration of the jury.—Mason v. Tallman, 34 Me. 472.

[q] (Miss. 1850) In an action involving the title of a slave sold under execution in another state on a justice's judgment rendered in that state, the party claiming under the sale made affidavit of the loss of the book kept by the justice in which the entry of the judgment and proceedings was copied, and offered to prove the contents of the book and character of the entry. Held, that it was competent for such party to prove by his own affidavit, addressed to the court, the loss of the justice's docket with a view of laying a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of its contents.—Scott v. Loomis, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 635.

[r] (Mo. 1822) A person of whom a plaintiff purchased a slave is a competent witness to prove the loss of a bill of sale of the slave given by defendant to the witness, notwithstanding the latter may have warranted the title to plaintiff.—Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Mo. 220.

[rr] (N. H. 1818) The cashier of a bank is a competent witness for the bank to prove that a note belonging to the bank was lost while he was cashier.—Strafford Bank v. Cornell, 1 N. H. 192.

[s] (N. Y.) Preliminary to proof of its contents by parol, a party seeking to prove a will may prove by his own testimony that a futile search was made therefor.—(1825) Dan v. Brown, 4 Cow. 483, 15 Am. Dec. 395; (1826) Jackson v. Betts, 6 Cow. 377.

[t] (N. Y. 1825) An interested person, or even a party to the suit, is a competent witness to prove the death of a subscribing witness to a lease, for the purpose of letting in secondary proof of its execution.—Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451.

[tt] (N. Y. 1830) Plaintiff in ejectment may be sworn on the trial of a cause to prove search made for a will under which he claims, but cannot be permitted to testify to other matters.—Betts v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 173.

[u] (N. Y. 1841) A party to a suit may be called to prove the loss of a written instrument, but he cannot be examined as to its former existence.—Woodworth v. Barker, 1 Hill, 172.

[uu] (N. Y. 1847) The rule of evidence which permits a party to a suit to give evidence on his own behalf to the court, touching the loss or destruction of a paper, in order to lay a foundation for the admission of secondary evidence, is not limited to facts peculiarly within the knowledge of the party, such as that the paper is not in his own possession, but allows him to testify to any matters pertinent to the inquiry; as, for example, the extent of the search which he has made for the document elsewhere than among his own papers.—Vedder v. Wilkins, 5 Denio, 64.

[v] (N. Y. 1850) Where a party to the record is called to prove the loss of a paper for the purpose of enabling secondary evidence to be given, his testimony must be confined to the fact of loss, and to such matters as identify or describe the paper, so as to show that the one lost was the one in question. Nevertheless, if he goes somewhat beyond this, and it appears that the incompetent statements were disregarded, the error will be overlooked.—Hollenbeck v. Van Valkenburgh, 5 How. Prac. 281, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 33.

[vv] (N. Y. 1864) It was always competent to prove the loss or destruction of a paper by the party, in order to let in the secondary proof of its contents; and there is no provision of the Code that operates to the exclusion of a party from thus testifying.—Williston v. Williston, 41 Barb. 635.

[w] (Ohio, 1848) In actions where the claim is founded on book account, a party, in case the original books be lost by accident, may be examined on oath to prove their loss, and touching the validity of the account, though the contents of the books must be proved by other testimony.—Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Ohio, 156.

[ww] (Pa. 1791) Plaintiff is a good witness to prove the death of a subscribing witness to a deed, in order to let in evidence of the handwriting.—Douglass' Lessee v. Sanderson, 2 Dall. 116, 1 L. Ed. 312.

[x] (Pa. 1791) A party is competent to testify as to the death or absence of a subscribing witness to a deed.—Douglass' Lessee v. Sanderson, 1 Yeates, 15.

[xx] (Pa. 1818) In laying the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence of the contents of a deed, plaintiff is a competent witness to prove notice to the defendant to produce such deed.—Jordon v. Cooper, 3 Serg. & R. 564.

[y] (Pa. 1846) Where an interested party was offered, and admitted to prove the loss of title deeds, and exception was taken, the record not showing that the testimony was given to the court only, it was held erroneous.—Grant v. Levan, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 393.

[yy] (S. C. 1805) The loss of a mortgage cannot be proved by the oath of the party claiming under it.—Ross v. McCartan, 1 Brev. 507.

[z] (S. C. 1805) A defendant in an action to try title to land cannot prove the loss or destruction of a deed under which he claims by his own oath in order to prove by other evidence the existence and contents of such deed. —Ross v. McCartan, 1 Brev. 507.

[zz] (Va. 1813) A copy of a bill of exchange and notarial certificate of protest, with an affidavit of the payee, who was a party, that the original is lost or mislaid, is not legal evidence to charge the drawer.—Wright v. Hencock, 3 Munf. 521.

[a] (Ark. 1857) An administrator is a competent witness to prove the existence and contents of a lost bond for title given by his intestate for an interest in land sold by him in his lifetime, though the administrator has, in pursuance of law, executed a deed with warranty to the purchaser in accordance with the bond.—Moore v. Maxwell, 18 Ark. 469.

[b] (Mass. 1828) A party to a suit may be a competent witness to prove the loss of a deed or a record for the purpose of letting in secondary evidence, but not to prove the contents thereof.—Adams v. Leland, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 62.

[c] (Miss. 1845) In an action on a lost note, the affidavit of plaintiff of the loss of a note is incompetent as proof of the contents of the note.—Davis v. Black, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 226.

[d] (Mo. 1855) A defendant cannot prove by his own oath the contents of a lost receipt which he relies on as evidence of payment of the demand sued on.—Beachboard's Adm'r v. Luce, 22 Mo. 168.

[e] (N. H. 1856) An assignee in bankruptcy is a competent witness to prove that notices of the sale of property belonging to the bankrupt were duly posted, and also to prove their contents, it appearing that he had no knowledge where they were, or what had become of them. —Bean v. Brackett, 34 N. H. 102.

[f] (N. C. 1854) In an action on a note, an affidavit of plaintiff that a note for a certain sum had been executed to him by defendant, and that plaintiff had not negotiated the note, and that it had been mislaid or lost, was inadmissible, for though plaintiff might give evidence of the loss of the note in order to establish a foundation for secondary evidence, it was not permissible to establish its contents in that manner or that it had not been transferred.—Grant v. Reid, 46 N. C. 512.

[g] (Tenn. 1853) Affidavits of a party are good to prove the loss of a document, but not its contents, which go to the merits and must come from a competent witness.—Pharis v. Lambert, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed) 228.

§ 214. —— Proof as to damages.

[a] (U. S. 1877) Act June 25, 1868, providing that a claimant of any right against the United States or any person interested therein shall be a competent witness in the court of claims in supporting the same, does not exclude such claimant, where his right to relief is established by other evidence, from proving the contents of a package in regard to which his claim to relief has already been established. — United States v. Clark, 96 U. S. 37, 24 L. Ed. 696.

[b] (U. S. 1877) Independent of any statute enabling parties to testify in their own behalf, a party is competent (ex necessitate) to testify to the contents of a trunk or package the loss of which, and the liability of defendant therefor, has been established by independent evidence.—United States v. Clark, 96 U. S. 37, 24 L. Ed. 696.

[d] (U. S. 1886) If a United States disbursing officer establishes the fact of the loss of government funds in his charge by other testimony than his own, he is a competent witness to prove the amount.—Hoyle v. United States, 21 Ct. Cl. 300.

[e] (Ala. 1861) Plaintiff in an action against a common carrier for a loss of a trunk may testify as to its contents and their value; and his deposition may be taken for a like purpose.—Douglass v. Montgomery & W. P. R. Co., 37 Ala. 638, 79 Am. Dec. 76.

[f] (Ga. 1852) In an action against a common carrier for the loss of a trunk, the evidence of the plaintiff or his wife is inadmissible to prove its contents, if other evidence is attainable.—Dibble v. Brown, 12 Ga. 217, 56 Am. Dec. 460.

[ff] (Ga. 1867) In an action to charge an innkeeper for the loss of a trunk and its contents, the wife of plaintiff is admissible to prove the contents of the trunk, independently of the act of 1866, when no other evidence is attainable, upon a policy in favorem justitiæ, springing out of the necessity of the case and the nature of the subject.—Sasseen v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242.

[g] (Ill. 1858) In an action against a common carrier, the plaintiff is a competent witness to prove the contents of his own lost baggage, where he cannot adduce other evidence of these contents. — Parmelee v. McNulty, 19 Ill. (9 Peck) 556.

[gg] (Ill. 1858) In an action for baggage lost, a person who may have had some of the articles lost in his trunk, or may have had articles which belonged to him in the trunk lost, is a competent witness.—Parmelee v. Austin, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 35.

[h] (Ill. 1859) The owner of lost baggage should not be permitted to prove the value of the articles in which it is packed. So of other articles, the value of which may be established from description.—Davis v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 278, 74 Am. Dec. 151.

[hh] (Ill. 1860) In an action against a carrier for loss of a trunk, either plaintiff or his wife (who was a passenger with him) may testify as to the contents of the trunk, but not of their value.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Taylor, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 323; Same v. Copeland, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 332, 76 Am. Dec. 749.

[i] (Ill. 1860) The owner cannot testify, with relation to the value of articles in a lost trunk, in an action by himself, without showing that no other witnesses can testify as to the value from his description of them.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Taylor, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 323; Same v. Copeland, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 332, 76 Am. Dec. 749.

[ii] (Ill. 1866) The general rule of evidence, forbidding parties interested in a suit from testifying, precludes one who has shipped a trunk by express from testifying as to its contents in an action against the company for its loss; the exception to the general rule which allows travelers in actions against carriers for loss of their baggage to testify as to the contents thereof not being applicable in such a case.—Adams Exp. Co. v. Haynes, 42 Ill. 89.

[j] (Ind. 1829) In an action of debt on a delivery bond executed by the debtor and his surety and conditioned for delivery of the property taken on execution in as good order as it was at the date of the bond, a breach of the bond was alleged in that the property was not delivered in as good order as when the bond was executed. Held, that the sheriff was a competent witness to prove the value of the property.—Chinn v. Perry, 2 Blackf. 268.

[jj] (Ind. 1862) In an action against a railroad company by a passenger to recover the value of a lost trunk, the ex parte affidavit of plaintiff is not competent evidence to prove the contents of the trunk, but the plaintiff himself is a competent witness for that purpose.—Indiana Cent. R. Co. v. Gulick, 19 Ind. 83.

[k] (Ky. 1859) In an action to recover for the loss of a valise and its contents, which had been placed in the custody of defendant at his tavern by plaintiff as a guest, the latter is not a competent witness to prove the contents of the valise or their value.—Packard v. Northcraft's Adm'r, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 439.

[kk] (La. 1866) In an action by a passenger against a carrier for the loss of baggage containing a trunk, the passenger is inadmissible as a witness to testify as to the contents of the trunk and its value, under Civ. Code arts. 2257–2940.—Block v. The Trent, 18 La. Ann. 664.

[l] (Me. 1820) A shipmaster having received a trunk of goods on board his vessel, to be carried to another port, which, on the passage, he broke open and rifled of its contents, the owner of the goods, proving the delivery of the trunk and its violation, was admitted as a witness, in an action for the goods against the shipmaster, to testify to the particular contents of the trunk, there being no other evidence of the fact to be obtained.—Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Me. (1 Greenl.) 27.

[ll] (Me. 1847) In an action against a common carrier for the loss of a box alleged to contain medical books, medicines, surgical instruments, and chemical apparatus, plaintiff should not be allowed to prove the contents of the box on his own oath, although it did not appear that he had any other means of showing it.—Pudor v. Boston & M. R. R., 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 458.

[m] (Me. 1847) The testimony of the plaintiff in an action against a common carrier for the loss of a package, in respect to the contents, should be limited to clothing and personal ornaments.—Pudor v. Boston & M. R. R., 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 458.

[mm] (Md. 1857) In a suit against an innkeeper for a robbery of a trunk in his house, plaintiff may testify to the value of its contents; and this exception grows rather ex necessitate rei, than from a presumption in odium spoliatoris.—Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212.

[n] (Md. 1857) A plaintiff's oath as to the contents of his trunk, robbed at an inn, is always admissible, unless it appears from the facts that there was other proof to which he might have resorted on this same point.—Pettigrew v. Barnum, 11 Md. 434, 69 Am. Dec. 212.

[nn] (Mass. 1846) In an action by a passenger against a railroad company to recover for loss of a trunk, plaintiff is not a competent witness as to the contents and value of the trunk, though he has no other evidence.—Snow v. Eastern R. Co., 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 44.

[o] (Mass. 1857) The provision of St. 1851, c. 147, § 5, that in any action "brought by a passenger against any railroad corporation, steamboat proprietor or other common carrier," the plaintiff, after proof of the bailment of his trunk to the defendants, and of its loss "by the fault of such carrier, or of the agents of such carrier," shall be allowed to put in evidence a descriptive list of its contents, sworn to by himself, applies to the case of the loss of a trunk left by the passenger with the baggage master of a railroad corporation after arriving at his place of destination.—Harlow v. Fitchburg R. Co., 74 Mass. (8 Gray) 237.

[oo] (Mich. 1853) The contents of a trunk taken as freight cannot be proved by the owner's oath, in an action against a carrier to recover for its loss.—Wright v. Caldwell, 3 Mich. 51.

[p] (Mo. 1847) A party is a competent witness in his own favor, in cases in which defendant has been guilty of some tortious act, or of some fraud, and where no other evidence can be had, as in the case of a bailee who breaks open a box committed to his care, and steals the contents; and the rule also extends to innkeepers whose lodgers are robbed; but, in all such cases, the tort or robbery must first be proved by evidence aliunde, and clearly established (of which the court must judge), before plaintiff can, by his own oath, establish the articles stolen or lost.—Sparr v. Wellman, 11 Mo. 230.

[pp] (Mo.) A passenger whose baggage has been lost by the negligence of the agents or servants of the carrier is a competent witness to prove the contents of the baggage and its value in an action against the company.—(1866) Nolan v. Ohio & M. R. Co., 39 Mo. 114; (1867) Williams v. Frost, Id. 516.

[q] (N. H. 1845) In a mortgagor's suit to recover the mortgaged chattel, defendant set up that plaintiff had received another chattel covered by the same mortgage, and was chargeable with the value thereof, and that his debt had been satisfied thereby. Held, that the mortgagor was a competent witness as to the value of such chattel.—Gage v. Whittier, 17 N. H. 312.

[qq] (N. Y. 1854) In an action by a guest, against an innkeeper, to recover the value of property lost, the guest is a competent witness to prove the value of the property so far as it is personal baggage.—Taylor v. Monnot, 1 Abb. Prac. 325.

[r] (N. Y. 1854) Plaintiff in a suit brought against a hotel keeper to recover a sum of money carried by him bona fide for traveling expenses, which was stolen from his locked portmanteau while he was a guest at the house, is a competent witness to prove both the fact of the loss and its amount.—Taylor v. Monnot, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 116.

[s] (N. Y. 1857) The general railroad law (St. 1850), allowing plaintiff to testify in his own behalf in actions for lost baggage, is limited to companies formed under that act.—Garvey v. Camden & A. R. Co., 4 Abb. Prac. 171, 1 Hilt. 280.

[ss] (N. Y. 1857) The rule of evidence which from necessity allows a plaintiff, in an action against a carrier for the loss of baggage, to prove the value of the contents by his own oath, is confined to cases in which fraud or willful wrong is proved on the trial, and does not apply to losses due to negligence.—Garvey v. Camden & A. R. Co., 4 Abb. Prac. 171, 1 Hilt. 280.

[t] (N. C. 1860) Quære whether the owner of a lost trunk, in an action against a carrier, can be admitted to prove, by his own oath, the contents of the trunk.—Herring v. Utley, 53 N. C. 270.

[tt] (N. C. 1864) In an action by a passenger on a railroad train to recover for the loss of his trunk, the plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove the loss of the trunk or its contents, though he offers to swear that he has no means of proving these facts or either of them except by his own oath.—Smith v. North Carolina, R. Co., 60 N. C. 202.

[u] (Ohio, 1851) From the necessity of the case, the owner of a trunk, or his wife, having first otherwise proved its delivery to the carrier, and its loss, is a competent witness, in a suit brought by him against a common carrier for its loss, to prove the contents of the trunk, and their value; but this rule will not be extended further than to the proof of such articles as are commonly carried in a traveling trunk.—Mad River & L. E. R. Co. v. Fulton, 20 Ohio, 318.

[uu] (Pa. 1840) Where a traveler sues a warehouseman or forwarder for the price of a trunk lost, plaintiff may prove the contents.—Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts, 335.

[v] (Pa. 1841) In an action against a stage owner by a passenger, to recover the value of a trunk cut from the stage coach, plaintiff is not competent to testify that there was money in the trunk, or how much.—David v. Moore, 2 Watts & S. 230.

[vv] (Pa. 1843) In an action by a passenger against a common carrier to recover the value of goods delivered to him to be carried, the plaintiff cannot prove the contents of a trunk, nor their value, on his own oath.—Bingham v. Rogers, 6 Watts & S. 495, 40 Am. Dec. 581.

[w] (Pa. 1845) In a suit to recover the value of a trunk lost from a stagecoach, the plaintiff is competent to prove the contents of his trunk, and the value of the articles composing them.—Whitesell v. Crane, 8 Watts & S. 369.

[ww] (Pa. 1846) The principle of necessity which enables a party, under certain circumstances, to prove the contents of a lost trunk or box, applies with as much, if not greater, force to the wife as to the husband.—McGill v. Rowand, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 451, 45 Am. Dec. 654.

[x] (Pa. 1846) Either husband or wife may be admitted to prove the quantity and value of the wearing apparel belonging to each, including in the catalogue the wife's jewelry, and every other article pertaining to her wardrobe that may be necessary or convenient to either in traveling.—McGill v. Rowand, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 451, 45 Am. Dec. 654.

[xx] (Pa. 1848) In an action against the county for the destruction of property by a mob, plaintiff may testify to her ownership and the value of the wearing apparel destroyed; but she is incompetent to prove the destruction of household furniture, etc.—County v. Leidy, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 45.

[y] (Tenn. 1848) A. was indebted to B. and conveyed property to a trustee, C., for sale for the payment of the debt. The debt was assigned to D. E., the agent of A., converted the property, and suit was brought against him by C. Held, that D. was a competent witness for C. as to the value of the property converted.—Garvin v. Luttrell, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 16.

[yy] (Tenn. 1850) The plaintiff's own evidence is admissible to prove the contents of his trunk, and the value of the baggage taken from it, in a suit by a passenger against a common carrier to recover the value of baggage taken from a trunk broken open and despoiled while in the possession of the carrier.—Johnson v. Stone, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 419.

[z] (Tenn. 1860) Plaintiff in an action is admissible as a witness to prove the value of his property which defendant has been guilty of a felonious, fraudulent, or other tortious and unwarrantable intermeddling with, when no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages.—Queener v. Morrow, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 123.

[a] (Ill. 1844) All the parties to a suit must consent before one of them can be used as a witness.—Frazier v. Laughlin, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 347.

[b] (Ky. 1838) The deposition of a party, read by consent, will be considered as evidence for him as well as for a codefendant, especially where by his own insolvency he has no interest in the suit.—Fletcher's Adm'r v. Sanders, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 345, 32 Am. Dec. 96.

[c] (Mo. 1838) It is not error to allow an interested witness to testify with the consent of the parties.—Allen v. Brown, 5 Mo. 323.

§ 216. Extent and effect of incompetency.

[a] (U. S. 1807) A witness, interested to diminish certain admitted items in plaintiff's account, is still a competent witness as to other items.—Smith v. Carrington, 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 62, 2 L. Ed. 550.

[b] (U. S. 1843) A witness may be competent to prove some facts, and incompetent to prove others.—Wright v. Rogers, Fed. Cas. No. 18,090 [3 McLean, 229].

[c] (Cal. 1861) Where defendant in ejectment disclaimed as to all, except a lot of 80 acres, his brother, who acknowledged an interest in the crops of 30 of these 80 acres, being a separated lot, was a competent witness to prove defendant's prior possession of the remainder of the 80 acres, outside the 30-acre lot.—Hicks v. Whitesides, 18 Cal. 700.

[d] (Conn. 1789) A witness may be admitted to testify on a point in a case in which he is not interested, though he may be interested on some other point.—Shelton v. Tomlinson, 2 Root, 132.

[e] (Ga. 1856) On a motion for alimony, in a proceeding for divorce, witnesses who would be incompetent, by reason of interest, on a hearing of the main issue, may yet be examined on the question of the authority of libelant's counsel to appear.—Swearingen v. Swearingen, 19 Ga. 265.

[f] (Ind. 1842) If a witness be competent to answer any questions in the cause, he ought not to be rejected generally.—Prather v. Lentz, 6 Blackf. 244.

[g] (Ky. 1822) A judgment procured against a purchaser, on the evidence of a witness interested against the vendor, is inadmissible in a suit against the vendor for recourse.—Baylor v. Smither's Heirs, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 105.

[h] (Ky. 1833) A witness who states that he is interested for some of those constituting the party by whom he is offered is not competent.—Norton v. Sanders, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 14.

[i] (Mass. 1849) A witness who is admissible at all is liable to be examined on all matters pertinent to the issue on trial; and one who is incompetent by reason of interest in the event of the suit cannot be made competent by being called to testify only to a fact in which he is not interested, and not to the question of damages.—Gerrish v. Cummings, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 391.

[j] (Mass. 1849) When several actions are tried together, which it is in the discretion of the judge to direct, the testimony of a witness who is competent in one is not to be excluded, because it is admissible in the others, on the ground of interest, and may possibly have some effect on the decision of them; but, in such case, the jury are to be directed to confine the testimony of the witness to the case in which he is competent.—Kimball v. Thompson, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 441, 50 Am. Dec. 799.

[k] (N. Y. 1809) Where a witness is interested in any part of the demand of plaintiff, he cannot be admitted to testify as to another part.—Gage v. Stewart, 4 Johns. 293.

[l] (N. Y. 1848) In the court of chancery, where many issues are frequently combined in one suit, a witness is not to be rejected altogether because he is interested as to one part only of the case; but he may be examined as to another part of the case in which he has no interest, or in which his interest is adverse to the party calling him.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[a] (U. S. 1847) In actions in the federal courts, parties to the record cannot be examined as witnesses.—The Neptune, Fed. Cas. No. 10,120 [Olcott, 483].

[b] (U. S. 1865) A party to an action in the court of claims cannot testify in his own behalf.—Jones v. United States, 1 Ct. Cl. 383.

[c] (Ill. 1860) A party to the record is incompetent as a witness.—Marks v. Butler, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 567.

[d] (Ind. 1859) It is not error to refuse to allow a party to testify on his own motion.—Johnson v. Cox, 12 Ind. 362.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) The general common-law rule is that a party to the record cannot be a witness for himself or for his coplaintiff or defendant; and this is the rule although he had no interest in the event of the suit.—Pack v. City of New York, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 489.

[g] (Pa. 1790) A judgment given merely on the attestation of the party plaintiff cannot be sustained.—Sharpe v. Thatcher, 2 Dall. 77, 1 L. Ed. 296.

§ 218. Who are parties and effect of consolidation of causes or agreement to let suit abide event of another.

[a] (Ga. 1855) Several actions being brought by the same plaintiff against different defendants, involving the same questions, it was agreed that one case should be tried for the whole, and that such evidence should be admitted in the one case as would have been admissible in either. Held, that under this agreement a defendant in one of the other cases was a competent witness.—Reeves v. Matthews, 17 Ga. 449.

[b] (Ga. 1855) As long as a plea of "puis darrein continuance" of a defendant remains undisposed of, such defendant is a party to the suit, and not a competent witness for himself.—James v. Mercer University, 17 Ga. 515.

[c] (Ky. 1868) Where several creditors sue out separate attachments against a debtor, and the suits are heard and tried together by the court without an order of consolidation, plaintiffs in some of the actions are competent witnesses for other plaintiffs.—Jarboe v. Colvin, 67 Ky. (4 Bush) 70.

[d] (Miss. 1840) A mere naked agreement between counsel, to let the event of one suit abide the fate of another, does not render plaintiff in the former incompetent to testify in the latter.—Clapp v. Mandeville, 6 Miss. (5 How.) 197.

[e] (N. J. 1857) The officers and directors of a corporation are not parties in an action in which the corporation is a party within the rule precluding parties from testifying as witnesses.—Cole v. Bergen County Mut. Assur. Ass'n, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 362.

[f] (N. J. 1857) In a suit by or against a corporation, a corporator is not a party to the record, and is not, on that ground, an incompetent witness.—Cole v. Bergen County Mut. Assur. Ass'n, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 362.

[g] (N. Y. 1850) In a suit brought by or against a municipal corporation, the provisions of the Code do not exclude the corporators as witnesses on the ground that they are parties to the suit.—Pack v. City of New York, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 489.

[h] (Pa. 1847) Under Act Feb. 24, 1834, directing that devisees and heirs be joined in an action against the executor to charge decedent's land with debts, a notice given to a devisee on a writ, directing notice generally, makes him a party to the action, and hence he is incompetent to testify therein.—Norris v. Johnston, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 287.

§ 219. —— Failure to serve or appear.

[a] If a writ is issued against two, and one only be taken, and the suit proceed against him alone, the one not taken may be a witness.
—(N. Y. 1813) Stockham v. Jones, 10 Johns. 21;
(Pa. 1817) Purviance v. Dryden, 3 Serg. & R. 402.

[b] (Cal. 1856) A defendant who has not been served with process is not a competent witness for his codefendants, in an action of trespass.—Gates v. Nash, 6 Cal. 192.

[c] (Del. 1840) A codefendant is a good witness, if not taken nor declared against.—Clark v. Malony, 3 Har. 68.

[d] (Del. 1860) In trespass for assault and battery, a co-trespasser, joined in the writ, but not served, and therefore not formally a party, by reason of his having evaded the service, was a competent witness for the defense.—Pepper v. Pepper, 2 Houst. 286.

[e] (Ind. 1853) When a writ is returned "not found" as to a portion of the defendants, and plaintiff goes to trial without adopting either course provided in such case by Rev. St. 1843, the writ abates as to those on whom process has not been served, and they may be witnesses, being no longer incompetent as parties, or as interested.—Conwell v. Smith, 4 Ind. 359.

[f] (La. 1859) A defendant named in the petition, but not cited, is not in reality a party to the suit, so as to render him incompetent as a witness.—Taylor v. Hancock, 14 La. Ann. 693.

[g] (Md. 1858) In a suit against two parties jointly liable on a written agreement which has been lost, one only having been taken, and non est inventus having been returned as to the other, the latter is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the terms of the missing agreement.—Baugher v. Culler, 12 Md. 6.

[h] (Mass. 1822) A person on whom the writ is not served, although named in it as one of the defendants, and originally liable on the same cause of action, is no party to the suit, and may be a competent witness for the others, if he be not liable to them for a contribution.—Gibbs v. Bryant, 18 Mass. (1 Pick.) 118.

[i] (Mo. 1842) A person named as a defendant in the writ, if not served with process, is not a party to the action, and is competent to testify for the defendant, if released from contribution.—Steigers v. Gross, 7 Mo. 261.

[j] (N. H. 1844) In a suit against all the surviving makers of a note, of whom the principal is not within the jurisdiction, and has not been reached by the process, he is not, unless released, a competent witness for the other defendants.—Concord Bank v. Rogers, 16 N. H. 9.

[k] (N. Y. 1832) Where in assumpsit against two one of them is misnamed in the capias, which is returned non est inventus as to him, and the suit is proceeded in against the other, the one who was misnamed, though nominally not a party to the suit, was not competent as a witness for the defendant.—Van Norden v. Striker, 9 Wend. 286.

[m] (N. Y. 1853) In an action, not on contract, commenced against two, and process served on one only, the one not served ceases to be a party, and is a competent witness for either party.—Robinson v. Frost, 14 Barb. 536.

[n] (Pa. 1838) On a suit against three joint obligors of a bond, the sheriff returned that one had been summoned, and "nihil habuit" as to the others. Held, that one of the obligors not summoned is not a witness for defendant, though defendant have paid into court principal, interest, and costs.—Smith v. Sillyman, 3 Whart. 589.

[o] (Pa. 1843) One of the codefendants, on whom process was not served, may be a competent witness for plaintiff to prove particular facts material to the issue.—Heckert v. Fegely, 6 Watts & S. 139.

[p] (Pa. 1846) A defendant who is not served with process, and is released by his codefendant, is an incompetent witness for such codefendant.—Parke v. Bird, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 360.

[q] (Pa. 1855) In scire facias on a judgment, a person who was a party defendant in the judgment, but not served with process, nor a party to the issue, is not a competent witness for his codefendant.—Marshall v. Franklin Bank, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 384.

[r] (Pa. 1859) Where a co-trespasser with other defendants was named in the præcipe and writ, but was not arrested, and the jury was not sworn to try him, he was a competent witness for the other defendants.—Entriken v. Brown, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 364.

§ 220. Nature of proceeding or issue and character of evidence in general.

[a] (U. S. 1850) A proceeding under Act Sept. 18, 1850 (9 Stat. 462), in relation to fugitive slaves, is civil, and not criminal, in its nature, and the right of property must be proved according to the rules relating to evidence and witnesses which prevail in other suits to recover property. Therefore a party in interest is incompetent as a witness.—Ex parte Garnet, Fed. Cas. No. 5,243.

[b] (Ala. 1838) A party is not competent to testify to facts tending to show an excuse for not returning a paper, which he had covenanted to return on a certain day or pay a certain sum of money.—Morrow v. Campbell, 7 Port. 41, 31 Am. Dec. 794.

[c] (Ala. 1845) Where an application is collateral to the main question, and merely auxiliary to the suit, addressing itself to the court, and not to the jury, and having no tendency either to prove or disprove the matter in controversy, but relating to the preparation of the suit for trial, the parties to the record are competent witnesses.—Ex parte Simpson, 7 Ala. 842.

[d] (Ala. 1849) The sheriff, on a trial of a rule against himself and securities for failing to return an execution, is incompetent to testify against the plaintiff.—Vastbinder v. Spinks, 16 Ala. 385.

[e] (Ala. 1868) In an action against an administrator in his individual capacity to recover damages for the conversion of a watch which plaintiff claims under a verbal gift from the intestate, and which defendant, as administrator, holds as assets of the estate, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove the gift to herself.—Stuckey v. Bellah, 41 Ala. 700.

[f] (Conn. 1803) A party cannot, in any action, be a witness to prove payments which he has made.—Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day, 104.

[g] (Del. 1858) Where property is sold under a junior judgment, and the proceeds brought into court, on an issue to try what is due on the older judgment, defendant is not a competent witness to prove that it has been paid, because he is a party to the record and is interested in the result.—Union Bank of Delaware v. Prettyman, 2 Houst. 16.

[h] (Del. 1865) One who has become a party to the record as an opposing creditor is not a competent witness against the petitioner in insolvency.—Edwards v. Townsend, 3 Houst. 100.

[i] (Ga. 1855) The testimony of defendant is inadmissible in regard to the loss of property intrusted to a mandatary.—McNabb v. Lockhart, 18 Ga. 495.

[j] (Md. 1845) A judgment was entered for the use of a third party, and defendant made a motion to strike out the use. Held, that plaintiff was a competent witness to prove the consideration of the assignment to such third party.—Baldwin v. Wright, 3 Gill, 241.

[k] (Miss. 1857) A fraudulent vendee, being a material defendant in an action to set aside the sale, cannot be examined as a witness to prove the fraud.—Stanton v. Green, 34 Miss. 576.

[m] (N. Y. 1860) A party to the record in proceedings before a surrogate on the final accounting of an administrator is not a competent witness.—Terry v. Dayton, 31 Barb. 519.

[n] (N. C. 1813) A. gave his bond to B., and C. was the subscribing witness. B. assigned the bond to C., who sued A. Held that C. could not prove the execution of the bond.—Johnson v. Knight, 6 N. C. 237.

[o] (Pa. 1887) In proceedings to establish a claim against the estate of a decedent, it was not error to refuse to allow counsel for claimant to call his client against her own interest in order to prove certain payments on account, thereby making her a general witness and enabling her to prove her own claim; for, if she desired to allow the credits, she might do so without establishing them.—In re Voldemar's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 577.

[p] (S. C. 1821) In an action to recover the penalty under a city ordinance imposing a penalty for driving around a street corner faster than a walk, unless the party proves that urgent causes compelled it, defendant is incompetent as a witness, where the ordinance does not expressly make him competent, to prove that urgent causes compelled him to drive faster than a walk.—City Council v. Dunn, 1 McCord, 333.

[q] (Tex. 1859) Plaintiff, in an action brought by an agent against his principal, cannot be excepted from the general rule that a party cannot be his own witness.—Kerr v. Cotton, 23 Tex. 411.

§ 221. Interest of party in general and nominal or unnecessary parties.

[a] A party to the record, who has no interest in the result of the suit, is a competent witness.
—(U. S. 1816) Willings v. Consequa, Fed. Cas. No. 17,767 [Pet. C. C. 301];

[b] (Ga. 1867) T. sold to C., for himself and A., certain slaves, warranting them sound. C., for the use of himself and A., brought suit on the warranty. While suit was pending C. died, and his administrator was made the party plaintiff. Held, that the interest of A. was no ground for his exclusion as witness in his own behalf.—Chisholm v. Turner, 36 Ga. 565.

[c] (La. 1826) A witness, because a defendant on record, is not incompetent, if a nominal, not a real, defendant. So plaintiff cannot deprive the real defendant of the testimony of their mutual agent by making the latter, who is without interest, codefendant—Marc v. Church of St. Martins, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 7.

[d] (La.) A party to a suit, if interested, is incompetent to testify.—(1840) Brander v. Ferriday, 16 La. 296; (1846) Baudoin v. Nicolas, 12 Rob. 594.

[e] (La. 1848) On an appeal by a landowner from the report of a jury appointed to lay out a road, assessing damages for the injury sustained, the president of the police jury, being a mere nominal party, is competent as a witness.—Frosard v. Police Jury of St. Landry, 3 La. Ann. 560.

[f] (La. 1858) The broker or agent of both parties, who is a party to the record, but without interest in the suit, is a competent witness.—Rutherford v. Hennen, 13 La. Ann. 336.

[g] (Md. 1848) Where there must be a decree against all of the defendants, because of their joint or blended interests, there is no one of them who can be examined as a witness in the case.—Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, 236.

[h] (N. Y. 1822) A party to the record cannot be a witness, unless by consent of the real parties in interest.—Frear v. Evertson, 20 Johns. 142.

[i] (N. Y. 1858) In an action against three, in which the only defense is a joint defense, it would be an idle ceremony to swear the defendants as witnesses, when it appears from the pleadings that neither of them could be allowed to testify in any matter in issue in the cause.—Ward v. Woodburn, 27 Barb. 346.

[j] (N. Y. 1861) Before the surrogate, as formerly in our court of chancery, a party to the record, not interested, nor actually litigating, is a competent witness.—Talbot v. Talbot, 23 N. Y. 17.

[k] (Pa. 1835) A plaintiff cannot become a witness by suing in the name of a formal transferee.—Sypher v. Long, 4 Watts, 253.

[l] (Pa. 1841) In an action of debt on a written obligation, in the name of the obligee, for the use of another, the defense being payment to the obligee before he transferred the obligation, the obligee is not a competent witness, although the costs of the suit which have accrued, or may accrue, are paid.—Stroh v. Hess, 1 Watts & S. 147.

[m] (Pa. 1851) Wherever an issue is ordered, it should be between the parties directly in interest, and not so framed that the testimony of a person who really has no interest, but is a nominal party, is for that reason excluded.—Pepper v. Bavington, 1 Phila. 337.

[n] (Pa. 1866) A debtor, who is a party to the record, is not incompetent from interest to testify in a suit between creditors, unless he will gain or lose by the decision.—Updegraff v. Rowland, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 317; Ferree v. Thompson, Id. 353.

[o] (Tenn. 1835) Where a suit is brought in the name of A., for the use of B., A. cannot be a witness to prove the demand, although B., by Acts 1825, c. 29, is deemed the real plaintiff, and liable for costs.—Anderson v. Bradie's Adm'rs, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 297.

[p] (Vt. 1848) It is no objection to a witness, who is willing to testify and has no interest in the event of the suit, or is called to testify against his interest, that he is a party to the record.—Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554.

[q] (Va. 1894) In a suit to establish a resulting trust it was contended that two of the defendants were incompetent to testify because they were parties to the suit and to the transactions under review, that they co-operated with the trustee in a devastavit, and were liable over to the other defendants. They were brought into the suit on motion, and without a review by the court as to the necessity for such action. No relief was sought against them, and they were released by decrees in bankruptcy from all liability in the matter. Held, that they were competent to testify.—Moorman v. Arthur, 90 Va. 455, 18 S. E. 869; Same v. Town of Danville, Id.

§ 222. Witnesses for or against other parties in general.

Determination of liability by dismissal, default, or separate verdict or judgment, see post, §§ 476–490.

In suits in equity, see post, § 228.

—(Mo. 1854) Rice v. Morton, 19 Mo. 263; (1856) Rankin v. Harper, 23 Mo. 579; (Tex. 1859) Calhoun v. Wright, 23 Tex. 522.

[b] (U. S. 1811) In trespass, one defendant cannot be a witness for the other, in a joint action, although they plead severally.—Johnson v. Chapman, Fed. Cas. No. 7,378 [2 Cranch, C. C. 32].

[c] (U. S. 1811) In a joint action of trespass against two defendants, if they plead severally, they may be mutually examined as witnesses for each other.—Piles v. Plum, Fed. Cas. No. 11,165 [2 Cranch, C. C. 32].

[d] (Ala. 1828) In an action against two obligors, one of them is not a competent witness to prove that the other executed the instrument.—Whatley v. Johnson, 1 Stew. 498.

[e] (Ind. 1860) If the contract sued on is admitted by the answer, and a defense set up which will defeat the action as to all the defendants, such codefendants are not competent witnesses to establish the defense.—Hubbell v. Woolf, 15 Ind. 204.

[f] (Ind. 1861) In a suit against two defendants for damage done by a vicious animal, averred to be their property, evidence was introduced, part of which tended to show ownership in one defendant, part to show ownership in the other. Held, that in this case neither was a competent witness in behalf of the other to show ownership in a third person, though it might have been otherwise, had there been no evidence to fix ownership in the offered witness.—Frammell v. Little, 16 Ind. 251.

[g] (Iowa, 1856) In an action for a joint libel, one defendant cannot be a witness for a codefendant, even if separate trials are granted.—Forshee v. Abrams, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 571.

[h] (Ky. 1877) A party to a suit, called as a witness for himself and his co-parties, is competent, unless all the adverse parties are persons against whom he could not testify, if they were sued singly.—Worthley's Adm'r v. Hammond, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 510.

[i] (La. 1811) Defendant in attachment cannot prove an intervener's title to the property attached.—Pleasants v. Ross, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 114.

[k] (Miss. 1856) A defendant may be examined as a witness by complainant, and, where a defendant is not interested in the matter to which it is proposed to examine him, he may be examined as a witness by a codefendant; but a co-complainant cannot be examined as a witness for the other complainant, nor can he be examined as a witness by the defendant.—Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52.

[l] (Mo. 1860) A witness should not be allowed to testify for his codefendant, where his testimony will bear in his own favor.—Vaughn v. Scade, 30 Mo. 600.

[m] (N. Y. 1851) When parties to a contract may be sued severally, defendants are competent witnesses for each other; and they are not disqualified by being all united as defendants in one action on the same contract.—Ladue v. Van Vechten, 8 Barb. 664.

[n] (N. Y. 1852) One of three joint and several promisors could be a witness for the others, although a judgment by default had been already rendered against him.—Austin v. Fuller, 12 Barb. 360.

[o] (Pa. 1865) A defendant in an action of ejectment against a brother and two sisters is not a competent witness for his codefendants.—Cambria Iron Co. v. Tomb, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 387.

[p] (S. C. 1840) One of the plaintiffs, a suing creditor, who resisted the application for the benefit of the prison bounds act, was not a competent witness for the other plaintiffs to prove that defendant's schedule was false.—Cavan v. Dunlap, Cheves, 241.

[q] (Vt. 1847) A party of record may call the opposing party as a witness with his consent, or a coparty; they being devested of all interest in the suit. This is the utmost extent to which the authorities upon this subject have gone.—Abbott v. Clark, 19 Vt. 444.

§ 223. —— Interest in general.

—(Ga. 1859) Foster v. Leeper, 29 Ga. 294;
(Ind. 1859) Draper v. Vanhorn, 12 Ind. 352;
(N. Y. 1855) Keteltas v. Penfold, 4 E. D. Smith, 122.

[b] (Ala. 1853) A defendant, who is a formal party to a bill as husband of one of the heirs at law of an insolvent decedent, is a competent witness for his codefendant, especially when he testifies against his own interest.—Burns v. Taylor, 23 Ala. 255.

[c] (Conn. 1849) D., one of the defendants in a suit brought by B., on the hearing before the committee offered his codefendant C. as a witness in behalf of D. to testify to matters for D.'s benefit, but in no way to affect the rights or claims of C.; but it appeared that C. was materially interested in the suit, and liable to be affected by a decree in favor of B. Held, that C. was an incompetent witness.—Bowen v. Bowen, 20 Conn. 127.

[cc] (Ga. 1848) A. brought ejectment for land, and held B.'s deed as part of his chain of title. B. was offered as a witness for defendant, and, being examined on his voir dire, said that he never made the deed under which plaintiff claimed; that he was the grantee from the state, and had never sold the land to any one but to defendant; that he contracted to sell it to defendant, and took his notes for the purchase money, which he still held, and gave him his bond for titles, to be made when the purchase money was paid. It also appeared that B. was notified to appear and defend the suit. Held, that he was not a competent witness for defendant.—Fain v. Garthright, 5 Ga. 6.

[d] (Ind. 1859) Where the point to be proved is special damages to the separate property of a coplaintiff, there is no interest which will exclude the witness.—Draper v. Vanhorn, 12 Ind. 352.

[e] (Ky. 1843) On an application for the establishment of a private way over adjoining land, one who has no vested interest in the land, or in the damage to be assessed, is a competent witness for those opposing the way, though made a defendant to the proceedings.—McCauley v. Dunlap, 43 Ky. (4 B. Mon.) 57.

[f] (Ky. 1859) Defendants, who rely on the same matters of defense, although by separate answers, are parties to the issue, and one cannot testify in behalf of the other, even where not incompetent on the score of interest.—Chenowith v. Fielding, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 517.

[g] (Ky. 1867) In an action involving in issue a parol agreement by children of an intestate to pay certain other children money pro rata on account of land advancements, held, that evidence by any one of the defendants interested, which would tend to bind or exonerate all, was inadmissible, though the agreement, joint in form, might be several in operation.—Mason v. Mason, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 35.

[h] (La. 1865) A livery stable-keeper sued A. and B. for the loss of a horse, occurring through their careless and reckless driving. A. answered, admitting the hiring, but averring that B. had nothing to do with the hiring, and that he was only the invited companion of A. On the trial B. was offered as a witness in behalf of A. on the ground that there was no testimony in the case going to charge B. Held, that B., being a party to the suit, was rightly rejected as a witness.—Bell v. Black, 17 La. Ann. 11.

[i] (Md. 1832) Where defendants are properly joined, and have a common interest in the subject-matter of the suit, they are not competent witnesses for each other.—Chambers v. Chalmers, 4 Gill & J. 420, 23 Am. Dec. 572.

[j] (Mich. 1859) Where one defendant answers, and the other interposes a plea, which is put in issue, and the defendant answering is examined as a witness for his codefendant, his testimony must be restricted to matters in proof of the plea, in which he is not himself interested.—Emerson v. Atwater, 7 Mich. 12.

[k] (Mo. 1863) A defendant in the record is not disqualified as a witness for his codefendant by that fact alone. He is competent to testify as to some matters. When the witness is sworn, objections may be taken to so much of the testimony as may be inadmissible.—Alexander v. Shortridge, 33 Mo. 349.

[l] (N. H. 1839) A defendant in an action ex contractu, if he has no interest in the costs, may be a witness to sustain a defense by another defendant, which goes only to the personal discharge of the latter.—Essex Bank v. Rix, 10 N. H. 201.

[m] (N. Y. 1817) A defendant who has no interest in the cause, but is made a party pro forma only, may be examined as a witness for his codefendant, notwithstanding plaintiff has filed a replication to the answer of such defendant.—Kirk v. Hodgson, 2 Johns. Ch. 550.

[n] (N. Y. 1823) A defendant, who is charged with fraud, but against whom nothing specific is prayed, may be a witness for his codefendant.—McDonald v. Neilson, 2 Cow. 139, 14 Am. Dec. 431, affirming Neilson v. McDonald (1822) 6 Johns. Ch. 201.

[o] (N. Y. 1851) The competency of a defendant as a witness for his codefendant is to be determined by the relations to each other in which they have placed themselves by their contract, and not by those relations as parties to the action which have been involuntarily imposed on them by the act of plaintiff.—Ladue v. Van Vechten, 8 Barb. 664.

[p] (Tex. 1863) A defendant, directly interested as a party to the contract sued on, cannot be a witness for his codefendant and himself.—Gould v. Beal, 26 Tex. 665.

[a] (Ill. 1884) In partition proceedings, a defendant, disclaiming all interest in the suit, is a competent witness for his codefendant.—Scheerer v. Scheerer, 109 Ill. 11.

[b] (N. H. 1845) A defendant in a real action, who has filed a disclaimer, on which plaintiffs have not taken issue, and who is not shown to be in privity or otherwise an interested person, is a competent witness for the other defendant.—Jenness v. Berry, 17 N. H. 549.

[c] (Pa. 1838) One of several defendants in ejectment, by disclaiming title, cannot become a witness for his codefendants, though costs be paid up to the time of disclaimer.—Stub v. Leis, 7 Watts, 43.

[d] (Pa. 1846) One of two defendants in ejectment, on whom the writ has been served, and who has pleaded, cannot make himself a competent witness for his codefendant by disclaimer; his plea having been permitted to be withdrawn. He may still be liable for mesne profits and the costs.—Kirk v. Ewing, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 453.

§ 225. Examination by adverse party and testimony against interest in general.

Effect of admission of testimony of adverse party, see post, § 532.

—— of calling or examination as witness by adverse party, see post, § 530.

In suits in equity, see post, § 229.

[a] (Ala. 1840) A defendant may examine the nominal plaintiff as a witness, if the latter does not object to giving evidence.—Duffee v. Pennington, 1 Ala. 506.

[b] (Ala. 1846) In a summary proceeding by motion against a sheriff and his sureties for his failure to pay over money collected by him, the sheriff, if willing to testify, is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that he converted the money before the persons joined with him in the motion ceased to be his sureties, and thus fix a liability upon the latter, instead of their successors, in his official bond. The sheriff, in the event of a recovery, would be liable to either set of sureties who were made to answer for his default; consequently his interest is balanced.—Dumas v. Patterson, 9 Ala. 484.

[c] (Conn. 1834) The testimony of a party to a suit, offered by the opposite party and given voluntarily against the interest of the witness, is admissible.—Cowles v. Whitman, 10 Conn. 121, 25 Am. Dec. 60.

[d] (Conn. 1837) The deposition of a party to a suit, voluntarily given, is admissible as evidence for the other party.—Woodruff v. Westcott, 12 Conn. 134.

[e] (Del. 1842) Though a coplaintiff may testify voluntarily against his own interest, an infant party will not be permitted to do so, even with the consent of a next friend, by whom he sues.—Rickards v. Laws, 3 Har. 393.

[f] (Iowa, 1853) A defendant, offered as a witness by plaintiff, is competent to testify against himself, but not to transfer the liability from himself to his codefendant.—Merchand v. Cook, 4 G. Greene, 115.

[g] (Me. 1836) One of several plaintiffs of record, having no interest in the suit, is not a competent witness for defendant, though willing to testify.—Kennedy v. Niles, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 54.

[h] (Mich. 1843) A complainant has no right to examine as a witness a defendant against whom he seeks relief.—Thomas v. Stone, 1 Walk. Ch. 117.

[i] (Miss. 1846) In an action brought in the name of plaintiff for the use of another, the nominal plaintiff is a competent witness, where his testimony is against himself, though objected to by the usee, if such nominal plaintiff does not himself object to testifying.—Smith v. Elder, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 507.

[j] (Mo. 1860) Any of the adverse parties to a suit may be examined as witnesses by the party on the opposite side.—Fagan v. Long, 30 Mo. 222.

[k] (Pa. 1846) Parties to the record are competent witnesses for the opposite side, but they cannot be examined without their consent.—Solms v. McCulloch, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 473.

[l] (Pa. 1856) A party plaintiff, who is willing to testify for defendant, cannot be excluded by a coplaintiff or assignee of the cause of action.—Moore v. Weber, 2 Phila. 81.

[m] (Pa. 1860) A defendant, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, may be examined as a witness for plaintiff, if he be willing to testify. —Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390.

[n] (S. C. 1832) Plaintiff has the right to examine a defendant as a witness without his consent on any point in the case in which defendant is not interested, and with his consent he may examine him against his interest, and the other defendants cannot object.—Farr v. Sims, Rich. Eq. Cas. 122, 24 Am. Dec. 396.

[o] (S. C. 1853) One of two defendants, consenting to be sworn, though objected to by the other defendant, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Corrie v. Calder, 6 Rich. Law, 198.

[p] (Tex.) Merely being a party to the record does not of itself render the party incompetent to testify, when called for that purpose by the opposite party. If willing to testify, he is competent, notwithstanding the objection of his coplaintiff or codefendant, provided his interest, if any, in the suit, is adverse to the party calling him.—(1849) Parsons v. Phipps, 4 Tex. 341; (1857) Ware's Adm'rs v. Bennett, 18 Tex. 794.

[q] (Tex. 1857) A nominal plaintiff, and on the record having an apparent interest with his coplaintiff, cannot be called as a witness by defendant, and his declarations may therefore be proved.—Nalle v. Gates, 20 Tex. 315.

[r] (Vt. 1846) The party of record may, if he consent, be sworn as a witness and give evidence in the cause for the opposite party, either when he has no interest in the event of the trial, or when he is called to give evidence for the party whose interest is contrary to his own.—Sargeant v. Sargeant, 18 Vt. 371.

[s] (Vt. 1848) If one of several defendants be called as a witness in the case by plaintiff, and be willing to testify, he is a competent witness, although his codefendants may object to his being called.—Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461.

§ 226. Proceedings preliminary to admission of testimony.

[a] A party to the record cannot be examined as a witness in equity, without an order of court first had for that purpose.

—(Md. 1837) Clagett v. Hall, 9 Gill & J. 80;
(N. J. 1847) Hewitt v. Crane, 6 N. J. Eq. (2 Halst. Ch.) 159;
(N. C. 1843) Bell's Adm'r v. Jasper, 37 N. C. 597; (1845) Jones v. Hays, 38 N. C. 502, 44 Am. Dec. 78;
(Pa. 1858) Pusey v. Wright, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 387.

[b] An order may be obtained to examine one of several defendants as a witness, subject to cross-examination by the other defendants.

—(Me. 1844) Robinson v. Sampson, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 388;
(Md. 1832) Stewart v. Stone, 3 Gill & J. 510.

[c] (U. S. 1825) Although no relief can be had against a certificated bankrupt or insolvent, who is a party defendant to a bill, and he is not, therefore, a necessary party to the bill, yet he cannot be examined as a witness in the cause without an order on motion for that purpose. — De Wolf v. Johnson, 23 U. S. (10 Wheat.) 367, 6 L. Ed. 343.

[d] (U. S. 1833) The testimony of parties to an admiralty suit should be taken under a special order showing the cause therefor, so that the court may in its order limit the inquiry to matters within the exception to the rule that parties are not competent.—The Boston, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673 [1 Sumn. 328].

[e] (Ala. 1852) Orders for the examination of a defendant as a witness are made as matters of course, reserving the question of his competency to be made at the hearing; and there is no rule requiring an affidavit to be previously made of his want of interest.—Colgin v. Redman, 20 Ala. 650.

[f] (Ill. 1842) To affect his codefendant, a defendant must be called on by the adverse party in the same way as any other witness, usually under a rule of court; and then the inquiry arises whether he has any interest adverse to the party against whom he is called. If he has, he is incompetent; if he has not, he is as competent as if his name did not appear on the record.—Dyer v. Martin, 5 Ill. 146.

[g] (Ind. 1842) Complainant in chancery has a right to an order to examine defendant as a witness on the trial of an issue, saving just exceptions; and, though it is usual to suggest in the petition that the party is not interested, such suggestion is not necessary.—McPheeters v. McPheeters, 6 Blackf. 221.

[h] (Md. 1853) The order for the examination of a party as a witness is granted almost as a matter of course, leaving the objections to be made and considered when the testimony is brought in.—Tolson v. Tolson, 4 Md. Ch. 119.

[i] (Mo. 1847) To authorize complainant to examine one of several defendants in chancery, if an answer has been filed by him, and a replication filed, the replication must be withdrawn, and an affidavit of want of interest of such party made.—Arnett v. Dodson, 10 Mo. 783.

[j] (N. H. 1843) Leave is always granted to examine merely formal parties, on motion and a suggestion that the witness is not interested, and saving all just exceptions.—Second Congregational Soc. in Hopkinton v. First Congregational Soc. in Hopkinton, 14 N. H. 315.

[k] (N. J. 1864) The evidence of a codefendant is not rendered incompetent by the fact that no order was made for his examination.—Giveans v. McMurtry, 16 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 468.

[l] (N. Y. 1834) The testimony of a party who has been examined as a witness, without an order for that purpose, under the rule, will be suppressed, if objected to in time.—Bogert v. Bogert, 2 Edw. Ch. 399.

[m] (N. Y. 1837) Where the testimony of a mere nominal plaintiff is necessary to sustain the suit, the proper course is to move to strike out his name.—Eckford v. De Kay, 6 Paige, 565.

[n] (N. Y. 1839) To allow a defendant to testify, there must be an order, based on an affidavit that defendant is a material witness, and not interested in the matter to which he is examined; and an objection taken at the commencement of the examination of a defendant without such an order, and noted by the examiner, is sufficient, without a formal notice to suppress.—Hitchcock v. Skinner, 1 Hoff. Ch. 21.

[o] (N. Y. 1845) An order to produce witnesses, in an equity suit, may be either in the form originally used, requiring the adverse party to produce witnesses within 40 days, or in the more modern form requiring the parties to do so.—Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. 59, 43 Am. Dec. 773.

[p] (N. C. 1840) An order to examine a co-defendant in a suit in equity on matters as to which he is not interested is granted as a matter of course upon a proper allegation.—Williams v. Maitland, 36 N. C. 92.

[q] (Wis. 1868) A plaintiff cannot be a witness in his own behalf, in an action on a demand against a vessel for supplies, without giving the notice of his intention to testify prescribed by Laws 1863, c. 17.—Ernst v. The Brooklyn, 22 Wis. 649.

§ 227. Suits in equity.

[a] A merely formal defendant in equity, against whom no decree is prayed, and who has no disqualifying interest, may be examined as a witness.

—(Conn. 1842) Butler v. Elliott, 15 Conn. 187; (Del. 1853) Clendaniel v. Hastings, 5 Har. 408; (Ga. 1848) Ragan v. Echols, 5 Ga. 71; (Ky. 1838) Allison's Devisees v. Allison's Heirs, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 90; (N. C. 1833) Jones v. Bullock, 17 N. C. 368.

[b] (U. S. 1813) Where a defendant to a bill is not concerned in interest, either side may examine him as a witness. So, where no material evidence is produced against him, and no decree can be had against him; and a defendant whose evidence is sought for the purpose of charging him may testify, if he chooses, and where parties were insolvent, and therefore no decree was to be made against them, they were held competent witnesses, on the ground that they had no interest in the case. —Van Reinsdyk v. Kane, Fed. Cas. No. 16,872 [1 Gall. 630].

[c] (Ala. 1852) The mere fact that a witness is a party to a suit in chancery does not render him incompetent. If he has no interest in that part of the litigation about which he is called to testify, or if, being interested, he is examined as to matters which militate against that interest, he is perfectly competent.—Colgin v. Redman, 20 Ala. 650.

[d] (Conn. 1790) A party cannot be admitted to testify in his own favor in chancery any more than at law.—Webb v. Fitch, 1 Root, 177.

[e] (Ill. 1842) A tenant in possession of a part of the mortgaged premises was made a defendant in a bill to foreclose a mortgage, and answered, admitting the allegation of the bill, and stating that he had bargained with the mortgagor for a part of the premises, but in his deposition disclaimed all interest in the land. Held, that his deposition was admissible. —Sproule v. Samuel, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 135.

[f] (Ill.) In chancery, a witness is not necessarily incompetent because he is a party to the record. The inquiry is not so much whether the name of the witness appears on the record, as whether he is in fact swearing to promote his own interest.—(1842) Sproule v. Samuel, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 135; (1842) Dyer v. Martin, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 146; (1864) Power v. McCord, 36 Ill. 214.

[g] (Ind. 1859) A suit for the rescission of a contract for the conveyance of land was against two, alleging that one was plaintiff's agent to sell; that he wrote to plaintiff, misrepresenting the value of the land; that thereupon plaintiff sold for less than the real value to the other defendant; and that the two had previously agreed to share the land. Held, that the agent could not testify to facts going to exonerate both.—Roy v. Haviland, 12 Ind. 364.

[h] (Ind. 1861) Proceedings for foreclosure so far affect the property mortgaged as to preclude the holder thereof, when it has passed from the mortgagor, from testifying on points involving the liability of the property in his hands to the mortgage debt, in cases where he is a party to the record.—Indianapolis, & C. R. Co. v. Waggoner, 16 Ind. 367.

[i] (Ind. 1861) In a suit for partition, brought by certain heirs against others, one of the defendants filed his cross-complaint, alleging an exclusive title in himself to the whole land by purchase from the common ancestor, and making all the other heirs defendants. Held, that they all became adverse parties as to the matters set up in the cross-complaint, and were incompetent witnesses to disprove them.—Cluster v. Gibson, 17 Ind. 477.

[j] (Miss. 1856) It is erroneous to examine a complainant in a cross-bill to sustain the allegations of his own bill, where a discovery was prayed in reference to the identical facts to which it is proposed to examine him as a witness.—Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52.

[k] (N. J. 1868) Upon a bill against a husband and wife for the specific performance of an agreement to convey land, both they and complainant are incompetent witnesses.—Petrick v. Ashcroft, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 339.

[l] (Vt. 1847) A nominal party to a contract, in regard to which a suit in equity is pending, who is so devested of all interest as not to be a necessary party to the bill, is a competent witness in the case.—Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496.

§ 228. —— Testimony for co-party.

—(Ill. 1882) Bradshaw v. Combs, 102 Ill. 428; (1882) Smith v. West, 103 Ill. 332; (1893) Camp v. Shaw, 52 Ill. App. 241; (N. C. 1840) Williams v. Maitland, 36 N. C. 92; (1859) Wilder v. Mann, 58 N. C. 66; (S. C. 1827) Wright v. Wright, 2 McCord, Eq. 185.

[b] (Conn. 1831) On a bill in chancery, brought by A., B., and C., creditors of D., against D. and his sons, E., F., and G., charging them with a fraudulent conspiracy to withdraw the property of D. from the plaintiffs' reach by means of notes given by D. to E., F., and G., and suits by attachment brought thereon, and praying for an injunction against such suits and proceedings, held, that E. was not competent to testify as to the consideration of the notes given by D. to F. and G., though he had previously withdrawn the suit commenced by him against D.—Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 83.

[c] (Conn. 1831) On a bill in chancery, brought by A., B., and C., creditors of D. against D. and his sons, E., F., and G., charging them with a fraudulent conspiracy to withdraw the property of D. from the plaintiff's reach by means of notes given to E., F., and G., and suits by attachment brought thereon, and praying for an injunction against such suits and proceedings, held, that D. was not a competent witness to prove the consideration and validity of the notes given by him to the other defendants, since he was a party to the suit and interested in the costs.—Dwight v. Brown, 9 Conn. 83.

[d] (Conn. 1849) The rule in equity, as well as at law, before the statute of 1848, was that, if a defendant had no interest in the result of the suit, he might be a witness; but, if he had such interest, he could not be called by a codefendant.—Bowen v. Bowen, 20 Conn. 127.

[e] (Ill. 1864) Where a conveyance from a father to his son is alleged to be fraudulent, and a suit in chancery is brought for relief, the father is a competent witness for his son, who is a codefendant.—Mixell v. Lutz, 34 Ill. 382.

[f] (Ill. 1888) The rule in chancery that one defendant is competent to testify in behalf of a codefendant on a question in the decision of which he has no interest is not impaired by Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, providing that no party in a civil action shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf.—Nance v. Nance, 28 Ill. App. 587.

[g] (Ind. 1861) In a suit by judgment creditors to set aside a mortgage as being fraudulent, where the mortgagor, mortgagee, and his assignee are parties defendant, the mortgagee is not a competent witness to prove that his assignee took in good faith, as this tends to prevent recovery of a judgment against himself.—Perrin v. Johnson, 16 Ind. 72.

[h] (Ky. 1850) One of several defendants to a bill in equity is a competent witness for another defendant, inasmuch as he might still be liable for debts and costs, though the defendant for whom he was offered as a witness maintained his defense.—Craddock v. Thornton, 49 Ky. (11 B. Mon.) 100.

[i] (Me. 1851) A defendant cannot use a codefendant as a witness to prevent the obtaining of a decree against them both.—Farley v. Bryant, 32 Me. 474.

[j] (Md. 1831) A codefendant, as to whom it is not asked to have the decree opened on application for a bill of review, is a competent witness as to any fact as to which another defendant wishes to have the decree opened.—Hodges v. Mullikin, 1 Bland, 503.

[k] (N. J. 1852) Where mortgaged premises were sold under an execution on a judgment against the mortgagor, and the mortgagee afterwards brought foreclosure proceedings against the mortgagor and the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, the mortgagor was a competent witness for the purchaser.—Brolasky v. Miller, 8 N. J. Eq. (4 Halst. Ch.) 789.

[m] (N. C. 1840) The interest of a codefendant in equity, in order to disqualify him as a witness, must be such as would tend to influence him against the party excepting to his testimony.—Williams v. Maitland, 36 N. C. 92.

[n] (N. C. 1843) The deposition of a defendant against whom a decree is prayed, and who is interested in the event of the suit, cannot be read for his codefendants.—Bell's Adm'r v. Jasper, 37 N. C. 597.

[o] (Ohio, 1835) In chancery, a party who has transacted, as principal, the greater part of the business with regard to which the litigation arises, who is charged with fraud, and may be liable for more than the costs, cannot testify for a codefendant.—Ormsby's Adm'rs v. Bakewell, 7 Ohio (7 Ham.) 98, pt. 1.

[a] (U. S. 1815) The deposition of one defendant in chancery is not admissible against his codefendant, unless he is made a disinterested witness by being discharged from all joint liabilities; and semble, that a certificate of discharge from all debts and contracts prior to the date of the discharge under the act of assembly of Rhode Island of 1757, although the debt in suit was contracted prior to such discharge, will not make one a disinterested witness, where the debt was contracted in a foreign country.—Clark v. Van Riemsdyk, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 153, 3 L. Ed. 688.

[b] (U. S. 1839) Complainant cannot be examined as a witness against defendant in a bill for injunction to restrain defendant from removing from the District of Columbia plaintiff's slave, who has been sold by plaintiff to defendant for a term of years only, at the expiration of which term the slave is to be free.—Thomas v. Mackall, Fed. Cas. No. 13,903 [5 Cranch, C. C. 536].

[c] (Ark. 1854) Complainant in chancery may, on a rule for that purpose, obtain the testimony of one of the defendants, saving exceptions as to his interest.—Folsom v. Fowler, 15 Ark. 280.

[d] (Ill. 1842) A. purchased land of B., and afterwards sold the same to C., and received the purchase money. The legal title remained in B., and $500 remained due to him of the purchase money. On a bill by C. against A. and B. to obtain the legal title, held, that A. was not a competent witness for complainant, as his interest preponderated in favor of his recovery.—Dyer v. Martin, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 146.

[e] (Ill. 1865) A defendant in chancery is competent as a witness against his codefendants, even if he has an interest in favor of the party calling him, provided it appears that he has an equal interest on the other side.—Smalley v. Ellet, 36 Ill. 500.

[f] (Ind. 1861) Some of the defendants, in proceedings for partition, claimed to hold as tenants in common with plaintiffs by descent from the same ancestor from whom plaintiffs deraigned title. Other defendants claimed an adverse and exclusive title to the whole property by purchase from the same ancestor. Held, that the former class of defendants were not competent witnesses against the latter.—Hunter v. Miller, 17 Ind. 88.

[g] (Ky. 1835) In a suit in equity, a defendant may be a competent witness against a codefendant, when they were both necessary parties, when the witness will not be affected by the decree against his codefendant, and does not swear in favor of his own interest.—Williams v. Beard, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 158.

[h] (La. 1842) In an injunction suit for damages against a seizing creditor and the sheriff, the latter cannot testify for plaintiff. He must be released or interrogated on oath.—Dabbs v. Hemken, 3 Rob. 123.

[i] (Me. 1851) Where a plaintiff in equity, in order to obtain relief, must have a decree against a defendant, he cannot use the testimony of that defendant against the other defendants.—Farley v. Bryant, 32 Me. 474.

[j] (N. Y. 1834) Where an answer has been held good upon exceptions, a motion by plaintiff to examine defendant as a witness will be denied.—Palmer v. Van Doren, 2 Edw. Ch. 192.

[k] (N. Y. 1839) If defendant in equity is not interested in favor of plaintiff, he may be examined for him, although a party.—Miller v. McCan, 7 Paige, 451.

[l] (N. C. 1853) A pro forma party to a bill in equity, having no interest in the questions involved in it, may be examined as a witness by the adverse party.—Wilson v. Allen, 54 N. C. 24.

[m] (Ohio, 1846) Where a party joined as a defendant to a suit for a conveyance is incompetent as a witness for plaintiff, because his liability to his codefendants, if plaintiff succeed, will be less than his liability to plaintiffs if they fail, an answer by him disclaiming all interest in the suit will not render him competent.—Dille v. Woods, 14 Ohio, 122.

[n] (Ohio, 1846) Where the liability of a party joined as a defendant to a suit for a conveyance to his codefendants in case plaintiff succeeds will be less than his liability to plaintiffs if plaintiffs fail in their suit, such defendant is incompetent as a witness for the plaintiff on the ground of interest.—Dille v. Woods, 14 Ohio, 122.

[o] (Tenn. 1871) On a bill by J. against A. and the heirs of H., alleging that J., A., and H., contracted to enter and hold jointly certain lands, and praying to have J.'s interest vested in him, held, that A. was a competent witness to prove J.'s case against the heirs of H., his testimony being against his interest; and this, although he had previously answered and admitted the trust as to himself.—Gardner v. Gardner, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 303.

[p] (Tex. 1863) A defendant cannot, by filing an answer in the nature of a cross-bill to which a witness in the original suit is made a party defendant, and who has no interest in that suit, deprive the plaintiff in the original suit of the testimony of the witness on issues involved in it, and which can in no way affect the result of the cross-bill against him.—Thompson v. Herring, 27 Tex. 282.

[q] (Va. 1842) Where, under a decree in chancery for the sale of land, four commissioners are named as obligees in a bond for purchase money, and suit is brought on the bond in the name of the four, for the benefit of another person, one of the obligees, having no interest in the case, is a competent witness for defendant on a plea of non est factum.—Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh, 479, 37 Am. Dec. 677.

[a] (U. S. 1872) The examination of the respondent in equity as a witness by the orator does not operate as a release to him of the matters concerning which he is examined.—Scammon v. Hobson, Fed. Cas. No. 12,434 [1 Hask. 406].

[b] (Mich. 1843) Where a defendant, against whom a decree was sought, was examined as a witness, his deposition was suppressed. Held, that the examination did not operate as a release, but that a decree might still be had against him, if warranted by other evidence.—Norris v. Hurd, Walk. Ch. 102.

[c] (N. Y. 1833) Where plaintiff examines a defendant as a witness, no decree can afterwards be had against such party.—Fulton Bank v. New York & S. Canal Co., 4 Paige, 127.

[d] (N. Y. 1834) Where a defendant, whether sole or one of several, is examined as a witness for plaintiff, no decree can be had against him on the facts as to which he has been examined.—Palmer v. Van Doren, 2 Edw. Ch. 192.

[e] (N. Y. 1836) The rule that where a defendant, who is primarily liable, is examined as a witness against a codefendant whose liability is secondary, no decree can be obtained by plaintiff against either of the defendants as to that part of the case which is covered by the testimony of such witness, unless his liability is admitted in the answer, does not apply to the case of a defendant who is a mere trustee and has no personal interest in the suit.—Bradley v. Root, 5 Paige, 632.

[f] (N. Y. 1836) Where a defendant, who is primarily liable, is examined as a witness against a codefendant whose liability is secondary, no decree can be obtained by the plaintiff against either of the defendants as to that part of the case to which the defendant has been examined, unless his liability is admitted in the answer.—Bradley v. Root, 5 Paige, 632.

[g] (N. C.) In equity, the examination as a witness of the party primarily liable operates as a release both to the party examined and to a codefendant who is only secondarily liable.—(1840) Lewis v. Owen, 36 N. C. 290; (1849) Burton v. Stamper, 41 N. C. 14.

§ 231. Suits in admiralty.

Interest of captain and pilot or helmsman of vessel, see post, § 382.

—— of master and crew of vessel, see post, § 381.

—— of stevedore, see post, § 383.

[a] (U. S. 1804) In an action by the mate against the master and owner for wages, the master will not be allowed to testify as a witness, where the right to wages depends on the question as to whether there was a justifiable discharge of the mate by the master, and where it appears that there was much personal animosity involved in the controversy between the mate and master.—Atkyns v. Burrows, Fed. Cas. No. 618 [1 Pet. Adm. 244].

[b] (U. S. 1805) In a suit for seamen's wages, where the master is made a party to the suit, but no process has issued against him, he is incompetent as a witness for the respondent.—Malone v. Bell, Fed. Cas. No. 8,994 [1 Pet. Adm. 139].

[c] (U. S. 1813) Seamen joining in a common libel for wages have not a common interest, in such sense as to render them entirely incompetent to testify in behalf of each other; but in such cases the court is inclined to adopt the rule of the civil law, which requires at least two witnesses.—Powell v. The Betsy, Fed. Cas. No. 11,355 [2 Browne, 335].

[d] (U. S. 1813) In proceedings to condemn a vessel for having been engaged in trade with the enemy, on an order of further proof, the affidavits of the captors are admissible in evidence, though they had not released their interest in the capture.—The Sally, Fed. Cas. No. 12,258 [1 Gall. 401].

[e] (U. S. 1833) The rules of the common law as to the incompetency of parties as witnesses on the ground of interest, are adopted in the admiralty, in the exercise of its jurisdiction as an instance court.—The Boston, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673 [1 Sumn. 328].

[f] (U. S. 1833) In a suit in rem by a seaman for wages, the deposition of the master, who has interposed a claim and answer in the action and continues a party to the suit, cannot be read in evidence on the part of the owners of the vessel.—The Exchange, Fed. Cas. No. 4,594 [1 Blatchf. & H. 366].

[g] (U. S. 1846) Where all the crew unite in a suit for double wages because of a short allowance of bread, each is a competent witness for his fellow.—The Childe Harold, Fed. Cas. No. 2,676 [Olcott, 275].

[h] (U. S. 1872) In admiralty, interested parties may testify; but their testimony relating to what can be construed into their own misconduct should be received with suspicion.—Roberts v. The St. James, Fed. Cas. No. 11,914.

§ 232. —— Salvors.

[a] (U. S. 1823) In cases of salvage, the salvors, though interested, are admitted as witnesses from necessity.—The Elizabeth and Jane, Fed. Cas. No. 4,356 [1 Ware (35) 27].

[b] (U. S. 1833) The case of salvage is an exception to the rule as to the incompetency of witnesses on account of interest. The salvors are, from necessity, witnesses as to facts occurring at the time of the salvage service, but only as to such facts.—The Boston, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673 [1 Sumn. 328].

[c] (U. S. 1833) In a salvage suit in admiralty, the salvors, being parties to the suit, are not competent witnesses as to facts occurring in port after the property is brought in.—The Boston, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673 [1 Sumn. 328].

[d] (U. S. 1833) Salvors are ex necessitate admitted as witnesses to all facts which are deemed peculiarly or exclusively within their knowledge. To other facts they are incompetent witnesses.—The Henry Ewbank, Fed. Cas. No. 6,376 [1 Sumn. 400].

[e] (U. S. 1850) A person claiming as a salvor will be permitted to testify in his own behalf, without determining by technical refinements, whether the service was strictly a salvage service or not.—The Huntress, Fed. Cas. No. 6,912.

[f] (U. S. 1858) Cumulative testimony of salvors is admissible in evidence ex necessitate as to facts concerning the alleged service, notwithstanding their apparent interest in the result of the proceeding.—Jones v. The Richmond, Fed. Cas. No. 7,492.

§ 233. Actions on accounts.

Examination of parties by auditor, see "Account, Action on," vol. 1, cc. 689, 690, § 23.

Oath of parties, see "Account," vol. 1, c. 618, § 90; "Account, Action on," vol. 1, cc. 686, 687, §§ 16, 17.

[a] (Conn. 1794) In an action of book debt, plaintiff was not competent to testify to any special agreement or promise in virtue of which she would be entitled to recover, but might testify to an acknowledgment of the debt made by defendant.—Johnson v. Gunn, 2 Root, 130.

[b] (Conn. 1822) In an action of book debt, plaintiff is a competent witness to prove the admissions of defendant relative to the matters in issue.—Bryan v. Jackson, 4 Conn. 288.

[c] (Conn. 1828) In an action of book debt, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove the acknowledgment and promise of defendant, in order to take a case out of the statute of limitations.—Weed v. Bishop, 7 Conn. 128.

[d] (Conn. 1836) The rule that would restrict the testimony of parties to the quantity, quality, and delivery of the articles charged, is not sanctioned by practice. Quoad the book debt, they are admissible, like other witnesses, to testify fully in support or confutation of the account.—Peck v. Abbe, 11 Conn. 207.

[e] (Me. 1833) An account book and the party's oath are not competent evidence to prove defendant to be his agent, and a delivery of goods to him as such, and an agreement to sell and account.—Dunn v. Whitney, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 9.

[f] (Me. 1842) Where, in an action to recover for the price of sails and rigging, plaintiff offers in evidence his original books of entry, with his own suppletory oath, it is not competent for him to testify to facts not entering into any items of charge as found in the books, as that he was directed by defendant to deliver the sails on board another vessel, and that he did so deliver them.—Amee v. Wilson, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 116.

[g] (Ohio, 1816) A book account, commencing 3 or 4 years ago, and containing a regular series of charges, the last of which are within a year of the time when suit was commenced, is a book account of not more than 18 months' standing, within the sixth section of the statute of frauds, providing that, where any claim or defense is founded on book accounts of not more than 18 months' standing, in which is drawn in question the validity or amount of any such book accounts, the court may examine the party under oath, etc.—Marshall v. Bond, Tapp. 99.

[h] (Ohio, 1838) The party testifying to sustain the charges on his book cannot testify as to the value of the articles charged, or of the labor performed; much less, if there is a specific contract, can he testify of that.—Cram v. Spear, 8 Ohio (8 Ham.) 494.

[i] (Pa. 1788) The practice of admitting the oath of plaintiff to prove his shopbook is confined to charge the original debtor. Therefore, where defendant accompanied A. to plaintiff's store, and told plaintiff he would see him paid for such goods as A. should buy, and plaintiff charged defendant in his shopbook as the original purchaser, plaintiff could not be a witness to prove the undertaking.—Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. 238, 1 L. Ed. 117.

[j] (S. C. 1837) A vendue master is required to keep a book, and in an action by the original owner he might be a competent witness to prove his entries; but, when he brings the action himself, he must support it, like any other plaintiff, by competent evidence, and the highest evidence the case admits of.—Carter v. Bennett, Riley, 287.

[k] (Vt. 1827) The examination of the parties before the auditors, respecting accounts exhibited, is to be extended to all circumstances connected with those accounts.—Fay v. Green, 2 Aikens, 386.

[l] (Vt. 1831) A party to an action on book account may testify, before auditors, as to a settlement, or as to payments and items in his account from which a settlement may be inferred.—May v. Corlew, 4 Vt. 12.

[m] (Vt.) Defendant may testify to the fact of having paid, on delivery, for goods charged to him on plaintiff's books, or that they were received in payment of a pre-existing debt; and if plaintiff is examined, the auditors must decide upon the whole examination and proof, according to the weight of evidence.—(1831) May v. Corlew, 4 Vt. 12; (1833) Mattocks v. Owen, 5 Vt. 42.

[n] (Vt. 1833) It is competent for the parties in an action on book to testify as to the persons who owned and sold the articles charged, with a view to show a nonjoinder of plaintiffs.—Hilliker v. Loop, 5 Vt. 116, 26 Am. Dec. 286.

[o] (Vt. 1836) Before auditors, in an action of book, parties are competent witnesses as to payment.—Delaware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48.

[p] (Vt. 1843) In an action on book account against two defendants, where plaintiff presented a charge for money lent, he may prove by the defendant to whom the money was delivered that defendants were partners at the time the money was lent, and that it was obtained upon the credit and for the use of the firm.—Keeler v. Mathews, 17 Vt. 125.

[q] (Vt. 1846) Where husband and wife are joined as plaintiffs, in an action on book account, the wife, as well as the husband, may be examined on oath as a witness to sustain the account.—Gay v. Rogers' Estate, 18 Vt. 342.

[r] (Vt. 1848) In the action on book account, the parties may testify to every material fact in relation to the account proper to be considered in deciding upon the merits of their respective claims.—Clark v. Marsh, 20 Vt. 338.

[s] (Vt. 1850) In an action on a book account, the parties are competent witnesses as to all facts and agreements on which any of its items are based; and where, on a mutual settlement of accounts, a balance struck was charged as an item in a new account, in a suit thereon the parties were competent to prove the stating of the former account and their agreement on the balance.—Warren v. Bishop, 22 Vt. 607.

[t] (Vt. 1851) If the vendor bring an action of book account to recover for the price of the liquors sold for the purpose of being retailed by the vendee without license, the vendee may prove by his own testimony that he had no license, and that he gave notice to the agent of the vendor, at the time of the contract, that he intended to sell the liquors within the state without a license.—Smith v. Allen, 23 Vt. 298.

[u] (Vt. 1851) A party to an action on book account cannot by his own testimony prove a new promise, to avoid the statute of limitations. —White v. Dow, 23 Vt. 300.

Determination of liability, see post, § 483.
Interest in event, see post, §§ 309–322.

[a] (Ala. 1844) In an action against two as joint makers of a note, one of them, although he makes no defense, is not a competent witness for the other; for a verdict for such other would operate a discontinuance as to the witness.—Turner v. Lazarus, 6 Ala. 875.

[b] (Ky. 1859) In a suit against indorsers, each denied his own signature, the issues were all tried together, but the defenses were distinct and independent. Held, that each was competent to testify for the others.—Smith's Adm'x v. Northern Bank, 58 Ky. (1 Metc.) 575.

[c] (La. 1844) Where the maker pleads that she executed the note as surety for her husband, and was not benefited by the consideration, the indorser, who, sued with her, answers separately, adopting the same defense, is not a good witness for her, being interested to destroy her obligation as maker.—Macarty v. Roach, 7 Rob. 357.

[d] (Me. 1834) Defendant's affidavit was not competent to prove that certain notes, which constituted the subject of controversy, had once been given up to him by the holders thereof, and that they had been taken from him by accident with other papers.—Potter v. Titcomb, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 157.

[e] (Me. 1861) In an action by a bank against the maker of a note, the maker himself is a competent witness to testify that the note was given by him with the express understanding with the officers of the bank that it should be used only for exhibition to the bank commissioners to increase the apparent assets of the bank, and was to be used for no other purpose. —Lime Rock Bank v. Hewett, 50 Me. 267.

[f] (Mass. 1810) In an action by an agent of the payee on a bill of exchange, the agent is a competent witness to show that the indorsement to him, though not limited in terms, was in fact made for the use of the payee.—Barker v. Prentiss, 6 Mass. 430.

[g] (Mass. 1850) Where the attesting witness of a note, payable to a person named or to bearer, becomes the holder, and brings an action on the note in the name of the payee, he cannot be allowed to testify to the execution of the note, or to prove the same within the exception of the statute of limitations (Rev. St. c. 120, § 4) as to witnessed notes, by evidence of the handwriting of the maker and of himself.—Jourdain v. Sherman, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 139.

[h] (Miss. 1843) Where the makers of a note, who are sued, sever in their defenses, one of the makers cannot testify for another maker, unless released from all liability for contribution.—Commercial & R. Bank v. Lum, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 414.

[i] (N. Y. 1842) In a suit against two makers of a joint and several note, one maker cannot examine the other.—Miller v. McCagg, 4 Hill, 35.

[j] (N. Y. 1855) The subscribing witness to a note bought the note of the payee, and brought an action on it in his own name. Held, that he could not recover merely by proving his own handwriting as subscribing witness.—Edwards v. Perry, 21 Barb. 600.

[k] (N. Y. 1856) In an action on a note, signed by two persons as principal and surety, neither of the defendants is a competent witness to prove payment by the other.—Newell v. Salmons, 22 Barb. 647.

[l] (N. Y. 1857) In an action against two persons as principal and surety of a note, the principal is not a competent witness for the surety. —Strong v. Grannis, 26 Barb. 122.

[m] (Pa. 1836) A. was the payee and indorser of a note made by B. for the accommodation of C. A. guarantied its payment at maturity. Held, that A. was a competent witness in a suit by B. against himself.—Robertson v. Stewart, 5 Watts, 442.

[n] (Pa. 1845) One of the makers of a note, in whose favor an award unappealed from was made, who at the time his deposition was taken was a certificated bankrupt, and who had not a particle of interest in the event of the suit, but who, at the impetration of the writ and the award, was a party to the suit, is not a competent witness.—Wolf v. Fink, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 435, 44 Am. Dec. 141.

[o] (Tenn. 1871) The assignor of a note is a competent witness for his assignees, although the suit is pending in his own name against the makers.—Gardner v. Smith, 52 Tenn. (5 Heisk.) 256.

[a] (Iowa, 1856) The maker, for labor to be performed by the payee, gave the note, on which both he and the indorser, who was the payee, were sued. The latter indorsed it to plaintiff. The maker answered that the work was not performed, and that the consideration therefore had failed. The payee answered that the work was performed. Held that, being interested in the event, he was incompetent to prove for plaintiff that the consideration had not failed.—Hickman v. Sloan, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 64.

[b] (Me. 1849) In an action brought by the indorsee on a note, plaintiff cannot be called by defendant to testify, although he was the subscribing witness.—Cushman v. Downing, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 459.

[c] (Miss. 1849) The nominal plaintiff, in a suit on a note, is a competent witness for defendant, if he is willing to testify.—Blundell v. Vaughan, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 625; Coopwood v. Foster, Id. 718.

[d] (Mo. 1862) When the indorser is joined as defendant in a suit with the maker of a note, the indorser is not a competent witness for plaintiff against the maker and prior indorsers, as being an adverse party. The last indorser is interested in having judgment rendered against the maker and the prior indorsers.— Presbury v. Papin, 31 Mo. 490.

[e] (N. Y. 1809) In an action on a note, a person who is the real plaintiff in interest may be called and examined by the defendants.— Connor v. Bradey, Anth. N. P. 99.

§ 236. Actions by or against partners.

Determination of liability, see post, § 486.
Interest in event, see post, §§ 349–355.

[a] (Ala. 1859) Under Code, § 2142, a firm can be sued by the firm name. There was some evidence that certain persons did transact the business concerning which the suit was brought under the name alleged. Held, that one of those persons was not competent to prove that the firm name was wrongly alleged in the petition, in which case the action would have abated, and he would by his own evidence discharge himself from a pending suit.—Jemison v. Minor, 34 Ala. 33.

[b] (Ind. 1860) Where several persons are sued jointly as partners, and one of them answers separately, denying that he is a partner, his codefendants are competent witnesses as to such defense, as it is not a matter in which they are jointly interested or liable with him.—Hubbell v. Woolf, 15 Ind. 204.

[c] (Ky. 1871) A defendant is a competent witness for his two codefendants, to prove that they are not his partners and are not liable with him for the debt sued on.—Culbertson v. Holden, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 161.

[e] (La. 1855) One partner is not competent to prove that the other has paid a judgment against the partnership. If the defense is not sustained, he remains liable in solido to the creditor, and must look to his partner for the latter's contributive share; but, if sustained, he will be liable no longer to the creditor, but only to his partner for one-half.—Ellis v. Fisher, 10 La. Ann. 482.

[f] (La. 1858) The defendants were sued as the partners of a third person to render them liable for the drafts of the latter as advances to a firm of which they were alleged to be members. Held, that one was not a competent witness for the other to prove that he was not a member of the firm.—Bailey v. Doak, 13 La. Ann. 272.

[g] (Miss. 1854) Where a firm is sued, and one of the members, against whom a judgment might be rendered, is offered as a witness for his codefendant, he cannot be permitted to testify.—Wilson v. Clarke, 27 Miss. (5 Cushm.) 270.

[h] (N. Y. 1858) Where it appears, in an action against three partners for the recovery of personal property, that there is no issue involving anything personal to either of them, but all the defense made is a joint defense, neither can be a witness for the others.—Ward v. Woodburn, 27 Barb. 346.

[i] (N. Y. 1859) A party sued as a copartner is not a competent witness for his codefendant to prove a defense which would be a general one to both.—City Bank of Brooklyn v. McChesney, 20 N. Y. 240.

[k] (S. C. 1856) On a question between creditors as to the amount paid by the copartnership, and the amount paid by each copartner, for a lot and buildings, the object being to ascertain how much of the value of the lot should be treated as copartnership assets and how much as the individual estate of each copartner, held, that the copartners, they being parties to the bill, were incompetent witnesses to prove how much each had paid out of his individual funds.—Fleming v. Billings, 9 Rich. Eq. 149.

[l] (Tenn. 1843) Where one member of a firm executes his individual note to obtain money, he is not an incompetent witness to prove that the money was obtained on the credit of the firm and went into the business of the firm in an action against it.—Foster v. Hall, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 346.

[m] (Tenn. 1858) One of the copartners of a firm, in a contest between third persons and the firm, is not a competent witness to prove the existence of the partnership, or that the debt sued for was created for or on account of the firm.—Philips v. Henry, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 133.

[n] (Vt. 1820) In an action against A. and B. as partners, the parties may be examined and have a right to testify as to the fact on whose account the articles charged were delivered.—Burton v. Ferris, Brayt. 78.

[o] (Vt. 1853) The parties, in an action of book account, are witnesses to the same extent, where a question of partnership is concerned, as other witnesses, and may testify to every material fact proper to be considered in deciding the merits of the case.—Carter v. Wright, 25 Vt. 656.

§ 237. —— Adverse parties and testimony against co-party.

[a] (Ala. 1846) In a suit by several partners, one of the plaintiffs, consenting to be sworn as a witness, is competent for defendant, although the other partners may object to him.—Cunningham v. Carpenter, 10 Ala. 109.

[b] (Cal. 1862) In a suit on an alleged indebtedness, plaintiff sought to prove a partnership between the two parties joined as defendants. Held, that one of these defendants was incompetent as a witness, when offered to prove the existence of the partnership, against the denial of it by his codefendant.—Easterly v. Bassignano, 20 Cal. 489.

[c] (Ill. 1864) In an action against a firm on their note, one of the partners, who by mutual agreement was liable for the firm debts, was a competent witness against his codefendant.—Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ill. 529.

[d] (Ill. 1864) A partner, not disqualified on the ground of interest, is a competent witness against his copartners in an action against the firm.—Bell v. Thompson, 34 Ill. 529.

[e] (La. 1848) In an action against part of the owners of a steamer, who were bound in solido on a note given for materials, reciting that the steamer and owners promised to pay, and signed by two of the partners, who acted as agents for the rest, those who signed were not incompetent as witnesses for plaintiff on the ground of interest.—Knight v. Lauve, 3 La. Ann. 64.

[f] (La. 1849) Where the maker of a note appeared to be the only party who was liable thereon, but suit was brought against him and another, alleged to be part owner of a steamer for the price of which the note was given, the maker could not be called as a witness by plaintiff to establish the liability of his codefendant as a partner with him.—Ellis v. Lauve, 4 La. Ann. 245.

[g] (Miss. 1835) One partner, who is a defendant, cannot be made a witness to prove that a codefendant was a partner; for it is his interest to establish this fact and make the codefendant liable for contribution.—Garner v. Myrick, 30 Miss. 448.

[h] (N. H. 1842) In a suit on a note against partners, one of the defendants was not served with the writ, and on the trial was introduced as a witness by plaintiff to show the existence of a partnership between himself and the defendant served. Held, that he was incompetent.—Latham v. Kenniston, 13 N. H. 203.

[i] (N. H. 1858) Where a suit is brought against two as partners, but service is made on one only, the person not served with process and not appearing in the action is not a competent witness for the other party to prove the partnership.—Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 319.

[j] (Ohio, 1855) In a suit by a surety against the manager and members of a firm for whom he had bound himself as surety, which was defended on the ground that it was the sole debt of the manager, the latter was not, prior to the acts to improve the law of evidence (2 Curw. St. pp. 1522, 1597), a competent witness for complainant to establish the liability of the firm.—Hale v. Wetmore, 4 Ohio St. 600.

[k] (Pa. 1828) Plaintiff, by omitting to serve one of a firm, cannot make such member a witness for him.—Taylor v. Henderson, 17 Serg. & R. 453.

[l] (Pa. 1842) In a suit against a partnership, if a partner voluntarily submits to be examined on the part of plaintiff against himself and his copartners jointly, his evidence is admissible for that purpose. The rule is the same in contract and in tort.—O'Brien v. Vantine, 1 Clark, 210, 2 Pa. Law J. 94.

[m] (Pa. 1843) One of the codefendants on whom process is not served is not competent to testify for plaintiff as to a partnership between himself and his codefendant.—Heckert v. Fegely, 6 Watts & S. 139.

[n] (Pa. 1844) One of several partners, who are plaintiffs in an action, if he be willing to testify, is a competent witness for defendant.—Moddewell v. Keever, 8 Watts & S. 63.

[o] (Pa. 1851) One of two partners is a competent witness for defendant in an action of debt on book account, brought in their names for the use of another, to prove that his copartner and himself agreed, before the claim was transferred, that an account of defendant against the witness should be credited to defendant in the account in suit.—Canon v. Campbell, 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 164.

[p] (Tex. 1860) In a suit by a partnership on an account, defendant claimed that the account had been settled by an agreement with the partnership that it should be set off against an individual debt of one of the partners to defendant. Held, that such individual partner was a competent witness for defendant to prove the fact alleged, since his interest was balanced by the fact that if the defense prevailed he would be indebted to his firm, and if it did not prevail he would be indebted to the same amount to defendant.—Young v. Read, 25 Tex. Supp. 113.

[q] (Vt. 1848) One member of a firm purchased property for the benefit of the firm, and on their credit, and afterwards, on a settlement between the copartners, assumed the debt himself; and a suit was then commenced against the firm to recover the debt, and the defendant who had thus assumed the debt was called as a witness on the part of plaintiff, and was willing to testify. Held, that he had no interest in behalf of plaintiff, in the event of the suit, which would render him incompetent as a witness.—Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461.

[r] (Vt. 1848) The interest of such witness in the suit is not in any manner increased or affected by the fact that he has received his discharge in bankruptcy subsequent to the time when he thus assumed the debt.—Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461.

[a] (Conn.) A defendant is not admissible as a witness to sustain a plea of usury filed by him under the statute.—(1789) Fliming v. Bates, 1 Root, 129; (1791) Livingston v. Bird, Id. 255.

[b] (Conn. 1843) On a complaint of usury, filed, in an action on a note, under the third section of the statute, defendant himself cannot be examined to prove the facts alleged in such complaint.—Williams v. Denison, 16 Conn. 28.

[c] (Ill. 1861) After usurious money has been paid, the parties are not competent witnesses in a suit to recover it back.—Lucas v. Spencer, 27 Ill. 15.

[d] (Me. 1847) In a suit by an indorsee against the maker of a note, defendant will not be permitted to prove usury by his own oath in defense.—Myric v. Hasey, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 9, 46 Am. Dec. 583.

[e] (Me. 1849) The oath of defendant cannot be admitted to establish the defense of usury in an action on a note, brought in the name of the indorsee; and whether or not the note was ever the property of the payee is immaterial.—Cushman v. Downing, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 459.

[f] (Mass. 1810) The promisor cannot show usury by his own oath, in an action against him by an indorsee, after a mere showing that the action was instituted for the benefit of the original promisee and that he was the real creditor.—Binney v. Merchant, 6 Mass. 190.

[g] (N. J.) Where the equity of redemption has been sold by the sheriff, and no decree of foreclosure is necessary against the mortgagor, he is a competent witness to prove usury in the mortgage.—(1846) Cummins v. Wire, 6 N. J. Eq. (2 Halst. Ch.) 73; (1852) Brolasky v. Miller, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 807.

[h] (N. Y. 1840) In a joint action against the maker and indorser of a note, which by the evidence of the maker, who is called as a witness for the indorser, is proved to be usurious, plaintiff may have a verdict against the maker, as his evidence cannot benefit himself.—Bloodgood v. Faxon, 24 Wend. 385.

[i] (N. Y. 1856) An indorsee is a competent witness for his codefendants, in an action against the makers and indorsers of a note, to show usury in the note.—Bank of Auburn v. Walter, 23 Barb. 441.

[j] (N. Y. 1871) An action was brought by an administrator on a note made to his intestate by C. and indorsed by three other defendants. All of the defendants joined in an answer of usury. Held, that C. was not competent as a witness to prove the usury.—Fox v. Clark, 61 Barb. 216, note.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Where a motion is made by a county treasurer, under the statute, against a clerk for not rendering an account, the treasurer is a competent witness to prove that the account was not rendered, as the motion is a county prosecution, in which the officer has no interest.—Douglass v. Terrell, 11 Ala. 583.

[b] (Ill. 1844) After the commencement of a suit by certain individuals as county commissioners, one of them, whose term of office had expired before the trial, was called as a witness on the trial, and was permitted to testify. Held, that as it was unnecessary to have brought the suit in their individual names, and as he had ceased to be a commissioner, he was a competent witness.—Frazier v. Laughlin, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 347.

[c] (Ind. 1839) In a suit by the state, on the relation of the county treasurer, on the bond of a collector of county revenue, the treasurer is an incompetent witness for the state, on account of his interest in the event of the suit.—Jones v. State, 5 Blackf. 141.

[d] (La. 1836) An attorney in fact, who sues in his principal's name, is competent to prove plaintiff's demand.—Zino v. Verdelle, 9 La. 52.

[e] (La. 1841) The parish treasurer, but nominally a party, is competent for the parish in a suit against the sheriff for taxes.—Iberville Police Jury v. Sherburne, 17 La. 342.

[f] (Mich. 1858) Where an action is brought by highway commissioners by their name of office, one of them, in office at the commencement of the suit, but no longer such at time of trial, is competent as a witness.—Highway Com'rs of Port Huron v. Stockman, 5 Mich. 528.

[g] (Miss. 1847) A president of a board of police, in the name of whose predecessor an action was brought, was a competent witness to sustain the suit, on the ground that he had no interest in the suit, and was not personally liable for costs.—Ellis v. Carlisle, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 552.

[h] (N. H. 1851) If the assignee of an insolvent, with a view to protect the interests of the assignor or his creditors, appears by leave of court to defend an action in the name of the defendant, he is neither a privy nor party to the suit, in the legal acceptation of those terms, and, unless security for costs be furnished as a condition of his appearance, so as to make him liable for costs, he is not legally interested in the result.—Swamscot Mach. Co. v. Walker, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 457, 55 Am. Dec. 172.

[i] (N. H. 1851) Where A., the assignee of B. and C., by leave of the court appeared to defend an action against D., and afterwards, before the trial, withdrew his appearance by leave of the court, without any security for costs having been required or furnished, held, that he had no legal interest in the result of the suit, and was a competent witness for defendant.—Swamscot Mach. Co. v. Walker, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 457, 55 Am. Dec. 172.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) In an action to recover for work done for defendant, he was not a competent witness to prove that he was acting only in a representative character as a receiver when he made the contract sued on.—Doughty v. Busteed, 3 Code Rep. 187.

[k] (N. Y. 1856) Where a joint-stock association is sued in the name of its president or treasurer, such officer may be examined in proceedings supplementary to the execution, on showing him to be indebted to the association, as the members of the club are not defendants, and are not personally liable.—Curtois v. Harrison, 3 Abb. Prac. 96.

[l] (N. Y. 1862) A relator, suing in the name of the people for a writ of mandamus, is a competent witness in behalf of the plaintiffs.—People v. Albright, 14 Abb. Prac. 305, 23 How. Prac. 306.

[m] (N. C. 1867) Before the evidence act of 1866, the relator, in an action brought in the name of the state, was not competent as a witness.—Kirkland v. Mangum, 61 N. C. 177.

[n] (S. C. 1827) Where a third person brings suit on an administration bond in the name of the ordinary, entering his own name on the record as the real plaintiff, and acknowledging himself liable for costs, the ordinary is a competent witness to prove the bond.—Price v. Gregory, 4 McCord, 261.

[o] (Tenn. 1859) A suit by the justices of the county court is in legal effect a suit by the county, so that, though the names of the justices appear as parties to the record, they are competent witnesses.—Ezell v. Justices of Giles County, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 583.

Interest in event, see post, § 356.

[a] (Ark. 1857) An administrator is not a competent witness in his own favor in a suit against himself.—Grimes v. Booth, 19 Ark. 224.

[b] (Conn. 1831) In the adjustment of an executor's account, all the parties in interest may testify. Where, therefore, the administrator of A., who before his death had been executor of C.'s estate, with B., applied to the court of probate for the settlement of A.'s account, claiming the allowance of certain payments made by A. for the benefit of C.'s estate, the executor, B., though a party to the proceeding and interested in the event, was an admissible witness to disprove such claim.—Fairman v. Bacon, 8 Conn. 418.

[c] (Ind. 1832) To an action of covenant against an administrator, on an obligation of the intestate, brought by an assignee, defendant pleaded nonassignment by the obligee, and payment to him by the intestate. Held, that defendant was not a competent witness against plaintiff to prove the truth of the pleas.—Sinks v. English, 3 Blackf. 138.

[d] (Ky. 1822) The deposition of one of several executors is not competent evidence in a suit between the heirs of the intestate and the executors.—Saunders' Heirs v. Saunders' Ex'rs, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 314.

[e] (Ky. 1828) An executor cannot be a witness in an action against him as such.—Lampton v. Lampton's Ex'rs, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 616.

[f] (Ky. 1829) An executor, having no other interest than his fiduciary character imparts to him, is a competent witness to prove the will.—In re McDaniel's Will, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 331.

[g] (Ky. 1864) In an action by an executor on notes given to him in purchase of land sold by him under a power in the will, the purchaser alleged that there was no bond for title or other written memorial of the sale, and pleaded the statute of frauds. Held, that the executor, although a contingent legatee, could, as conclusive corroboration of the probable deduction that such memorial had been delivered simultaneously with the delivery of the notes, testify that such written memorial was executed.—Hill's Adm'r v. Spalding's Ex'r, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 216.

[h] (La. 1846) One sued, as administrator, for a debt alleged to be due by the deceased, having no personal interest in the case, is a competent witness to prove that the claim had been paid by the deceased.—De Kerlegand v. Robin, 1 La. Ann. 227.

[i] (Mass. 1819) In an action by the administrator of the payee of a note, the defendant administrator is not a competent witness, though the estate of his intestate is insolvent.—Fox v. Whitney, 16 Mass. 118.

[j] (Mass. 1838) Where the deposition of an administrator was taken in perpetuam at the instance of the plaintiff in relation to facts which came to his knowledge before he was appointed administrator, it was not admissible in an action against the administrator as a deposition; the deponent being a party to the record.—Faunce v. Gray, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 243.

[k] (N. H. 1844) An administrator, having no interest, is a competent witness in a suit brought by him on a contract, in the name of the party thereto, and for the benefit of the estate.—Barker v. Barker, 16 N. H. 333.

[l] (Pa.) An executor defendant is competent to show when, where, and in what condition he found the papers of his testator.—(1796) Lenox v. Dehaas, 2 Yeates, 37; (1797) Standley's Ex'rs v. Weaver, Id. 256.

[m] (Pa. 1819) One of two executors, defendants, cannot be a witness for the defendants on the pleas of non assumpsit, payment, and setoff, though all the costs, past and future, are paid.—Conrad v. Keyser, 5 Serg. & R. 370.

[n] (Pa. 1821) An administrator, who is one of several plaintiffs, is admissible as a witness after he has released all claims to commissions, and paid all costs, however the verdict may be, unless he is in danger of being involved in a devastavit.—Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 Serg. & R. 116.

[o] (Pa. 1824) One suing as executor, and paying all the costs which have accrued or which may accrue in the suit, is not a competent witness without having released the commissions to which he may be entitled on the money to be recovered.—Anderson v. Neff, 11 Serg. & R. 208.

[p] (Pa. 1845) An executor, who is defendant, cannot be a witness to discharge himself, thereby discharging the land of a devisee, who is codefendant, from the decedent's debts.—Hunt v. Moore, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 105.

[q] (Pa. 1855) On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, one named as executor is a competent witness against its validity.—Landis v. Landis, 1 Grant, Cas. 248.

[r] (S. C. 1826) On an issue devisavit vel non the executor, who was a party to the record, is not competent to testify to the circumstances under which the will was found.—Vinyard v. Brown, 4 McCord, 24.

[s] (S. C. 1827) An executor, who is a coplaintiff in a suit, is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, though he may never have qualified as an executor.—Christie's Ex'rs v. Furman's Ex'rs, Harp. 553.

[t] (S. C. 1832) An executor plaintiff, as such, is not competent to testify in the suit, both on account of being a party and being interested in the event of the suit.—Bellamy's Ex'rs v. Cains, 3 Rich. Law, 354.

[u] (S. C. 1833) In an action by distributees against an administratrix, deceased's widow, and the administrator of her second husband's estate for a devastavit by her, and seeking to hold the estate of the second husband liable, the assignee of one of plaintiffs and guardian of the others executed a release of her liability. Held, that she was not incompetent as a witness either by reason of being a party or being interested in the event of the suit.—Capehart v. Huey, 1 Hill, Eq. 405.

[v] (Vt. 1847) An administrator de bonis non, in whose name a suit is progressing, is not so devested of all interest as to be a competent witness in the case, notwithstanding it may appear that the suit was commenced prior to his appointment, and that the estate which he represents is clearly solvent.—Abbott v. Clark, 19 Vt. 444.

[w] (Va. 1844) On the trial of an issue to contest the validity of a will which has been admitted to probate, the executor, who claims no interest as devisee or legatee under the will, and not having acted so as to subject himself to costs, is a competent witness, though he is a party defendant in the suit, has settled his accounts, showing large balances in his hands, and is entitled to commissions upon his receipts and disbursements.—Coalter's Ex'r v. Bryan, 1 Grat. 18.

Interest in event, see post, § 324.

[a] A defendant, who is a trustee without any real interest in the suit, may be a witness for a codefendant.

—(Me. 1851) White v. Means, 33 Me. 495;

(Mo. 1852) McLaughlin v. McLaughlin's Adm'r, 16 Mo. 242; (1866) Hale v. Meegan, 39 Mo. 272;

(N. J. 1840) Neville v. Demeritt, 2 N. J. Eq. (1 H. W. Green) 321.

[b] (Ala. 1841) A plaintiff of record cannot be examined as a witness to support the action, although he is shown to be a mere trustee.—Stone v. Bibb, 2 Ala. 100.

[c] (Ky. 1865) A trustee, who is the nominal plaintiff in a case of forcible detainer, in which he has no beneficial interest, is competent to testify for plaintiff.—Spalding v. Bull, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 311.

[d] (Mass. 1836) A person called as a witness stated that he was indebted to defendant, and that he had been summoned in the action as his trustee. Held, that he was not interested in the event of the suit, and so not incompetent to testify.—Dana v. Kemble, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 545.

[e] (N. H. 1843) While leave is always granted to examine merely formal parties, on motion and a suggestion that the witness is not interested, an executor holding property in trust cannot be examined as a witness on behalf of his cestui que trust. — Second Congregational Soc. v. First Congregational Soc., 14 N. H. 315.

[f] (N. C. 1816) A trustee defendant, having a legal interest altogether nominal, is an incompetent witness at law, but not in equity, as to the merits or designs of the trust deed.—Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 N. C. 431.

[g] (Pa. 1849) Where the name of a plaintiff for the use of another is on the record only as a naked trustee, and the cestuis que trust, who are liable for costs, are alone interested in the suit, and could have maintained it in their own names as legal plaintiffs, such plaintiff for use is a competent witness for them.—Keim v. Taylor, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 163.

[h] (Pa. 1859) A nominal plaintiff, whose name is on the record as a naked trustee, and who is not liable for costs, may be a witness for the parties in interest.—Ryerss v. Trustees of Presbyterian Congregation of Blossburg, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 114.

Interest in event, see post, § 323.

[a] (Ala. 1867) Prior to Act Feb. 14, 1867, relative to the competency of witnesses (Sess. Acts 1866–67, p. 435), a guardian, on the final settlement of his accounts, was not a competent witness generally in his own behalf; but he might testify to the correctness of any item under $20.—Padgett v. Padgett, 41 Ala. 382.

[b] (Ark. 1855) A party prosecuting as prochein ami for an infant cannot be a witness for the infant.—Pryor v. Ryburn, 16 Ark. 671.

[c] (Ill. 1883) In an action by sureties on a guardian's bond against him and the ward to reach trust funds in the hands of the ward, in order to reimburse themselves for payment of a judgment obtained against the guardian by the ward, the guardian may testify against his ward's interest.—Rice v. Rice, 108 Ill. 199.

[d] (Ky. 1866) Where the guardian of an infant brings a suit in his own name on a note executed to him, he will not be a competent witness for himself, although the note belongs to the infant.—Murphy v. Hubble, 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 247.

[e] (La. 1844) Minors, for whose board the tutor is sued, being substantially parties, are incompetent for plaintiff.—Dwight v. Smith, 9 Rob. 32.

[f] (La. 1853) A tutor, suing for damages for the abduction of his ward, to whose benefit they inure, is a good witness. His interest in the suit goes only to his credibility.—Brown v. Crockett, 8 La. Ann. 30.

[g] (Mass. 1815) A guardian is incompetent to testify in an action against him in favor of his ward's estate.—Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358.

[h] (Mo. 1857) A guardian ad litem of a party to a suit may be a witness for the party.—Murphy v. Murphy, 24 Mo. 526.

[i] (Mo. 1860) A guardian is a competent witness for his ward, whose case he conducts.—McCullough v. McCullough, 31 Mo. 226.

[j] (S. C. 1804) In an action on an administration bond, the plaintiff, a minor, and his guardian, are incompetent witnesses as to the value of the distributive share of the deceased's estate claimed.—Ordinary of Kershaw Dist. v. Bracey, 2 Bay, 542.

[k] (Va. 1822) One who is made prochein ami to an infant without his knowledge or consent is not disqualified from being a witness.—Burwell v. Corbin, 1 Rand. 131, 10 Am. Dec. 494.

(d) DEFENDANTS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

IN GENERAL, § 243.
PERSONS JOINTLY INDICTED IN GENERAL, § 244.
SEPARATE TRIALS OF PERSONS JOINTLY INDICTED, § 245.
BEFORE DISPOSAL OF CASE AGAINST WITNESS, § 246.
PERSONS SEPARATELY INDICTED, § 247.
—— JOINT TRIAL, § 248.

Determination of liability, see post, §§ 487–489.
Effect of calling or examination as witness by adverse party and of admission of testimony of adverse party, see post, § 534.
Husband or wife of party to criminal prosecution, see post, §§ 420–423.
Interest in criminal prosecution, see post, §§ 403–410.

[a] Defendant in a criminal prosecution is not a competent witness in his own behalf.
—(Ind. 1864) Whelchell v. State, 23 Ind. 89;
(Iowa, 1874) State v. Laffer, 38 Iowa, 422; (1874) Same v. Bixby, 39 Iowa, 465.

[b] (Ala. 1850) On the trial of an issue, formed on an indictment under the statute, for refusing to testify before the grand jury in reference to gaming, defendant cannot be allowed to give evidence in his own favor. The practice of permitting defaulting witnesses, on an application to the court, to excuse themselves by their own testimony, furnishes no authority for such procedure.—Batre v. The State, 18 Ala. 119.

[c] (Pa. 1762) Where no prosecutor is indorsed on the indictment as required by Act 1705, defendant himself is not a competent witness to prove the person prosecuting, but it must be proved by indifferent witnesses.—Rex v. Lukens, 1 Dall, 5, 1 L. Ed. 13.

[d] (Pa. 1878) Since a defendant has not the right to give his testimony to the jury, as to crimes which are exclusively triable in the court of oyer and terminer, and that court has exclusive jurisdiction of the offense of receiving stolen goods, one charged with such offense cannot give testimony in his own behalf.—Commonwealth v. Lenox, 12 Phila. 601.

§ 244. Persons jointly indicted in general.

[a] When two persons are indicted jointly, neither is admissible as a witness for or against his codefendant.
—(Ky. 1884) Lisle v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky. 250;
(Mo. 1854) State v. Edwards, 19 Mo. 674; (1881) Same v. Martin, 74 Mo. 547;
(Ohio, 1816) State v. Foy, Tapp. 103;
(Or. 1884) State v. Drake, 11 Or. 396, 4 Pac. 1204.

[b] (Ga. 1822) An accessory joined in an indictment with the principal may be called to testify for the state, but, it seems, not for the principal.—State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. 151.

[c] (N. C. 1881) On trial for an affray prior to the act of 1881, allowing defendants to testify in their own behalf, one defendant could not oppose the testifying of his codefendant for himself, the state's counsel not objecting.—State v. Hamlett, 85 N. C. 520.

[d] (Pa. 1789) One indicted with others, for forcible entry, cannot be a witness for the defense after circumstances are proved from which it is possible for the jury to presume facts sufficient to justify his conviction.—State v. Leach, Add. 352.

[e] (Tex. 1889) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 731, forbidding persons charged as principals, accomplices, etc., to testify for each other, one jointly charged with a defendant, though indicted under the wrong name, as his name was unknown to the grand jury, cannot testify for defendant.—Anderson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 177, 11 S. W. 33, 11 Am. St. Rep. 189, 3 L. R. A. 644.

[f] (Va. 1894) The court has a right to call as a witness one who is jointly indicted with defendant, and who was present at the transaction.—Commonwealth v. Brown, 90 Va. 671, 19 S. E. 447.

§ 245. Separate trials of persons jointly indicted.

[a] Where several persons are jointly charged, but separately tried, they are competent witnesses for each other.
—(Cal. 1855) People v. Labra, 5 Cal. 183; (1862) Same v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 439;
(Ga. 1846) Jones v. State, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 610;
(Ind. 1855) Everett v. State, 6 Ind. 495; (1856) Marshall v. Same, 8 Ind. 498; (1857) Hunt v. Same, 10 Ind. 69; (1860) State v. Spencer, 15 Ind. 249;
(Ohio, 1859) Allen v. State, 10 Ohio St. 287;
(Tenn. 1878) Poteete v. State, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 261;

(Wyo. 1893) McGinness v. State, 4 Wyo. 115, 31 Pac. 978, 53 Pac. 492.

[c] (U. S. 1824) On a joint indictment of three persons for a riot, where one only is put upon trial, the others, who have forfeited their recognizances, cannot be examined as witnesses for him.—United States v. Rutherford, Fed. Cas. No. 16,210 [2 Cranch, C. C. 528].

[d] (U. S. 1835) Upon a joint indictment against two for assault and battery, it is not a matter of right that they should be tried separately, at their request; and neither can be examined as a witness for the other, unless there be no evidence against one, in which case the jury may acquit him, and then he may be examined for the other defendant.—United State v. Davidson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,922 [4 Cranch, C. C. 576].

[e] (Ala. 1880) Where the trial of two persons jointly indicted for murder is severed by the adjudication that one of them is insane, the testimony of either, given when sane, at a former trial, is admissible against the other.—Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 55, 42 Am. Rep. 95.

[f] (Ark. 1859) Where several accessories before the fact are jointly indicted with the principal, they are incompetent witnesses for him upon his trial.—Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36.

[g] (La. 1873) It makes no difference whether an accomplice who becomes a witness for the state has been convicted or not, or whether he be joined or not in the same indictment with the prisoner to be tried, provided he be not put upon his trial at the same time.—State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. Ann. 522.

[h] (La. 1886) An accomplice joined in the same indictment with the prisoner to be tried may testify unless put on trial at the same time.—State v. Mason, 38 La. Ann. 476.

[i] (Mass. 1860) Where two were jointly indicted for uttering a forged note, and the trial of one was postponed, he could not be called as a witness for the other.—Commonwealth v. Marsh, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 57.

[j] (Minn. 1858) Whether tried together or separately, one defendant cannot testify in behalf of a codefendant.—Baker v. United States, 1 Minn. 207 (Gil. 181).

[k] (Mo. 1851) Where two are jointly indicted, neither is admissible as a witness for the other, whether they are tried jointly or separately; being incompetent, not on the ground of interest, but of public policy; but, if there is no evidence to criminate one, or if he is made a defendant by mistake, or for the purpose of excluding his testimony, the practice of the courts is to direct his acquittal that he may testify for the other.—State v. Roberts, 15 Mo. 28.

[m] (N. C. 1871) When two persons are indicted for a felony in the same bill, the one as principal and the other as accessory, the latter, although not on trial himself, is not a competent witness against the former.—State v. Dunlop, 65 N. C. 288.

[n] (N. C. 1885) In an indictment for an affray, one codefendant may be examined as a state's witness against another when they are tried separately.—State v. Weaver, 93 N. C. 595.

[o] (Ohio, 1861) Where two are jointly indicted for an offense which may be committed by one alone, and they are tried separately, the one not on trial, and his wife, are competent witnesses for the other.—Matthews v. State, 2 Ohio Dec. 525.

[p] (Wyo. 1893) A co-defendant who has been jointly indicted with defendant, but whose trial has been severed, is a competent witness for defendant, as well as for the state.—McGinness v. State, 4 Wyo. 115, 31 Pac. 978, 53 Pac. 492.

§ 246. Before disposal of case against witness.

[a] Where a party is indicted jointly with another for felony, and he is on trial separately, his co-defendant is not a competent witness for him until discharged in some way from the record.
—(U. S. 1851) United States v. Reid, 53 U. S. (12 How.) 360, 13 L. Ed. 1023; (Iowa, 1858) State v. Nash, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 347;
(Ky. 1866) Chandler v. Commonwealth, 64 Ky. (1 Bush) 41;
(N. Y. 1813) People v. Bill, 10 Johns. 95 (1852) Same v. McIntyre, 1 Parker, Cr. R. 371;
(Pa. 1860) Shay v. Commonwealth, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 305.

[b] Generally, one of several jointly indicted for the same offense cannot be a witness for his codefendants until he has ceased to be a party to the proceedings, either by an entry of nolle prosequi as to him, a verdict of acquittal, or a judgment against him as guilty upon his confession, or otherwise, so that the suit is ended as to him by a judgment for or against him.
—(Ark. 1856) Moss v. State, 17 Ark. 327, 65 Am. Dec. 433; (1867) Brown v. Same, 24 Ark. 620;
(N. H. 1859) State v. Young, 39 N. H. 283;
(N. Y. 1813) People v. Bill, 10 Johns. 95; (1855) Same v. Donnelly, 1 Abb. Prac. 459;
(Tenn. 1830) State v. Mooney, 9 Tenn. (1 Yerg.) 431.

[c] One of two parties jointly indicted, who has not yet been acquitted or convicted, may be called as a witness for the government on the separate trial of the other.
—(La. 1883) State v. Hamilton, 35 La. Ann. 1043;
(Neb. 1876) Carroll v. State, 5 Neb. 31;
(N. J. 1868) State v. Brien, 32 N. J. Law (3 Vroom) 414.

[cc] Where separate trials are awarded to parties jointly indicted, one may be a competent witness against the other, although not first acquitted or convicted, and without an entry of nolle prosequi upon the indictment.
—(Ohio, 1869) Brown v. State, 18 Ohio St. 496.

[d] Whether the trial be joint or separate, one defendant in an indictment cannot, until finally discharged, be a witness on behalf of another.
—(N. C. 1842) State v. Smith, 24 N. C. 402;
(Or. 1854) Latshaw v. Territory, 1 Or. 140.

[e] (U. S. 1892) Under a joint indictment in a federal court, when a severance and separate trials have been ordered, one defendant, even though his case has not been disposed of, may testify on behalf of the government on the trial of his co-defendant.—Benson v. United States, 146 U. S. 325, 13 Sup. Ct. 60, 36 L. Ed. 991.

[f] (U. S. 1850) In joint indictments, one of defendants is not a competent witness for another, unless he has been acquitted.—United States v. Clements, Fed. Cas. No. 14,817 [3 Hughes, 509].

[g] (Ga. 1855) The testimony of an accomplice, who has been joined in the same indictment with the principal, is admissible in behalf of his co-defendant only when he has been acquitted, or where the defendants are tried severally.—Armistead v. State, 18 Ga. 704.

[h] (Kan. 1893) Where two persons are charged as principals in the commission of a felony, and, at their request, separate trials are had, before the conviction of either, one defendant is a competent witness for the other.—State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79, 34 Pac. 410.

[i] (Miss. 1859) It seems, if the parties are indicted, not for the joint commission of one offense, but for separate offenses, as engaging in gaming, that they are competent witnesses for each other, even before the witness has been tried.—Strawhern v. State, 37 Miss. 422.

[j] (N. Y. 1855) One of several persons jointly indicted cannot be a witness in the case against his co-defendants until acquitted or convicted, whether they pleaded jointly or separately.—People v. Donnelly, 1 Abb. Prac. 459, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 182.

[k] (N. Y. 1877) An accused was tried alone on an indictment on which he was jointly indicted with another. His co-defendant had not been arrested, nor had a nolle prosequi been entered as to him. On the trial such co-defendant was called as a witness for the prosecution, and accused objected because he was not competent, having been jointly indicted with him for the offense with which he was charged. Held, that the objection was properly overruled and his testimony admitted.—Taylor v. People, 12 Hun, 212.

[l] (N. C. 1830) Co-defendants in an indictment cannot be witnesses for each other, unless they have been first acquitted or convicted, and this although their trials are to be had in different counties.—State v. Mills, 13 N. C. 420.

[m] (Pa. 1878) Where several persons are jointly indicted and separate trials granted, one who has not yet been tried is not a competent witness for either of the others on trial.—Kehoe v. Commonwealth, 85 Pa. 127.

[n] (Tex. 1872) One of two persons jointly indicted for an offense is not a competent witness for the other, unless he has been previously tried and acquitted under the indictment.—Warfield v. State, 35 Tex. 736.

§ 247. Persons separately indicted.

[a] An accomplice when separately indicted is a competent witness for or against the others.
—(U. S. 1824) United States v. Henry, Fed. Cas. No. 15,351 [4 Wash. C. C. 428];
(Mo. 1893) State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 22 S. W. 378;

(1855) Same v. Donnelly, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 182;
(Va. 1826) Byrd v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 490.

[b] (U. S. 1851) A person who stands indicted of treason, along with the defendant in another indictment not now trying, is a competent witness for him in an indictment now trying, and in which such person is not included.—United States v. Hanway, Fed. Cas. No. 15,299 [2 Wall. Jr. 139].

[c] (Ark. 1867) One who had been jointly indicted for a felony, but discharged and separately indicted for the same offense, is a competent witness for his former co-defendant on his separate trial.—McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636.

[d] (Cal. 1886) Under the law the state is not prohibited from calling a party proceeded against in one information to testify against a defendant charged in another and different information; the former, when so called as a witness, however, retaining his right to object to answering a question put to him by reason of its tendency to criminate him.—Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 11 Pac. 459.

[e] (Mich. 1865) It is no objection to the competency of a witness in behalf of the government in a trial for larceny that he was jointly examined with the defendants before a justice, and committed to stand his trial for the same offense; the prosecuting officer having filed an information against him separately, omitting his name from the information filed against the defendants.—Annis v. People, 13 Mich. 511.

[f] (Ohio, 1850) Where one party is indicted for a crime, and another for aiding and abetting its commission, under section 36 of the act for the punishment of crimes, the former is a competent witness against the latter.—Noland v. State, 19 Ohio, 131.

[g] (Tenn. 1874) Where A. and B. have been found together in possession of a horse stolen from C., and of a horse stolen at the same time from D., the fact that A. is under indictment for stealing C.'s horse does not disqualify him from testifying for B. on B.'s trial for stealing D.'s horse.—Lucre v. State, 66 Tenn. (7 Baxt.) 148.

[h] (Tex. 1883) One indicted for the same murder for which defendant is on trial cannot testify in defendant's behalf.—Moore v. State, 15 Tex. App. 1.

[i] (Tex. 1885) Code Cr. Proc. art. 731, enacts that persons charged as principals, accomplices, or accessories, whether in the same or in different indictments, cannot be witnesses for one another. A. was indicted for a murder, and took the depositions of B. and C. Before the trial, B. and C. were indicted for the same murder. Held, that A. should not be deprived of their testimony.—Doughty v. State, 18 Tex. App. 179, 51 Am. Rep. 303.

[j] (Tex. 1887) Declarations of a person, afterwards indicted, exonerating defendant, are inadmissible, under Code Cr. Proc. art. 721, providing that persons charged as principals, accomplices, etc., cannot testify for each other.—Blain v. State, 24 Tex. App. 626, 7 S. W. 239.

[k] (Tex. 1888) A principal offender in the same crime with the defendant on trial, although indicted separately, is not a competent witness for his co-principal, unless he has been acquitted. Code Cr. Proc. art. 731.—Woods v. State, 26 Tex. App. 490, 10 S. W. 108.

[l] (Tex. 1889) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 731, providing that "persons charged as principals, accomplices, or accessories, whether in the same indictments or different indictments, cannot be introduced as witnesses for one another," one who is under indictment for the theft of a cow is not a competent witness for defendant on trial of another indictment for theft of the same cow.—Barnes v. State, 28 Tex. App. 29, 11 S. W. 679.

[m] (Tex. 1890) Defendant and his wife were charged by separate informations, under Pen. Code, art. 495a, with using violent, abusive language of and concerning J. The language charged in the two informations was different, and there was nothing identifying the transactions as the same, except the date of the offenses, and the name of the injured person. Held that, though charged with the same statutory offense, they were not charged with the same transaction, and it was therefore error to reject defendant's wife as an incompetent witness in his behalf.—Secker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 479, 13 S. W. 774.

[n] (Tex. 1893) In a prosecution for betting at dice, it is error for the court to reject a witness by whom defendant proposes to prove that he did not play or bet at the game, on a statement by the county attorney that the witness was indicted for playing in the same game and at the same time with defendant, without proof of this fact.—Traylor v. State (Cr. App.) 23 S. W. 798.

[o] (Tex. 1894) On a prosecution for adultery, the testimony of the woman with whom defendant was alleged to have committed the crime was rejected because she had also been indicted. Held not error, as the desire of defendant to use her evidence constituted no impediment to her indictment.—Parker v. State (Cr. App.) 24 S. W. 901.

[a] (U. S. 1807) If persons jointly concerned in an assault and battery be separately indicted, but all tried together, one may be a witness for the others.—United States v. Hunter, Fed. Cas. No. 15,425 [1 Cranch, C. C. 446]; Same v. Davidson, Id.

[b] (Miss. 1818) Where two defendants are tried together on separate indictments for the same assault and battery, one of the defendants is not a good witness for the other upon the trial, unless no proof of guilt is offered against the defendant proposed as a witness.—State v. Blennerhassett, 1 Miss. (Walk.) 7.

Interest of party in general, see ante, § 221.
Testimony admissible notwithstanding interest in general, see ante, §§ 211–213.

[a] A witness interested in the event of a suit cannot be permitted to testify.
—(Tenn. 1816) Netherton v. Robertson, 4 Tenn. (3 Hayw.) 29;
(Tex. 1878) Osborn's Adm'x v. Cummings, 4 Tex. 10.

[b] A witness who has a direct and positive interest in the event of a suit is incompetent.
—(U. S. 1829) Reece v. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 11,633a [Hemp. 82];
(Ky. 1845) Athey v. McHenry, 45 Ky. (6 B. Mon.) 50.

[c] (N. C. 1801) Where a witness is offered, the adverse party may by other witnesses prove him interested, and he must then be rejected as incompetent.—Smallwood v. Mitchell, 3 N. C. 145.

[d] (Pa. 1790) If a person acknowledges an expectation that he shall gain or lose by the fate of the cause, he ought not to be admitted as a witness.—Innis v. Miller, 2 Dall. 50, 1 L. Ed. 284.

[e] (Tenn. 1870) Prior to Acts 1861–68, c. 75, allowing persons interested in causes to be witnesses, such persons were not competent.—Day v. McGinnis, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 310.

§ 250. Nature and extent of interest in general.

[a] The fact of interest, and not the amount of it, decides the question of competency.
—(Ky. 1827) Hunter v. Gatewood, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 268;
(La. 1866) Succession of Weigel, 18 La. Ann. 49;
(Tex. 1849) Osborn's Adm'x v. Cummings, 4 Tex. 10.

[b] A witness cannot be rejected in consequence of having been provoked to bet upon the event of the trial; such a wager being void.
—(U. S. 1837) United States v. Carrico, Fed. Cas. No. 14,734 [5 Cranch, C. C. 112]; (Wis. 1856) Kellogg v. Nelson, 5 Wis. 125.

[c] (U. S. 1816) The deposition of a witness, on the part of plaintiff, who had given certificates upon which a recovery was expected to be obtained, and who expected a commission of one per cent., on the amount to be recovered from defendant, but which certificates were not evidence in the cause, is admissible.—Willings v. Consequa, Fed. Cas. No. 17,767 [Pet. C. C. 301].

[d] (U. S. 1832) That a witness has a strong bias in favor of a party will not exclude him; such an objection not going to his competency but to his credibility.—Burroughs v. United States, Fed. Cas. No. 2,202 [2 Paine, 569].

[e] (Conn. 1807) Defendant in ejectment claimed title under B., to whom he had given his note for the purchase money. B. had indorsed said note to C., who, after the suit was commenced, applied to defendant for payment, which was made on condition that C. should refund the money if judgment in said suit should be against defendant, and should resort to B., who was a responsible man. Held, that

C. under such circumstances was rendered incompetent, by interest, to testify for defendant in said action.—Owen v. Mann, 2 Day, 399.

[f] (Conn. 1840) Where a person offered as a witness has a claim against plaintiff, but his right to recover does not depend on the issue of the suit then pending, he is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12.

[g] (Ind. 1845) Defendant cannot introduce a witness to prove facts which, if true, would show that the witness, and not plaintiff, was entitled to the subject-matter of the suit.—Jacobs v. Finkel, 7 Blackf. 432.

[h] (La.) The interest which repels a witness must be a pecuniary one, affecting in some manner his property; it does not suffice that it affects his feelings, affections, or wishes.—(1825) Durnford v. Ayme, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 270; (1842) Debuys v. Connolly, 2 Rob. 338.

[i] (La. 1826) A witness is competent for plaintiff suing for money paid on a horse race, because fraudulent, though they bet on the same side.—Criswell v. Gaster, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 129.

[j] (Me. 1829) Where plaintiff had declared that he was indebted to one offered as a witness, to whom the money sued for, when recovered, was by agreement to be paid over, it was held that this agreement was no assignment of the debt, and therefore did not go to the competency of the witness, but only to his credibility.—Seaver v. Bradley, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 60.

[k] (Miss. 1854) If a witness can be in any event a gainer by the success of a suit, or a loser by the defeat of it, in that suit he is incompetent to testify for the party through whom such interest is involved.—Dunbar v. Chevalier, 28 Miss. (6 Cushm.) 161.

[l] (Mo. 1866) A witness testified to a parol agreement with plaintiff to the effect that if plaintiff recovered in that suit he was to hold the property in question for the benefit of witness on payment of a certain sum. Held, that the agreement did not render the witness a party in interest, as it was void under the statute of frauds.—Miltenberger v. Morrison, 39 Mo. 71.

[m] (N. J. 1835) A person signing a notice and application for a road is not incompetent on the ground of interest to prove the putting up of the notices.—In re Highway, 15 N. J. Law (3 J. S. Green) 39.

[n] (N. J. 1845) If the witness will gain or lose by the event of the suit, or if the record will be evidence for or against him in another action, he should be excluded.—Woodruff v. Daggett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 526.

[o] (N. C. 1856) The interest which will disqualify a witness is any interest that can be asserted in a court of justice, whether a common-law court or a court of equity.—Blum v. Stafford, 49 N. C. 94.

[p] (Pa. 1825) It is no objection to a witness that his testimony will tend to clear him of a fraud charged on him by another witness.—Babb v. Clemson, 12 Serg. & R. 328.

[q] (S. C. 1845) An expectation of advantage, growing out of a corrupt and illegal agreement, though it may affect the credibility of the witness, does not destroy his competency.—City Council of Charleston v. Weikman, 1 Rich. Law, 240.

[r] (S. C. 1852) A witness who is promised by plaintiff a sum of money if he will attend as a witness and plaintiff should gain his case is incompetent to testify for plaintiff.—Holland v. Ingram, 6 Rich. Law, 50.

[s] (Tex. 1859) The ill feeling of a witness, caused by facts which had been properly proved as part of the res gestæ, is no reason for excluding the witness nor his statement as above of the cause of his ill feeling.—Cockrum v. State, 24 Tex. 394.

§ 251. Belief as to interest and honorary or moral obligation.

[a] The fact that a witness merely believes himself to be interested in the event of an action will not render him incompetent.

—(Ala. 1848) Gayle v. Bishop, 14 Ala. 552;
(Cal. 1861) McCabe v. Haud, 18 Cal. 496;
(Md. 1799) Peter v. Beall, 4 Har. & McH. 342; (1862) Washington & B. Turnpike Road v. State, 19 Md. 239;
(N. Y. 1837) Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94; (1837) Stall v. Catskill Bank, 18 Wend. 466;
(N. C. 1847) State v. Poteet, 29 N. C. 356;

(Va. 1811) Richardson's Ex'r v. Hunt, 2 Munf. 148.

[b] An honorary or moral obligation merely will not render a witness incompetent.

—(Ill. 1847) Frink v. McClung, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 569;
(Miss. 1822) Phebe v. Prince, Walk. 131;
(N. Y. 1812) Gilpin v. Vincent, 9 Johns. 219; (1837) Commercial Bank v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94;

(Tenn. 1853) Hill v. Miller, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 659.

[c] If a witness states, on the voir dire, that he considers himself bound in honor, though not legally, to pay the judgment if it shall go against the party calling him, he is a competent witness.

—(U. S. 1834) Washington v. Fowler, Fed. Cas. No. 17,229 [4 Cranch, C. C. 458];
(Ark. 1842) Crary v. Carradine, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 225;
(Conn. 1827) Smith v. Downs, 6 Conn. 365.

[d] (Conn. 1814) A witness, interested in the event of a suit on the ground of his being liable over to defendant, having been released by defendant, was asked if he did not expect to pay the judgment and all expenses providing a recovery should be had against defendant, to which he replied that he certainly did. Held, that the witness was incompetent to testify for defendant.—Skillenger v. Bolt, 1 Conn. 147.

[e] (Ga. 1858) A witness, declaring himself to be interested, but appearing, on disclosing the nature of his interest, to have been mistaken, is competent.—Stallings v. Carson, 24 Ga. 423.

[f] (La. 1855) Where the judgment creditor sued the sheriff for misfeasance in counseling the debtor to remove his property, and the debtor called to testify on behalf of the sheriff stated on his voir dire that he felt that he had an interest in the suit and that if the sheriff was compelled to pay he should feel in honor bound to help him, he was incompetent to testify.—Davis v. Barham, 10 La. Ann. 528.

[g] (N. H. 1850) The person who causes a suit to be brought for his own benefit is the party in interest, though not nominally a party; and though he may not have the interest which he supposes he has in the subject of the suit, he is not a competent witness.—Johnson v. Kendall, 20 N. H. 304.

[h] (N. C. 1805) If the verdict in the suit cannot be given in evidence against the witness, he is competent, though he may believe himself interested when in reality he is not.—Harrison v. Harrison, 3 N. C. 355.

[i] (Tenn. 1853) It cannot be left to the opinion or judgment of the witness to decide whether or not he is competent.—Hill v. Miller, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 659.

[j] (Vt. 1803) If a witness believes himself interested when he is not, he may be permitted to testify on being informed by the court that he has no interest, and the jury may allow for any possible bias in weighing his credibility.—State v. Clark, 2 Tyler, 277.

§ 252. Directness, certainty, and legality of interest in general.

[a] A witness should not be excluded merely on the ground that he had an interest in the subject-matter of the action, unless he has an interest in the event of the particular case.

—(Ala. 1834) McGee v. Estis, 5 Stew. & P. 426; (1835) Kennon v. McRea, 2 Port. 389; (1841) Williams v. Jones, 2 Ala. 314;

(Wis. 1845) Runey v. Thompson, 1 Pin. 506.

[b] The interest of a witness in the event of a suit must be direct, certain, and legal; otherwise the objection should go to his credibility, and not to his competency.

(Tenn. 1853) Hill v. Miller, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 659;

(Tex. 1849) Osborn's Adm'x v. Cummings, 4 Tex. 10.

[c] The interest which will disqualify a witness from testifying must be some legal, certain, and immediate interest in the result of the suit itself, or in the record thereof as an instrument of evidence to support his own claims, or to protect him from an admitted liability.

—(Ala. 1852) Poe v. Dorrah, 20 Ala. 288, 56 Am. Dec. 196;

(La. 1826) Marburg v. Canfield, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 539; (1836) Russell v. Sprigg, 10 La. 421; (1838) Wallace v. Beauchamp, 12 La. 289; (1842) Debuys v. Connolly, 2 Rob. 338;

(S. C. 1846) Smith v. Asbill, 2 Rich. Law, 546;

(Tenn. 1853) Hill v. Miller, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 659.

[d] Interest, to disqualify a witness, must be a present, certain, and vested interest. If the interest be of a doubtful nature, the objection goes to his credit, and not to his competency.

—(Ga. 1847) Howard v. Brown, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 523; (1853) Jordan v. Pollock, 14 Ga. 145;

(Md. 1859) Andre v. Bodman, 13 Md. 241, 71 Am. Dec. 628;

(N. Y. 1847) Duel v. Fisher, 4 Denio, 515.

[e] The true test of the interest of a witness is that he will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment, or that the record will be evidence for or against him in some other action.

—(Ala. 1846) Stewart v. Conner, 9 Ala. 803; (1850) Wright v. Lewis, 18 Ala. 194;

(Ga. 1852) Harvey v. Anderson, 12 Ga. 69;

(N. J. 1853) Bogert v. Chrystie, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 57;

(Tex. 1866) Tuttle v. Turner, 28 Tex. 759.

[f] The disqualifying interest is a prospect of some advantage immediately resulting from the judgment in the cause in which the witness is called.

—(Ga. 1847) Adams v. Barrett, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 277; (1847) Howard v. Brown, Id. 523;

(La. 1832) Coquet v. His Creditors, 4 La. 198; (1841) Moffatt v. Murray, 18 La. 357.

[g] (Ark. 1853) A mere expectation of the payment of a debt out of the proceeds of the judgment, however strong, if not amounting to a legal right, is insufficient to render a witness incompetent.—Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 437.

[h] (Cal. 1860) The mere expectation of deriving an advantage to which he is not legally entitled will not disqualify a witness.—Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 213.

[i] (Conn. 1786) A person is not rendered incompetent as a witness by the fact that the party calling him has promised to pay him a debt he owes him out of what he may recover in the suit.—Benedict v. Brownson, Kirby, 70.

[j] (Fla. 1850) Where it was for the interest of a witness to establish a certain parol agreement in regard to a slave, which could not have given him title, and no direct interest was shown in the event of the suit, but only a strong bias, he was not thereby incompetent.—Summerall v. Thoms, 3 Fla. 298.

[k] (La. 1859) A witness is properly excluded on account of interest, where he has a hope of gain, although it be uncertain whether any advantage can arise to him, even if the decision be favorable.—Gilkinson v. The Scotland, 14 La. Ann. 417.

[l] (La. 1862) A witness must not be interested, either directly or indirectly, in the cause.—Kennedy v. Bossiere, 16 La. Ann. 445.

[m] (Me. 1841) The interest of a witness to render him incompetent must be legal and certain in the event of the suit or in the record. The fact that he expects benefit from a result in favor of the party calling him, if he has no legal claim, goes only to his credibility.—Marwick v. Georgia Lumber Co., 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 49.

[n] (Md. 1771) In an action the fifth son of defendant, though he stated that if his father lost the cause he must be a loser, otherwise not, was competent as a witness.—Belt's Lessee v. Miller, 4 Har. & McH. 536.

[o] (Md. 1854) A possible interest will not disqualify a witness, nor will a mere probability of benefit, where there is no legal right or interest in the fund in controversy.—Melvin v. Melvin, 6 Md. 541.

[p] (Mass. 1850) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that if the party prevails by whom he is called, a debtor of the witness will be better able to pay his debts.—Luke v. Leland, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 259.

[q] (Miss. 1850) A person interested for both parties, but on one side directly and certainly, and on the other indirectly and contingently, is incompetent as a witness for the party in whom he is directly interested.—Pool v. Myers, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 466.

[r] (N. J. 1840) There must be a legal right or liability depending on the result of a suit to render a witness incompetent; and a declaration by a witness that he shall pay a sum depending in a suit rather than that the party should lose it will not render him incompetent.—Neville v. Demeritt, 2 N. J. Eq. (1 H. W. Green.) 321.

[s] (N. Y. 1830) Where a witness had the promise of an order for the amount in controversy when recovered, such promise did not render him incompetent to testify in the action.—Ten Eyck v. Bill, 5 Wend. 55.

[t] (N. C. 1847) Interest, to exclude a witness, must be a legal and beneficial one in the subject-matter for the recovery of which the suit is brought.—Bishop v. Poteet, 29 N. C. 356.

[u] (Ohio, 1817) To exclude a witness on the ground of interest, it must appear that he is directly interested in the event of the suit; standing in a similar situation with the party by whom he is called, and the possibility that a judgment may influence the minds of a jury in an action against him, goes to his credibility, and does not affect his competency.—Devinny v. Ankrim, Tapp. 111.

[v] (Pa. 1786) A person may be admitted as a witness whose interest is so very remote that it is presumed it will not prejudice his mind.—Galbraith's Lessee v. Scott, 2 Dall. 95, 1 L. Ed. 304.

[w] (Pa. 1814) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that he himself holds lands under the same title as the defendant holds those which are the subject of the suit. Provided he has no interest in the very lands which are the subject of the trial, he has no direct interest in the event of the suit, and is therefore competent. The objection is to his credibility alone.—Moody's Lessee v. Fulmer, 3 Grant, Cas. 17.

[x] (S. C. 1823) If a witness is to derive any advantage, even consequential, from the event of the suit, he is incompetent.—McCall v. Smith, 2 McCord, 375.

[y] (Tex. 1853) In order to render a witness incompetent on the ground of interest, his interest must be shown to be direct, and not remote or contingent. Hence the rule that, if the interest is not so clearly established as to justify the exclusion of the evidence, it should be admitted, and the doubt left to influence the credibility of the witness, with the jury.—Wentworth v. Crawford, 11 Tex. 127.

[a] In an action for false representations respecting the credit of another, the party to whom the credit is given on the false representations is a competent witness for plaintiff or defendant.

—(Conn. 1802) Wise v. Wilcox, 1 Day, 22;
(Ga. 1848) Young v. Hall, 4 Ga. 95;
(Pa. 1847) Boyd's Ex'rs v. Browne, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 310; (1850) Lee v. Pilgrim, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 16.

[b] (U. S. 1867) There is no objection to one party in a collision cause calling as witnesses persons who were on board the vessel of the other party.—The Monticello, Fed. Cas. No. 9,739 [1 Low. 184], affirmed in (1870) Dolner v. The Monticello, Fed. Cas. No. 3,971 [1 Holmes, 7].

[c] (Conn. 1789) In an action for money had and received of a third person, such third person is a witness to prove the delivery.—Hyde v. Park, 1 Root, 55.

[d] (Conn. 1791) In an action for slander in charging plaintiff with perjury in testifying that a certain person had committed larceny, such person cannot testify because of his interest.—Merriman v. Way, 1 Root, 283.

[e] (Conn. 1791) In an action against defendant for stating that plaintiff had falsely sworn in a prosecution of H. for theft, by testifying that H. was the thief, H. was not a competent witness for defendant to prove the truth of the words, as a person interested is not a competent witness.—Merriman v. Way, 1 Root, 283.

[f] (Conn. 1792) In an action for entering plaintiff's house and debauching his daughter, the daughter is a competent witness.—Mott v. Goddard, 1 Root, 472.

[g] (Ky. 1830) A party whose debts complainant has paid is an incompetent witness for complainant to prove a mistake in such payment.—Wickliffe v. Mosely, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 172.

[h] (Ky. 1844) One who sends bank notes to another is competent to prove delivery to him in an action against a third person for an unlawful detention of them.—Bonham v. Laird, 43 Ky. (4 B. Mon.) 403.

[i] (Me. 1849) In an action against defendant for bringing a suit against plaintiff, in the name of a third person, without any authority, that third person is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Foster v. Dow, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 442.

[j] (Mass. 1815) In an action for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to enter into a partnership with defendant's insolvent debtor, and procuring an assumption of the debt by the firm, and seizing plaintiff's property to satisfy the debt, the insolvent is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bean v. Bean, 12 Mass. 20.

[k] (Mass. 1846) In a writ of entry to foreclose a mortgage conditioned to perform an obligation, entered into by the mortgagor, to pay all the mortgagee's debts, one alleged breach of the condition was that the obligor had omitted to pay a sum due from the mortgagee, by way of contribution to his co-contractors, in an agreement made by him and them with a third party before the mortgage was given. Held, that these co-contractors were competent witnesses for the mortgagee to prove their claims on him for contribution.—Stewart v. Clark, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 384.

[l] (Miss. 1849) In an action by A. against B. for money had and received, C. is not a competent witness to prove that he, C., had money in his hands belonging to A., which he handed to B., to be paid to A., without a release.—Jackson v. Crawford, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 545.

[m] (N. J. 1827) Upon a certiorari to remove the proceedings in a matter of road, a person, whose land is not touched by the road, and who does not bear any part of the expense of defending said road on the certiorari, is a competent witness, though he was one of the parties who petitioned for the laying out of the road, and although he may have borne a part of the expense of laying it out.—State v. Woodward, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 21.

[n] (N. Y. 1827) In an action against the owners of a mill below for flowing backwater so as to injure plaintiff's mill, the miller who received half the tolls for attending the mill is a competent witness.—Stiles v. Hooker, 7 Cow. 266.

[o] (N. Y. 1839) Ex parte affidavits of abutting owners of property on a street proposed to be enlarged and altered on the question of damages are incompetent in a proceeding to assess such damages, as being testimony of persons interested.—In re John & Cherry Sts., 19 Wend. 659.

[p] (Pa. 1841) Where a witness is interested in the event of a suit on a note, expecting to receive part of the consideration, he is still admissible as a witness for the defendant, who is sued as the maker of the note.—Quinlan v. Davis, 6 Whart. 169.

[q] (Pa. 1845) The alleged wife is a competent witness to prove the contract of marriage, in a proceeding by the guardians of the poor, to compel the alleged husband to contribute to her support. She has no interest; for, in either event of the action, she must receive her support from the guardians. And her testimony does not change their obligation.—Guardians of the Poor v. Nathans, 2 Brewst. 149.

[r] (Pa. 1845) In an action of ejectment, to avoid the sale of land sold by an administrator under an order of the orphans' court, brought by all the heirs of the decedent (with the exception of the administrator, who was also an heir), against the purchaser, on the allegation that the administrator was a partner of the purchaser in the sale, the administrator is a competent witness to prove such fact; and whether the purchase money has been paid over or still remains in his hands is but a contingent advantage, which may affect his credibility, but not his competency.—Kifer v. Brenneman, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 452.

[s] (Pa. 1846) In an action by A. against B., C. is an incompetent witness to prove that he had furnished goods to A. under a special agreement that B., who was a debtor of A. and a creditor of C., was to pay for them, for the purpose of using this debt as a set-off by B.—Armstrong v. Graham, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 142.

[t] (Pa. 1849) In an action against A. for the debt of B., B. is a competent witness for plaintiff, if willing to testify, to prove a promise by A. to pay the debt in consideration of forbearance to sue; but he is not a competent witness to prove a promise by A. to pay the debt, in consideration of B.'s assignment and transfer of property to A. for that purpose.—Hayes v. Gudykunst, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 221.

[u] (Pa. 1853) In a controversy as to which of two boards were the legal trustees of an incorporated religious society, a witness who was not a trustee stated on his voir dire that he had only a general interest in the event of the suit; that he had promised to contribute to pay counsel and the expenses of the suit, but that he had already paid what he had promised to pay. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Juker v. Commonwealth, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 484.

[v] (Pa. 1865) A widow sued the estate of her second husband to recover payments of interest made to him, arising from the dower which she had derived from her first husband, and which had been valued, and the interest made a charge on certain land. Held, that the owner of the land was a competent witness to prove the circumstances attending such payments.—Appeal of Mann, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 375.

[w] (Tex. 1857) Where the terms of a sale from A. to B. are that B. shall pay the purchase money to C. in discharge of a debt due him from A., C. is a competent witness to prove the sale, and the payment of the purchase money to himself.—Roberts v. Heffner, 19 Tex. 129.

[x] (Vt. 1836) In an action on the case against defendant for conspiring with A. to procure for him a fraudulent credit, and thereby obtaining property for the benefit of both, held, that A. is a competent witness for plaintiff; and this, although he have incurred a liability in contract, at plaintiff's election, for the value of the property.—Brown v. Marsh, 8 Vt. 310.

[y] (Va. 1800) In debt by the assignee of a bond, defendant offered a witness, who testified that he had paid the amount of the bond to an agent of the assignors, and received a receipt in full of the debt. Held, that such witness was not interested, and could testify.—Meade v. Tate, 2 Call, 231.

[z] (Va. 1856) A deposition which had been taken to be used in a case of caveat, between the ancestor of the caveators and the same caveatees, and which related to the location of an old survey, the deponent having an interest in the question, but not in the event of the suit, is competent evidence in this case.—Clements v. Kyles, 13 Grat. 468.

§ 254. Persons having similar claims.

[a] (Cal. 1894) The fact that plaintiff's witness also has a case of the same kind pending does not disqualify him from testifying.—Warren v. McGill, 103 Cal. 153, 37 Pac. 144.

[b] (Conn.) Persons having similar claims against defendant depending on the same state of facts cannot testify because of interest.—(1791) Pride v. Peters, 1 Root, 331; (1792) Talmadge v. Northrop, Id. 454.

[c] (Ky. 1883) A witness not interested in the particular suit on trial is not rendered incompetent by having an interest like that of the party by whom he is offered.—Woodard v. Spiller, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 179, 25 Am. Dec. 139.

[d] (Ky. 1838) In a contest as to whether certain slaves were the property of a party as having been given to him by decedent or were assets in his hands as administrator of the estate, being insolvent, a witness was not incompetent to testify as to a similar covenant by the decedent to the witness, it not appearing that the covenant was made after the estate became insolvent.—Stephens' Adm'r v. Barnett, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 257.

[e] (Ky. 1850) Complainant in the bill for the second of two chancery attachments is a competent witness for complainant in the first.—Beall v. Barclay, 49 Ky. (10 B. Mon.) 261.

[f] (Ky. 1850) Where one of two covenantees, of the same part in a covenant, is entitled to a separate action on the covenant, the other covenantee is a competent witness for him.—Ford v. Bronaugh, 50 Ky. (11 B. Mon.) 14.

[g] (Ky. 1867) A witness not a party to the suit is not disqualified by interest because he has a similar cause of action against the same parties.—Jennings v. Crider, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 322, 92 Am. Dec. 487.

[h] (La.) Where a witness holds under the same title as the party offering him, and with the latter's opponent has raised the same issues in another suit yet pending, he is still competent.—(1823) Broussard v. Duhamel, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 11; (1841) Moffatt v. Murray, 18 La. 357; (1843) Brooks v. Norris, 6 Rob. 175; (1845) Prevost v. Ellis, 11 Rob. 56.

[i] (Me. 1847) On the trial of a special action on the case against defendant, for a conspiracy between him and a deputy sheriff to defraud plaintiff by means of making a false return on a writ in defendant's favor, one who was injured equally with plaintiff by the fraud, if it existed, but who is not a party to the suit, is a competent witness.—Handly v. Call, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 35.

[j] (N. H. 1843) Defendants covenanted with several lessors jointly that they would pay each of them severally a specified part of the rent reserved. In an action by one of the lessors to recover his part of the rent, it was held that another of the lessors was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Gray v. Johnson, 14 N. H. 414.

[k] (Ohio, 1848) A witness offered by plaintiff claimed to have been injured in the same manner as plaintiff, and defendant had informed him that if plaintiff's suit was successful defendant would pay the witness without suit. Held, that the witness was competent.—Rogers v. Turner, 1 Ohio Dec. 246.

[l] (Vt. 1853) That a witness has a suit pending for a similar claim is no legal objection to his competency.—Mathews v. Felch, 25 Vt. 536.

§ 255. Liabilities in general.

[a] If a witness is liable to a third party who is liable to the party summoning the witness, such circuity of interest is no ground of exclusion.

—(Ga. 1848) Matthews v. Poythress, 4 Ga. 287.

(Ky. 1867) Carbon v. Stout, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 246.

[b] (U. S. 1816) The interest of a witness in the event of a suit is too remote to exclude his testimony, if, in case plaintiff should fail to recover sufficient damages to extinguish a claim defendant has on him, and should be unable to satisfy such claim out of his own funds, the witness might be liable for the debt.—Willings v. Consequa, Fed. Cas. No. 17,767 [Pet. C. C. 301].

[c] (U. S. 1874) In a suit in the court of claims against the United States, where a witness produced for plaintiff is so connected with the transaction in question that a verdict for plaintiff would entirely relieve him from all liability, he will be held incompetent as being directly "interested in the claim," within the meaning of the act of June 25, 1868.—Wood v. United States, 10 Ct. Cl. 395.

[d] (Ala. 1847) Where the testimony of a witness will have the effect to satisfy a judgment recovered against him by plaintiff and defendant jointly, by making both of them liable for the payment of an account which he has against plaintiff individually, he is an interested witness, and his testimony should be excluded if objected to.—Taylor v. Paullin, 11 Ala. 512.

[e] (Ala. 1857) A minor, to whom goods were furnished on the promise of defendant to pay for them, is a competent witness for the creditor to prove the amount and value of the goods, and the character of the promise of defendant.—Sanford v. Howard, 29 Ala. 684, 68 Am. Dec. 101.

[f] (Ark. 1853) Where a witness for plaintiff is so connected with the transaction about which he is called to testify that a verdict for plaintiff would entirely relieve him from all liability, he will be incompetent, as being directly interested in the event of the suit; otherwise he is competent.—Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 437.

[g] (Ark. 1853) Defendants being indebted to plaintiff for the purchase price of land, a third party agreed that defendants should pay a portion of the debt and receive a part of the land therefor, and he gave defendants a horse to give to plaintiff, the value of which was to be applied by plaintiff in part satisfaction of the debt. In an action by plaintiff against defendants for deceit in the sale of the horse, it appeared that the third person was liable to defendants for the costs of the suit and the damages that might be recovered against them, and that they had not conveyed to him his part of the land, and did not intend to do so, unless he paid the judgment, if any was recovered against them. Held, that he was not competent as a witness in defendants' behalf.—Turner v. Huggins, 14 Ark. 21.

[h] (Cal. 1862) When the witness in a suit would be relieved from a liability to plaintiffs, in case they should get judgment against defendants, provided the judgment be satisfied, he has no such interest in the event of the action as will render him incompetent to testify.—Lockwood v. Canfield, 20 Cal. 126.

[i] (Conn. 1846) To exclude a witness on the ground that his testimony, if admitted, will tend to protect him from claims against him, it must first be shown that there is at least a prima facie case of liability against him, and that he is exposed to certain danger from such claims.—Carrington v. Holabird, 17 Conn. 530.

[j] (Ill. 1864) A witness who in the event of a judgment being rendered against defendant would be liable to her for nearly the amount of the judgment is incompetent as a witness for defendant on the ground of interest.—Mason v. Jones, 36 Ill. 212.

[k] (Ind. 1847) The mere fact that a witness was interested in having land sold under an execution for an amount sufficient to satisfy a judgment, for which he himself was liable, is not sufficient to render his testimony incompetent, because of interest, on the issue whether the sale made by the sheriff was fraudulent.—Martin v. Brown, 8 Blackf. 443.

[l] (Me. 1842) Where the verdict will necessarily charge one or will discharge him from a fixed liability, he is interested in the event of the suit, and incompetent to testify; but a contingent interest, a mere possibility of being charged, goes only to the credibility.—Blake v. Irish, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 450.

[m] (Md. 1799) In an action on a note, A., a witness produced by plaintiff, was objected to by defendant on the ground of interest. To prove the nature of the interest, defendant introduced a witness who testified that plaintiff informed her that A. was answerable to him for his claim which he had against the payees of said note in case he did not succeed in this suit against them, and that the goods furnished by plaintiff to the payees, for which his claim arose, were so furnished to them on the credit of A., who put the note into his hands. Held, that A. could not be examined as a witness.—Hoffman v. Boisneuf, 4 Har. & McH. 352.

[n] (Md. 1859) That a witness is liable for the debts of an insolvent plaintiff is not a sufficient interest in the event of the suit to exclude him.—Brooke v. Quynn, 13 Md. 379.

[o] (Mass. 1808) If the testimony of a witness produced by plaintiff would discharge the witness from plaintiff's demand, by establishing it against defendant, his testimony will not be received.—Emerton v. Andrews, 4 Mass. 653.

[p] (Mass. 1824) In an action against the sheriff for the escape of a person arrested for debt, the debtor is not a competent witness to show his inability to pay the debt.—Griffin v. Brown, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 304.

[q] (N. J. 1830) Where a witness is liable in respect to the subject-matter of the suit, but the result of the suit cannot affect his liability otherwise than to make him liable to a different person, he is not therefore incompetent.—Wilson v. Hillyer, 1 N. J. Eq. (Saxt.) 63.

[r] (N. J. 1831) A person who is so situated, in relation to the property in controversy, as to be liable to refund the money received by him from plaintiff for the property sold, in case of the failure of plaintiff to recover, is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Lowrey v. Summers, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 240.

[s] (N. Y. 1836) If the decision of the cause, in which the witness is called, in one way would relieve such witness from further liability, and the contrary decision would leave him exposed to a suit, he is incompetent as a witness.—Woods v. Skinner, 6 Paige, 76.

[t] (N. Y. 1876) The rule that an interested witness is incompetent applies to the case of a witness for plaintiff, who, in case a judgment should be obtained in plaintiff's favor, would be relieved from liability to plaintiff for the conversion of the subject-matter of the action.—Andrews v. Nat. Bank of North America, 7 Hun, 20.

[u] (Pa. 1858) A person liable to a third person, who is liable over to defendant, in case of a recovery against him, is not an incompetent witness.—Commonwealth v. Allen, 30 Pa. (6 Casey) 49.

[v] (S. C. 1812) A mere doubt that a witness would be liable in equity, when not liable at law, is not sufficient to exclude him as incompetent.—Sims v. Sims, 3 Brev. 252.

[w] (S. C. 1837) The mere fact that a recovery by plaintiff will preclude a demand against a witness will not disqualify such witness from testifying in favor of plaintiff.—Heyward v. Glover, Riley, Eq. 53.

[x] (Tex. 1854) In an action on a note, defendant alleged that it was given to release a debtor from custody, on promise of the creditor that he would furnish evidence of indebtedness, and assign the same to defendant, and that the debtor was not indebted to the amount of the note. Held, that the debtor was not a competent witness, being interested; the original debt being barred by limitation.—Gillespie's Adm'r v. Redmond, 13 Tex. 9.

[y] (Vt. 1831) Where a creditor dissolved his attachment on another creditor's agreeing not to sue the debtor within a certain time, which he afterwards did, in an action against him by the first creditor for breach of the agreement, held, that the debtor was a competent witness, and that his liability to plaintiff creditor, being on a contract of indemnity, made no difference.—Boardman v. Wood, 3 Vt. 570.

[z] (Vt. 1837) In an action on a promise to pay the debt of a third person, in which plaintiff's right to recover rested on his ability to prove that the promise discharged the original debtor, he was not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Anderson v. Davis, 9 Vt. 136, 31 Am. Dec. 612.

§ 256. Liability to future action.

[a] (U. S. 1832) There ought to be a legal fixed interest in order to disqualify a witness. The bare possibility of an action being brought against him is no objection to his competency. There must be an actual existing interest at the time; not merely one that is expectant or contingent.—Burroughs v. United States, Fed. Cas. No. 2,202 [2 Paine, 569].

[b] (U. S. 1840) An officer of the customs who has assisted in the seizure of goods for violation of the revenue laws is a competent witness on a suit for the forfeiture of such goods; the contingency that an action of trespass will be brought against him, by the claimants, being too remote to constitute a valid objection to his testimony.—United States v. Twenty-Five Cases of Cloths, Fed. Cas. No. 16,563 [Crabbe, 356].

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where a stakeholder pays over the money to the supposed winner, after notice to him by the loser not to do so, the person so receiving it is a competent witness for the loser, in an action by him against the stakeholder to recover it, since a verdict against defendant would not give him a cause of action against the witness.—Ivey v. Phifer, 13 Ala. 821.

[cc] (Conn. 1810) A witness is not competent to prove a fact, the effect of which is to protect himself from a suit by subjecting the defendant.—Sheldon v. Ackley, 4 Day, 458.

[d] (Ga. 1849) A witness who is liable to an action by the party for whom he is called, in case that party should not recover, is incompetent to testify without a release.—Ray v. The Justices of Inferior Court, 6 Ga. 303.

[dd] (Mass. 1835) Where a loan was made by the cashier of a bank, and memorandum checks were received as security, he was a competent witness for the bank in an action against the drawer of such checks, although the transaction did not conform to banking principles and he might be sued on his bond.—Franklin Bank v. Freeman, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 535.

[e] (Mass. 1863) In an action against a sheriff for releasing one whom he had taken by attachment, the person who promised to be answerable for the debtor's appearance is a competent witness to prove that the debtor was released with plaintiff's consent, as if such promise were made the sheriff could maintain no action on it.—Barnes v. Greenleaf, Quincy, 41.

[f] (N. J. 1795) The liability of a witness to a future action is no objection to his competency.—State v. McDonald, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 332.

[g] (N. C. 1805) A witness whose testimony may prevent a suit against himself is not competent.—Hunter v. McAuslan, 3 N. C. 366.

[h] (Pa. 1826) In ejectment for a tract overflowed by a milldam, the owner of the mill situate on another tract is a competent witness, though it is alleged that defendant will sue such owner for a nuisance if he succeeds in his case.—Maus' Lessee v. Montgomery, 15 Serg. & R. 221.

[i] (Pa. 1862) Unless a witness has a direct, certain, and immediate interest in the result of a suit, he is competent, and a mere possibility of being sued by plaintiff in respect to the cause of action for which he sues will not disqualify him.—Scull v. Mason, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 99.

§ 257. Parties against whom suit is pending.

[a] (U. S. 1818) In an action for the infringement of a patent, a witness, who is made a defendant in another suit pending in court for the infringement of the same patent, and who agrees with other defendants in such suits to contribute to a fund to defray the expenses of witnesses in attending to the suits, is a competent witness for defendant; it appearing that there is between the contributors no agreement to participate in paying the damages or costs which may be recovered against either of them in the actions.—Evans v. Hettick, Fed. Cas. No. 4,562 [3 Wash. C. C. 408, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 166].

[b] (Conn. 1795) A person may testify to the truth of certain words alleged to be slanderous, though a suit is pending against him for slander in speaking the same words.—Fowler v. Collins, 2 Root, 231.

[c] (Me. 1839) In an action for a quantity of tinware, where defendant justified the taking, under the statute of 1821, against hawkers, the person from whom the property is taken, if not interested, is a competent witness for plaintiff, although a complaint is pending against him for the penalty.—Campbell v. Thompson, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 117.

[d] (Pa. 1863) In an action of trover by a purchaser at a constable's sale, for an article sold, but which defendant refused to deliver, the constable to whom the execution was delivered, and the deputy who made the levy, are competent witnesses for plaintiff, though an action of trespass was pending against them for levying on and selling the goods for which trover was brought.—Hatch v. Bartle, 45 Pa. (9 Wright) 166, 84 Am. Dec. 484.

§ 258. Interest jointly with party in general.

[a] (Ark. 1855) A witness who testifies for plaintiff that he (the witness) "was to have half the amount to be paid by the defendant," for the making of certain bricks, now sued for, is incompetent.—Robinson v. Mace, 16 Ark. 97.

[b] (Del. 1856) In an action of replevin against a sheriff for goods attached by him under an execution against A. and B., the latter is not a competent witness for defendant to prove that the goods belonged to a partnership consisting of A. and plaintiff. B.'s interest is to make out the means of his co-debtor, which are subject to execution, as large as possible, as otherwise he may himself be obliged to pay the whole debt.—Davis v. White, 1 Houst. 228.

[c] (Fla. 1859) Where a witness has a joint interest with the party who calls him, either in the subject-matter to be recovered or in the contract as a general partner, joint or part owner or joint contractor, by which he has an interest in the very thing claimed, or in money to be recovered, or in the costs incidental to the suit, he is incompetent to give evidence for that party.—Hooker v. Johnson, 8 Fla. 453.

[d] (Ga. 1852) When one of several debtors is sued, plaintiff may call either of the others as a witness for him.—Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

[e] (Ind. 1841) In a suit against A. and B., alleged to be partners of the firm of B. & Co., on a note executed in the name of the firm, C. is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that A. was a member of the firm, although a judgment has been previously obtained by plaintiff against C. on the same note.—Henderson v. Reeves, 6 Blackf. 101.

[f] (Mass. 1812) In assumpsit on a note it appeared that defendant had declared that a certain witness offered by him was as liable to pay the demand sued on as himself. Held, that the witness was thereby rendered incompetent.—Peirce v. Chase, 8 Mass. 487.

[g] (N. H. 1834) In an action against one joint promisor, another joint promisor is not a competent witness for defendant without a release.—Jewitt v. Davis, 6 N. H. 518.

[h] (N. H. 1848) In action against one joint and several promisor, the other, against whom plaintiff's action is barred by the statute, is not a competent witness for defendant.—Whipple v. Stevens, 19 N. H. 150.

[i] (N. Y. 1828) One of several joint debtors, who is not sued, is a competent witness for plaintiff against the debtors sued.—Gay v. Cary, 9 Cow. 44.

[j] (N. Y. 1856) A party jointly liable with defendant, but not made party to the suit, is competent to establish nonjoinder.—Sweet v. Tuttle, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 465.

[k] (Ohio, 1843) In an action against one of several obligors or promisors, a co-obligor or co-promisor is not competent to prove the execution of the instrument by the defendant, since the interest of the witness is to charge defendant, and thus relieve himself of a part of the debt.—Marshall v. Thrailkill's Ex'r, 12 Ohio, 275.

[l] (Ohio, 1843) In a suit on a joint and several note, one of the makers, not served with process, is incompetent as a witness for defendants, on whom process was served.—Armstrong v. Deshler, 12 Ohio, 475.

§ 259. Joint tort-feasors.

[a] Where separate actions are brought against two for a joint trespass, one defendant may be a witness for the other.—(N. Y. 1827) Marsh v. Berry, 7 Cow. 344; (Va. 1793) Johnson v. Bourn, 1 Wash. 187.

[aa] (Conn. 1789) Persons with whom plaintiff was associated in a riot, and who were prosecuted along with him, and acquitted, cannot testify in his action for malicious prosecution, since they are interested in the questions involved.—Hall v. Dwight, 1 Root, 76.

[b] (La. 1815) Co-trespassers are competent for each other.—Harang v. Dauphin, 4 Mart. (O. S.) 27.

[c] (La. 1857) Alleged co-trespassers, who have been sued in another parish for the same cause of action, may be received to testify on behalf of a defendant charged also as a co-trespasser. Their position may possibly affect their credibility, but not their competency.—Clement v. Wafer, 12 La. Ann. 599.

[d] (La. 1866) A person accused of fraud with parties to the suit cannot be permitted to testify as a general witness on the ground of interest.—Collins v. His Creditors, 18 La. Ann. 235.

[e] (Me. 1853) Where two laborers committed a trespass on personal property, they are competent witnesses to prove that defendant directed them to do the act.—Jones v. Lowell, 35 Me. 538.

[f] (Pa. 1848) Where A. directed an act, complained of as a trespass, to be done, adopted it, and bound himself to be responsible for it, but was not joined in the action as a party defendant, he cannot be compelled by plaintiff to testify as a witness, and his declarations against his interest are evidence against his co-trespassers.—Welsh v. Cooper, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 217

[g] (Pa. 1850) One of several joint trespassers is a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit against the others.—Kennedy v. Philipy, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 408.

[h] (Pa. 1860) A co-trespasser, not joined as a defendant, is a competent witness for plaintiff to establish the trespass, in an action for money had and received, in which the tort is waived.—Dundas v. Muhlenberg's Ex'rs, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 351.

[i] (Vt. 1832) A co-trespasser is a competent witness for a defendant in trespass.—West v. Bolton, 4 Vt. 558.

[j] (Vt. 1836) In an action of tort, a joint tort-feasor is a competent witness for either party.—Brown v. Marsh, 8 Vt. 310.

[k] (Vt. 1848) Ordinarily, a joint tort-feasor is a competent witness for either party, if he be not sued, or be sued in a separate action, or, being joined, have suffered judgment to be rendered against himself.—Paine v. Tilden, 20 Vt. 554.

[l] (Va. 1733) Where two are concerned in a trespass, and one of them is indicted singly, the other may be a witness for or against him.—King v. Moore, Jeff. 8.

§ 260. Privity of estate or contract in general.

[a] (Cal. 1860) A party is not disqualified as a witness, by reason of his ownership of land to which title was made through the grant by which title was made to the premises in controversy.—Mott v. Smith, 16 Cal. 533.

[b] (Conn. 1845) A., under a license from B., the owner of land through which a watercourse flowed, erected a mill thereon, and ever afterwards A. used and occupied such mill as if it were his own; but it did not appear that there was any consideration for the license, or that it was to continue for any definite period, or that there was any agreement as to the nature of the occupation, or any stipulations whatever, by which the parties were mutually bound to each other. A. brought an action against C., the owner of a mill below, for setting the water back upon A.'s mill by means of a dam erected by C. Held, that such license did not amount to a lease from B. to A., nor create any privity of contract or estate between them; consequently, B. was not an incompetent witness for A.—Branch v. Doane, 17 Conn. 402.

[c] (Ill. 1862) Where A. and B. convey a right of way to a mill to C., and B. afterwards purchases one-half of the mill, B. cannot become a witness for C., who has filed a bill to restrain A. from obstructing the right of way; being an appurtenance to the mill, B. is therefore interested, and is disqualified.—Foulke v. Walker, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 204.

[d] (Ky. 1809) A witness to a will, holding a covenant of warranty from the testator, is not therefore interested in a suit between the heir and the devisee.—Thompson v. Shoeman, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 401.

[e] (La. 1828) In a petitory action a witness through whose agency plaintiff's ancestor sold the land to defendant cannot destroy the authentic sale which is collaterally questioned to defendant's prejudice.—Sprigg's Ex'rs v. Herman, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 510.

[f] (La. 1857) Civ. Code, art. 2260, providing that ascendants cannot be witnesses for descendants, must be construed as applying to cases in which the interest of an ascendant or descendant of the witness is directly involved.—Porche v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 778.

[g] (La. 1866) Descendants cannot testify in civil cases for or against their ascendants.—Succession of Weigel, 18 La. Ann. 49.

[h] (N. H. 1854) A. let a wagon to B., and C., while riding in the same with B., was injured. In an action by C., against a town, to recover damages for an injury occasioned by a defect in the highway, while riding in the wagon, held, that there was no privity of contract between A. and C. as to the goodness of the wagon, and that A. was a competent witness for C. in his action against the town.—Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 94.

[i] (Pa. 1835) One who is afterwards owner of land on which a nuisance exists cannot be a witness for the former owner in a suit to abate such nuisance.—Miller v. Frazier, 3 Watts, 456.

[j] (Pa. 1856) P. sold land to G., who agreed to pay certain judgments, which were liens on the land, as part of the purchase money. G. afterwards sold the land to C., who bound himself to pay the judgments, and by agreement a deed was made directly from P. to C. Held, that C. was a competent witness for P., in a contest between the latter and an attaching creditor of G., to establish G.'s liability under the agreement.—Carr v. Beck, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 269.

[k] (Pa. 1859) A former owner of a coupon, payable to bearer, may be a witness to impeach it.—Columbia Coal & Iron Co. v. Fox, 33 Pa. (9 Casey) 239.

§ 261. Interest in fund.

[a] Where the effect of a witness' testimony is to create or increase a fund from which he is to receive a benefit, he is incompetent.
—(Ga. 1853) City of Rome v. Dickerson, 13 Ga. 302; (1856) Governor v. Justices of Inferior Court, 20 Ga. 359; (1856) Foster v. Rutherford, Id. 676;
(Pa. 1863) Buchanan v. Buchanan, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 186;
(S. C. 1834) Cleverly v. McCullough, 2 Hill, 445; (1845) Brown v. O'Brien, 1 Rich. Law, 268, 44 Am. Dec. 254;
(Tex. 1855) Johnson v. Alexander, 14 Tex. 382.

[b] (Conn. 1824) If the effect of a witness' testimony will be to prevent the diminution of a fund created for his benefit, he is incompetent; nor is it necessary that the interest of the witness in the fund should appear to be inevitable.—Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258.

[c] (Ga. 1855) The fact that certain sums in suit will, if recovered, go to the fund from which a salary is payable, does not render the recipient of such salary an incompetent witness in the case, unless it be shown that the payment of such salary is dependent on such recovery.—Janes v. Trustees of Mercer University, 17 Ga. 515.

[d] (La. 1851) Materialmen and workmen are not competent witnesses for each other, in a suit against the owner of a building, to testify that he paid the contractor by anticipation, and that consequently he is liable to them, as one cannot be a witness for others to create or increase a fund in which he has an interest.—Uzureau v. Mignolet, 6 La. Ann. 290.

[e] (Me. 1839) The person offered as a witness made the machines which were the subject of controversy, and were alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to defendant, from materials furnished by plaintiff, who made advances to the laborers employed, and where the machines, when made, were to be the property of plaintiff, and on the sale thereof, after deducting his disbursements and commissions, plaintiff was to account to the witness for the surplus. Held, that the witness was interested, and incompetent to testify in support of the action.—Earle v. Clark, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 368.

[f] (Md. 1837) The purchaser of a decedent's lands is not a competent witness to prove that a conveyance by the deceased was made on a secret trust that the grantee should pay his debts, as a fund is thus provided for the payment of debts, and his own purchase so far exonerated.—Clagett v. Hall, 9 Gill & J. 80.

[g] (Mass. 1814) Where defendant borrowed of plaintiff a sum of money, which he promised to pay to plaintiff's daughter, she is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Jackson v. Mayo, 11 Mass. 147, 6 Am. Dec. 167.

[h] (Mass. 1830) Where a deponent for plaintiff, in replevin, stated that whatever plaintiff should recover would go to discharge a liability incurred by plaintiff for deponent, he was incompetent by reason of interest.—Wood v. Braynard, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 322.

[i] (Mo. 1860) The fact that plaintiff in a suit has engaged to pay over to another the sum sued for when recovered does not render such person an incompetent witness in behalf of plaintiff as being the person for whose benefit the suit is prosecuted.—Gott v. Williams, 29 Mo. 461.

§ 262. Parties to or interest in garnishment proceedings.

[a] (Ala. 1848) In a contest between the plaintiff in a garnishee process and the garnishee, the defendant is a competent witness to prove that he assigned the debt before the service of the garnishment to A., who assigned it to the garnishee for a valuable consideration.—Myatt v. Lockhart, 13 Ala. 338.

[b] (Ala. 1849) In a contest between the creditor and garnishee of a debtor, the debtor is, prima facie, an incompetent witness for the garnishee.—Marston v. Carr, 16 Ala. 325.

[c] (Ala. 1858) When the answer of a garnishee is contested by plaintiff, and the validity of a mortgage executed by defendant to the garnishee is controverted, defendant is a competent witness for the garnishee.—Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701.

[d] (Ala. 1859) The garnishee plaintiff is competent in a suit brought by the defendant in the garnishee suit, against the garnishee, to prove payment of the garnishment judgment by the latter.—Gunn v. Howell, 35 Ala. 144, 73 Am. Dec. 484.

[e] (Cal. 1857) Where a garnishee in defense avers acceptance of an order in favor of A. B., A. B. is an interested witness.—McEwen v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 258.

[f] (Ind. 1861) Where a person summoned as garnishee answers that he was indebted to the attachment defendant, but that before the service of the writ he was notified of the assignment of the note constituting such indebtedness, and plaintiff, desiring to dispute such assignment for want of consideration, brings the person claiming to hold as assignee before the court so that he may be bound by the judgment, the attachment defendant is a competent witness on the trial of the issue thus formed.—Cadwalader v. Hartley, 17 Ind. 520.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) In a case where the garnishees, who were bankers, answered that defendant had an account with them as agent, but they did not know who the unnamed principal was, and they offered defendant to show that the money was not his own but belonged to some principal, the witness was allowed to testify.—Tyler v. Coolbaugh, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 474.

[h] (Iowa, 1859) On an issue between a judgment plaintiff and a garnishee as to the ownership of money in the hands of the garnishee, the interest of the judgment defendant is in favor of the plaintiff, and he is therefore a competent witness for the garnishee.—Tyler v. Coolbaugh, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 474.

[i] (Iowa, 1861) A. sued B. and garnished C. D., claiming the property in the hands of C., interpleaded. Held, that B.'s evidence was admissible to prove an assignment to D. before the garnishment.—Randolph Bank v. Armstrong, 11 Iowa, 515.

[j] (La. 1857) The true owner of goods in a factor's hands on consignment did not present himself to make any claims, and the factor, without having received any communication from him, and being under advances to the agent on his drafts, passed the proceeds to the credit of the agent, by whom the goods were shipped, with instruction to that effect at the time of the shipment. Held, that when the goods under such circumstances were undisposed of at the time of the service of the interrogatories on the garnishees, the owner of the goods (defendant in the suit) was not a competent witness for plaintiffs, but that the agent was a competent witness for the garnishees.—Bullitt v. Walker, 12 La. Ann. 276.

[k] (Me. 1851) The rule that a party of record cannot be a witness does not extend to one summoned as a trustee, who has not yet disclosed or been defaulted.—White v. Means, 33 Me. 495.

[l] (Md. 1862) A party claiming the funds in the hands of the garnishee is not a competent witness for the garnishee, on account of his interest in the decision of the suit.—Leffler v. Allard, 18 Md. 545.

[m] (Miss. 1853) Where a person was summoned as the garnishee of A., and in his answer denied that he owed him anything, A. is not a competent witness to prove his indebtedness to himself.—Standefer v. Welby, 26 Miss. (4 Cushm.) 145.

[n] (Miss. 1856) The principal defendant in a garnishee process, who, before service of the attachment, has assigned the debt due from the garnishees, without retaining any liability to his assignee in case of nonpayment, is a competent witness for the garnishees.—Byars' Garnishees v. Griffin, 31 Miss. 603.

[o] (N. H. 1844) Upon trial of the issue between the plaintiff and one summoned as trustee, the principal defendant is a competent witness for the latter.—Lucas v. Cole, 16 N. H. 138.

[p] (N. H. 1845) A principal defendant is not necessarily so much a party in interest in the question between the plaintiff and one summoned as trustee, as to make him, prima facie, an incompetent witness for the trustee.—Bell v. Jones, 17 N. H. 307.

[q] (N. H. 1850) In foreign attachment, the debtor is a competent witness as between the plaintiff and one claiming by assignment the debt attached by the process, and who has brought an action against a trustee for its recovery.—Wilson v. Hanson, 20 N. H. 375.

[r] (N. H. 1850) In foreign attachment, the trustee is a competent witness as between the plaintiff and one claiming by assignment the debt attached, and who has brought an action against the trustee for its recovery; since, if the claimant prevails, he will maintain his action against the trustee, and if the plaintiff prevails, the judgment may be pleaded by the trustee in bar of the further maintenance of the action against himself.—Wilson v. Hanson, 20 N. H. 375.

[s] (N. H. 1854) Where an issue as to the title of property attached in a trustee process is tried by jury, the principal debtor is a competent witness.—Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Gibbs, 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 316.

[t] (N. H. 1859) On a trial by jury on appeal by a trusteeing creditor from a decision of the commissioner disallowing the claim of the principal defendant against the estate of the deceased trustee, the principal defendant is a competent witness.—Clark v. Robinson, 37 N. H. 579.

[u] (N. Y. 1851) A. gave bond to B. on the discharge of a foreign attachment of the property of C. In a trial of an action on the bond, held, that C., the principal debtor, was not a competent witness for defendant, he being substantially the real party.—Thompson v. Dickerson, 12 Barb. 108, 1 Code Rep. (N. S.) 213.

[w] (Pa. 1857) A defendant in an execution attachment is a competent witness for the garnishee.—Evans v. Sexton, 2 Phila. 300.

[x] (Pa. 1863) In an issue under attachment execution process, defendant in the original judgment is a competent witness for the garnishee.—Jones v. Bank of Northern Liberties, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 253.

§ 263. Interest in record as evidence in other proceedings in general.

[a] (U. S. 1881) Under Rev. St. § 1079, providing that no claimant suing the United States in the court of claims, nor person from whom claimant claims title, nor any person interested in the title, shall be a competent witness to support the same, held, that the United States could use as a witness to defeat the claim one whose interest was adverse to claimant, although judgment against claimant might establish his own right to the same claim.—Bradley v. United States, 104 U. S. 442, 26 L. Ed. 824.

[b] (U. S. 1838) In a suit on a bottomry bond in rem, where the defense is that the repairs were not necessary, the master is not a competent witness for the libelant to establish the necessity of the repairs, as the decree would be evidence of this necessity in a suit brought against him by the owner for improper conduct in directing the repairs.—The Fortitude, Fed. Cas. No. 4,953 [3 Sumn. 228].

[c] (Ala. 1846) Where the judgment will not be evidence for or against the witness, to show his exemption from or liability to either party, or in any manner affect their rights in respect to the witness, he is competent to testify; and this although the judgment against defendant would be evidence in his favor, in an action at his instance, against the witness, to show that he had paid the money under legal coercion.—Stewart v. Conner, 9 Ala. 803.

[d] (Ala. 1847) A witness who has a certain, direct, and immediate interest in the event of a suit, cannot be examined as a witness, though the record itself of the suit would not be evidence either for or against him.—Bean v. Pearsall, 12 Ala. 592.

[e] (Ala. 1861) A witness is competent, unless the verdict and judgment would be evidence for or against him in another suit, according as they may be for or against the party calling him.—Coltart v. Laughinghouse, 38 Ala. 190.

[f] (Cal. 1862) An insolvent's discharge was opposed on the ground that he had fraudulently transferred his property to his brother. Held, that the record in this case could be in no way used to affect the brother's interest, so as to render him an incompetent witness for the insolvent.—Shawl v. His Creditors, 19 Cal. 597.

[g] (Ga. 1851) A witness had been a security on an administration bond for a short time, and was discharged from all future liability by the court of ordinary. Held, that such witness was competent in a suit by persons claiming to be distributees of the intestate, against the administratrix, to prove, in behalf of such administratrix, that complainants were not entitled to any share of the estate, and that the record of the judgment against such administratrix would not be even prima facie evidence of the liability of such discharged security, in a suit on the administration bond against him; there being no allegation in the record of any mal-administration by the administratrix, during the time the witness was such security.—Beall v. Beall, 10 Ga. 342.

[h] (Ga. 1851) A witness had been a surety on an administration bond for a short time, and was discharged from all future liability by the court of ordinary. Held that, in order to exclude the witness on the ground of interest, it must appear that the record would be legal evidence against him in some other action.—Beall v. Beall, 10 Ga. 342.

[i] (Ind. 1854) In a suit to recover damages for obstruction to plaintiff's mill by defendant's dam, one called as witness by defendant answered, as to his interest, that at the commencement of the suit he had none, but that subsequently he had acquired an interest in the profits of plaintiff's mill. Held, that said witness was incompetent, as the law stood in March, 1850, inasmuch as the record in this case might be used in any future action by the witness and plaintiff for similar damages.—Cory v. Silcox, 6 Ind. 39.

[j] (La. 1827) In testing competency, the main question is: "Can the judgment to be rendered be legal evidence, in any subsequent suit against the witness, as to the matter litigated in the action wherein he is to testify?"—Reeves v. Burton, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 283.

[k] (Me. 1841) Before a mortgagee had entered for condition broken, the right of the mortgagor to redeem had been sold to C., who released it to B., and after entry by the mortgagee both B. and C. executed releases to him. The mortgagor brought a bill against the mortgagee to redeem, alleging that the releases were made and received with a knowledge that he had an equitable right to the equity of redemption, and offered B. to prove the allegation. Held, that as the decree could not be evidence against B. in any action the mortgagor might bring against him, he was competent to testify, and the fact that if plaintiff fully recovered his rights he would be less interested to proceed against B. went to his credibility only.—Evans v. Chism, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 220.

[l] (Mo. 1843) A person possessing a community of interest in the subject-matter is nevertheless competent, unless the record of the judgment would be evidence for or against him.—Cason v. White, 8 Mo. 216.

[m] (N. Y. 1817) In an action against the master of a vessel for negligently running foul of and injuring plaintiff's vessel, the owner of the vessel under the command of defendant was a competent witness for him, as the verdict could not be used in any action that might be brought against him as owner.—Case v. Reeve, 14 Johns. 79.

[n] (Tex. 1860) Pending a suit of K., against S., for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, in having made affidavit for K.'s arrest, charging K. with swindling, by selling certain cotton to P., an action of P., against K.'s principal and others, to recover the same cotton, came on to be tried, and on such trial S. was excluded as a witness for the defendants, on the objection of plaintiff that the verdict and judgment in this case might be evidence in the suit for malicious prosecution. Held, that it was error to sustain the objection; the suits not being between the same parties, and the judgment not constituting a muniment of title.—Freeman v. Perry, 25 Tex. 611.

[o] (Va. 1823) A person against whom the record in a case cannot be used in a subsequent action is a competent witness therein.—Richardson v. Carey, 2 Rand. 87.

§ 264. Time and manner of acquiring interest.

[a] Interest, to incapacitate a witness for testifying, must exist at the time when his testimony is offered or deposition taken.

—(Ill. 1847) Frink v. McClung, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 569;

(Pa. 1810) Henry's Lessee v. Morgan, 2 Bin. 497.

[b] If, after the event which a witness is called to prove, he becomes interested by his own act, without the interference of the party by whom he is called, such interest will not render him incompetent.
—(Ky. 1822) Baylor v. Smither's Heirs, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 105; (1829) In re McDaniel's Will, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 331;
(Pa. 1818) Long v. Bailie, 4 Serg. & R. 222.

[c] Where the party objecting to a witness, on the ground of interest which was acquired by a contract entered into subsequently to his knowledge of the facts he is brought to prove, is himself a party to the agreement creating the interest, or had any agency in causing it to be created, the witness may be admitted to testify, notwithstanding such interest.

(N. Y. 1833) Manchester Iron Mfg. Co. v. Sweeting, 10 Wend. 162.

[d] (Ala. 1846) When a levy has been made by the sheriff on property, for which he was afterwards sued, by one claiming it under a deed of trust from the grantor, and which he subsequently sold and applied to the payment of one of the creditors of the grantor, thereby incapacitating him from being a witness in the suit, held, that this was not within the rule which prevents a party to the suit, by any act of his, from incapacitating one from being a witness against him.—Napier v. Cook, 9 Ala. 838.

[e] (Ala. 1848) Where, after a judgment has been assigned, it is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings, the assignee is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, on the ground of interest.—Stewart v. Conner, 13 Ala. 94.

[f] (Ala. 1848) A sheriff who sells land on execution, and afterwards acquires an interest therein by a contract, though within the statute of frauds, which he sells for a valuable consideration received by him, is not a competent witness for the purchaser to prove the levy.—McCollum v. Hubbert, 13 Ala. 282, 48 Am. Dec. 56.

[g] (Ala. 1850) If a witness becomes interested in the event of a pending suit by the act of one of the parties, without the assent of the other, he is not thereby rendered incompetent to testify in behalf of the latter, although the interest thus created is in his favor.—Jones' Ex'rs v. Hoskins, 18 Ala. 489.

[h] (Del. 1838) The fact that a witness had been made an executor will not deprive any one of his testimony concerning facts known to him before the will was made tending to show that testator had no title in certain bequeathed property.—Phillips v. Short, 2 Har. 339.

[i] (Ga. 1855) If a person be originally called as a witness to some transaction between the parties, thus creating in both a common interest in his testimony, it is not in his power, or in that of either party, to deprive the other of his testimony, by reason of an interest acquired subsequently, though without any such intention on the part of either.—Way v. Arnold, 18 Ga. 181.

[j] (Ga. 1856) A witness incompetent to testify on the ground of interest at the time of examination, is incompetent, notwithstanding he was competent at the time of commencing the suit.—Shannon v. Fuller, 20 Ga. 566.

[k] (Ga. 1860) A purchaser at a sheriff's sale of land belonging to the H. Company, which had a covenant in regard to the land from the W. Company, is a competent witness for the H. Company in an action for a breach of the covenant which occurred before the sale, although the sale carried the covenant to the purchaser, as he could only sue for a breach occurring after such sale.—Water Lot Co. v. Leonard, 30 Ga. 560.

[l] (Ky. 1828) A witness who becomes interested in the matter of a deed, after his attestation of it, cannot withhold his testimony.—Price v. Wood, 23 Ky. (7 T. B. Mon.) 223.

[m] (N. Y. 1832) On a bill to correct a mistake in a conveyance, and to restrain defendant from proceeding at law for the recovery of the land alleged to have been inserted in the deed by mistake, a person to whom an easement in the land in dispute was granted by the person from whom both plaintiff and defendant derived title subsequently to the conveyance to defendant, but prior to the conveyance to plaintiff, is incompetent as a witness for plaintiff.—Rogers v. Dibble, 3 Paige, 238.

[n] (N. Y. 1839) After a witness had been examined in chief, and while he was being cross-examined, he became interested in the suit by the death of a party, but the cross-examination was completed, and the witness was re-examined, before his interest was known either to him or to the other persons present. Held, that so much of the testimony as was taken after closing the cross-examination must be suppressed.—Fream v. Dickinson, 3 Edw. Ch. 301.

[o] (N. Y. 1847) A witness will not be allowed to disqualify himself, and thus deprive a party of the benefit of his testimony.—Clark v. Brown, 1 Barb. 215.

[p] (N. C. 1829) An interest in the event of a suit acquired after the commencement of it does not render the witness incompetent, unless it was acquired from the party offering him.—Rhem v. Jackson, 13 N. C. 187.

[q] (N. C. 1839) If the subscribing witness to an instrument becomes interested and a party to the case, even though he does so voluntarily, he cannot be examined as a witness.—Blackwelder v. Fisher, 20 N. C. 345.

[r] (N. C. 1844) A witness cannot deprive a party of his evidence, by creating a subsequent interest, by his own act, without the concurrence of the party calling him; much less can he do so by agreement with the opposite party.—Hafner v. Irwin, 26 N. C. 529.

[s] (N. C. 1851) Where a witness to a contract, subsequently to his attestation, acquires an interest in the contract, through or under one of the contracting parties, he is an incompetent witness for the party so creating the interest, unless the circumstances entirely negative any idea of fraud; as where the interest is thrown upon him by the act of the law, or where, after attestation of the instrument, the witness has married the party seeking to establish the instrument.—Overman v. Coble, 35 N. C. 1.

[t] (S. C. 1831) One is incompetent as a witness who has, by purchase, made himself quasi a party to the suit.—Jones v. McNeil, 2 Bailey, 466.

[u] (Wis. 1853) The fact that after the taking of a deposition, and after a decree in the court below, in the suit relating to which the deposition was taken, the deponent became interested in the result of the suit, will not prevent the use of the deposition in the appellate court.—Whiting v. Gould, 1 Wis. 195.

§ 265. Testimony against interest in general.

[a] Interest adverse to the party calling the witness is no ground of objection to the witness.

[d] (Ind. 1849) Where the interest of a witness in the event of a suit is such that, in case of a recovery by the party calling him, he will be liable for a considerably greater sum than if the adverse party succeeds, he is competent. —Elliott v. Lewallen, Smith, 284.

[e] (Ky. 1827) A witness cannot be excused from deposing because he has an interest in the matter in controversy which he may prejudice by his testimony.—Conover v. Bell, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon. 157.

[f] (Ky. 1865) A person is not rendered incompetent as a witness for plaintiff in a case by the fact that plaintiff's success may render him responsible to defendant for negligence.—Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Spratt, 63 Ky. (2 Duv.) 4.

[g] (Miss. 1822) Where the result of the suit may be used either for or against the rights of the witness in another suit, he is incompetent on that account, no matter whether he is called to testify for or against his rights.—Phebe v. Prince, 1 Miss. (1 Walk.) 131.

[h] (Pa. 1829) A party to a fraud is competent to prove it.—Langer v. Felton, 1 Rawle, 141.

[i] (S. C. 1817) If a witness is offered by the party against whom his interest preponderates, he is a competent witness, and the objection of interest goes rather to his credibility.—Smyth v. McDow, 1 Mill, Const. 277.

[a] (U. S. 1849) A witness, at whose instance an ejectment is brought, and who is the assignee of a part of the consideration, for which the land was sold, and the suit being brought, on a failure to pay the consideration, is not a competent witness.—Baird v. Wolfe, Fed. Cas. No. 760 [4 McLean, 549].

[b] (Ala. 1847) In an action for forcible entry and detainer to recover the possession of premises, a witness who stated that he had made a contract with the claimant for the purchase of the premises in question, which he considered advantageous, and that the claimant was to put him in possession as soon as he could, is an incompetent witness for the claimant, on the ground of interest, although he swore also that he would not lose or gain by the event of the suit.—Carter v. Mundy, 12 Ala. 132.

[c] (Conn. 1807) In an action for a conspiracy in obtaining certain real estate, it is no objection, to the competency of a witness for plaintiff, that he claims the real estate alleged to have been fraudulently obtained by defendants.—Bulkley v. Storer, 2 Day, 531.

[d] (Ga. 1857) In a suit by a son-in-law, against his mother-in-law, for a slave claimed by him as a gift from her deceased husband, a son of the husband is not interested, and is a competent witness for defendant.—Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154.

[e] (Ga. 1860) A claimant of a portion of the property levied on under an execution is not a competent witness for a party who seeks to set aside the execution as satisfied.—Molyneaux v. Collier, 30 Ga. 731.

[f] (La. 1836) In an action to rescind a sale of land, to which a witness' judicial mortgage would attach if the sale were rescinded, he is competent for plaintiff.—Russell v. Sprigg, 10 La. 421.

[g] (La. 1857) In an action against a common carrier upon the penal statute for taking slaves out of the state without the consent of the owner, the ostensible owner in whose name the slave was shipped, and the vendor of such owner, have no interest in the suit, and are competent witnesses for defendant.—Farwell v. Harris, 12 La. Ann. 50.

[h] (La. 1859) The son-in-law of one of the parties to a suit is a competent witness. The interest of the mother of the witness in the property in dispute, as belonging to the marriage community, she not being a party to the suit, is too remote to exclude her son's testimony.—King v. Neely, 14 La. Ann. 165.

[i] (Md. 1856) A witness was called by defendant and the only objection to his competency was that he had taken on himself, without the authority or consent of defendant, to credit himself, as against defendant in an unsettled account between them, with the value of the goods for which this action was brought. Held that the witness was competent.—Heskett v. Borden Min. Co., 10 Md. 179.

[j] (Mass. 1763) In ejectment by the committee of the proprietors of certain lands, other proprietors who were not of the committee were not competent witnesses.—Wrentham Proprietors v. Metcalf, Quincy, 36.

[k] (N. H. 1846) One whom plaintiff had agreed to support, and to permit to have certain privileges in a house while plaintiff owned it, is not for that cause incompetent to testify for him in an action of trespass, involving a question of the boundaries of the farm on which the house is situated.—Bean v. Smith, 20 N. H. 461.

[l] (N. H. 1851) The owner of goods claimed by two creditors under different liens cannot be a witness to prove the value of the goods in the possession of one of them.—Edgerly v. Emerson, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 555, 55 Am. Dec. 207.

[m] (N. H. 1851) Landowners are admissible as witnesses, at hearing before road commissioners, if they have not made themselves parties.—In re Kennett, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 139.

[n] (N. Y. 1832) A tenant by the curtesy is a competent witness for plaintiff in an action of ejectment by the heir at law.—Jackson v. Brooks, 8 Wend. 426.

[o] (N. Y. 1858) Where A. undertakes to dispose of B.'s property, reimburse himself out of the proceeds, and pay the balance to C., B. is a competent witness for C. in an action brought by him to recover this balance, independent of any assignment to C.—Hale v. Boardman, 27 Barb. 82.

[p] (N. C. 1863) A person whose land has been sold at a sheriff's sale is a competent witness in an action of ejectment, against the purchaser, at such sale, to show that his own title was defective.—McDougald v. McLean, 60 N. C. 120.

[q] (Ohio, 1832) On a bill to enjoin a judgment at law, parties who have previously purchased land bound by the judgment, are competent witnesses.—Washburn v. Holmes, Wright, 67.

[r] (Tenn. 1812) The fact that one formerly held the equitable title to land and might possibly be held liable in equity for failure of title, though he did not join in the deed executed by the holder of the legal title, will not render him incompetent as a witness in a subsequent action concerning the title between the grantee of the legal title and others.—Sims v. Sims, 1 Tread. Const. 131.

[s] (Tenn. 1842) A., by virtue of an execution in favor of C., levied on a slave. B., another constable, immediately levied on it, took it out of A.'s possession, and sold it, and D. became the purchaser. In an action of trover by A. against D., held, that C. was a competent witness on behalf of A.—Thomas v. Lewis, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 29.

§ 267. Joint owners and co-tenants.

[a] (Conn. 1815) In an action of disseisin by one tenant in common, who grounds his claim on the common title, his co-tenants are incompetent witnesses for him.—Barrett v. French, 1 Conn. 354, 6 Am. Dec. 241.

[b] (Me. 1836) One joint owner of personal property is, from interest, incompetent to testify for the other, where the title to such property is in issue.—Caldwell v. Cole, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 120.

[c] (Mass. 1828) A. carried on business in a mill which he owned, in company with B., and agreed to make a deduction from the rent on account of backwater caused by C.'s dam. In an action by A., against C., to recover damages for the obstruction, B. was a competent witness.—Sumner v. Tileston, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 198.

[d] (N. H. 1857) A co-tenant is a competent witness for another co-tenant, in an action brought by the former to recover his share of the premises of a disseisor; he not being a party to the suit, and his interest being in the question only.—Cook v. Brown, 34 N. H. 460.

[e] (N. C. 1833) One tenant in common cannot be a witness for his co-tenant, to defend the possession.—Rogers v. Mabe, 15 N. C. 180.

[f] (Pa. 1827) A tenant in common is a competent witness for his co-tenant, in ejectment brought by the latter.—Bennett v. Hethington, 16 Serg. & R. 193.

[g] (Pa. 1840) Where tenants in common have made partition of land, they are not competent witnesses in ejectment brought by the one against the other for a part of the same land.—Patterson v. Lanning, 10 Watts, 135, 36 Am. Dec. 154.

[h] (Pa. 1840) In an action of account render, the declaration stated that plaintiff was possessed of an undivided third part of a certain limekiln, and that defendant had the care and management of the whole, and as bailiff of the plaintiff, to render an account to plaintiff of his share. It appeared that plaintiff and defendant, together with a third person, were tenants in common of the limekiln. Held, that the third tenant in common was a competent witness for plaintiff, and that his testimony was admissible to prove the tenancy in common, and the receipt of money by defendant.—Steffen v. Hartzell, 5 Whart. 448.

[i] (Pa. 1850) A tenant in common, to whom land has been set off on partition, is a competent witness to prove that an owelty awarded to his co-tenant remains unpaid, it being against his interest.—In re Darlington's Appropriation, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 430.

[j] (Pa. 1886) One of several tenants in common, in whom an outstanding title is alleged to exist, is not a competent witness for a co-tenant asserting the title.—Swank v. Phillips, 113 Pa. 482, 6 Atl. 450.

[k] (S. C. 1840) A defendant in trespass for a fishery, under a plea of liberum tenementum, showed a title in common with G.; but plaintiff proved an elder title. The testimony of G. was then offered to prove defendant's right by prescription to fish. This was objected to on the ground of his interest, as tenant in common. Held, that he was competent.—Jackson v. Lewis, Cheves, 259.

[l] (Tenn. 1852) Tenants in common may be witnesses for each other in ejectment, as a judgment in favor of one cannot be used by the other.—Hammett v. Blount's Lessee, 31 Tenn. (1 Swan) 385.

[m] (Va. 1851) Defendant claiming under a deed to himself and another as joint tenants, that other person is not a competent witness for him to sustain his right of possession.—Adams v. Martin, 8 Grat. 107.

§ 268. Owners of vessel or cargo.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 435.

[a] (U. S. 1804) In an action on a policy of insurance, one of the part owners of the vessel, not interested in the insurance, may be examined to prove the loss and other facts.—Ruan v. Gardner, Fed. Cas. No. 12,100 [1 Wash. C. C. 145].

[b] (Ala. 1855) The owner of the flatboat, who had charge of her at the time of the collision, is not a competent witness for the owner of the damaged goods, in an action against the steamboat for damages; nor is he made a competent witness by Code, § 2302.—Owners of The Farmer v. McCraw, 26 Ala. 189, 72 Am. Dec. 718.

[c] (Ala. 1858) In a statutory action against a steamboat under the act of 1814, one of the part owners of the boat having intervened to defend, another part owner, who also joined in the replevy bond, is not a competent witness for defendant.—The Farmer v. McCraw, 31 Ala. 659.

[d] (Ind. 1853) Where one of several joint owners of a cargo effects an insurance of his interest, but the interests of the other joint owners are not covered by the policy, they are competent witnesses for plaintiff in a suit on the policy.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Lostutter, 4 Ind. 558.

[e] (La. 1822) In a question of barratry between the freighter and insurer, the reputed owner is a good witness to prove that the captain was proprietor of the vessel.—Barry v. Louisiana Ins. Co., 12 Mart. (O. S.) 493.

[f] (La. 1826) One part owner is competent for the other suing the master for negligence.—Jordan v. White, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 335.

[g] (Mo. 1848) A joint owner of a steamboat is a competent witness in an action ex delicto against the other joint owners.—Lee v. Murray, 12 Mo. 280.

[h] (N. H. 1854) A. had a lien on a boat, for labor done and materials furnished in repairing it. He brought a suit against defendant, and attached the boat. Held, that the owner of the boat was not a competent witness for defendant, on the ground that he had an interest to defeat the suit.—Green v. Pickering, 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 360.

[i] (N. Y. 1817) In an action against a master of a vessel, for negligently running foul of and injuring the vessel of plaintiff, the owner of the vessel under the command of defendant is a competent witness for him.—Case v. Reeve, 14 Johns. 79.

[j] (N. Y. 1819) In an action, for repairs done to a vessel, against one part owner, who neglects to plead in abatement the nonjoinder of the others, another part owner is not an admissible witness for plaintiff to prove the ownership of defendant.—Marquand v. Webb, 16 Johns. 89.

[k] (S. C. 1840) In an action on a policy of insurance of freight lost in transitu, the patroon, who was also owner of the boat, was not a competent witness to show that the freight was lost by fire, so as to fix the liability of the insurers.—Frazier v. Fire & Marine Ins. Co., Cheves, 123.

§ 269. Persons entitled to or in possession.

[a] (Me. 1849) When the immediate effect of a judgment in favor of one of the parties to a suit would be to confirm a third person in the enjoyment of an interest in possession, such person is not a competent witness for that party.—Atkinson v. Snow, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 364.

[b] (N. Y. 1828) One in possession of a part of the premises in ejectment is not a competent witness for defendant.—Jackson v. Hills, 8 Cow. 290.

[c] (N. C. 1862) An occupant is incompetent to give evidence for defendant in an action brought to recover the land, of which he is in possession.—Foust v. Trice, 53 N. C. 490.

[d] (Pa. 1843) One not a party or privy to an ejectment cannot be affected by the judgment in it, although a former occupier of the land in dispute, and he is therefore a competent witness in the ejectment.—Reid v. Stanley, 6 Watts & S. 369.

[e] (Pa. 1844) One who has been in possession of land during the existence of the title of plaintiff in ejectment to recover possession of the same is incompetent to testify for defendant.—Strawbridge v. Cartledge, 7 Watts & S. 394.

[f] (Pa. 1844) A terre-tenant is incompetent to testify on the trial of an issue which may affect the estate which he occupies.—Kuester v. Keck, 8 Watts & S. 16.

§ 270. Competency of witness to prove title in himself.

[a] (Ala. 1849) In an action against A. to charge him as a joint owner with B. of a steamboat, the latter is not a competent witness to prove the fact of joint ownership.—Aston v. Jemison, 17 Ala. 61.

[b] (Ind. 1851) It is no objection to the competency of a witness, in actions of replevin or trover, that he is called to prove the title of the property sued for to be in himself.—Ashby v. West, 3 Ind. 170.

[c] (Mass. 1816) Where a deputy sheriff in replevin for goods attached by him justified by alleging that the joint property was in the debtor and another, and that he had attached the debtor's interest therein, such other is not, as being interested in the event of the action, rendered incompetent to prove the property in himself and the debtor.—Page v. Weeks, 13 Mass. 199.

[d] (Miss. 1849) In replevin by the owner of a life estate in the property replevied, against one who has taken possession of the property at the instigation of the remainderman, the remainderman is not a competent witness to prove title in himself, by way of justifying the taking.—Lloyd v. Goodwin, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 223.

[e] (N. H. 1844) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that his testimony is in favor of his own title, and therefore, in an action for breach of covenant of seisin in fee, an adverse claimant of the premises is admissible as a witness on the part of plaintiff.—Parker v. Brown, 15 N. H. 176.

[f] (N. J. 1817) In trespass for taking logs, defendant offered to prove by A. that the logs were cut on land owned jointly by A. and himself. Held, that A. was competent.—Wilson v. Clark, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 385.

[g] (N. Y. 1828) In trover for a chattel, one who claims property in himself in the chattel is a competent witness for defendant, to show such property.—Bush v. Lyon, 9 Cow. 52.

[h] (Tex. 1870) In a suit enjoining an execution sale of personal property claimed to be exempt, plaintiff called a witness who stated that since the preliminary injunction was granted he had purchased the property levied on. Defendant objected, and the court ruled that the witness was disqualified by interest adverse to defendant. Held, that the ruling was erroneous; the witness had no interest in the result of the suit, as the injunction relieved the property from the levy, and restored it to the defendant in execution, substituting in its place the security of the injunction bond.—Turley v. Brewster, 33 Tex. 188.

[i] (Vt. 1843) In an action against a sheriff for refusing to attach property which did not belong to the defendant named in the writ, the real owner of the property is a competent witness; he having no interest in the result of the suit.—Hutchinson v. Lull, 17 Vt. 133.

[j] (Wis. 1845) One in whom defendant in replevin alleges title is a competent witness to sustain the plea.—Runey v. Thompson, 1 Pin. 506.

§ 271. Grantee or vendee.

Parties to conveyance in general, see post, § 298.

[a] (Ala. 1834) In an action of trespass to try title, by a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, against tenants, one of whom is the defendant in the execution under which the purchase is made, a vendee to whom the defendant in execution has conveyed the premises is a competent witness on the part of defendants to prove that they are tenants under him.—McGee v. Eastis, 5 Stew. & P. 426.

[b] (Ala. 1840) A purchaser of real estate, after it appears that his vendor had no title, is a competent witness to prove the amount of rents and profits received by the vendor, and improvements made by him.—Hogan v. Stone, 1 Ala. 496, 35 Am. Dec. 39.

[c] (Ala. 1850) A., for himself and as the agent of B., purchased land on their joint account, and afterwards relinquished his interest therein to B. The vendor filed his bill against both, to subject the land to the payment of the purchase money, and A. having failed to answer, a decree pro confesso was rendered against him. Held, that A. was a competent witness for complainant to prove the price agreed to be paid; that if his interest was not balanced, it preponderated against the party by whom he was introduced.—Crawford v. Barkley, 18 Ala. 270.

[d] (Conn. 1827) The grantee of land by a quitclaim deed is a competent witness, in an action of ejectment between other persons, to establish such deed.—Kline v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 494.

[e] (Del. 1864) Where property sold at auction was seized under an execution against the purchaser, whereon the original owner brought replevin, alleging that title had never vested in the purchaser because of his failure to comply with the conditions of the sale, the purchaser was a competent witness for the original owner, as his interest would be unaffected by the result.—Williams v. Connowdy, 3 Houst. 63.

[f] (Ind. 1846) In a cross-bill by a wife, against her husband, for a divorce and alimony, the husband offered a witness whose competency was objected to because the husband had conveyed to the witness a tract of land which it was alleged might be reached by the wife if she should obtain alimony, and if the conveyance had been made to defraud her. Held, that the objection was untenable.—McCafferty v. McCafferty, 8 Blackf. 218.

[g] (Iowa, 1859) A person to whom plaintiff in replevin has sold the property in suit is a competent witness to show that according to the terms of sale plaintiff was entitled to the possession.—Mumma v. McKee, 10 Iowa, 107.

[h] (La. 1832) The vendee, though he have transferred the property by donation, is competent to testify for plaintiff in a revocatory action.—Brown's Syndics v. Ferguson, 4 La. 257.

[i] (Me. 1830) Defendant in a suit in which his lands were attached having sold the same lands pending the attachment, his grantee cannot be a witness for him in that suit, his title being directly affected by a verdict for defendant.—Schillinger v. McCann, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 364.

[j] (Me. 1843) The grantee in a deed is a competent witness to prove that the deed was delivered to a third person on a condition to be performed, and that it had never been delivered to him.—Jackson v. Sheldon, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 569.

[k] (Me. 1850) Defendant's grantee of land attached on a writ is a competent witness for defendant, unless it appears that the conveyance to him was made subsequently to the attachment.—Johnson v. Whidden, 32 Me. 230.

[l] (Md. 1799) In trespass for taking a horse, plaintiff's witness was objected to as interested, and to prove him so defendant offered testimony that he (defendant) was collector of taxes, and had distrained and sold said horse for the payment of witness' taxes; that the witness had said that defendant had taken his horse; and that plaintiff had said that defendant ought not to be angry with him because the witness had brought the suit, and only made use of plaintiff's name. Held, that the witness was not interested in the event of the suit, but was a competent witness to give evidence of the facts proposed to be proved by him, viz., that the horse was the property of plaintiff, and that a conditional contract was made between plaintiff and the witness for said horse, which contract was afterwards canceled.—Belt v. Perry, 4 Har. & McH. 348.

[m] (N. H. 1841) A. delivered to B. a stove and furniture, and took his receipt, reciting that he was to pay a certain sum per month, or return the stove, etc., if he did not make payments. He made one payment, and plaintiffs made an entry in their books, charging him with the stove, and crediting him with the payment. B. failed to pay any more, and A. agreed to take the stove back, after which it was attached by C. on a writ against B. Held, that B. was a competent witness in a suit by A. to recover the value.—Porter v. Pettengill, 12 N. H. 299.

[n] (N. H. 1844) One claiming under a deed a part of the land conveyed by it is a competent witness for a tenant in a real action, claiming a different portion of the land under the same deed.—Cheswell v. Eastham, 16 N. H. 296.

[o] (N. H. 1852) In an action quare clausum, a subsequent grantee of the locus in quo is a competent witness for plaintiff, as he is entitled to no part of the damages which may be recovered.—Furbush v. Goodwin, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 425.

[p] (Ohio, 1850) In a suit in equity to enforce a vendor's lien, where the premises have been mortgaged by the vendee, after the sale, to a third person, and sold under a decree on the mortgage, after foreclosure, to the mortgagee, the original vendee is not a competent witness for complainant.—Messenger v. Armstrong, 19 Ohio, 41.

[q] (Pa. 1834) In an action to recover back purchase money paid for land on the ground that the vendor had no title, but had previously sold it to another, the first grantee was a competent witness for plaintiff to prove payment of the purchase money by him, and possession under his purchase.—Devere v. Loyd, 3 Watts, 94.

[r] (Pa. 1841) In ejectment by a vendor, against the purchaser of the land at a sale on execution as the property of the vendee, to enforce payment of the purchase money, the vendee is not a competent witness.—Jones v. Patterson, 1 Watts & S. 321.

[s] (Pa. 1846) A vendor retained title as security for unpaid purchase money. The vendee leased the premises under an agreement by the lessee to pay rent in goods manufactured on the premises. The vendee assigned his property in trust for creditors, and, the lessee becoming insolvent, his stock was sold to defendants, who took possession, agreeing to work up the stock and pay any sum in excess of cost and expenses to the vendor. Held that, in an action against defendants by the vendor, claiming a right to distrain for rent, the vendee was a competent witness for the vendor, his interest, if any, being adverse to the vendor, as tending to give rent to him which otherwise might come to the witness.—Helser v. Pott, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 179.

[t] (Pa. 1848) Where A. bargains certain chattels to B., but the contract is rescinded, B. is a competent witness for A. in trover against a third party for the chattels.—Stafford v. Ames, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 348.

[u] (Pa. 1858) Plaintiff sold certain property which was in the possession of defendant, who claimed a lien thereon and refused to deliver it to the vendee. Held, in an action therefor by plaintiff, that the vendee was a competent witness, since if defendant had a lien the witness could not get the property according to the contract of sale, but he could get its legal equivalent in damages, and therefore was not interested.—Tremlett v. Nicholas, 15 Leg. Int. 117.

[v] (Pa. 1863) Where, in an action of trespass by the owner of cattle wrongfully sold by his bailee, there have been several sales of the cattle by successive owners, an intermediate purchaser is a competent witness in the action of trespass.—Chamberlain v. Smith, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 431.

[w] (Pa. 1876) The assignee of defendant sued for ground rent as assignee of the land is not competent for plaintiff to prove nondelivery of the deed to him.—Leib v. Childs, 3 Clark, 70, 4 Pa. Law J. 415.

[x] (Vt. 1838) A grantee, by deed of warranty, of land previously attached, is not a competent witness against an attaching creditor in the suit in which such attachment is made.—Beach v. Packard, 10 Vt. 96, 33 Am. Dec. 185.

§ 272. Donor and donee.

[a] (Ala. 1848) A donor of property to his children is a competent witness as between them and his creditors, on the ground of interest, and is not disqualified by the act of 1845, rendering a mortgagor or defendant in execution incompetent in all cases of the trial of right of property, the action being detinue by the donees against the sheriff.—Easly v. Dye, 14 Ala. 158.

[b] (Ala. 1850) The donor of property is not liable to the donee on a failure of title, and has, therefore, no such interest in sustaining the title of the donee as will exclude him from testifying in his favor.—Jones' Ex'rs v. Hoskins, 18 Ala. 489.

[d] (Ky. 1838) Where the question was whether certain slaves were the property of an individual, or assets in his hands as administrator, a person was offered as a witness to prove that they were assets to whom the intestate, when insolvent, had given a slave. Held, that as a verdict that the slaves were assets might prevent the slave of the witness from being subjected to the debts of the intestate, the witness was interested, and was incompetent without a release.—Stephens' Adm'r v. Barnett, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 257.

[e] (Me. 1840) Where a defense to an action on a mortgage executed to decedent, but which had been transferred by decedent as a gift causa mortis, must necessarily be made for the benefit of the donees, they are incompetent to testify.—Borneman v. Sidlinger, 18 Me. 225.

[f] (Miss. 1845) A father who has made a deed of gift, with warranty, to his daughter, of slaves, for the consideration of love and affection and of $10 cash paid, is a competent witness in her behalf, in a trial of right of property between plaintiff in an execution, against his daughter's husband, who had levied on the slaves, and the daughter who was claiming them.—Moore v. McKie, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 238.

[g] (N. Y. 1827) A father made a parol gift of a gristmill to his son, who sued the owners of a mill below for flowing backwater so as to injure his mill. Held, that the father was a competent witness.—Stiles v. Hooker, 7 Cow. 266.

[h] (N. Y. 1843) The donee of a gift mortis causa, who has received and distributed it to other participants, is not a competent witness, in behalf of himself or the others interested therein, to sustain it, in a suit by the executors of the donor against the recipients of the fund.—Thorp v. Amos, 1 Sandf. Ch. 26.

[i] (Tenn. 1855) The donor of a slave, who had made to the donee a voluntary warranty of title, is a competent witness to support the same against a conflicting title.—Gunn v. Mason, 34 Tenn. (2 Sneed) 637.

§ 273. Landlord.

Parties to lease in general, see post, § 299.
Transfer, release or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 437.

[a] (Ala. 1858) In an action for forcible entry and detainer, commenced before the Code was adopted, a party under whom complainant holds as tenant, and against whom defendant claims the possession adversely, is an incompetent witness, from interest.—House v. Camp, 32 Ala. 541.

[b] (Cal. 1858) The lessor of plaintiff in trespass is a competent witness for him, if the lease does not bind him to protect the tenant from trespasses.—McCormick v. Bailey, 10 Cal. 230.

[c] (Me. 1849) The tenant in a writ of entry set up in defense that he occupied the land as the servant of another person, to whom the possession belonged. Held, that such other person was not a competent witness for the tenant.—Atkinson v. Snow, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 364.

[d] (N. Y. 1809) The lessor of plaintiff in ejectment cannot be a witness in the cause.—Jackson v. Ogden, 4 Johns. 140.

[e] (N. Y. 1841) In ejectment for dower, defendant, who holds a lease for years, with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, cannot call his landlord as a witness, though the landlord himself holds under a lease in fee, containing a like covenant, and reserving rent and a quarter sale.—Moak v. Johnson, 1 Hill, 99.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) In trespass brought against the sheriff by one whose goods have been taken on a distress warrant, the landlord is incompetent to testify on behalf of defendant, on account of interest; there being an implied contract on the part of the landlord to indemnify the person to whom he directs his warrant, if it should turn out that he had no authority to distrain.—Lord v. Brown, 5 Denio, 345.

[g] (N. C. 1858) A landlord who has leased his land to a tenant for a year, for a part of the crop, is a competent witness to prove a trespass on the land and damages by the destruction of the crop.—Sanderlin v. Shaw, 51 N. C. 225.

[h] (Pa. 1846) A lessor is an incompetent witness for the lessee in an action for obstructing him in using a right of way to repair a dam, part of the demised premises.—Dickson v. Boland, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 112.

[i] (Pa. 1861) In an action of trespass by the tenant of two joint owners against certain others of the owners, for taking and carrying away certain ores which he had mined, held, that the interest of the lessor who testified on the part of defendant against the objection of plaintiff, that he was not aware, when on the mine hills where plaintiff was mining at the time, that he claimed to do so under authority from him, was so balanced that it was not error to admit him as a witness.—Blewett v. Coleman, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 45.

[j] (S. C. 1847) The lessor of land is not a competent witness to prove his title, so as to enable his tenant to recover on his own demise, in an action of trespass.—Wilson v. Douglas, 2 Strob. 97.

§ 274. Tenant.

Parties to lease in general, see post, § 299.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 437.

[a, b] (Ala. 1854) When the vendee files a bill to compel a conveyance, and to enjoin the vendor's action at law to recover possession of the land, the tenant in possession, being directly interested in perpetuating the injunction, is not a competent witness for complainant.—Bradford v. Harper, 25 Ala. 337.

[d] (Ind. 1856) A tenant in possession offered by his landlord as a witness in ejectment is incompetent.—Stump v. Town of Attica, 7 Ind. 641.

[e] (Iowa, 1846) In an action for forcible entry and detainer, a witness who was offered to prove that he was mining on the ground in dispute under a parol lease from defendant should not have been rejected for interest, as the right of property did not come into the question.—McDaniel v. Spencely, Morris, 493.

[f] (Me. 1842) Where a landlord levies a distress on goods stored in a common warehouse of his tenant, in replevin by the owner of such goods, the tenant is a competent witness.—Owen v. Boyle, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 47.

[g] (Md. 1768) A tenant is a competent witness for his landlord, in an action for trespass committed on a part of the close, if occupied by the tenant.—Baker v. Pearce, 4 Har. & McH. 502.

[h] (Md. 1799) In assumpsit for use and occupation, one who disclosed by his own testimony that he was a tenant on the land of plaintiff, by virtue of an agreement between him and defendant, that he had paid all his rents to defendant and had receipts for the money paid, was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Grant v. Beall, 4 Har. & McH. 419.

[i] (N. Y. 1806) A tenant is a competent witness, as to interest, to disprove the title of his landlord.—Jackson v. Vredenbergh, 1 Johns. 159.

[j] (N. Y. 1814) In an action by a sheriff who has levied on the goods of a tenant, without notice of any rent being in arrear, against the landlord, who had distrained the same goods after the levy, the tenant is a competent witness.—Alexander v. Mahon, 11 Johns. 185.

[k] (N. Y. 1815) Where a defendant in ejectment sets up as a defense that he was not in possession when the declaration was served, his tenant, to whom he had leased the land, is not a competent witness to the fact, as he has an interest both in the question and the event.—Jackson v. Trusdell, 12 Johns. 246.

[m] (Ohio, 1843) Where, in an action on the case for erecting a milldam and overflowing plaintiff's land, defendant having been a lessee and given up possession after the commencement of the suit, a subsequent lessee not holding under defendant was a competent witness for him.—Barlitt v. Woodside, 1 Ohio Dec. 15.

[o] (Pa. 1829) Where it does not appear how long defendant in an ejectment has been in possession of the land in dispute, a lessee of plaintiff under an old lease, who has been out of possession 20 years or more, and against whom no suit has been brought, is, in the absence of further evidence showing liability for mesne profits, not incompetent as a witness for plaintiff on the ground of interest.—Unger v. Wiggins, 1 Rawle, 331.

[q] (Pa. 1848) A lessee of a mine had agreed to take and pay for a certain number of loads of ore, sold out to a third person, and the latter made certain agreements with the lessor, which he performed. Held that, in an action by the lessor against the original lessee on his agreements, such assignee was a competent witness for defendant.—Fisher v. Milliken, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 111, 49 Am. Dec. 497.

[r] (Pa. 1849) In case for a nuisance, by reason of the erection of a dam, the tenant of the mill, to which the dam is appurtenant, is a competent witness for defendant.—Detweiler v. Groff, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 376.

[rr] (Pa. 1860) In a contest between the landlord and the execution creditor of the tenant, as to the distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale of the tenant's goods, found on the demised premises, the tenant is a competent witness to prove the terms of the demise.—Appeal of Collins, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 83.

[s] (Pa. 1867) In an action for injury to the reversion, involving title to coal and other minerals under the land, a lessee of the surface land has no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy, and is a competent witness.—Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Neel, 54 Pa. (4 P. F. Smith) 9.

[t] (S. C. 1834) A tenant is a competent witness, between his landlord and a third person, to prove the contract for rent.—O'Farrell v. Nance, 2 Hill, 484.

[u] (S. C. 1854) In an action qu. cl. fr. a cropper or overseer who was to receive for his services a share of the crop planted in the field where the trespass was committed is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Carter v. Pinchbeck, 7 Rich. Law, 356.

§ 275. Mortgagor.

Parties to mortgage in general, see post, § 299.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 507.

Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see post, § 308.

Transfer, release or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 438.

Usurious transactions, see post, § 304.

[a] (U. S. 1819) In a suit between contending mortgagees, the mortgagor is not incompetent for interest as a witness for the first mortgagee to identify the goods described in the first mortgage.—Wagner v. Watts, Fed. Cas. No. 17,040 [2 Cranch, C. C. 169].

[b] (Ala. 1847) The grantor, in a deed of trust containing no reservation or condition for the benefit of the grantor, is not a mortgagor within the terms of the act of 1845, excluding mortgagors, or defendants in execution, from being witnesses in claim suits, the individual not being the defendant in execution, and the property being levied on as that of a third person.—Frow v. Downman, 11 Ala. 880.

[c] (Ala. 1867) If land is mortgaged with a power of sale to indemnify the mortgagee as surety on a note of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee, having paid the note, sells the land under the power, and afterwards sues the vendor of the mortgagor for breach of covenant of warranty, the mortgagor has no interest in the suit and is a competent witness and not a necessary party.—Gunter v. Williams, 40 Ala. 561.

[d] (Conn. 1812) A., being insolvent, conveyed to B. a parcel of land with covenants of warranty and seisin; B., at the same time, executed to A. a deed of defeasance, stipulating that if A. should pay a certain debt, for the payment of which B. had become surety, the land should be reconveyed. The debt was discharged by A. and the defeasance was canceled. At the same time plaintiff became bound as surety for A. on a certain contract, and to indemnify him on account of his bond B., in pursuance of an agreement between A. and plaintiff, conveyed the land to plaintiff and entered into a written agreement to reconvey the land to A. on condition that he would indemnify him against his bond. A. failed to indemnify plaintiff, who was compelled to pay on account of his bond a larger sum than the value of the land. A. continued in the use and occupation of the land without paying rent, and some years after mortgaged the land. Plaintiff brought an action of disseisin against a creditor who claimed title to the land under a levy of an execution. Held, that as it appeared from the evidence that plaintiff had been compelled to pay him a larger sum than the value of the land, A. was not an incompetent witness in his behalf on account of any supposed right to the equity of redemption therein.—Clark v. Johnson, 5 Day, 373.

[e] (Ill. 1849) In an action on two notes, by the assignees thereof, plaintiffs introduced a witness, who stated that he had executed a mortgage of his real estate to plaintiffs, to secure a debt of the assignors of the notes to plaintiffs, which same debt was also secured by the assignment of the notes in suit, as collateral security, that the amount, if any, recovered on the notes, would go in payment of such debt, but that the assignors were liable to indemnify him in case he should be obliged to pay anything by reason of his mortgage, and that he was in no other way interested in the event of the suit. Held, that the witness was competent.—Curtenius v. Wheeler, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 462.

[f] (Ky. 1825) In an action by a mortgagee to recover the mortgaged property from the vendee of the mortgagor, the mortgagor is competent to prove the consideration of the mortgage, and that it remains unsatisfied.—Miller v. Dillon, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 73.

[g] (Me. 1825) The mortgagor, though not liable on any covenants in his deed, cannot be a witness for the mortgagee in an action brought to recover possession of the land, where the possession sought by the demandant would be a payment, pro tanto, of the debt.—Howard v. Chadbourne, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 461.

[h] (Mass. 1835) A mortgagee, being desirous of selling the mortgaged land, obtained from the mortgagor a quitclaim deed thereof, and the wife of the mortgagor released her dower. The mortgagee then executed a contract, by which he agreed that, if he should realize from a sale of the land the sum of $200 more than the amount due him from the mortgagor, he would pay the sum of $100 to the plaintiff, for the benefit of the wife and children of the mortgagor. In an action by plaintiff, on this contract, to recover the sum of $100, held, that the mortgagor was not an incompetent witness for plaintiff on the ground of interest, although the wife had died before the action was commenced.—Needham v. Sanger, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 500.

[i] (Mich. 1860) C. mortgaged to A., and afterwards sold his equity of redemption to D. A. brought a bill to foreclose, and D. filed a bill to restrain the foreclosure. Held, that C. was not a competent witness, since the object of his testimony was to subject the land to the payment of his personal liabilities.—Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 Mich. 28.

[j] (N. J. 1854) W., the mortgagee of S., assigned the bonds secured by the mortgage to B., and to secure them mortgaged the land conveyed in mortgage by S. to him, and certain other land; this mortgage was recorded in 1847, and in 1848 a prior warranty deed of part of the mortgaged land by W. to C., was recorded. Held, that W. was not a competent witness to prove that B. had notice of the sale to C.—Blair v. Ward, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 119.

[m] (Pa. 1809) The mortgagor is a competent witness to support title denied thereunder.—Gratz's Lessee v. Ewalt, 2 Bin. 95; Cain's Lessee v. Henderson, Id. 108.

[n] (Pa. 1840) A mortgagor is an incompetent witness in an action between the purchaser at sheriff's sale of the land mortgaged and an assignee of one bound by the mortgage, which involves the liability of the purchaser to pay the bond, or, having paid it by mistake, to recover it back.—Espy v. Allison, 9 Watts, 462.

[o] (Pa. 1848) A mortgagor, who has confessed judgment on a scl. fa., is not a competent witness for plaintiff in a sci. fa on the mortgage against a terre-tenant.—Hartz v. Woods, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 471.

[p] (Pa. 1848) Where the assignee of a mortgage brings ejectment against a stranger, the mortgagor is a competent witness for defendant, to show that a part of the land did not belong to him, and was included in the mortgage by mistake.—Mott v. Clark, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 399, 49 Am. Dec. 566.

[q] (Vt. 1826) The fact that a mortgagor, after granting to another the equity of redemption, has attached the same on mesne process, in an action still pending, as the property of his grantee, does not affect his competency as a witness for such grantee in a suit by the assignee of the mortgage against the grantee to foreclose the equity of redemption.—Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aikens, 138.

[r] (Va. 1836) Land, being subject to two successive mortgages, the first being unrecorded, was sold under the provisions of the second mortgage, the second mortgagee becoming the purchaser. In a proceeding by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor and second mortgagee, to enforce his mortgage, the mortgagor is not a competent witness to prove notice of the first mortgage to the second mortgagee.—Sitlington v. Brown, 7 Leigh, 271.

§ 276. —— Balance of interest as between adverse parties.

[b] (Ala. 1847) In a suit between the mortgagee of slaves and a subsequent vendee of the mortgagor, the latter is a competent witness, enable his tenant to recover on his own demise, in an action of trespass.—Wilson v. Douglas, 2 Strob. 97.

§ 274. Tenant.

Parties to lease in general, see post, § 299.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 437.

[a, b] (Ala. 1854) When the vendee files a bill to compel a conveyance, and to enjoin the vendor's action at law to recover possession of the land, the tenant in possession, being directly interested in perpetuating the injunction, is not a competent witness for complainant.—Bradford v. Harper, 25 Ala. 337.

[e] (Iowa, 1846) In an action for forcible entry and detainer, a witness who was offered to prove that he was mining on the ground in dispute under a parol lease from defendant should not have been rejected for interest, as the right of property did not come into the question.—McDaniel v. Spencely, Morris, 493.

[f] (Me. 1842) Where a landlord levies a distress on goods stored in a common warehouse of his tenant, in replevin by the owner of such goods, the tenant is a competent witness.—Owen v. Boyle, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 47.

[h] (Md. 1799) In assumpsit for use and occupation, one who disclosed by his own testimony that he was a tenant on the land of plaintiff, by virtue of an agreement between him and defendant, that he had paid all his rents to defendant and had receipts for the money paid, was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Grant v. [i] (N. Y. 1806) A tenant is a competent witness, as to interest, to disprove the title of his landlord.—Jackson v. Vredenbergh, 1 Johns. 159.

[j] (N. Y. 1814) In an action by a sheriff who has levied on the goods of a tenant, without notice of any rent being in arrear, against the landlord, who had distrained the same goods after the levy, the tenant is a competent witness.—Alexander v. Mahon, 11 Johns. 185.

[k] (N. Y. 1815) Where a defendant in ejectment sets up as a defense that he was not in possession when the declaration was served, his tenant, to whom he had leased the land, is not a competent witness to the fact, as he has an interest both in the question and the event.—Jackson v. Trusdell, 12 Johns. 246.

[m] (Ohio, 1843) Where, in an action on the case for erecting a milldam and overflowing plaintiff's land, defendant having been a lessee and given up possession after the commencement of the suit, a subsequent lessee not holding under defendant was a competent witness for him.—Barlitt v. Woodside, 1 Ohio Dec. 15.

[o] (Pa. 1829) Where it does not appear how long defendant in an ejectment has been in possession of the land in dispute, a lessee of plaintiff under an old lease, who has been out of possession 20 years or more, and against whom no suit has been brought, is, in the absence of further evidence showing liability for mesne profits, not incompetent as a witness for plaintiff on the ground of interest.—Unger v. Wiggins, 1 Rawle, 331.

[q] (Pa. 1848) A lessee of a mine had agreed to take and pay for a certain number of loads of ore, sold out to a third person, and the latter made certain agreements with the lessor, which he performed. Held that, in an action by the lessor against the original lessee on his agreements, such assignee was a competent witness for defendant.—Fisher v. Milliken, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 111, 49 Am. Dec. 497.

[r] (Pa. 1849) In case for a nuisance, by reason of the erection of a dam, the tenant of the mill, to which the dam is appurtenant, is a competent witness for defendant.—Detweiler v. Groff, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 376.

[rr] (Pa. 1860) In a contest between the landlord and the execution creditor of the tenant, as to the distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale of the tenant's goods, found on the demised premises, the tenant is a competent witness to prove the terms of the demise.—Appeal of Collins, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 83.

[s] (Pa. 1867) In an action for injury to the reversion, involving title to coal and other minerals under the land, a lessee of the surface land has no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy, and is a competent witness.—Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Neel, 54 Pa. (4 P. F. Smith) 9.

[t] (S. C. 1834) A tenant is a competent witness, between his landlord and a third person, to prove the contract for rent.—O'Farrell v. Nance, 2 Hill, 484.

[u] (S. C. 1854) In an action qu. cl. fr. a cropper or overseer who was to receive for his services a share of the crop planted in the field where the trespass was committed is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Carter v. Pinchbeck, 7 Rich. Law, 356.

§ 275. Mortgagor.

Parties to mortgage in general, see post, § 299.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 507.

Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see post, § 308.

Transfer, release or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 438.

Usurious transactions, see post, § 304.

[a] (U. S. 1819) In a suit between contending mortgagees, the mortgagor is not incompetent for interest as a witness for the first mortgagee to identify the goods described in the first mortgage.—Wagner v. Watts, Fed. Cas. No. 17,040 [2 Cranch, C. C. 169].

[b] (Ala. 1847) The grantor, in a deed of trust containing no reservation or condition for the benefit of the grantor, is not a mortgagor within the terms of the act of 1845, excluding mortgagors, or defendants in execution, from being witnesses in claim suits, the individual not being the defendant in execution, and the property being levied on as that of a third person.—Frow v. Downman, 11 Ala. 880.

surety on a note of the mortgagor, and the mortgagee, having paid the note, sells the land under the power, and afterwards sues the vendor of the mortgagor for breach of covenant of warranty, the mortgagor has no interest in the suit and is a competent witness and not a necessary party.—Gunter v. Williams, 40 Ala. 561.

[d] (Conn. 1812) A., being insolvent, conveyed to B. a parcel of land with covenants of warranty and seisin; B., at the same time, executed to A. a deed of defeasance, stipulating that if A. should pay a certain debt, for the payment of which B. had become surety, the land should be reconveyed. The debt was discharged by A. and the defeasance was canceled. At the same time plaintiff became bound as surety for A. on a certain contract, and to indemnify him on account of his bond B., in pursuance of an agreement between A. and plaintiff, conveyed the land to plaintiff and entered into a written agreement to reconvey the land to A. on condition that he would indemnify him against his bond. A. failed to indemnify plaintiff, who was compelled to pay on account of his bond a larger sum than the value of the land. A. continued in the use and occupation of the land without paying rent, and some years after mortgaged the land. Plaintiff brought an action of disseisin against a creditor who claimed title to the land under a levy of an execution. Held, that as it appeared from the evidence that plaintiff had been compelled to pay him a larger sum than the value of the land, A. was not an incompetent witness in his behalf on account of any supposed right to the equity of redemption therein.—Clark v. Johnson, 5 Day, 373.

[e] (Ill. 1849) In an action on two notes, by the assignees thereof, plaintiffs introduced a witness, who stated that he had executed a mortgage of his real estate to plaintiffs, to secure a debt of the assignors of the notes to plaintiffs, which same debt was also secured by the assignment of the notes in suit, as collateral security, that the amount, if any, recovered on the notes, would go in payment of such debt, but that the assignors were liable to indemnify him in case he should be obliged to pay anything by reason of his mortgage, and that he was in no other way interested in the event of the suit. Held, that the witness was competent.—Curtenius v. Wheeler, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 462.

[f] (Ky. 1825) In an action by a mortgagee to recover the mortgaged property from the vendee of the mortgagor, the mortgagor is competent to prove the consideration of the mortgage, and that it remains unsatisfied.—Miller v. Dillon, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 73.

[g] (Me. 1825) The mortgagor, though not liable on any covenants in his deed, cannot be a witness for the mortgagee in an action brought to recover possession of the land, where the possession sought by the demandant would be a payment, pro tanto, of the debt.—Howard v. Chadbourne, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 461.

[h] (Mass. 1835) A mortgagee, being desirous of selling the mortgaged land, obtained from the mortgagor a quitclaim deed thereof, and the wife of the mortgagor released her dower. The mortgagee then executed a contract, by which he agreed that, if he should realize from a sale of the land the sum of $200 more than the amount due him from the mortgagor, he would pay the sum of $100 to the plaintiff, for the benefit of the wife and children of the mortgagor. In an action by plaintiff, on this contract, to recover the sum of $100, held, that the mortgagor was not an incompetent witness for plaintiff on the ground of interest, although the wife had died before the action was commenced.—Needham v. Sanger, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 500.

[i] (Mich. 1860) C. mortgaged to A., and afterwards sold his equity of redemption to D. A. brought a bill to foreclose, and D. filed a bill to restrain the foreclosure. Held, that C. was not a competent witness, since the object of his testimony was to subject the land to the payment of his personal liabilities.—Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 Mich. 28.

[j] (N. J. 1854) W., the mortgagee of S., assigned the bonds secured by the mortgage to B., and to secure them mortgaged the land conveyed in mortgage by S. to him, and certain other land; this mortgage was recorded in 1847, and in 1848 a prior warranty deed of part of the mortgaged land by W. to C., was recorded. Held, that W. was not a competent witness to prove that B. had notice of the sale to C.—Blair v. Ward, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 119.

[m] (Pa. 1809) The mortgagor is a competent witness to support title denied thereunder.—Gratz's Lessee v. Ewalt, 2 Bin. 95; Cain's Lessee v. Henderson, Id. 108.

[n] (Pa. 1840) A mortgagor is an incompetent witness in an action between the purchaser at sheriff's sale of the land mortgaged and an assignee of one bound by the mortgage, which involves the liability of the purchaser to pay the bond, or, having paid it by mistake, to recover it back.—Espy v. Allison, 9 Watts, 462.

[o] (Pa. 1848) A mortgagor, who has confessed judgment on a sci. fa., is not a competent witness for plaintiff in a sci. fa on the mortgage against a terre-tenant.—Hartz v. Woods, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 471.

[p] (Pa. 1848) Where the assignee of a mortgage brings ejectment against a stranger, the mortgagor is a competent witness for defendant, to show that a part of the land did not belong to him, and was included in the mortgage by mistake.—Mott v. Clark, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 399, 49 Am. Dec. 566.

[q] (Vt. 1826) The fact that a mortgagor, after granting to another the equity of redemption, has attached the same on mesne process, in an action still pending, as the property of his grantee, does not affect his competency as a witness for such grantee in a suit by the assignee of the mortgage against the grantee to foreclose the equity of redemption.—Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aikens, 138.

[r] (Va. 1836) Land, being subject to two successive mortgages, the first being unrecorded, was sold under the provisions of the second mortgage, the second mortgagee becoming the purchaser. In a proceeding by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor and second mortgagee, to enforce his mortgage, the mortgagor is not a competent witness to prove notice of the first mortgage to the second mortgagee.—Sitlington v. Brown, 7 Leigh, 271.

§ 276. —— Balance of interest as between adverse parties.

as his interest is balanced.—Dearing v. Windham, 11 Ala. 204.

[c] (Md. 1864) Upon an issue to determine the respective rights of prior and subsequent mortgagees, the mortgagor is a competent witness.—Willard v. Ramsburg, 22 Md. 206.

[d] (Mich. 1863) In a contest between two mortgages, as to the priority of their respective mortgages, the mortgagor might have been a witness, as to the fact of notice, under Chancery Rule 55, before parties to suits were made generally competent by the act of 1861.—Wilcox v. Hill, 11 Mich. 256.

[e] (Mo. 1841) The grantor of property in trust to pay a debt due from him to a third person is not competent to identify the property in an action of trespass by the trustee against an attaching officer. He has a residuary interest in the property, so that his interest is not balanced.—Dameron v. Williams, 7 Mo. 138.

[f] (Mo. 1843) The mortgagor is a competent witness for the mortgagee in a suit against a purchaser of the mortgaged goods, by a sale on execution against the mortgagor, subsequent to the mortgage.—King v. Bailey, 8 Mo. 332.

[g] (N. H. 1861) On the question of the priority of mortgages of even date, the mortgagor is a competent witness.—Gilman v. Moody, 43 N. H. 239.

[h] (N. Y. 1829) The mortgagor of a vessel is a competent witness for the mortgagee, who is sued as owner, to show the nature of the transfer and to prove that a conveyance apparently absolute was in fact conditional, as the interest of the witness is balanced.—Ring v. Franklin, 2 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Hall) 9.

[i] (S. C. 1844) A mortgagor is a competent witness, as between the mortgagee and a judgment creditor, to prove the want of consideration for the mortgage.—Lamar's Ex'rs v. Simpson, 1 Rich. Eq. 71, 42 Am. Dec. 345.

§ 277. Mortgagee.

Parties to mortgage in general, see post, § 299.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 507.
Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see post, § 308.
Transfer, release or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 438.
Usurious transactions, see post, § 304.

[a] (U. S. 1847) Where a part owner of a vessel mortgaged his share to A., he remaining in possession, and a suit was brought against the other part owners by persons who had furnished copper for fitting out the vessel, A. was a competent witness for defendants.—Macy v. De Wolf, Fed. Cas. No. 8,933 [3 Woodb. & M. 193].

[b] (Me. 1853) In a writ of entry by one who has mortgaged the land to secure a note, the mortgagee may be a witness for the mortgagor.—Woodman v. Skeetup, 35 Me. 464.

[c] (Md. 1861) A deed of trust was given by H. to secure the liability of M. and B. on certain notes. In an action brought against M. by the holder of a note drawn by H. and M. in favor of B., and by him indorsed, held, that B. had no such interest under the trust deed as would disqualify him from being a witness in M.'s favor.—Whiteford v. Munroe, 17 Md. 135; Walters v. Same, 17 Md. 154, 77 Am. Dec. 328.

[d] (Mass. 1832) In an action for use and occupation, brought by a mortgagor, the mortgagee is a competent witness to prove that he entered for condition broken, and then leased the land to defendant, and that the mortgage had been foreclosed.—Plympton v. Moore, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 191.

[e] (Mich. 1860) C. mortgaged to A. and afterwards conveyed to D. by quitclaim. A. filed a bill against C. to foreclose the mortgage given to him by C. D.'s assignee filed a bill to restrain the foreclosure, or to redeem, should the mortgage be upheld. Held, that A. was not a competent witness; since he claimed to own the mortgage in controversy, there was no part of the case in which he was not interested.—Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 Mich. 28.

[f] (N. H. 1845) A mortgagee of previously attached property is so far interested in the suit in which the attachment was made as to be incompetent as a witness therein.—Rideout v. Newton, 17 N. H. 71.

[g] (N. H. 1855) An action of trespass de bonis was brought by F. against R., who had taken personal property, mortgaged to S., by direction of the mortgagee. Held, that the mortgagee was a competent witness for R. and was not disqualified by reason of interest.—Fuller v. Rounceville, 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 512.

[h] (N. Y. 1837) The mortgagee of a policy of insurance mortgaged as security for a debt was a competent witness to prove the mortgage, as against the agent who effected the policy, and who had a lien upon the amount which should be received by him on the policy, for a general balance of accounts.—Rogers v. Traders Ins. Co., 6 Paige, 583.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) A. applied to B. to obtain a loan from his father-in-law, C. B. negotiated a loan of $2,600, all of which was advanced by C.; but B. furnished his own notes for $600, as a part of the sum to A., and took from A. another mortgage for $300 for his trouble in doing the business. Held that, in a suit by C. to foreclose the mortgage, B. was a competent witness for C.—Hetfield v. Newton, 3 Sandf. Ch. 564.

[j] (Pa. 1840) A mortgagee is an incompetent witness in an action between the purchaser at sheriff's sale of the land mortgaged and an assignee of one bound by the mortgage, which involves the liability of the purchaser to pay the bond, or having paid it by mistake, to recover it back.—Espy v. Allison, 9 Watts, 462.

[k] (Pa. 1862) A mortgagee who is assignor of a mortgage is a competent witness, in an action on it, to prove that only part of the amount for which it was given was ever received by the mortgagor, and that the equitable plaintiff took it with knowledge of that fact; though the original mortgagee, the nominal plaintiff, was an indorsee of the note, which the mortgage had been given to secure.—Shrom v. Williams, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 520.

§ 278. Bailor or bailee and consignor or consignee.

[a] (U. S. 1850) A. consigned certain goods to B., for the use of C., in payment of a pre-existing debt to C., and while they were in the hands of B. they were attached by another creditor of A. Held, that A. was a competent witness for C. in a suit between C. and such other creditor for the goods.—Grove v. Brien, 49 U. S. (8 How.) 429, 12 L. Ed. 1142.

[b] (U. S. 1802) Possession of the goods by a witness does not create such an interest in the witness as to render his testimony inadmissible in favor of the party under whom he holds the possession.—Hamilton v. Russell, Fed. Cas. No. 5,989 [1 Cranch, C. C. 97].

[c] (U. S. 1841) A consignee who has delivered goods to the owner without the payment of freight is not an incompetent witness, as being interested in a suit by the master against the owner of the goods to recover freight.—Bork v. Norton, Fed. Cas. No. 1,659 [2 McLean, 422].

[d] (Ala. 1852) A bailee, who is guilty of a conversion, by selling or exchanging the property committed to him, is a competent witness for the bailor in detinue for its recovery, his interest being exactly balanced.—Oliver v. McClellan, 21 Ala. 675.

[e] (Iowa, 1849) The bailee of property is a competent witness for the bailor in an action to recover the property from one who took it forcibly from the bailee.—Wright v. Ross, 2 G. Greene, 266.

[f] (La. 1859) The oath of the party cannot be received to prove the deposit of his baggage or other articles of value at an inn.—Pope v. Hall, 14 La. Ann. 324.

[g] (Me. 1837) A bailor may be a witness for the bailee, if he has no interest in the event of the suit.—Maine Stage Co. v. Longley, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 444.

[h] (Mass. 1807) A consignee of goods on his own account, refusing to receive them, and afterwards selling them as agent of the consignors, is a competent witness for the consignors, in an action by them against the purchasers for the price of the goods, although he had indorsed the bill of lading in blank.—Brown v. Babcock, 3 Mass. 29.

[i] (N. H. 1818) In an action of trover by the bailee of a chattel against a stranger, the bailor is not a competent witness for the bailee to prove the general property in himself.—Chesley v. St. Clair, 1 N. H. 189.

[j] (N. H. 1819) If a sheriff, by mistake, sell the property of A. on an execution against B., which property has been consigned to B., and then return the execution satisfied to the amount of the sale, B. is still a competent witness for A. in an action against the sheriff.—Whiting v. Bradley, 2 N. H. 79.

[k] (N. H. 1820) A commission merchant is not answerable to the owner for goods taken by an officer as his own property; and he is a competent witness for the owner in an action against the officer.—Jones v. Sinclair, 2 N. H. 319, 9 Am. Dec. 75.

[l] (N. J. 1795) A person to whom goods are delivered is not a competent witness to charge the person in whose name he received them.—Townley v. Wooly, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 377.

[m] (Pa. 1846) The bailee of horses, which are driven by one hired by him, is a competent witness for the owner, in an action for an injury to them while in his employ, though the question is whether the injury resulted from the negligence of the person driving them, or that of defendant, for negligence cannot be assumed to disqualify a witness.—Smith v. Seward, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 342.

[n] (Pa. 1849) Where the title to a chattel is in issue between an alleged bailee of it for use without pay, and one who claims under a judicial sale of it as the property of the bailee, the bailor is not a competent witness for the bailee.—Heitzman v. Divil, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 264.

[o] (S. C. 1807) In an action for goods sold, plaintiff's book of original entries was produced in evidence, from which it appeared that the goods were delivered to one W.; and W., being produced as a witness to prove that the goods which were charged to defendant were received by him on account of defendant, and were applied to defendant's use, held, that he was competent, though objected to by plaintiff on the ground of interest.—Taylor v. Dickey, 2 Brev. 131.

[p] (Tex. 1860) Where goods in the hands of a bailee have been levied on as the property of that bailee, he is a competent witness to prove the owner's title.—Walmsley v. Hubbard, 24 Tex. 612.

[q] (Vt. 1801) In trover for a chattel, plaintiff offered as a witness one to whom he lent the chattel, to prove that it was by him eloigned and sold to defendant's vendor. Held, that he was incompetent.—Pierce v. Hinsdall, 1 Tyler, 153.

[r] (Vt. 1833) Where A., a common carrier, received money to deliver to B., another carrier, for him to deliver to C., who sues A. for the loss, held that, after evidence by A. to show that he had delivered to B., C. could not call B. to disprove the delivery without a release.—Denison v. Hibbard, 5 Vt. 496.

§ 279. Pledgor and pledgee.

[a] (U. S. 1842) The owner of a ship, who has pledged her to two different parties to secure debts due each of them from him, stands indifferent in point of interest as between them, and is a competent witness in a suit involving their respective claims upon the vessel.—Stalker v. The Henry Kneeland, Fed. Cas. No. 13,282.

[b] (Ga. 1861) One who holds notes sued on as collateral for the payment of a debt due him from plaintiff is an interested witness, and incompetent to testify.—Harbin v. Roberts, 33 Ga. 45.

[c] (Mass. 1816) The assignee of a chose in action, which has been assigned as a pledge to secure a debt due from the assignor to the assignee, is a competent witness for the assignor, in an action in his name, to recover the debt assigned for the use of the assignee.—Locke v. North American Ins. Co., 13 Mass. 61.

[d] (Pa. 1858) The witness held a sawmill by lease to indemnify him against liability on paper signed with the lessor, but if taken up by the lessor then he was not to be the lessee of the mill, but to be paid for the amount of sawing done by the lessor. Held, that he was a competent witness for the lessor for lumber sawed by him, the pledge of the mill having been redeemed by the extinguishment of the liability for which it had been pledged.—Bolard v. Doughty, 2 Grant, Cas. 202.

§ 280. Hirer of slave.

[a] (Ala. 1846) One who had purchased a slave, paid the principal part of the purchase money, and afterwards rescinded the contract and retained possession by a contract of hire, is a competent witness for the vendor, in a suit by him against one who purchased the slave at a sale by execution, as the property of the witness. His competency does not depend upon the fact of the vendor having repaid the purchase money upon the rescission of the contract.—Babcock v. Huntington, 9 Ala. 869.

[b] (Ala. 1853) When detinue is brought against a bailee of a slave, his bailor is not a competent witness for him without a release; and the fact that the slave was hired for his victuals and clothes only does not affect the principle.—Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 9, 60 Am. Dec. 442.

[c] (Ala. 1855) Where the hirer of a slave lets him to another, and the slave dies while in the service of the second hirer, and the owner sues the first hirer for negligence, if the complaint is so framed as to authorize a recovery only for his negligence, the second hirer is a competent witness for him.—Alabama & T. R. R. Co. v. Burke, 27 Ala. 535.

[d] (Ala. 1861) Where separate actions of trover are brought against the hirer and subhirer of a slave, by the owner, for a conversion, by reason of the unauthorized subletting, the subhirer is a competent witness, in the suit against the hirer in behalf of the owner.—Gimon v. Baldwin, 38 Ala. 60.

[e] (Tex. 1849) A. let a slave to B. and C. Being wounded while in the possession of B. he was attended by D., a physician, who sued A. for his professional services, and offered C. as a witness to prove that it was agreed that A.

should pay for medical aid, if needed. Held, that C. was a competent witness.—McGee v. Currie, 4 Tex. 217.

§ 281. Adjoining owners.

[b] (La. 1849) On an appeal by a landholder from the report of a jury, appointed to lay out a road, assessing damages for the injury sustained, the members of the jury who laid out the road and assessed the damages were not incompetent as witnesses on the ground that being proprietors of adjoining lands they were interested, but the objection went to their credibility.—Frosard v. Police Jury of St. Landry, 3 La. Ann. 560.

[c] (Md. 1790) A witness is competent to establish the running of certain lines, as located on the plots filed in the action, though the same lines are the lines of his own land, and though the location he was called to prove would lessen his quantity of land.—King v. Tarlton, 2 Har. & McH. 473.

[d] (Pa. 1888) A person not a party to a suit, nor liable for the costs, nor claiming title to any of the land in controversy, nor having any interest in the result of the case, is not incompetent on the ground of interest, though he may be the owner of a tract which, with the one in suit, had formerly formed one tract, the division of which is one of the questions in controversy.—Berg v. McLafferty, 12 Atl. 460.

[e] (Va. 1848) A witness was called by demandant in a writ of right to testify as to the boundaries of the land in controversy. He held under a patent which called to adjoin the land embraced in the patent under which demandant claimed; and if that land should be located according to demandant's pretensions, the land of the witness would not be included; but if it should be located according to the pretensions of the tenant, it would cover a part of the witness' land. Held, that he was, nevertheless, a competent witness.—Masters v. Varner's Ex'rs, 5 Grat. 168, 50 Am. Dec. 114.

§ 282. Riparian owners.

[a] (Conn. 1845) Plaintiff, in an action for the diversion of a watercourse, offered as a witness for him the owner of land bordering on the same stream, and lying between the plaintiff's land and the place where the water so diverted was returned into its natural course, who was objected to on the ground of interest. Held, that such person was a competent witness, his interest being only in the question and not in the event of the suit.—Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 Am. Dec. 739.

[b] (Me. 1827) In a prosecution by complaint against the owner of part of a milldam, for flowing lands, the owner of another part of the same dam, in severalty, is a competent witness for the respondent.—Clement v. Durgin, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 9.

[c] (Me. 1834) In an action of trespass on the case against one for an injury caused by the flowing of the waters of a certain pond, by a dam built by defendant at the head of a small stream forming the outlet of the pond, on which stream was a succession of mills, held, that the owners of the mills below were competent witnesses for defendant, though they participated, in common with him, in the benefit resulting from the erection of the dam.—Inhabitants of China v. Southwick, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 341.

[d] (Nev. 1865) In a suit to recover damages for the diversion of water, the complaint proceeded on the two grounds of a prior appropriation of the stream by plaintiff, and of defendant's diversion of the water from its natural channel. Held, that the owner of land on the stream above plaintiff was a competent witness for him, although the witness had an interest in the unobstructed running of the stream.—Geller v. Huffaker, 1 Nev. 22.

[e] (N. H. 1843) In an action for flowing land, defendant asserted a right to flow the land of plaintiff and others by means of a pond created by a dam attached to an ancient mill site. Held, that the owners of other lands, flowed in the same manner, were competent witnesses for plaintiff to rebut the evidence of defendant's right, as they were interested in the question only, and not in the event, of the suit, nor in the record.—Sargent v. Gutterson, 13 N. H. 467.

§ 283. Interest in patent.

Transfer, release or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 439.

[a] (U. S. 1822) In an action involving the validity of a patent, a witness who has in use a machine like that of plaintiff is not an incompetent witness merely because he would be entitled to continue the use of his machine if plaintiff's patent was declared void, as such interest is an interest in the question and not in the immediate event of the suit.—Evans v. Eaton, 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 356, 5 L. Ed. 472.

[b] (U. S. 1822) In a suit for infringement of a patent, a witness who uses a machine resembling that of plaintiff is not an incompetent witness for defendant because the patent of plaintiff may be defective, as the court cannot, in the case in which he is offered as a witness, declare the patent void so as to benefit a witness, though a verdict might be given for defendant on the ground that plaintiff was not the original inventor of the machine.—Evans v. Eaton, 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 356, 5 L. Ed. 472, affirming (1818) Fed. Cas. No. 4,560 [3 Wash. C. C. 443, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 193]; Same v. Hettick (1818) Fed. Cas. No. 4,562 [3 Wash. C. C. 408, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 166] affirmed (1822) 20 U. S. (7 Wheat.) 453, 5 L. Ed. 496.

[c] (U. S. 1818) In a suit for infringement of a patent, a witness who uses a machine resembling that of plaintiff is incompetent for defendant.—Evans v. Eaton. Fed. Cas. No. 4,560 [3 Wash. C. C. 443, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 193].

[d] (U. S. 1818) Where a verdict in a suit for infringement of a patent will not avoid the patent, a person using a machine similar to that used by defendant is not incompetent as a witness for defendant.—Evans v. Hettick, Fed. Cas. No. 4,562 [3 Wash. C. C. 408, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 166].

[e] (U. S. 1827) In an action for the infringement of a patent right, defendant, in order to prove that plaintiff was not the original inventor, gave in evidence a prior patent to A. for a machine alleged to have been the same in principle with plaintiff's, and his assignment of the same to defendant, and offered A. as a witness to prove the priority of the invention. Held, that A. was a competent witness, having no interest in the event of the suit.—Treadwell v. Bladen, Fed. Cas. No. 14,154 [4 Wash. C. C. 703, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 531].

[f] (U. S. 1848) An action for the infringement of a patent within the county of Albany, N. Y., was brought by parties claiming the exclusive right to the patent in that county. Held, that a party who was possessed of the exclusive right to the patent in several counties in the state of New York, but who had no interest in the patent in the county of Albany, and no interest in the suit in which he was called, was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Buck v. Hermance, Fed. Cas. No. 2,081 [1 Blatchf. 322, 1 Fish. Pat. Rep. 219].

[g] (U. S. 1853) An assignee of a patent, who understands that he has acquired the right to use an improvement thereto, is interested, and therefore incompetent to testify for the patentee on an interference to which the latter is a party, and which involves priority of invention of the improvement in question.—Cressler v. Custer, Fed. Cas. No. 3,388 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 216].

[h] (U. S. 1860) Upon the question of priority of invention in an interference case, one of the alleged inventors is not a competent witness in his own behalf, nor is another person, who is to have an interest in the patent if issued.—Appleton v. Chambers, Fed. Cas. No. 497a.

[i] (Conn. 1813) A., B., and C. were equally interested in certain inventions, as partners, for which they had severally obtained patents. A. through fraud and deceit induced one D. to purchase their right of using such inventions, the latter giving his notes in payment therefor, which were subsequently assigned by A. to one E., both D. and E. being ignorant of any fraud on the part of A. Afterwards one F. (who had previously bought of A., B., and C. the right of using these inventions within certain limits) made a contract with B., assigning to him one-half of his said interest, by which F. was to advance money to B. to enable him to introduce these inventions; B. was to give his personal services, and F. to bear B.'s expenses, in consideration of which B. assigned to F. one-half his interest in said inventions within certain other limits. Each party was to have full power; each was to account to the other; the profit, if any, after deducting F.'s advances, was to be divided; if none, F. was to bear the loss. F. received $2,000 as his share of the proceeds of the sale to D. D. brought a suit in chancery against E., praying for an injunction against suits brought at law against him by E. on said notes. E. offered to prove by F. that during the negotiation between E. and A. D. stated to A. that he believed the inventions to be original, and to be well secured by the patents, and that the notes might be safely bought, and promised E. to pay them when they became due. Held, that F. was directly interested in the event of the suit, and was incompetent as a witness.—Hillhouse v. Smith, 5 Day, 432.

[a] The grantor of a quitclaim deed is a competent witness for plaintiff in ejectment.
—(Cal. 1858) Johnson v. Parks, 10 Cal. 446;
(N. Y. 1824) Jackson v. Hubble, 1 Cow. 613;
(Ohio, 1834) Swisher v. Williams, Wright, 754.

[b] (U. S. 1835) The grantors in deeds of release and quitclaim are competent witnesses to show that their estate was not absolute, but a mortgage, of which their grantees had notice at the time of the conveyance to them.—Taylor v. Luther, Fed. Cas. No. 13,796 [2 Sumn. 228].

[c] (Ala. 1848) A vendor of slaves, who sells without recourse against him for a defect of title, is a competent witness for his vendee.—Mahone v. Yancey, 14 Ala. 395.

[d] (Cal. 1859) In trespass, where the vendor's title does not come in question, he is a competent witness, though the price has not been paid.—Rowe v. Bradley, 12 Cal. 226.

[e] (Conn. 1805) In an action on the statute for receiving a deed of land while the grantor was out of possession and plaintiff was in, holding adversely, the grantor is a competent witness for defendant, to explain the character of plaintiff's possession at the time specified.—Nichols v. Hotchkiss, 2 Day, 121.

[f] (Ill. 1828) A grantor in a deed who has no interest in the suit and who has made no covenants is a competent witness.—Herbert v. Herbert, 1 Ill. (Breese) 354, 12 Am. Dec. 192.

[g] (Ind. 1847) A. conveyed a tract of land to B., by a deed, without covenants, which land was, at the time of the conveyance, in the adverse possession of C. The possession of the land was afterwards recovered by B. in an action of ejectment by the lessee of those heirs against B. for the premises, and defendant offered in evidence A.'s deposition, which was objected to on the ground that the deponent was interested. Held, that the objection was untenable.—Galbreath v. Zook, 8 Blackf. 366.

[h] (Ind. 1850) The simple fact that a person is a seller of property not in his possession at the time of sale does not disqualify him as a witness for the purchaser.—Lackey v. Stouder, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 376.

[i] (Ky. 1820) A vendor, selling without recourse, is a competent witness.—Connelly's Heirs v. Chiles, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 242; Finlay v. Humble, Id. 569.

[j] (Ky. 1848) The vendor is a competent witness against his vendee.—Stemmons v. Duncan's Heirs, 48 Ky. (9 B. Mon.) 351.

[k] (La. 1833) The vendor is incompetent for his vendee, sued in a hypothecary action.—Sprigg v. Beaman, 6 La. 59.

[l] (La. 1861) When a sale is made without any warranty or recourse whatever, the purchaser buys at his own risk and peril, and cannot claim restitution; ergo, the vendor in such case is a good witness, and not interested in proceedings aliunde.—Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann. 85.

[m] (Md. 1800) A bill of sale of personal property of which the vendor retained the possession, if for a bona fide consideration and duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded, passed such property absolutely to the vendee, and therefore the vendor was a competent witness to prove that, being in possession of said property, he gamed the same away at cards.—Fister v. Beall's Adm'rs, 1 Har. & J. 31.

[n] (Md. 1809) Where the acknowledgment of a feme covert, one of the grantors in a deed, is declared defective, she may be admitted to give evidence for defendant, in an action of ejectment for the same land conveyed by her deed, brought by a person claiming under her deed.—Hall v. Gittings' Lessee, 2 Har. & J. 380.

[o] (Md. 1826) In replevin, the former owner of the goods replevied is not a competent witness to prove that he had sold them to plaintiff, and that they had subsequently been sold under execution on the judgment of a third person, and purchased by defendant.—Giese v. Thomas, 7 Har. & J. 458.

[p] (Mass. 1825) In an action by one of two grantors, against the grantee, in which the construction of the deed came in question, held, that the other grantor was a competent witness to establish a collateral fact as to the situation of the premises at the time of the grant.—Baker v. Sanderson, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 348.

[q] (Mass. 1828) A. and B., joint owners of a chattel, sell it on a condition precedent, and make a delivery subject to the condition, which not being complied with, and the chattel being attached by a creditor of the vendee, A. sells his part to B., who replevies the chattel. Held, that A. is a competent witness.—Smith v. Dennie, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 262, 17 Am. Dec. 368.

[r] (Mass. 1829) In replevin by a purchaser of chattels against an attaching officer, it appeared that the seller of the chattels had taken a note for the price, and obtained money thereon, and that the chattels were thereafter attached as his property, but it was doubtful whether the note was in fact negotiable, or whether it still remained in the hands of the seller. Held that the seller was in such case a competent witness.—Bailey v. Foster, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 139.

[s] (Miss. 1843) The grantor in a deed, under which the lessor in ejectment claims, is a competent witness for defendant.—Doe v. Jackson, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 494, 40 Am. Dec. 107.

[t] (N. Y. 1823) One who has delivered possession of premises to defendant in ejectment, upon his agreement to purchase, cannot be a witness for him.—Jackson v. Stackhouse, 1 Cow. 122, 13 Am. Dec. 514.

[u] (N. Y. 1858) The vendor of a personal chattel, or of a thing in action, was, before the Code, a competent witness for his vendee in a suit by the latter against a third person who had wrongfully converted such chattel or appropriated such thing in action to his own use.—Crosby v. Nichols, 16 Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 450.

[v] (N. C. 1857) In an action of trover for the conversion of a personal chattel, if defendant does not rely on a title in himself adverse to that of plaintiff's vendor, such vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the sale to him.—Wetmore v. Click, 50 N. C. 155.

[vv] (Pa. 1845) In a suit for damages occasioned by the erection of a dam, a stranger to the suit, whose land is thereby flooded, is not incompetent to testify, although he may have granted the right of erection to defendant, and defendant cannot avail himself of it except by thus swelling the water.—Riddle v. Dixon, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 372, 44 Am. Dec. 207.

[w] (Pa. 1847) Where an assignor of land had previously failed in an ejectment suit to retain such land, he is a competent witness for his assignee.—Mix v. Smith, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 75.

[ww] (Pa. 1851) In a suit against a sheriff for levying on goods of the plaintiff under an execution against a third person, who sold the goods to plaintiff, the vendor is a competent witness to prove that the sheriff levied on goods that never belonged to the vendor, and that had been bought from others by the vendee, since the sale which is charged with fraud, and to show the value of such goods.—Helfrich v. Stem, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 143.

[x] (Pa. 1852) In ejectment by the former owner against the grantee of the purchaser at a tax sale, such purchaser is a competent witness to show that he did not give a bond for the surplus money, and that the land was seated when sold for taxes as unseated.—Trego v. Huzzard, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 441.

[xx] (Pa. 1856) A vendor of goods is a competent witness for his vendee in an action against a party claiming as a bailee of the vendor prior to the sale.—Miller v. Pothier, 2 Phila. 163.

[y] (Pa. 1861) In trespass against a sheriff for seizing and selling plaintiff's piano under judgment and execution against her son, from whom she purchased it, the vendor is a competent witness on the part of plaintiff; for both plaintiff and defendant claim title through him, and the sale to the mother, whether fraudulent or not, implied no guaranty of title.—Graham v. McCreary, 40 Pa. (4 Wright) 515, 80 Am. Dec. 591.

[yy] (Pa. 1864) Where a father purchases land and has it conveyed to his son, he is not incompetent to testify in ejectment brought by the son for land alleged to be within the limits of the purchase.—Shaw v. Read, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 96.

[z] (Pa. 1864) A vendor of a sawmill improvement erected by him on leased land, by assignment and quitclaim conveyance indorsed on the lease, without warranty, is a competent witness in an action brought by the vendee against a constable for levying on and selling a portion of the machinery, on an execution against the former owners; for, if the articles sold were fixtures, they passed by the assignment, without warranty; if detached and personalty, they were not embraced in the assignment, and there was no implied warranty.—McInroy v. Dyer, 47 Pa. (11 Wright) 118.

[zz] (Vt. 1835) Where the title to premises is not put in issue, it is no objection to the competency of a witness that he is the grantor of the party calling him.—Hull v. Fuller, 7 Vt. 100.

§ 285. Testimony as to execution and validity of deed.

[a] The grantor in a deed is a competent witness to impeach it.

—(Ala. 1851) Norton v. Linton, 18 Ala. 690;
(Mass. 1834) Hudson v. Hulbert, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 423;
(N. H. 1830) Hadduck v. Wilmarth, 5 N. H. 181, 20 Am. Dec. 570;
(Pa. 1814) McFerran v. Powers, 1 Serg. & R. 102; (1818) Brown v. Downing, 4 Serg. & R. 494;
(S. C. 1845) Schroter v. Holly, 2 Rich. Law, 15.

[b] (U. S. 1804) The grantor, in a deed collaterally introduced as evidence in a cause inter alios, may be a witness to prove that the deed was fraudulently obtained.—Bank of Columbia v. French, Fed. Cas. No. 867 [1 Cranch, C. C. 221].

[c] (U. S. 1837) The grantor, who quitclaimed land to plaintiff and defendant, is competent to testify in behalf of plaintiff that the conveyance was delivered as a deed, and not as an escrow.—Flagg v. Mann, Fed. Cas. No. 4,847 [2 Sumn. 486].

[d] (U. S. 1855) The grantor is a competent witness to prove that the certificate of acknowledgment and registration of a deed was fraudulently antedated.—Holbrook v. Worcester Bank, Fed. Cas. No. 6,597, [2 Curt. 244].

[e] (Ala. 1839) A witness who has executed a deed, the validity of which he denies, renouncing title to property, is competent to prove its execution, although he may since have made a contract disposing of the property to one of the parties to the action.—Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. 39.

[f] (Ala. 1847) The grantor in a deed is a competent witness to impeach it for fraud, if he was not interested in some way so as to render him incompetent on that ground.—Sims v. Killen, 12 Ala. 497.

[g] (Ky. 1832) The grantor in a deed is competent to prove its execution so far as he was concerned.—Smith v. Morrow, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 442.

[h] (N. Y. 1838) A person alleged to be the grantor in a deed of real estate is not estopped from proving the deed a forgery, in a question of title between third persons.—Jackson v. Leek, 19 Wend. 339.

[i] (N. Y. 1862) The grantor in a deed left it for record at the county clerk's office, and it was recorded. He subsequently brought an action to recover the land, and offered to prove that, in putting it upon record, he did not intend to deliver it, or that the record should operate as delivery, but he did it with a view to a delivery at a future day, if it should be necessary in order to secure debts due from him to the grantee, who was a creditor. Held, that this evidence was admissible, and plaintiff was a competent witness in this respect.—Van Valen v. Schemerhorn, 22 How. Prac. 416.

§ 286. Former grantor or vendor.

[a] (Ala. 1834) Where A. sells property to B., and B. sells the same to C., and the property is levied on and sold to D. under an execution against A., in a suit brought by C. to recover the property from D., A. is not a competent witness for C.—Pruit v. Lowry, 1 Port. 101.

[b] (La. 1845) Where the purchaser of succession property, sued for the price, only asks for security against eviction, the vendors of the deceased are competent to explain facts connected with the title and prove the extinction of their mortgage.—Skolfield v. Rhodes, 10 Rob. 128.

[c] (Mo. 1852) In an action to recover back the price of a cow sold by defendant to plaintiff, on the ground that defendant had no title to sell, the person of whom defendant purchased the cow is a competent witness in his behalf.—Fallon v. Murray, 16 Mo. 168.

§ 287. Sale by personal representatives or trustees.

[a] (Md. 1817) A debtor agreed with his creditors in order to obtain a release of their claims to sell to them at fixed prices certain land. Trustees were appointed by the creditors to whom the debtor executed his agreement, stipulating the sale of his property on certain terms. Held, in an action by the trustees to recover the purchase price of land sold pursuant to the agreement, that the debtor was a competent witness to prove the terms on which the purchase was made.—Lansdale's Ex'x v. Ghequiere, 4 Har. & J. 257.

[b] (Md. 1828) An administrator, since he is liable to a vendee of personal property of his intestate, sold by him as administrator, on failure of title only in case of express warranty, fraud or other facts creating a special liability, is a competent witness for the vendee in trover by him against a third person for the property, unless objected to on the ground of a special liability to the vendee, and the objection sustained by proof.—Mockbee's Adm'r v. Gardner, 2 Har. & G. 176.

[c] (N. J. 1820) A conveyance of the testator's right to land by his executors, without warranty, does not render them incompetent to testify in a case where the title to the land is brought in question.—Burroughs v. Thome, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 777.

[d] (N. C. 1839) A trustee, who has acted by selling the trust property, and has retained his commission for so doing, may be a witness in support of the deed in trust, if he has conveyed the property without covenants or responsibility.—Norwood v. Marrow, 20 N. C. (3 & 4 Dev. & B.) 578.

[e] (Pa. 1837) The executors, who were also sons-in-law of the testator, sold lands that were overflowed by a dam. Held, that they were witnesses for their vendee in a suit brought by him against the owner of the mill for damages, there being no fraud nor warranty on the part of the executors.—Krause v. Reigel, 2 Whart. 385.

§ 288. Interest of witness in general.

[a] (Ala. 1854) In detinue for a slave, defendant introduced as a witness the father of his vendor, who testified that he held an order on defendant from said vendor for the balance of the purchase money, which was to be paid at the termination of the suit, and that said vendor had given this order as a present to his mother, who was the wife of the witness. Held, that the witness was incompetent, from interest, to testify for defendant.—Slaughter v. Cunningham, 24 Ala. 260, 60 Am. Dec. 463.

[b] (Cal. 1858) The parol promise of the vendor that he would make good certain boundaries of claims, as represented by him, is not binding, and he is not legally interested in a suit therefor by his vendee. To disqualify him as a witness, the liability must be legal, not merely moral, and the consequent interest present, certain, and vested.—Jones v. Love, 9 Cal. 68.

[c] (Cal. 1858) One interested in land at the time of the detention, but who has since released to his cotenants without warranty, is interested, and incompetent, in an action for the land and damages for its detention.—Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 568.

[cc] (Cal. 1861) A vendee of land brought suit in ejectment and claimed for damages accruing while the land was held by his vendor. Held, that the vendor was not incompetent as a witness for the vendee, by reason of interest.—Grady v. Early, 18 Cal. 108.

[d] (Iowa, 1855) The question was as to the ownership of real estate, both parties deriving title from the same grantor, and defendant claimed that plaintiff's deed had never been delivered; that $200 was to be paid by plaintiff to a third person for the benefit of the grantor; that he took the deed without paying the money; that defendant was surety for this payment, and having paid the debt the said grantor had conveyed the estate to him, and offered the grantor to prove these facts. Held, that the witness was incompetent on the ground of interest.—Ayres v. Campbell, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 212

[e] (Me. 1850) In a writ of entry in which the tenant claimed for betterments, being certain buildings on the land, the demandant, claiming under a quitclaim deed to himself, offered the grantor in such deed as a witness, who testified on the voir dire that he sold both land and buildings by the deed. Held, that he was a competent witness and not interested.—Buller v. Arnold, 31 Me. 583.

[f] (N. H. 1842) Where A. and B. were interested in certain timber, and A. sold his interest to B., after which B. commenced an action of trover against C. to recover damages for the conversion of some of the timber, held, that A. had no interest in the suit, and was a competent witness for B.—Walker v. Sawyer, 13 N. H. 191.

[g] (N. H. 1853) A. sold to B. personal property as his own. Afterwards C. took away the property, claiming it under a mortgage from A. made prior to the sale. The amount paid by B. exceeded the amount of the mortgage. In an action of trespass by B. against C. for the taking, held, that A. was not a competent witness to prove the trespass, by reason of his interest in the event of the suit.—Smith v. Fairbanks, 27 N. H. (7 Fost.) 521.

[h] (N. J. 1842) In an investigation to determine who is bound to support a pauper that has been a slave, a former owner is not a competent witness to prove that he had made to another an absolute sale of the negro as a slave for life.—Overseers of Poor of Perth Amboy Tp. v. Piscataway Tp., 19 N. J. Law (4 Har.) 173.

[i] (N. J. 1853) A sexton sold a hearse to his successor in office, subject to the right of certain subscribers to its use. Held, that the interest of such vendor, in the event of an action for said hearse between his vendee and a subsequent sexton, was not sufficient to destroy his competency as a witness.—Bogert v. Chrystie, 24 N. J. Law (4 Zab.) 57.

[j] (N. Y. 1818) A person who has fraudulently acquired land, and fraudulently conveyed it, though by quitclaim deed without covenants, is liable to his grantee for the fraud, and is not a competent witness for his grantee, in a suit for the land, by a person claiming it as a bona fide purchaser.—Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371.

[k] (Pa. 1841) In ejectment by the purchaser of only the vendor's claim to land, taking it at his own risk, the vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff, although all the purchase money has not been paid.—Cleavinger v. Reimar, 3 Watts & S. 486.

[l] (S. C. 1836) In trover by the representative of a trustee to whom the property in question had been conveyed, against a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under an execution against the grantor, a daughter of the grantor to whom he had conveyed other property at the same time was a competent witness for defendant to impeach the deed, as there was no warranty by the grantor in such sale by the sheriff, and therefore failure to acquire title thereby did not render the property conveyed to the daughter liable to be seized.—Thompson v. Schmidt, 3 Hill, 156.

[m] (Tenn. 1815) In an action by a vendee for the unlawful seizure of the property by the sheriff on execution as the property of the vendor, the vendor is not precluded by interest from being a witness for plaintiff.—Alston v. Huggins, 2 Tread. Const. 688.

§ 289. Testimony as to title.

[a] A vendor of goods is not a competent witness to support the title of his vendee against third persons, claiming adversely to his own title.

—(Me. 1830) Hale v. Smith, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 416;

(N. Y. 1810) Heermance v. Vernoy, 6 Johns. 5;

(S. C. 1828) Saunders v. Addis, 1 Bailey, 49.

[b] (Ark. 1859) A vendor is a competent witness to impeach a title derived from himself by a bill of sale.—Clinton v. Estes, 20 Ark. 216.

[c] (Ark. 1866) A vendor of personal property is not a competent witness for his vendee in a suit where the title of such property is in question.—Lindsay v. Lamb, 24 Ark. 222; Dunnahoe v. Williams, Id. 264.

[d] (Ark. 1866) A vendor of personal property is a competent witness for a party contesting the title of his vendee.—Dickerson v. Johnson, 24 Ark. 251.

[e] (Conn. 1795) Proprietors are admitted to testify respecting the title to land which they have quitclaimed for a valuable consideration. —Lay v. Hayden, 2 Root, 317.

[f] (Conn. 1822) On a bill for foreclosure, plaintiff's grantor, who had conveyed the premises to a third person with covenants of seisin and warranty, was a competent witness to support plaintiff's title, as a decree in chancery taking away an equity of redemption can be no evidence, in a court of law and between other parties, of a breach of covenant.—Beers v. Broome, 4 Conn. 247.

[g] (Iowa, 1858) The grantor in a deed is a competent witness to show that he had no title to convey, in a suit between his grantee and his alleged cestui que trust.—Robb v. Lefevre, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 150.

[h] (La. 1845) A vendor is incompetent in an action against his vendee concerning the title. —Skolfield v. Rhodes, 10 Rob. 128.

[i] (La. 1858) The vendor of a steamboat is not a competent witness for his vendee, in a suit in which the title to the boat is involved. —Bennett v. Quirk, 13 La. Ann. 547.

[j] (La. 1860) A vendor, who is not bound in warranty, is a competent witness to testify in a case where the title of property sold by him is involved.—Hyman v. Bailey, 15 La. Ann. 500.

[k] (Mass. 1850) The vendor of personal property in possession is not a competent witness for the vendee, in an action against him, in which the title to the property is in controversy.—Whitney v. Heywood, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 82.

[l] (N. Y. 1825) The grantor in a quitclaim deed is a competent witness to support the grantee's title.—Jackson v. Delancey, 4 Cow. 427.

[m] (Pa. 1802) The vendor of an improvement right, without warranty, is a competent witness to the title in ejectment.—Johnson's Lessee v. Eckart, 3 Yeates, 427.

[n] (Pa. 1809) The grantor of a deed without warranty or fraud is a competent witness to support titles derived thereunder.—Gratz's Lessee v. Ewalt, 2 Bin. 95; Cain's Lessee v. Henderson, Id. 108.

[o] (Pa. 1860) The grantor in an instrument giving property to the separate use of a wife, as he has no lien on the property, nor present right to withdraw the fund so contributed, is a competent witness for the wife in an issue on the right of property as between her and her husband.—Gillespie v. Miller, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 247.

[p] (Tenn. 1834) In a suit against the vendee of a slave to recover the slave, the vendor is a competent witness to prove that he had no title to the slave when he sold him.—Shropshire v. Shropshire, 15 Tenn. (7 Yerg.) 165.

[q] (Tex. 1857) The vendor of a cow is not a competent witness to prove property in his purchaser in a suit where the controversy is whether the vendor sold the same cow to another person, or a different cow, as this creates an interest in the result of the suit.—Wright v. Bonta, 19 Tex. 385.

[r] (Vt. 1841) The vendor of a chattel is not a competent witness for the vendee, to sustain his title, in an action between the vendee and one claiming under a third person.—Parker v. Hammond, 13 Vt. 242.

§ 290. Balance of interest as between adverse parties.

Liability on covenant, see post, § 294.

[a] In the question of title between the vendee of property and a creditor of the vendor, the interest of the vendor is balanced, and he is competent to testify.

—(Me. 1841) Cutter v. Copeland, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 127; Nichols v. Patten, Id. 231, 36 Am. Dec. 713;

(Tex. 1852) McKay v. Treadwell, 8 Tex. 176.

[b] (U. S. 1813) Where a son gave a bill of sale of property in his possession under loan from his father, to whom it belonged, the son is a competent witness in trover by the vendee against the father for the property to prove that the property was his father's, and that he sold it without authority, since a judgment for plaintiff or defendant will affect him equally. —Stump v. Roberts, Fed. Cas. No. 13,561 [3 Tenn. (Cooke) 350].

[c] (Ala. 1828) A vendor of property to two different persons is a competent witness, in an action between them for possession, his interest being equally balanced. And an indemnity given to one of the purchasers by the vendor only goes to his credit.—Jones v. Park, 1 Stew. 419.

[d] (Ala. 1832) A vendor is a competent witness for the vendee, in a suit involving the title, where it appears that his interest is equally balanced.—Garner v. Bridges, 38 Ala. 276.

[e] (Ill. 1844) A. sued B., in an action of replevin to recover the possession of certain goods. B. avowed the taking of the goods, as sheriff, by virtue of a writ of attachment in favor of C. and against D., and also pleaded property in D. A. replied property in himself, and not in D., and, on the trial, offered to prove by D. a sale from D. to him. Held, that D. was a competent witness.—Miller v. Dobson, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 572.

[f] (Ill. 1864) The vendor of property, which was subsequently replevied in the hands of an agent of the vendee, is a competent witness in the suit, in behalf of defendant, to prove title in his principal, although it should appear that the witness had purchased the property as the agent of plaintiff, and with his funds, and was not the owner of it at the time he sold it; in such case his interest would be equally balanced between the parties.—Goodrich v. Hanson, 33 Ill. 498.

[g] (Me. 1831) Where the owner of a vessel sold it to defendant, who promised in consideration thereof to pay plaintiff a debt due him from the owner, and plaintiff brought an action against defendant on this promise, the owner was a competent witness for plaintiff, his interest being equally balanced.—Brown v. Attwood, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 356.

[h] (Me. 1835) Where goods have been attached as the property of a witness and replevied by his vendee, the witness is competent to testify for the vendee, since, if the vendee prevails, the warranty, actual or implied, is satisfied, while if the creditor prevails, the value of the goods is applied to the payment of the witness' debt.—Eldridge v. Wadleigh, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 371.

[i] (Me. 1841) The vendor of goods may be a witness as well to defeat as to sustain the sale, his interest being balanced; and the balance would not be destroyed by the vendee taking a release from a subsequent purchaser of the vendor, as that fact would not furnish a defense to the vendor in an action by the vendee against him on the implied warranty of title.—Morrison v. Fowler, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 402.

[j] (Me. 1850) When both parties to a replevin suit claim the property by purchase from the same vendor, his interest is balanced, and he is a competent witness, without a release to impeach one of the sales.—Nute v. Bryant, 31 Me. 553.

[k] (Me. 1855) In a real action, the demandant and tenant claimed under the same grantor, and the demandant sought to recover on the ground that the tenant, at the date of the delivery of his deed, had notice of the demandant's mortgage. Held, that the grantor's interest was so evenly balanced as to make him a competent witness in the case.—Paul v. Frost, 40 Me. 293.

[l] (Mass. 1838) Plaintiff sold goods to A. on a credit. A. immediately sold them again to defendant. Plaintiff brought replevin for them, on the ground that they had been obtained of him through the fraud of A. and defendant. Held, that A.'s interest in the suit was precisely balanced, and consequently that he was a competent witness for defendant.—Bucknam v. Goddard, 88 Mass. (21 Pick.) 70.

[m] (N. H. 1842) A fraudulent purchaser of a chattel is not a competent witness for his vendee of the same chattel, in an action brought by such vendee against the original vendor, who had repossessed himself of the chattel, to recover the value of the same. His interest is not equally balanced; he is liable to his vendor only for the value of the chattel; but he is liable to his vendee for the necessary expenses of the suit, in addition.—Kingsbury v. Smith, 13 N. H. 109.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) In trover, where the value of the property as well as the title to it is in question, one who had sold it to defendant is not a competent witness on his behalf, though he is so situated as to be liable to plaintiff if the sale were unauthorized as well as to defendant on the warranty of title; such witness having a pecuniary motive for undervaluing the property by his testimony.—Fuller v. Townsend, 5 Denio, 184.

[o] (Ohio, 1847) In replevin by the vendee for goods levied on as property of the vendor, the vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Lewis v. Nugen, 1 Ohio Dec. 215.

[p] (Pa. 1791) In replevin for cattle claimed by both parties as vendee from a common vendor, such vendor, being equally liable to both parties, will be allowed to give evidence.—Miller v. Little, 1 Yeates, 26.

[q] (Pa. 1841) On the question of right of property to goods, where both parties claim as vendees of the same person, the vendor is not a competent witness to prove that he sold to one and not to the other.—McCabe v. Morehead, 1 Watts & S. 513.

[r] (Pa. 1844) The vendor of chattels, under whom both parties claim in an action of trover, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Miller v. Fitch, 7 Watts & S. 366.

[s] (Pa. 1868) In an action to try the title to property between two parties claiming under the same vendor, he is a competent witness for either party.—Hill v. Canfield, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 454.

[t] (S. C. 1824) Plaintiff and defendant claimed the same slaves under different bills of sale from A. Held, that A. was a competent witness to prove that the bill of sale of plaintiff had been obtained by fraud.—Willbourn v. Parham, Harp. 375.

[u] (Tenn. 1868) In an action of trover by the person claiming to be the owner of cotton against a defendant to whom the cotton was delivered to gin on shares, the original owners of the cotton are competent witnesses to prove their sale of it to plaintiff.—Waller v. Parker, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 476.

§ 291. Liability on covenant.

[a] The warrantor of property, whether real or personal, is, in general, incompetent as a witness for his vendee or grantee, in an action concerning the title to such property.

[b] The grantor in a deed of conveyance, who covenants that he has good right to sell the land, and that he will warrant the same against all persons claiming under him, is a competent witness for the grantee, in an action brought by him against one who does not claim under the grantor, as he cannot be interested in the event of a suit.
—(Ky. 1820) McClain v. Gregg, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 454;
(Mass. 1808) Twambly v. Henley, 4 Mass. 441;
(Pa. 1814) Sweitzer's Lessee v. Meese, 6 Bin. 500;
(Vt. 1833) Beach v. Sutton, 5 Vt. 209.

[c] (Ala. 1827) A vendor, with warranty, and his wife, are competent witnesses, in an action to recover the property, between a subsequent vendee claiming under him and a stranger, for such stranger.—Martin v. Kelly, 1 Stew. 198.

[d] (Ala. 1848) A vendor of slaves with warranty of title is a competent witness for a purchaser of the slaves from his vendee, it not being shown that the warranty of the first vendor covered the title by which the plaintiff sought a recovery. Whether a remote vendor of slaves can, by any proceeding, be charged on a warranty to his immediate vendee, the second vendee having purchased a mere quitclaim, and having no right of action against his immediate vendor, quære.—Mahone v. Yancey, 14 Ala. 395.

[e] (Ark. 1856) The vendor in a bill of sale of personal property, setting forth a money consideration, and containing a warranty of title against all claims, by or through the vendor, is an incompetent witness to sustain the title of his vendee, in an action between such vendee and other parties claiming under the vendor.—Arnold v. McNeill, 17 Ark. 179.

[f] (Ark. 1859) Where the title to property is in controversy, a person who is bound to make it good to one of the litigating parties against the claim of the other is identified in interest with that party, and cannot testify in his favor.—Meek v. Walthall, 20 Ark. 648.

[g] (Cal. 1859) One who gives a bill of sale of a mining claim, with warranty of title, thereby creating a warranty running with the land, is not a competent witness in a suit for the possession by his vendee's vendee.—Blackwell v. Atkinson, 14 Cal. 470.

[h] (Conn. 1823) A. conveyed land in fee to B. by a deed, with the usual covenants of seisin and warranty, after which no alienation of it was made by A. or B. Four years after, C., claiming such conveyance to have been fraudulent, levied execution on the land as the land of A., and had it set off to him. In ejectment by C. against B. for the land, held, that A. was a competent witness for B., a recovery and eviction by C. not subjecting him on his covenant of warranty.—Giddings v. Canfield, 4 Conn. 482.

[i] (Conn. 1846) In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt, the bankrupt is not incompetent to testify by reason of the covenants in his deeds to defendant, since the title to the property conveyed was not in question.—Steene v. Aylesworth, 18 Conn. 244.

[j] (Ga. 1847) In a suit to set aside the sale of a lot of land, a witness offered was objected to on the ground of interest, he having covenanted to protect the title of the land against all incumbrances generally. Held, that he was competent unless it appeared affirmatively that there were incumbrances on the land at the time of sale.—Adams v. Barrett, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 277.

[k] (Ill. 1865) A grantor in a deed containing covenants for title is not a competent witness on behalf of plaintiff in ejectment, who relies on the deed to prove its execution, since he has a disqualifying interest in the result of the suit. —Hamilton v. Doolittle, 37 Ill. 473.

[l] (Ill. 1867) A grantor with covenants of general warranty is, without a release therefrom, an incompetent witness for his grantee in a suit involving in issue the validity of an adverse chain of title.—Lester v. White's Heirs, 44 Ill. 464.

[m] (Iowa, 1859) A grantor of real estate, who conveys by deed of general warranty, is a competent witness for the complainant in an action against his grantee, to show that the grantor conveyed, by mistake, a greater interest in the land than he possessed, and to enforce the trust against the grantee. In such a case he is called to testify against his interest. — Stewart v. Chadwick, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 463.

[n] (Ky. 1812) A vendor is responsible on a warranty against himself only in case of eviction by an adverse claim, and therefore is a competent witness in support of the vendee's title.—Manifee v. Conn's Heirs, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 623.

[o] (Ky. 1869) Where a debtor conveyed land to a trustee for the benefit of creditors, and the debtor and trustee sold the land and conveyed it to the purchaser with general warranty, the trustee, being personally liable thereon, was an incompetent witness in a suit by the purchaser against the debtor on the warranty. —Graves v. Mattingly, 69 Ky. (6 Bush) 361.

[p] (La. 1811) The daughter of defendant's warrantor is not competent for defendant.—Meunier v. Couet, 2 Mart. (O. S.) 56.

[q] (La. 1859) A witness cannot be objected to on the ground of interest because he is liable to the defendant as warrantor, if he has not been cited in warranty in the suit in which he is called to testify.—Arrowsmith v. Durell, 14 La. Ann. 849.

[r] (La. 1868) In an action to enforce a right of servitude attached to land, plaintiff's vendor and warrantor of the rights of servitude claimed is a competent witness for defendant.—Macheca v. Avegno, 20 La. Ann. 339.

[s] (Me. 1836) In an action in which land of defendant is attached on mesne process, and the same land is afterwards conveyed by him with warranty, his grantee, who has also conveyed the land with warranty, is not a competent witness for defendant on the ground of interest.—Kendall v. Field, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 30, 30 Am. Dec. 728.

[t] (Md. 1839) A bill of sale of personal property, with a warranty of title, recited a mortgage of the same property previously executed by the grantor, and was made subject to its operation. Held, in an action by the grantee for a trespass on the property conveyed, that as he could not sustain an action for a breach of warranty, on the ground of a paramount title in the mortgagee, the grantor had no interest in the result of the suit, and might be called as a witness for the plaintiff.—Warfield v. Walter, 11 Gill & J. 80.

[tt] (Md. 1850) Where two coheirs, in a deed of partition, conveyed, each to the other, certain parcels thereof to be held in severalty, with a covenant that each should hold the parcels so conveyed free from any claim on the part of the other, but neither covenanted to assure the title of the other, either is a competent witness for the other.—Morris v. Harris, 9 Gill, 19, affirming Harris v. Morris (1847) 4 Md. Ch. 529.

[u] (N. H.) A grantor who has conveyed with warranty is admissible as a witness to support the title of his grantee, in an action where the title set up by the other party is not adverse to that which he has conveyed, aliter, where the validity of the title which he has thus conveyed is in controversy.—(1838) Harris v. Fletcher, 10 N. H. 20; (1850) Prescott v. Hawkins, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 191.

[uu] (N. J. 1854) A trustee who has given a warranty deed of trust property is not a competent witness in a matter affecting such property.—Farley v. Woodburn, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 96.

[v] (N. Y. 1802) The grantor of a deed with covenants of warranty is a witness against his grantee in a suit brought against him for trespass on the premises.—Van Nuys v. Terhune, 3 Johns. Cas. 82.

[vv] (N. Y. 1807) Where the same person conveys two adjoining parcels of land to different persons, by deeds of warranty, and in an action between the grantees, in which the question is whether the bounds of the land first conveyed do not include the premises conveyed by the subsequent deed, the grantor is not a competent witness, being interested to support the title of the subsequent grantee.—Jackson v. Hallenback, 2 Johns. 394.

[w] (N. Y. 1829) A grantor, with covenant of warranty, is a competent witness for his grantee, in an action of ejectment brought by him, although he could not be a competent witness to support his vendee's title in an action against him for the premises by a third person.—Jackson v. Rice, 3 Wend. 180, 20 Am. Dec. 688.

[ww] (Pa. 1835) A grantor with special warranty is a competent witness for his grantee, in an action of ejectment.—Burns v. Lyon, 4 Watts, 368.

[x] (Pa. 1842) A grantor with general warranty is not a competent witness in an action of ejectment in which the outstanding title granted by him is set up as a defense.—Goodman v. Losey, 3 Watts & S. 526.

[xx] (Pa. 1847) After the warranty in a land warrant has failed, in an ejectment suit, to recover the land, he is a competent witness in a subsequent suit by his assignee.—Mix v. Smith, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 75.

[y] (Tenn. 1852) The vendor of a slave who sells with warranty of soundness and of title is an incompetent witness for his vendee in a suit involving the question of his soundness.—Burke v. Clarke, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 310.

[yy] (Tenn. 1856) A remote warrantor, where there have been several conveyances with warranty of the same piece of real estate, is not a competent witness in support of the title in an ejectment, he being liable on his warranty.—Lawrence v. Senter, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 52.

[z] (Tex. 1859) The warrantor of a title, the validity of which cannot be affected by the suit, is not interested therein.—Loftin v. Nally, 24 Tex. 565.

[zz] (Vt. 1846) The vendor of personal property is a competent witness for the vendee, in an action of trespass brought by the latter, against a sheriff, for taking the property as the property of the vendor, notwithstanding the vendor had executed to the vendee a bill of sale of the property in which he covenanted that he was the owner of the property, and that he would warrant and defend the same to the vendee against all lawful claims and demands of all persons whatsoever.—Cox v. Hall, 18 Vt. 191.

§ 292. —— Implied covenants.

[a] (La. 1834) The vendor is incompetent to prove the vendee's possession so as to form the basis of title by prescription, though the deed contains no clause of warranty; the vendor being bound in warranty when the deed does not exclude it.—Green v. Hudson's Syndics, 7 La. 120.

[b] (Me. 1835) Where one turned out property as his own, to be taken by a collector for the payment of taxes, which property was afterwards replevied by a third person, who claimed to be the owner, held, that the first was not a competent witness in such suit for the collector, he being liable to the collector on his implied covenant of title.—Brewer v. Curtis, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 51.

[c] (Me. 1850) In a sale of personal property, there is an implied warranty of title on the part of the vendor, and he cannot be a witness for his vendee in a suit in which such vendee is attempting to recover for the value of the property against a third person.—Thompson v. Towle, 32 Me. 87.

[d] (Md. 1856) The vendor of personal property is not a competent witness to sustain the title of his vendee, there being an implied contract of warranty of title on his part.—Heskett v. Borden Min. Co., 10 Md. 179.

[e] (N. C. 1844) A vendor of a personal chattel is an incompetent witness to prove title in his vendee, unless on receiving from the vendee a release of his liability.—Freeman v. Lewis, 27 N. C. 91.

[f] (Pa. 1797) A vendor of lands with implied warranty cannot be a witness without a release.—Shields' Lessee v. Buchannan, 2 Yeates, 219.

[g] (Pa. 1801) The grantor of a deed, with words of general implied warranty, cannot be admitted to invalidate it, nor to show that he has not received consideration after signing a receipt.—Erb's Lessee v. Underwood, 3 Yeates, 172.

[h] (Pa. 1862) Coal belonging to one was, by mistake, deposited on the wharf of another, who after some time sold the coal to a third person, against whom the owner brought trover to recover its value; on the trial the vendor was offered as a witness for defendant, but was rejected. Held, on writ of error, that the witness, being the vendor in possession at the sale, and bound to the vendee on the implied warranty of title, was incompetent, unless released.—Kusenberg v. Browne, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 173.

§ 293. —— Character of testimony.

[a] (Ill. 1865) A grantor by deed of warranty is incompetent by interest to prove that he gave notice to a subsequent purchaser that he had already sold and conveyed the land to another.—Hamilton v. Doolittle, 37 Ill. 473.

[b] (Iowa, 1858) A witness, interested by having warranted a title, is competent to impeach it; he then testifying against his interest.—Robb v. Lefevre, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 150.

[c] (Ky. 1808) A man who has conveyed land or sold slaves, and executed a writing to warrant the title, may be a witness to prove he had no title.—Wright v. Nichols, 4 Ky. (1 Bibb) 298.

[d] (Ky. 1820) A grantor by a deed with special warranty is competent to prove its execution, if the subscribing witnesses are out of the state and defendant does not claim through him.—McClain v. Gregg, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 454.

[e] (Me. 1836) The grantor by deed of warranty to the demandant, and by deed of quitclaim of the same land to the tenant, is a competent witness for the latter on the question of title, as his interest would be to support the deed of warranty.—Wise v. Tripp, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 9.

[f] (Mass. 1833) Where A. claimed land under a prior deed with covenants of seisin and warranty, and B. claimed by a subsequent deed, which was registered first, without any covenant, the grantor was a competent witness to prove notice of the prior conveyance to the subsequent grantee.—Adams v. Cuddy, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 460, 25 Am. Dec. 330.

[g] (Mass. 1834) Where a wood lot was conveyed by defendant to plaintiff, with a covenant of warranty, in an action by plaintiff for the breach of such warranty, P., who had conveyed the same land to E. by a warranty deed, was a competent witness to prove that he entered on the land, as the agent of E., for the purpose of evicting plaintiff.—Burrage v. Smith, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 56.

[h] (Mass. 1845) A vendor of personal property, though he gives a bill of sale thereof, is a competent witness to prove that he had no title thereto; and, though he sells with warranty of title, he is a competent witness, for this purpose, when called by a third person, who claims the property and brings an action of trover therefor against the vendee.—Dickinson v. Dickinson, 50 Mass. (9 Metc.) 471.

[i] (N. Y. 1810) One of two partners executed a bond for a partnership debt, and a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, in the names and under the seals of both, and the other partner subsequently conveyed property, owned by him when the bond and warrant were executed, with warranty. Held, that such last-mentioned partner was not a competent witness to prove that his name and seal were affixed to the bond and warrant without his authority. —Swift v. Dean, 6 Johns. 522.

[j] (N. Y. 1810) If a person, whose lands are bound by a judgment, execute a deed with warranty of the same lands, and they are afterwards sold under a fi. fa. on that judgment, in an action between the vendee and the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, he is an incompetent witness to invalidate the judgment. — Swift v. Deane, 6 Johns. 523.

[k] (Pa. 1801) One who has executed a deed with general warranty is not competent as a witness to invalidate it, nor to prove that he has not received payment if he has signed a receipt therefor.—Erb's Lessee v. Underwood, 3 Yeates, 172.

[l] (Pa. 1820) One who has conveyed land subject to a right of way, with general warranty, is a competent witness for defendant, in an action for disturbing the right, to prove an agreement to remove the road in a certain event. —Greenwalt v. Horner, 6 Serg. & R. 71.

[m] (Pa. 1842) The grantor in a deed is a competent witness to prove that the grantee received the deed as trustee for himself for life, and for another for the remainder in fee; the result of the question could not affect the covenants of the grantor.—Kronk v. Kronk, 4 Watts & S. 127.

[n] (Pa. 1852) In an action on a warranty that a horse was sound in all respects, a person who sold the horse to defendant under a similar warranty was a competent witness for him that the horse was sound.—Mulvany v. Rosenberger, 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 203.

[o] (Tex. 1862) In an action of trespass, where the true boundary, not the title, of the land was in controversy, a surveyor, who by warranty deeds had conveyed the land to the plaintiffs, was a competent witness.—Robertson v. Mosson, 26 Tex. 248.

[p] (Tex. 1866) A warrantor of title is competent to testify to the invalidity of the title warranted by him, as his testimony is against his interest, and his competency is not destroyed because he testifies that the title was invalid on account of collusion between himself, the defendant (who had an interest in the land conveyed), and the grantee, to defraud the defendant's creditors. The judgment in this suit would not be evidence, in a suit against the warrantor, to prove the collusion so as to discharge his liability.—Tuttle v. Turner, 28 Tex. 759.

[q] (Va. 1810) A vendor of land according to certain lines is incompetent as a witness to establish the lines of the land sold, unless it appears that he conveyed without warranty of title.—Moon v. Campbell, 1 Munf. 600.

§ 294. —— Balance of interest as between adverse parties.

[a] (Ga. 1855) A witness was the common warrantor of both plaintiff and defendant, but defendant, in order to obtain the testimony of a third party, released that party and thereby discharged the warranty of the witness, so that he became liable over to plaintiff only, and plaintiff refused to release him. Held, that his testimony in behalf of plaintiff was incompetent without a release.—Way v. Arnold, 18 Ga. 181.

[b] (Ill. 1859) A vendor of goods with a warranty is a competent witness in an action between his vendee and a judgment creditor.—Warner v. Carlton, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 415.

[c] (Ky. 1821) A man who has given a bond for the conveyance of land, with warranty against all persons claiming under himself, and afterwards conveys the same land to another person under a decree in chancery, is a competent witness for either party.—Porter's Heirs v. Robinson, 10 Ky. (3 A. K. Marsh.) 253, 13 Am. Dec. 153.

[d] (Me. 1836) If a person sell goods to two different persons as his own, he is liable to both on his implied warranty of title, and in an action between them, both claiming under him, he may be a witness for either. — Butler v. Tufts, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 302.

[e] (Me. 1837) A grantor with warranty is a competent witness in an action, involving the question of title to the land, between his grantee and his creditor taking the land on execution.—Blaisdell v. Cowell, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 370.

[f] (Me. 1850) Where in a sale of personal property there is an implied warranty of title on the part of the vendor, he cannot be a witness for his vendee in a suit in which such vendee is attempting to recover for the value of the property against a third person, since his interest is not balanced, although such third person, in a suit by himself against the witness, had, without the consent of the witness, given credit for the property, and taken judgment only for the balance of his claim.—Thompson v. Towle, 32 Me. 87.

[g] (Mass. 1819) In a real action, where both parties claim the land under the same title, the grantor from whom the title is originally derived will be a competent witness for either party, as both are equally interested in the covenants.—Roberts v. Whiting, 16 Mass. 186.

[h] (Mass. 1829) Where a debtor assigns property to a creditor in payment of a debt, with a covenant of general warranty, and the same property is attached by another creditor, the debtor is a competent witness to support the title of the assignee, in an action between him and the attaching creditor, the witness standing neutral as to interest.—Prince v. Shepard, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 176.

[i] (Mass. 1842) A grantor, who conveys land with warranty to A., bounding him on a certain line, and then conveys land to B. with warranty, bounding him on A.'s line, is a competent witness, in a suit between A. and B., to testify as to the situation of the monuments on their dividing line at the time of his conveyance, although those monuments do not exist at the time when he testifies.—Daggett v. Shaw, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 223.

[j] (Mass. 1844) These words in the habendum of a quitclaim deed from A. to B.: "To have and to hold the aforementioned premises to B., his heirs and assigns, forever, so that neither I, the said A., nor my heirs, nor any other person claiming from or under me, shall or will, by any way or means, have, claim, or demand any right or title to the aforesaid premises"—constitute a covenant of warranty or quiet enjoyment against all persons claiming under or from A. If, therefore, A. had previously conveyed the land to C. by deed of warranty in the usual form, and B. brings a writ of entry to recover the land from C., A. is a competent witness for B. in the trial of the case, his interest on one side being counterbalanced by his interest on the other.—Newcomb v. Presbrey, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 406.

[k] (N. H. 1850) Where A. conveyed a tract of land to B. by metes and bounds, with warranty, and subsequently conveyed a tract of land to C. which was bounded southerly on the northerly line of the tract first conveyed, of which two tracts of land, at the time of conveyance, A. was the admitted owner, A. was a competent witness to give evidence in favor of the grantee of B., against the grantees of C., to establish the location of the northerly line of the tract conveyed to B.—Prescott v. Hawkins, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 191.

[l] (N. Y. 1829) A vendor of personal property, liable both to the vendor and the vendee on his warranty of title, is a competent witness for either, his interest being neutralized.—Frost v. Hill, 3 Wend. 386.

6. INTEREST ARISING FROM PARTICULAR OBLIGATIONS OR TRANSACTIONS IN GENERAL.

PARTIES TO INSTRUMENTS IN GENERAL, § 295.
PARTY TO CONTRACT IN GENERAL, § 296.
PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE MECHANIC'S LIEN, § 297.
PARTY TO CONVEYANCE, § 298.
PARTY TO MORTGAGE OR LEASE, § 299.
USURIOUS TRANSACTIONS, § 300.
— AGENTS, § 301.
— BILLS AND NOTES, § 302.
— BONDS, § 303.
— MORTGAGES, § 304.
TRANSACTIONS FRAUDULENT AS TO CREDITORS, § 305.
— COMPETENCY OF DEBTOR IN GENERAL, § 306.
— COMPETENCY OF GRANTOR OR VENDOR, § 307.
— MORTGAGES AND DEEDS OF TRUST, § 308.

§ 295. Parties to instruments in general.

[a] (Conn. 1804) A party to an instrument may be a witness to facts subsequent to the execution thereof which tend to invalidate it.—Webb v. Danforth, 1 Day, 301.

[b] (Ill. 1864) In a suit between the drawer and drawee of an order for goods upon a third person, the person on whom the order is drawn is a competent witness to prove the acceptance of the order.—Tarble v. Underwood, 34 Ill. 67.

[c] (Mass. 1814) The rule that a witness is incompetent to defeat by his testimony an instrument to which he is a party applies only to the parties to negotiable instruments.—Inhabitants of Worcester v. Eaton, 11 Mass. 368.

[d] (Miss. 1852) A. gave B. a writing which recited the receipt by him from C. of furniture which A. was to sell and pay the proceeds to B. At the foot of this was written a promise by other persons that the furniture should be sold and the proceeds paid to B., as recited in the receipt of A. In an action by B. against the signers of this writing, held, that A. had no interest in the result and was a competent witness.—Thornton v. Dabney, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 559.

[e] (N. C. 1829) Where two persons sign a receipt for money, and jointly promise to refund it if not legally paid, in an action by one of them against the person to whom the receipt is given for money had and received, the other is a competent witness for plaintiff; there being no proof of the identity of the money sued for with that mentioned in the receipt.—Smith v. Roan, 13 N. C. 252.

[f] (Pa. 1836) In trespass against a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, where the question was whether the purchase included a certain piece of ground in possession of plaintiff, and defendant gave in evidence a receipt signed by the former owner of the land sold at the sheriff's sale by which he agreed to give up possession at a certain time, the person who gave such receipt may show that it was not his intention to include in the agreement the lot occupied by plaintiff.—Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. 303.

§ 296. Party to contract in general.

Interest of agent, see post, § 387.
Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 441.

[a] (Ala. 1842) A. agreed to do a piece of work for B. Before completing it he gave up the business and engaged C. to do it. In an action by C. to recover the price of the labor of B., A. is a competent witness, his interest being balanced, since, if C. recovers, he is liable to B. for the breach of his contract, and, if C. does not recover, then he is liable to C. for services performed.—Hallet v. O'Brien, 3 Ala. 455.

[b] (Ala. 1850) One whose debt, without request, has been assumed by a third person, does not thereby become his debtor, and is consequently a competent witness for him, when sued on his promise, to prove the consideration on which it was founded.—Beall v. Ridgeway, 18 Ala. 117.

[c] (Conn. 1835) In an action for breach of a contract, one who is a party to the same contract, but who is no party to the action, and who could not gain or lose anything by the decision thereon, is competent to testify.—Wadhams v. Litchfield & C. Turnpike Co., 10 Conn. 416.

[d] (Fla. 1859) Where two enter into an agreement to share the profits of an enterprise involving a contribution of labor, if a third party enter into a similar agreement with one of them to share in his portion of the profits, and a suit arises between the two involving the partition under the original agreement, this third party is incapacitated by interest from testifying as a witness in behalf of him with whom he has made the subcontract.—Hooker v. Johnson, 8 Fla. 453.

[e] (Ill. 1860) An interest under an agreement voidable by the statute of frauds may render a witness incompetent, for non constat that the statute will ever be pleaded.—Robbins v. Butler, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 387.

[f] (Ill. 1861) C. contracted to furnish slops at his distillery to defendants, to be used in feeding cattle; but the pens for the cattle were not to be furnished by him, although he agreed to allow the cost of building them out of the price of the slops. C., however, furnished and paid for the lumber, and defendants hired plaintiff to build the pens. Afterwards C. refused to furnish anything toward certain changes which were made in the plan of the work, but agreed to allow the cost of making them out of the price of the slops. Held, that C. was a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit brought by him to recover for the labor done, as his interest was adverse to that of the party calling him.—Silsbury v. Blumb, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 287.

[g] (La. 1841) In a suit for wages against the owner of a building, plaintiff may prove by the builder that defendant modified his contract with the latter, and agreed that plaintiff should be employed.—McIntosh v. Clannon, 18 La. 469.

[h] (La. 1860) Where a person not a party to a contract, but interested in showing that the consideration expressed therein was not the true one, offers a party to the contract to prove that fact, the objection that the witness is a party goes to his credibility, and not to his competency.—Smith v. Conrad, 15 La. Ann. 579.

[i] (Md. 1859) A contractor, who on his failure has transferred his workman to the service of his employer, is not disqualified by interest from testifying as to work done after this transfer, nor as to work done before, because he is liable to whichever party fails in the suit.—Andre v. Bodman, 13 Md. 241, 71 Am. Dec. 628.

[j] (Mass. 1763) Where an officer discharges a defendant from arrest in consideration of the parol promise of a third person for his appearance, such third person is a competent witness for the officer in an action against him for insufficient service, as the officer could maintain no action on such promise.—Barnes v. Greenleaf, Quincy, 41.

[k] (Mo. 1852) In an action by A. against B. for money advanced for C. on a contract made by C. in his own name, on behalf of B., from the purchase of a boat from D., held that, under the practice before the Code, C. was not a competent witness for A.—Winston v. Wales, 17 Mo. 370.

[l] (N. Y. 1820) Where two persons are jointly concerned in a contract of sale, they may sever their interest by a parol agreement on a good consideration; and after such dissolution one of them is a competent witness for the other in relation to a matter growing out of such contract.—Smith v. Allen, 18 Johns. 245.

[ll] (Pa. 1791) A witness cannot be introduced to disaffirm his own contract.—Clyde v. Clyde, 1 Yeates, 92.

[m] (Pa. 1831) A witness is competent to prove that he made personally and directly, and for his own exclusive benefit, a contract for the breach of which another, having no connection with it, is sued.—Carman v. Foster, 1 Ashm. 133.

[n] (Pa. 1845) It is no objection to a witness that he was a party to the contract, and ought to have been included in the suit by plaintiff.—Gould v. Crawford, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 89.

[o] (Pa. 1848) A. sold goods to B., and B. afterwards delivered to A. an order for the delivery of goods, drawn on A. by C., which order was accepted by A.; and A. brought an action against B. for the goods, to which B. pleaded the order in set-off. Held that, the goods not having been delivered on the order, C. was a competent witness to prove that it was given without consideration, as he was not liable thereon until the goods were delivered.—Davis v. McGrath, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 170.

[p, q] (Vt. 1846) In an action on a contract for labor, and on trial on the general issue, a person is incompetent as a witness for plaintiff who was jointly concerned with plaintiff in making the contract with defendant.—Smith v. Keeler, 19 Vt. 57.

[r] (Vt. 1851) In an action brought to recover the price of labor and materials furnished, one who claims that he is himself entitled, instead of plaintiff, to receive payment of the amount, is a competent witness for defendant; and so, also, is one who is called as a witness to prove facts showing that he is himself liable for the amount, instead of defendant.—Abbott v. Camp, 23 Vt. 650.

[s] (Va. 1808) Where A. is indebted to B., and B. to C., and A. promises to pay C. the amount due from him to B., at the request of B., B. is not a competent witness to prove A.'s promise to C.; B. not having been discharged by C.—Waggoner v. Gray's Adm'rs, 2 Hen. & M. 603.

§ 297. Proceedings to enforce mechanic's lien.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 442.

[a] (N. Y. 1839) In an action by a workman or materialman, under the mechanic's lien law for the city of New York, against the owner, the contractor, to whom credit was originally given, is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Collins v. Ellis, 21 Wend. 397.

[b] (N. Y. 1843) In proceedings to establish a mechanic's lien between the party who performed the labor and the owner, the plaintiff cannot use the builder as a witness, on the ground of interest.—Miner v. Hoyt, 4 Hill, 193, affirmed Hoyt v. Miner (1844) 7 Hill, 525.

[d] (N. Y. 1855) In proceedings under the lien law, against the owner of the building and a contractor, for repairs, the contractor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Cannon v. Van Wagner, 2 E. D. Smith, 590, 2 Abb. Prac. 106.

[e] (Pa. 1855) In a proceeding to enforce a lien on a building for lumber furnished to subcontractors and used thereon, the subcontractors are competent witnesses to prove the purchase of the lumber and its delivery for such use.—Odd Fellows' Hall v. Masser, 24 Pa. (12 Harris) 507, 64 Am. Dec. 675.

[f] (Pa. 1867) The contractor for a building is a competent witness to establish a materialman's lien against the owner.—Wolf v. Batchelder, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 87.

[g] (Wis. 1853) A subcontractor brought scire facias under the statute to enforce a lien on a building for the amount due from the owner to the principal contractor, and offered the principal contractor as a witness as to the amount due. Held, that he was incompetent on the ground of interest.—Carpenter v. Moser, 1 Wis. 238.

§ 298. Party to conveyance.

Competency of grantee, see ante, § 271.
—— of grantor, see ante, §§ 284–294.

[a] (N. H. 1854) A party to a conveyance is competent to testify that it was obtained by fraud, if he has no interest.—Gage v. Gage, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 533.

[b] (N. C. 1805) One signing a deed as attorney is a competent witness for or against it.—Alston's Ex'rs v. Jones' Devisees, 5 N. C. 45.

[c] (S. C. 1828) A party to a deed is not an incompetent witness to invalidate it, in a suit between other persons.—Simmons v. Parsons, 1 Bailey, 62.

[d] (Va. 1810) One who is employed to bid off land for another at an auction sale, although he joined with the vendor in his deed thereof, conveying the land free from incumbrances, is a competent witness to prove notice of an incumbrance to the purchaser.—Blair v. Owles, 1 Munf. 38.

[e] (Va. 1810) In a bill to enforce an incumbrance on land against the vendee with notice, one who joined the vendor in his deed merely for the purpose of releasing some collateral interest is a competent witness to prove the notice.—Blair v. Owles, 1 Munf. 38.

Competency of landlord, see ante, § 273.
—— of mortgagee, see ante, § 277.
—— of mortgagor, see ante, § 275.
—— of tenant, see ante, § 274.
Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see post, § 308.
Usurious transactions, see post, § 304.

[a] (Conn. 1802) One who has signed a lease is not a competent witness to impeach it.—Allen v. Holkins, 1 Day, 17.

[b] (Ill. 1864) In an equitable action to reform a mortgage on account of a mistake therein, a party to the instrument is a competent witness.—Shay v. Pettes, 35 Ill. 360.

[c] (Mass. 1861) A party to a mortgage of personal property is a competent witness to invalidate it.—Bigelow v. Smith, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 264.

§ 300. Usurious transactions.

Competency of parties to action, see ante, § 238.
Determination of liability, see post, § 485.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, §§ 509–511.
Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 447.

[a] (Ala. 1846) A borrower is not a competent witness to prove that usurious interest was reserved in another state.—Bazemore v. Wilder, 10 Ala. 773.

[b] (Va. 1857) The principal debtor is a competent witness for the sureties to prove an executed agreement for forbearance to sue, in consideration of the payment of a usurious premium between the creditor and himself.—Armistead v. Ward, 2 Pat. & H. 504.

§ 301. —— Agents.

[a] (N. Y. 1800) A broker, who has charged usurious interest on a note, is a competent witness to prove that the note had been afterwards sold at a legal rate to defendant.—Jones v. Hake, 2 Johns. Cas. 60.

[b] (N. Y. 1848) Where one delivers a negotiable note to another as his agent to negotiate it, and the agent pledges the note as security for a loan to himself at unlawful interest, in an action by the owner against the pledgee for the note, the agent is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Keutgen v. Parks, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 60.

[c] (N. Y. 1848) The agent will not be liable for the costs in the action against the pledgee to the plaintiff therein, though he should be unsuccessful.—Keutgen v. Parks, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 60.

[d] (N. Y. 1848) Nor will the record be evidence in a subsequent suit.—Keutgen v. Parks, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 60.

[e] (S. C. 1796) The broker who negotiated between the borrower and lender is a competent witness to prove usury, though the payee of the note given.—Payne v. Trezevant, 2 Bay, 23.

[f] (Tex. 1857) The objection to the competency of one, who was plaintiff's agent in negotiating a usurious contract, to testify in behalf of his principal in a suit brought to enforce the contract, on the ground that he would be liable to his principal for the loss of legal interest through his misconduct, if the agreement was made without the principal's authority, is answered by the act of the principal in seeking to enforce the contract by judicial process, which is a ratification.—Ware's Adm'rs v. Bennett, 18 Tex. 794.

§ 302. —— Bills and notes.

[a] (U. S. 1813) In an action by the indorsee against the indorser of a note, the maker is a competent witness to prove the contract to be usurious, unless he is interested.—Knowles v. Parrott, Fed. Cas. No. 7,898 [2 Cranch, C. C. 93].

[b] (U. S. 1820) In an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of an inland bill of exchange, the indorser is a competent witness for defendant to prove usury in plaintiff's discounting of the bill.—Gaither v. Lee, Fed. Cas. No. 5,182 [2 Cranch, C. C. 205].

[c] (U. S. 1836) The drawer of an inland bill of exchange is not a competent witness, in an action against the acceptor, to prove that it was given for a usurious consideration.—Nicholls v. Wright, Fed. Cas. No. 10,236 [4 Cranch, C. C. 700].

[d] (U. S. 1838) A person who borrows checks payable to bearer to raise money on for his accommodation, but has not indorsed them, is a competent witness for defendant to prove usury, in an action on the checks.—Hill v. Scott, Fed. Cas. No. 6,498 [5 Cranch, C. C. 523].

[e] (Conn. 1808) In an action against the indorser of a note, the maker, for whose accommodation defendant indorsed the note, and who had executed a mortgage deed to defendant as security, was an incompetent witness, on account of his interest, for defendant, to sustain a defense of usury.—Cowles v. Wilcox, 4 Day, 108.

[f] (Ga. 1846) In an action by an indorsee against the maker of a note, an indorser without recourse to him is a competent witness to prove usury in the note.—Bailey v. Lumpkin, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 392.

[g] (Ky. 1823) The payee of a usurious note, who has assigned it without recourse, is a competent witness to prove the usury in an action by the holder of the note by a subsequent assignment against the maker.—Gorham v. Carroll, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 221.

[h] (Ky. 1842) A. executed several notes for the accommodation of B., who assigned them to C. as security for an alleged usurious loan. A. afterwards brought his bill to enjoin judgments which C. had obtained on the notes. Held, that B. was not a competent witness for A.—Mosely v. Armstrong, 19 Ky. (3 T. B. Mon.) 287.

[i] (Md. 1817) The drawer of a note is a competent witness, in an action on it by the holder against the payee, to prove a usurious consideration for the note.—Hunt v. Edwards, 4 Har. & J. 283.

[j] (Mass. 1810) A party to a usurious note cannot testify for the purpose of defeating the instrument on the ground of usury.—Widgery v. Munroe, 6 Mass. 449.

[k] (Mass. 1821) Where an indorsed note was made and discounted for the benefit of the maker at usurious interest, the maker is an incompetent witness to prove the usury.—Hartford Bank v. Barry, 17 Mass. 94.

[l] (Mass. 1825) Usury between the indorser and indorsee, in the transfer of a note, only affects the promise of the indorser, and cannot be set up in defense in an action by the indorsee against the maker. Consequently the indorser cannot be admitted as a witness to prove such usury.—Knights v. Putnam, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 184.

[m] (Mass. 1835) The indorser of a note is a competent witness to prove that it was given in renewal of a former note negotiated by the indorser for the maker, adding interest at a usurious rate, and that the indorsee knew these facts when he took the note and received unlawful interest thereon.—Bubier v. Pulsifer, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 592.

[n] (Mass. 1858) In an action against the maker of an accommodation note, the party for whose accommodation it was made is a competent witness to prove that he negotiated it for a usurious consideration in another state, whose laws render usurious contracts void, to a party from whom plaintiff took it after maturity.—Newell v. Holton, 76 Mass. (10 Gray) 349.

[o] (N. J. 1838) A maker of a note is a competent witness to prove the note usurious, though the witness is the party ultimately liable for the amount of the note; the defendant objecting to the usury being only surety for him.—Howell's Ex'rs v. Auten, 2 N. J. Eq. (1 H. W. Green) 44.

[p] (N. J. 1839) An indorser of a note is a competent witness to prove that he obtained it at a discount exceeding legal interest, and that in doing so he acted as agent of plaintiff, the indorsee, and had no interest in the transaction. —Brittin v. Freeman, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 191; Everson v. Heath, Id. 245.

[q] (N. Y. 1825) In an action by the holder of a note, the payee is a competent witness to prove that it was void in its inception for usury. —Stafford v. Rice, 5 Cow. 23.

[r] (N. Y. 1830) An indorser, not liable by notice of the dishonor of a note, and not called to prove its genuineness, is a competent witness, in an action against the maker by the indorsee, to show that the note is not usurious. —Barretto v. Snowden, 5 Wend. 181.

[s] (N. Y. 1840) The payee of a note cannot be examined by plaintiff, a third party, to show that it was given on a usurious consideration, though the note was made and transferred prior to Act May 15, 1837.—Burns v. Kempshall, 24 Wend. 360, affirmed Kempshall v. Burns (1842) 4 Hill, 468.

[t] (N. Y. 1842) One of two joint makers of a note cannot, by a bill in the chancery court, avail himself of the testimony of the other joint maker to prove the note usurious.—Savage v. Todd, 9 Paige, 578.

[u] (S. C. 1822) The maker of a note is a competent witness to prove the usury, as between two indorsers.—Flemming v. Mulligan, 2 McCord, 173, 13 Am. Dec. 707.

[v] (S. C. 1825) The indorser is a competent witness to prove the usury on a note, in an action between the indorsee and the drawer.— Knight v. Packard, 3 McCord, 71.

[w] (Vt. 1849) In an action brought to recover back money paid by plaintiff as usury to defendant, on a note signed by plaintiff and by several other persons as sureties for plaintiff, one of the sureties is a competent witness for plaintiff, notwithstanding he may have agreed to indemnify another surety against the note.—Nichols v. Bellows, 22 Vt. 581, 54 Am. Dec. 85.

§ 303. —— Bonds.

[a] (Del. 1835) The obligor in a bond given on an usurious contract is a competent witness to prove the usury in an action qui tam.—Banner v. Gregg, 1 Har. 523.

[b] (Del. 1860) In an action of debt qui tam, under the statute against usury, to recover the penalty by the surety on a bond given to secure the payment of the money borrowed, the principal is a competent witness to prove the usury.—Gardner v. Daniel, 2 Houst. 300.

[c] (Md. 1834) On a bill filed by a surety to obtain an injunction against and relief from a judgment against him on a bond, alleging that the bond was founded on a usurious consideration, the principal obligor is not a competent witness to prove the usury.—Jordan v. Trumbo, 6 Gill & J. 103.

[d] (S. C. 1844) The principal in a joint and several bond is not a competent witness, in a suit against the surety, to prove the bond usurious.—Cantey v. Blair, 1 Rich. Eq. 41.

[e] (Va. 1832) Where the obligee of a bond assigns it, he is not a competent witness for the obligor, in a suit against him by the assignee, to prove that the bond is founded on a usurious consideration. — Gilliam v. Clay, 3 Leigh, 590.

[f] (Va. 1845) A person who is a guarantor of a bond without consideration is a competent witness for the obligors to prove that it was given on a usurious consideration.—Caldwell's Ex'rs v. McCortney, 2 Grat. 187.

[g] (Va. 1852) In a suit between the assignee and obligor of a bond, the obligee is not a competent witness to prove that the bond was executed on a usurious consideration.—Wise v. Lamb, 9 Grat. 294.

§ 304. —— Mortgages.

[a] (Mass. 1812) In an action of entry sur disseisin, where the demandant derives his title from a mortgage, and a subsequent release made to him by the tenant, the latter will not be permitted to prove usury by his own oath. —Wheaton v. Tisdale, 9 Mass. 326.

[b] (N. Y. 1831) Where A. had executed a usurious mortgage with covenants of warranty, and subsequently sold and conveyed the mortgaged premises by deed with warranty to a third person, taking back a mortgage to secure the consideration money, and assigned the same, in an action of ejectment by the assignees of the second mortgage against a purchaser under a foreclosure of the usurious mortgage, A. is a competent witness to prove the usury.—Jackson v. Packard, 6 Wend. 415.

[c] (Va. 1830) In a contest between prior and subsequent mortgagees, the mortgagor is not a competent witness for the subsequent mortgagees to prove that the debt of the first mortgagee is usurious.—Beverley v. Brooke, 2 Leigh, 425.

[d] (Va. 1830) And his incompetency is not removed by his having taken the insolvent debtor's oath and surrendered his property, including his interest in the mortgaged premises, all which sold for less than the amount for which he was arrested, and his disclaiming all interest in the contest, since this did not remove his personal liability for the first mortgagee's debt. —Beverley v. Brooke, 2 Leigh, 425.

§ 305. Transactions fraudulent as to creditors.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 448.

[a] (Conn. 1797) In ejectment, a creditor of the debtor, from whom plaintiff took the land by levy on execution, is a competent witness to prove the deed of defendant fraudulent, unless he has attached or levied on some portion of the land contained in defendant's deed.— Lillie v. Wilson, 2 Root, 517.

[b] (La. 1832) In a contest between a debtor, claiming the benefit of the insolvent laws, and his creditors, the vendee of a slave, alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, is a good witness.—Coquet v. His Creditors, 4 La. 198.

[c] (Me. 1845) In an action on a note, where the bankruptcy of the maker is alleged in his defense, and the certificate of discharge is attempted to be impeached on the ground of a prior fraudulent sale of goods to a third person, which he did not include in his schedule of effects, the purchaser is a competent witness. —Loud v. Pierce, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 233.

[d] (Mass. 1801) The grantee of land is a competent witness to prove the grant made without consideration, and so fraudulent as to creditors.—Hill v. Payson, 3 Mass. 559.

[e] (Mass. 1841) In a suit against a person who is alleged to have conveyed all his property for the purpose of defeating his creditors, the grantee is a competent witness for defendant, if it be not shown that he participated in such fraudulent purpose, or was cognizant thereof, nor that the property, or the money received on the sale thereof, is still in his hands.—Johnson v. Johnson, 44 Mass. (3 Metc.) 63.

[f] (Pa. 1801) A creditor on a domestic attachment, wherein the auditors have sold and conveyed lands and signed a receipt for the consideration, may be a witness to show that a former sale of the same lands by the debtor was fraudulent.—Erb's Lessee v. Underwood, 3 Yeates, 172.

[g] (S. C. 1811) The grantee in a deed is competent to prove that the deed was made to defraud creditors.—Croft v. Arthur, 3 Desaus. 223.

[h] (S. C. 1895) Where two persons are threatened with a criminal prosecution, and one conveys his land to protect it from seizure, the other is not incompetent to testify as to the fraudulent purpose of the deed, on the ground that he is attempting to expose a fraud in which he is concerned.—Johnson v. Johnson, 44 S. C. 364, 22 S. E. 419.

§ 306. —— Competency of debtor in general.

[a] (Ala. 1847) Under the trial of an issue as to the validity of the transfer of a debt, between the transferee and the attaching creditor, under the statute of 1845, the debtor is not a competent witness.—Scott v. Stallsworth, 12 Ala. 25.

[b] (Iowa, 1860) In a suit by creditors against the debtor's vendee to defeat a sale alleged to have been made in fraud of creditors, the debtor is a competent witness for plaintiffs as to facts tending to prove the fraud.—Wisner v. Brady, 11 Iowa, 248.

[c] (La. 1856) A defendant in execution is not a competent witness to prove ownership in a third person of property seized as the debtor's, on trial of an issue of fraud in the debtor's transfer of such property.—Phoebe v. Vienne, 11 La. Ann. 688.

[d] (Me. 1847) On the trial of an action on the case, brought by a creditor under the provisions of Rev. St. c. 148, § 49, against a person for aiding the debtor in the fraudulent concealment or transfer of his property, to prevent it from being attached or seized on execution, such debtor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Philbrook v. Handley, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 53; Aiken v. Kilburne, Id. 252.

[e] (Me. 1847) And the debtor is not rendered incompetent by the fact that he has given an entirely different account of the transaction between himself and the defendant, under oath, in his petition to be declared a bankrupt; nor because he appeared to have been the principal actor in the fraudulent transfer of his property.—Aiken v. Kilburne, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 252.

[f] (Miss. 1846) Where a bond for title to certain land was assigned, without covenants by the assignor, and the same land was afterwards sold on execution against the assignor, in a suit between the purchaser and the assignee to recover the land, the assignor is not competent to prove that the assignment was without consideration and in fraud of his creditors.—Ellis v. Ward, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 651.

[g] (N. Y. 1859) In an action brought by a judgment creditor to reach and apply on his judgment moneys and property of the judgment debtors alleged to be in the hands of their attorney and another person, and to be by them fraudulently withheld from the judgment debtors and their creditors, one of the judgment debtors is not disqualified as a witness, as the action is not prosecuted for his immediate benefit.—Cowing v. Greene, 45 Barb. 585.

[h] (Pa. 1832) Where a judgment has been obtained fraudulently as against creditors, the defendant is a competent witness for the creditors in a suit to set it aside.—Sommer v. Sommer, 1 Watts, 303.

§ 307. —— Competency of grantor or vendor.

[a] (Ala. 1852) In trespass against the sheriff for attaching plaintiff's goods as the property of the vendor, the vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the fairness of the sale to him.—Zackowski v. Jones, 20 Ala. 189.

[b] (Cal. 1857) The vendor may be a witness to establish fraud in a sale on behalf of creditors.—Howe v. Scannell, 8 Cal. 325.

[c] (Cal. 1863) The vendor of personal property is not a competent witness for his creditors, to impeach a sale made by him, or to prove it fraudulent, in a contest respecting it, between his creditors and his vendee.—Waugenheim v. Childs, 23 Cal. 444.

[d] (Conn. 1795) A person who has sold his land for a valuable consideration, which land is afterwards taken by a creditor on an execution, cannot be a witness to prove that the debt in the execution, or the deed by him, was fraudulent.—Fowler v. Norton, 2 Root, 231.

[e] (Ill. 1863) In trespass against a sheriff and others, for taking and carrying away goods, the defense was that the goods were seized under an attachment against a third party, who owned the goods, and who had sold them in fraud of the rights of the attaching creditor, and that plaintiffs had purchased them from the fraudulent vendee with notice of the fraud. The purchaser from the attachment debtor had obtained a judgment against his vendor, on his implied warranty of the title to the goods. Held, that this rendered the attachment debtor incompetent as a witness on behalf of defendants in the action of trespass, to prove that he sold the goods fraudulently, as his interest would be in favor of the party calling him.—Babcock v. Smith, 31 Ill. 57.

[f] (Iowa, 1856) Certain goods were attached, and, judgment being rendered in favor of the attaching creditors, the property was sold under execution to satisfy the debts; and an action of trespass was thereupon brought against the sheriff and the said creditors, for the value of the goods, by one claiming that at the time of the levy of said attachments they belonged to him as the vendee of the debtor. Held, that the vendor was a competent witness for the creditors to prove facts tending to show that the sale was made with intent to defraud creditors.—Adams v. Foley, 4 Iowa, 44.

[g] (Ky. 1830) A grantor in a deed without warranty is a competent witness to testify that it was made in good faith.—Major v. Deer, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 585.

[h] (Ky. 1856) Where the vendor has received a pecuniary benefit from the vendee on the sale of property, he is not a competent witness in favor of an attaching creditor to show fraud in the sale, although he is competent in favor of his vendee to sustain the sale.—Snead v. Williamson, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 492.

[i] (La. 1844) A vendor of movables, allowed occasionally to use them, cannot prove their sale and delivery, in a contest between his judgment creditor, who has seized them, and the vendee.—Webster v. Jenkins, 9 Rob. 179.

[j] (La. 1868) In an action to annul a sale on the ground that it was fraudulent against creditors, the vendor is an incompetent witness for the creditors.—Bushnell v. City Nat. Bank, 20 La. Ann. 464.

[k] (Me. 1853) A vendor of a horse is a competent witness, in a suit between the buyer and an attaching officer, on the question whether the sale was fraudulent against creditors; his interest being balanced.—Ward v. Chase, 35 Me. 515.

[l] (Md. 1828) On a bill to vacate a deed for fraud, the fraudulent grantor is not a competent witness against the grantee in behalf of the grantor's creditors.—Strike v. McDonald, 2 Har. & G. 191.

[m] (Mass. 1814) A grantor in a deed, who is not interested in the event of the suit, is a competent witness to show that the deed was fraudulent.—Loker v. Haynes, 11 Mass. 498.

[n] (Mass. 1829) Where a sale of chattels is made by A., who receives the purchaser's note for the price, and negotiates it, or obtains payment upon it, and the chattels are afterwards attached as the property of A., in an action of replevin, brought by the purchaser against the attaching officer, A. is not a competent witness to prove the sale fraudulent.—Bailey v. Foster, 26 Mass. (9 Pick.) 139.

[o] (Miss. 1843) Where a conveyance is attacked as fraudulent against creditors, the vendor, who has taken a deed of trust to secure the purchase money, is not a competent witness for the vendee.—Pope v. Andrews, Smedes & M. Ch. 135.

[p] (Miss. 1849) Defendant in an attachment suit is a competent witness for complainant in a bill claiming the property attached as belonging to him, and not to defendant in the attachment, although it is alleged that defendant fraudulently conveyed the property attached to complainant.—Mizell v. Herbert, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 547.

[q] (N. H. 1842) A grantor may be a witness to show that his deed is invalid, even for fraud, if he have no interest in the case.—Stevenson v. Chapman, 12 N. H. 524.

[r] (N. Y. 1823) A person who has executed a deed, set up by a defendant in ejectment, is not a competent witness to prove it fraudulent, especially when, by avoiding the deed, the recovery of plaintiff would inure to the common benefit of plaintiff and the witness.—Jackson v. Eaton, 20 Johns. 478.

[s] (N. Y.) A vendor of personal property is not a competent witness to prove the sale fraudulent, in a contest respecting the same between his creditors and the vendee.—(1838) Rea v. Smith, 19 Wend. 293; (1839) Gardenier v. Tubbs, 21 Wend. 169.

[t] (Tenn. 1820) The grantor in a deed is a competent witness to prove the deed void, as having been executed to defraud his creditors.—Calloway v. Willie's Lessee, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 1.

[u] (Tenn. 1870) The maker of a deed is not precluded from giving evidence to impeach it for fraud against his creditors.—Greene v. Starnes, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 582.

[uu] (Tex. 1852) In an action by a vendee of cattle against a creditor, who had taken the same by execution against the vendor, the creditor alleged that the sale was fraudulent. Held, that the vendor was a competent witness in such action for the vendee.—McKay v. Treadwell, 8 Tex. 176.

[v] (Tex. 1855) A grantor, called to support his own alleged fraudulent conveyance, is competent if standing indifferent; but experience shows how seldom this is the case.—Hancock v. Horan, 15 Tex. 507.

[w] (Tex. 1873) The grantor in a deed, which is being attacked by a third party as fraudulent, is a competent witness to prove that no consideration passed for its execution.—Reeves v. Shry, 39 Tex. 634.

[x] (Vt. 1831) A grantor is a competent witness to show his deed fraudulent.—Seymour's Adm'r v. Beach, 4 Vt. 493.

[xx] (Vt. 1832) One who is supposed to have conveyed away his property with a view to defraud his creditors is a competent witness for the purchaser to show that the conveyance was not fraudulent.—Edgell v. Lowell, 4 Vt. 405.

[y] (Vt. 1845) One who has assigned and transferred personal property to his creditor in payment of a debt is a competent witness for the creditor, in an action of trespass brought by him against other creditors of the same person, who have attached and taken from plaintiff's possession the assigned property, notwithstanding the officer who served defendant's writs of attachment included in his fees, minuted on the writ, charges for taking and securing the property in question.—Ellis v. Howard, 17 Vt. 330.

[yy] (Vt. 1850) Where land is conveyed by a deed with covenants of warranty, and a creditor of the grantor, claiming that the deed is fraudulent, causes an execution in his favor to be levied upon the land as the property of the grantor, the grantor is a competent witness for the grantee to prove that the deed was not fraudulent, in an action of ejectment brought by the grantee against one who claims title under the levy.—Warner v. Percy, 22 Vt. 155.

[z] (Va. 1871) When a deed is assailed for fraud by a creditor of the makers, and one of these is called by plaintiff as a witness to prove the fraud, the rule that no person shall be heard to establish his own turpitude does not apply.—Brown v. Molineux, 21 Grat. 539.

[zz] (Wis. 1851) Goods and merchandise in the possession of the vendee were attached as the property of the vendor; the attaching creditor claiming that the contract of sale between the vendee and vendor was fraudulent and void as to the creditors of the latter. In an action by the vendee against the sheriff for the value of the goods, the vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff; but, if it appears that he is liable as an indorser on the note given for the goods, his testimony will be rejected.—Sterling v. Ripley, 3 Chand. 166.

§ 308. — Mortgages and deeds of trust.

[a] (Ala. 1845) A father, who has settled property on trustees for the benefit of his daughter, is a competent witness for the trustees in a controversy between them and the creditors of the husband, who are seeking to subject said property to the payment of the husband's debts.—O'Neil v. Teague, 8 Ala. 345.

[b] (Mo. 1851) The grantor in a deed of trust, under which a party interpleading claims property attached, is not a competent witness to prove the consideration of the deed of trust.—Keiser v. Moore, 14 Mo. 28.

[c] (Mo. 1868) Under Rev. Code 1855, c. 168, § 6, testimony of the maker of a deed of trust, in a suit by his creditors to set it aside, showing that the amount of his indebtedness to the beneficiaries in the deed was not correctly set out, that a large part of it was the amount of an order for goods never delivered to him, and that by the advice and direction of the parties for whose benefit the deed was executed the sum was falsely stated for the purpose of deterring other creditors from proceeding against the property, is not competent.—Byrne v. Becker, 42 Mo. 264.

[d] (N. Y. 1840) A mortgagor of personal property is not a competent witness for the mortgagee in a controversy between the latter and a purchaser under an execution issued subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, where such instrument is void for want of possession accompanying delivery, and actual possession is not taken until after levy under the execution.—White v. Cole, 24 Wend. 116.

[e] (N. Y. 1844) A., being indebted to B., executed to him a mortgage of certain goods, which were soon afterwards seized on execution by one of A.'s creditors; the latter claiming that the mortgage was fraudulent. Whereupon B. brought replevin, and on the trial offered A. as a witness. Held, that he was competent; his interest being balanced.—Moak v. Guion, 7 Hill, 58.

§ 309. In general.

[a] (Ga. 1843) A party to a negotiable instrument, who is not a party to a suit to it, is not, as a matter of course, so interested in the event as to be an incompetent witness.—Starr v. Johnson, Ga. Dec. 134, pt. 2.

[b] (La. 1843) The testimony of a witness under commission, declaring that he forged the check sued for, is admissible. The objection goes to his credit, rather than his competency.—Laborde v. Consolidated Ass'n of Planters, 4 Rob. 190, 39 Am. Dec. 517.

[c] (Mass. 1807) A party to a note may testify to any facts happening after he gave it currency, if he is not interested therein.—Warren v. Merry, 3 Mass. 27.

[d] (Mass. 1840) In the trial of an action brought by one of the makers of a note, who has paid it in full, to recover of the other a moiety of the amount so paid, individuals for whose use the note was given and paid are competent witnesses for plaintiff.—Packard v. Nye, 43 Mass. (2 Metc.) 47.

[e] (Mo. 1841) A party to a negotiable instrument may be permitted to testify, if not disqualified by interest.—Bank of Missouri v. Hull, 7 Mo. 273.

[f] (N. Y. 1813) A party to a negotiable instrument may be a witness to prove facts subsequent to its due execution, and which do not invalidate it in its inception, though they go to destroy the title of the holder.—Woodhull v. Holmes, 10 Johns. 231.

[g] (N. Y. 1825) The maker or other person whose name appears on a note is not disqualified on the ground of interest from testifying to show that it was void in its creation for usury or other cause.—Bank of Utica v. Hilliard, 5 Cow. 153.

[h] (Pa. 1834) A party to a negotiable note which has actually been negotiated is not a competent witness against its validity.—Gest v. Espy, 2 Watts, 265.

[i] (Pa. 1845) A party to a sealed note is competent to prove an extension of time to himself, thereby discharging another party, who was a surety, under a plea of payment and a special plea of the extension.—Miller v. Stem, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 286.

[j] (Pa. 1859) It is the character of the testimony, rather than the relation of the party to the instrument, that governs the question of the admissibility of a witness.—Work v. Kase, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 138.

[k] (Pa. 1859) If a witness be not involved in the immediate result of the suit, the policy of the law only holds him to silence in regard to acts which might invalidate the paper in its original concoction, or the consideration of the indorsement.—Work v. Kase, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 138.

[l] (S. C. 1860) Parties to a negotiable instrument, in a controversy between other parties, are competent witnesses to invalidate the instrument, if they have no interest which disqualifies them.—Farrar v. Metts, 12 Rich. Law, 667.

[m] (Vt. 1840) In an action against one for money paid out on a note signed by defendant and another, such other signer is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that he and defendant were the principals in the note.—Hopkinson's Adm'r v. Steel, 12 Vt. 582.

§ 310. Maker of note.

[a] In a suit by the indorsee against the indorser of a note, indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, the maker is not a competent witness for the indorser, without a release.
—(Me. 1842) Southard v. Wilson, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 494;
(Mass. 1817) Peirce v. Butler, 14 Mass. 303; (1843) Bird v. Cole, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 326;
(N. Y. 1849) Bowne v. Hyde, 6 Barb. 392;
(S. C. 1830) Chur v. Keckeley, 1 Bailey, 479.

[b] In an action by the holder against the indorser of a note, the maker of the note is a competent witness, unless the note is an accommodation note.
—(Ala. 1839) Griffing v. Harris, 9 Port. 225; Adams v. Moore, Id. 406;
(Del. 1862) Cook v. Pierce, 2 Houst. 499;
(N. H. 1839) Woodman v. Eastman, 10 N. H. 359;
(N. Y. 1819) Hubbly v. Brown, 16 Johns. 70.

[c] (U. S. 1807) The maker of a note is a competent witness for an indorser.—French's Ex'x v. Bank of Columbia, 8 U. S. (4 Cranch) 141, 2 L. Ed. 576.

[d] (U. S. 1813) Where the maker of a note has obtained a discharge in insolvency, and subsequently an action is brought by an indorsee against an indorser of the note, the maker is not a competent witness in such action; for, in case of a recovery by the indorsee against the indorser, the maker is liable to the indorser, and such liability is a new cause of action which has arisen since the discharge of the maker.—Knowles v. Parrott, Fed. Cas. No. 7,898 [2 Cranch, C. C. 93].

[e] (U. S. 1837) The maker of a note is a competent witness, not to prove its original invalidity, but the improper use afterwards made of it, and that time was given him without the consent of the indorser.—Whitney v. Huntt, Fed. Cas. No. 17,589 [5 Cranch, C. C. 120].

[f] (U. S. 1840) The maker of a note, released from costs, is competent, in a suit against indorsers, to impeach the note by facts subsequent to its execution and negotiation by him.—Frazer v. Carpenter, Fed. Cas. No. 5,069 [2 McLean, 235].

[g] (Ala. 1849) The maker of a note is a competent witness for the indorsee, in an action against the indorser, for the purpose of proving that he has fully indemnified the latter.—Cockrill's Adm'r v. Hobson, 16 Ala. 391.

[h] (Cal. 1856) In an action against the indorser of a note, where demand and notice are not averred, but where it is averred that the maker paid the indorser the value of the note, and that the indorser agreed to pay it, the maker of the note is not a competent witness to prove those facts.—Palmer v. Tripp's Adm'r, 6 Cal. 82.

[i] (Conn. 1837) Defendant, in an action by the holder of a note, not negotiable, against the payee, alleging that defendant had assigned it to plaintiff, and had afterwards withdrawn a suit brought by plaintiff, in the name of the payee, against the maker, and had thereby defeated the collection of the note, offered the maker as a witness to prove that he had paid the note to the payee previous to the alleged assignment, and that it had never been in fact assigned to plaintiff. Held, that such witness had no interest in the event of the suit, and was therefore competent.—Fitch v. Boardman, 12 Conn. 345.

[j] (Del. 1833) The maker of a note is not a competent witness for the indorser in a suit in equity by the latter to enjoin the collection of a judgment against him on his contract of indorsement.—McDowell v. Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine, 2 Del. Ch. 1.

[k] (Ill. 1859) In an action by an indorsee against the indorser of a note, the drawer is a competent witness to prove protest and notice.—Eddy v. Peterson, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 535.

[l] (Ill. 1865) As between the assignor and assignee of a note, for all purposes except to impeach the note or prove its payment, the maker is a competent witness.—Corgan v. Frew, 39 Ill. 31, 89 Am. Dec. 286.

[m] (Ind. 1837) The maker of a note is a competent witness for plaintiff in an action by the assignee against the assignor, involving the validity of the consideration of the note.—Fosdick v. Starbuck, 4 Blackf. 417.

[n] (Ky. 1822) The maker of a note is a competent witness to prove that the note was indorsed to the indorsee for collection, and not for the indorsee's benefit.—Gilman's Adm'rs v. Pugh, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 286.

[o] (Ky. 1843) In an action between the assignor and assignee, the maker of a note is a competent witness to prove the consideration and assignment.—Maxey v. Fore, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 475.

[p] (La. 1815) In a suit against the indorser, the maker of a note is competent to prove any fact affecting the indorser's rights, being himself ultimately responsible, whatever the result of the suit.—Abat v. Doliole, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 657.

[q] (La. 1821) A maker of a note may prove its execution, in a suit by the indorsee against the indorser.—Abat v. Rion, 9 Mart. (O. S.) 465, 13 Am. Dec. 313.

[r] (La. 1847) Plaintiff, having furnished goods to a minor at the request of her relative, accepted therefor a note executed by the relative, who then collected the amount from the defendant's guardian. The note remaining unpaid, plaintiff sued the minor. Held, that the relative was a competent witness, as he was responsible in either event.—Dowell v. Dawson, 2 La. Ann. 495.

[rr] (La. 1861) In a suit between accommodation indorsers of a note, the second indorser sought to make the maker and first indorser liable to him in solido after the payment of the note, and the first indorser alleged that he and the second indorser signed the note as co-securities. Held, that the maker was a competent witness to establish the contract of suretyship between the indorsers of his note for his own accommodation.—Hacket v. Lenares, 16 La. Ann. 204.

[s] (Me. 1841) In an action by an indorsee of a note against an indorser, it appeared that the maker held a bond for the conveyance of land to him by the payee on the payment of the note, and that the maker had made part payment for the land. Held, that he was not a competent witness for defendant; his interest not being balanced.—Weston v. Hight, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 281.

[ss] (Md. 1846) In an action by an indorsee against the payee and indorser of a negotiable note, the maker is a competent witness to prove the execution of the note by himself and partners as makers, and the indorsement by defendant.—Crowley v. Barry, 4 Gill, 194.

[t] (Mo. 1847) In a suit against a boat to recover the amount of a note given by a former owner for services, the maker is a competent witness to show that the note was accepted on his individual credit.—The Resort v. Brooke, 10 Mo. 531.

[tt] (N. H. 1853) A. gave his note in part payment for the services of B. as pastor of the First Universalist Society. B. brought an action of assumpsit against the society, and declared on this note and for services rendered. Held, that A. was a competent witness for B. to support the count for services rendered; A. not being a member of the society, nor authorized to contract on their behalf.—Abbott v. First Universalist Soc., 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 22.

[u] (N. J. 1822) In an action of trover for a note, the maker of the note is a competent witness for defendant.—Woodruff v. Smith, 6 N. J. Law (1 Halst.) 214.

[uu] (N. Y. 1833) Where a note for $800 is indorsed by the payee for the accommodation of the maker, and delivered to him by mistake, the words "hundred dollars" were omitted, but were afterwards filled in by the maker without the assent of the indorser, the maker is a competent witness to show what sum was intended to be inserted.—Boyd v. Brotherson, 10 Wend. 93.

[v] (N. C. 1857) In a suit brought to recover back the purchase money paid to the holder, without indorsement, of a note alleged to be forged, the ostensible maker of the note is a competent witness to prove the forgery, although he had given to the ostensible payee a bond to indemnify him against the consequences of refusing to let his name be used in the collection of it by suit.—White v. Green, 50 N. C. 47.

[vv] (Pa. 1829) A drawer is a competent witness for the indorser of a note, though he has given the indorser a judgment and mortgage to secure him.—Griffith v. Reford, 1 Rawle, 196.

[w] (Pa. 1835) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the indorser, the maker is not a competent witness for defendant to prove that, when the note was made, the indorsee had stipulated not to hold the indorser responsible, and that the note was for the accommodation of the indorser, unless there was proof aliunde that the indorsee was an original party to the note.—Harley v. Emerick, 1 Miles, 36.

[ww] (Pa. 1836) The indorser and drawer of a note payable to his own order is a competent witness, in a suit by the indorser, to prove the handwriting of the acceptor.—Reid v. Geoghegan, 1 Miles, 204.

[x] (Pa. 1846) The drawers of a note cannot be permitted by their own testimony to prove that they were not liable to the payee, as this would be to fix on him a liability which they had assumed as drawers.—Alexander v. Alexander, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 56.

[xx] (Pa. 1850) In an action by the holder of a note against the payee, who also guarantied its payment, the drawer is a competent witness to prove that the note in suit was made payable to the payee at the request of one to whom the drawer was indebted.—Lewis v. Carsaw, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 31.

[y] (Pa. 1857) In an action on a note of a third party, given as collateral security, the maker of the note, for the payment of which said collateral is held, is a competent witness to prove it paid.—Fry v. Coleman, 1 Grant, Cas. 445.

[yy] (Pa. 1859) In a suit against the indorser of a note indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, the latter is a competent witness to prove facts dehors the note, showing an agreement for satisfaction of it tantamount to payment.—Work v. Kase, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 138.

[z] (Pa. 1862) In an action by an indorsee of a note against a prior indorser, the maker of the note is not a competent witness to prove an agreement between the indorsers, of whom plaintiff was one, that they would contribute equally to the payment of the note, if it was not paid by the maker.—Saurman's Ex'rs v. Bodey, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 476.

[zz] (Vt. 1843) Notes of hand were delivered by A. to B. as an indemnity, which came into the hands of C. and were collected by him. In an action in favor of B. against C. to recover the amount thus collected, held, that A. was not a competent witness to prove that the notes had been obtained by him with the consent of the attorney holding them for collection, and had been sold by him to defendant for a valuable consideration.—Stimson v. Cummings, 15 Vt. 477.

§ 311. —— For or against guarantor.

[a] (Conn. 1831) In an action on the guaranty of a note not negotiable, the defense was that the maker had been taken on execution for the same debt and discharged out of custody. Held, that the maker was an incompetent witness for defendant.—Terrell v. Smith, 8 Conn. 426.

[b] (Ill. 1864) The payee of a note may call the maker to charge the guarantor.—Knoebel v. Kircher, 33 Ill. 308.

[c] (Mass. 1853) The maker of a note, who has paid a third person to guaranty it, is a competent witness for the payee against such guarantor, as his interest is equally balanced.—Perry v. Swasey, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 36.

[d] (Pa. 1849) In a suit against a person as the guarantor on a note, the maker of the note is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Taylor v. McCune, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 460.

§ 312. —— Co-makers.

[a] (Ala. 1843) In an action against one of several joint and several makers of a note, a co-maker is a competent witness to impeach the consideration of the note.—Thompson v. Armstrong, 5 Ala. 383.

[b] (Ala. 1847) One joint maker of a note, not sued, is not a competent witness for his co-maker, without a release.—Kornegay v. Salle, 12 Ala. 534.

[c] (Ill. 1866) One of the principals to a note is not a competent witness for the other principal, unless he has been released from liability for contribution.—Marine Bank v. Ferry's Adm'rs, 40 Ill. 255.

[d] (Md. 1846) A., the indorser on a note signed by B. and C., agreed to pay the note when due. Held, that this agreement did not render B. an incompetent witness for the holder of the note in an action by him against A., the indorser.—Crowley v. Barry, 4 Gill, 194.

[e] (N. Y. 1818) Where a defense rested on matters arising subsequent to the execution of a note, one of the makers of it is a competent witness to defeat the recovery, even without a release, being indifferent between the parties.—Skilding v. Warren, 15 Johns. 270.

[f] (N. Y. 1855) The maker of a note is a competent witness for the indorser, but not in behalf of a co-maker.—Finn v. Gustin, 4 E. D. Smith, 382, 2 Abb. Prac. 191.

[g] (S. C. 1822) Where two gave their joint and several note, on which one was sued, the other cannot be a witness for defendant.—Kile v. Graham, 1 McCord, 552.

[h] (Tenn. 1844) A joint promisor in a note is not a competent witness to prove, in an action against the others, that they signed the note, or authorized another to sign it in their names.—Harvey v. Sweasy, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 449.

[i] (Vt. 1841) Three persons gave their joint and several note as principals. Held, that one of them was not a competent witness for another of the makers, when sued severally on the note, being interested by being bound to contribute to the costs as well as to the debt.—Pinney v. Bugbee, 13 Vt. 623.

§ 313. Drawer of bill.

[a] (Ga. 1854) A copartnership consisted of A. and B. A. owed C. a private debt, and C. made a draft on the firm for the amount, which was accepted by A. in the name of the firm, and was then indorsed by C. A. died, and suit was then brought on the draft by an indorsee against B., the surviving partner. Held, that C. was a competent witness for defendant to show the consideration.—Freeman v. Ross, 15 Ga. 252.

[b] (Me. 1823) The drawer of a bill of exchange is not a competent witness for the indorsee, in an action against the acceptor, because of his liability to damages, interest, and costs if the party calling him should not prevail.—Scott v. McLellan, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 199.

[c] (Mass. 1812) The drawer of a bill is a competent witness, in an action against the acceptor, to show that the acceptance was conditional.—Storer v. Logan, 9 Mass. 55.

[d] (Mass. 1857) In an action by the purchaser of a bill of exchange in New York against the drawee in Massachusetts for nonacceptance, the drawer, who also resides in New York, is a competent witness for plaintiff; his liability in damages to plaintiff, under the laws of New York, in the event of the failure of plaintiff to maintain the action, being too remote and contingent an interest to exclude him.—Barney v. Newcomb, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 46.

[e] (Pa. 1839) In a suit by the holder against the acceptor of a bill, the drawer is not competent to prove that the bill was drawn for his accommodation.—Smith v. Thorne, 9 Watts, 144.

[f] (Pa. 1848) The drawer of a foreign bill is not a competent witness, in an action against the acceptor, to prove his authority to draw it, nor facts tending to show such authority, as he is liable for re-exchange or statutory damages to the holder.—Dennistoun v. Fleming, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 528.

[g] (Va. 1846) A drawer of a bill, for whose accommodation it has been accepted, is not a competent witness for the acceptors, in an action thereon by the holder against them.—Ford v. Nichols, 3 Grat. 88.

§ 314. Indorser of bill or note.

Payee, see post, § 318.

[a] The indorser of a note is a competent witness in a suit against the maker.
—(U. S. 1838) Mason v. Masi, Fed. Cas. No. 9,244 [5 Cranch, C. C. 397];
(Cal. 1861) Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 476;
(Me. 1851) Berry v. Hall, 33 Me. 493.

[b] (U. S. 1811) In an action on a bill of exchange, plaintiff's indorser cannot be a witness to prove that the bill belongs to him, as a witness will not be allowed to swear himself into an interest.—Cropper v. Nelson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,417 [3 Wash. C. C. 125].

[c] (U. S. 1812) An indorser is a competent witness for the maker of a note, to prove that the indorsement was without consideration and to give credit to the note.—Gilman v. King, Fed. Cas. No. 5,444 [2 Cranch, C. C. 48].

[d] (U. S. 1824) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, the indorser is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove an acknowledgment of the debt, so as to take the case out of the statute of limitations.—Bank of Alexandria v. Clarke, Fed. Cas. No. 844 [2 Cranch, C. C. 464].

[e] (Ala. 1835) An indorser of a note or bill is incompetent, in respect to his interest, as a witness in favor of a subsequent indorsee, to charge any party to the instrument whose liability is anterior to his own.—Kennon v. McRea, 2 Port. 389.

[f] (Ala. 1848) An indorser is not a competent witness for his indorsee, in a suit by him against the maker, unless it be shown that by a release, by negligence, or in some other mode his liability as indorser has been discharged.—Briggs v. Moore, 14 Ala. 433.

[g] (Cal. 1855) In a suit by an indorsee against the maker of a note, the indorser may testify for plaintiff, not being a party, and where it does not appear that the action is prosecuted for his immediate benefit.—Tomlinson v. Spencer, 5 Cal. 291.

[h] (Cal. 1856) An indorser of a note is incompetent as a witness to establish the lien of the holder thereof on the property of the maker, being interested to have the lien established.—Soule v. Dawes, 6 Cal. 473.

[i] (Cal. 1859) The indorser is a competent witness for either party in a suit against an acceptor or a maker of a note.—Bryant v. Watriss, 13 Cal. 85.

[j] (Cal. 1864) An indorser of a note is not rendered incompetent as a witness for either party, in an action against the maker, by interest, or by the provisions of section 4 or section 393 of the practice act.—Priest v. Bounds, 25 Cal. 188.

[k] (Ill. 1840) In an action by an indorsee against an indorser, a subsequent indorser is not a competent witness for plaintiff, although he has before recovered judgment against such subsequent indorser in an action on the note.—Hayes v. Gorham, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 429.

[l] (Ill. 1873) An indorser of negotiable paper, having given it the sanction of his own name, will not be permitted by his own testimony to impeach its consideration.—Dewey v. Warriner, 71 Ill. 198, 22 Am. Rep. 91.

[m] (Iowa, 1858) An indorser of a note, who may be liable if the maker is not, is not a competent witness against the maker.—Craig v. Andrews, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 17.

[mm] (La. 1842) A witness is not incompetent, because an indorser on the note on which the original suit was based, when his testimony can in no way affect his liability.—Debuys v. Connolly, 2 Rob. 338.

[n] (La. 1844) The indorser, where the facts he is to prove do not tend to affect his liability, nor to change as to him the ultimate result of the suit, is competent for the makef.—Macarty v. Roach, 7 Rob. 357.

[nn] (La. 1861) In an action on a note, the defense was that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder of the note, but that it belonged to the indorser, and had been transferred to plaintiff for the purpose of depriving defendant of a defense which he had against the indorser; that the note was without consideration, and given merely for accommodation. Held that, if the defense was true, the indorser would be liable to defendant for whatever amount defendant might be compelled to pay on the note, and the indorser was not a competent witness.—Price v. Emerson, 16 La. Ann. 95.

[o] (Me. 1837) The indorser of a note is a competent witness, if without interest, to prove any fact that does not go to show the note void in its inception.—Buck v. Appleton, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 284.

[oo] (Me. 1853) In an action, indorsee against maker, the indorser, not being interested, may testify to the execution of the note.—Goodwin v. Chadwick, 35 Me. 198.

[p] (Md. 1857) The indorser of a note protested for nonpayment is not a competent witness to prove the existence of a claim, to be used for the purpose of authorizing a decree by which a voluntary deed of the maker would be declared void, thereby creating a fund and rendering property liable to pay the note which but for this decree he must pay, without prospect of repayment.—Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198.

[pp] (Md. 1861) In a suit by the holder against the maker of a note, the indorser is a competent witness in favor of the maker, because, though his testimony may defeat the action and discharge the maker, he may nevertheless be liable on the indorsement and lose the benefit of a judgment against the maker.—Whiteford v. Munroe, 17 Md. 135.

[q] (Md. 1866) In an action on a bill of exchange against the drawer, an indorser of the bill to plaintiff is not a competent witness for the latter, when such indorser received notice of the dishonor of the bill and failed to notify defendant, and when plaintiff has secured by attachment the payment of any judgment that he may recover, as by enabling plaintiff to recover the indorser would effectually shield himself from liability to plaintiff.—Williams v. Brailsford, 25 Md. 126.

[qq] (Mass. 1842) In an action by an indorsee against one who signed a note on the back thereof, the indorser is a competent witness to prove that defendant signed the note at the same time with the promisor, whose signature was on the face of the note.—Richardson v. Lincoln, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 201.

[r] (Mass. 1850) The indorser of a note, being called as a witness by the holder in an action thereon against the maker, stated on his voir dire that he sold the note for less than half the sum due thereon for the purpose of becoming a witness; that if plaintiff prevailed, and recovered the full amount of the note, he expected plaintiff would make him some allowance, though there was no such agreement between them; and that if plaintiff should not prevail, he should probably make some return of the money received by him, though he did not consider himself under any legal liability to that effect. Held, that the witness was competent.—Williams v. Bugbee, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 418.

[rr] (Miss. 1832) The doctrine that a party to a negotiable instrument is not a competent witness to affect it does not apply where the indorser is offered to prove some fact transpiring after the paper has passed out of his hands.—Drake v. Henly, Walk. 541.

[s] (Miss. 1870) Where the indorser of a note has been notified of its dishonor, he is incompetent as a witness.—Partee v. Silliman, 44 Miss. 272.

[ss] (Mo. 1822) An intermediate indorser of a bill of exchange is a competent witness in an action against the payee; the witness not being benefited or injured by the event of the suit, nor the verdict evidence either for or against him.—Little's Adm'r v. Pratte, 1 Mo. 201.

[t] (N. H. 1839) Where a note is indorsed after maturity, the indorser is a competent witness to show payment of the note before indorsement, or any other legal defense to the note.—Odiorne v. Howard, 10 N. H. 343.

[tt] (N. J. 1845) An indorser of a note is a competent witness for the holder in a suit against a prior indorser.—Woodruff v. Daggett, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 526.

[u] (N. Y. 1855) The indorser of a note is a competent witness for the maker, but not in behalf of a co-indorser.—Finn v. Gustin, 4 E. D. Smith, 382, 2 Abb. Prac. 191.

[uu] (N. C. 1882) The effect of Acts 1879, c. 183, amending Code, § 343, is to restore all the common-law rules of evidence applicable to a suit on a bond executed prior to August, 1868; and as, by the common law, all parties to an action and those having a direct legal interest in the event were excluded, except where such interest was equally balanced, an indorser of a note comes within the exception, and is a competent witness for either party in a suit between his indorsee and the maker. —Pugh v. Grant, 86 N. C. 39.

[v] (Ohio, 1818) In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a note, the indorser is not a competent witness to prove the handwriting of the maker.—Bank of St. Clairsville v. Glasener, Tapp. 288.

[vv] (Ohio, 1846) Where the interest of an indorser is equally balanced, as where the recovery of either party will subject him to a suit, in which the recovery by either against him will be for the same account, he is a competent witness to prove a prior indorsement, claimed to have been forged.—Ellis v. Bervellier, 15 Ohio, 489.

[w] (Pa. 1824) In an action by the indorsee against the maker, the indorser is a competent witness to prove that defendant had notice of the indorsement before he acquired a claim on the indorser, which he offers to set off.—Zeigler v. Gray, 12 Serg. & R. 42.

[ww] (Pa. 1837) In a suit by the holder against the drawer of a note, the indorser cannot prove the drawer's handwriting.—Geoghegan v. Reid, 2 Whart. 152.

[x] (Pa. 1841) Defendant, who was a subcontractor for carrying mail, on becoming indebted to plaintiff and others, who were subcontractors, drew a bill on the postmaster general, which he indorsed and delivered to M., one of the subcontractors, and plaintiff and M. indorsed the bill for discount, and plaintiff, who received the proceeds, paid part of the subcontractors, including M., and retained the balance for the payment of the others. Payment of the bill was refused, and plaintiff was compelled to pay it. Held that, in an action by him against defendant to recover the amount, M. was a competent witness for plaintiff, as he had no further interest in the bill. —Horback v. Reeside, 6 Whart. 47.

[xx] (Pa. 1861) If negotiation after maturity be first proved aliunde, the indorser of a note is competent to prove that it had been fraudulently negotiated.—Barton v. Fetherolf, 39 Pa. (3 Wright) 279.

[y] (Pa. 1864) The indorser of a bill or note, pledged by him as collateral security to indorsees, is a competent witness for the maker in an action against him by the holders, where his interest is equally poised between the parties, and his testimony relates to matters arising subsequently to the original making of the note and its indorsement.—Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Marr, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 504.

[yy] (Tenn. 1850) The indorser of a bill of exchange is a competent witness for either party, in an action by the indorsee against the drawer.—Oliver v. Bank of Tennessee, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 74.

[z] (Tenn. 1853) In an action on negotiable paper by the indorsee against the maker, the indorser (not being otherwise disqualified) is a competent witness for either party, if he has indorsed it when overdue, or if by the laws of the state in which the paper was negotiated the maker may, in an action against him on the paper, resist a recovery by an indorsee on the ground of want of consideration or fraud in making the paper.—Smithwick v. Anderson, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 573.

[zz] (Vt. 1852) The indorser of a note is a competent witness to prove the note void in its inception, when he is not shown to be directly interested in the event of the suit.—Pecker v. Sawyer, 24 Vt. 459.

§ 315. —— Indorsement without recourse or for collection.

Payee, see post, § 319.

[a] (Ala. 1848) An indorser, who has assigned a note without recourse, which was made payable to him as the agent of the indorsee, for a debt due the indorsee, is a competent witness for the latter in a suit on the note.—Boyd v. McIvor, 14 Ala. 593.

[b] (Ill. 1841) An indorser of a bill or note "without recourse" is a competent witness to show that the bill or note was void in its inception; he having no interest in any event.—Bradley v. Morris, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 182.

[c] (Ill. 1858) Where one has indorsed a note without recourse to himself, he may be called to prove a promise of the maker, to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations.—Merritt v. Merritt, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 65.

[d] (Me. 1841) The indorser of a note "without recourse" is a competent witness for the indorsee, in an action against the maker, to prove that a material alteration was made by the promisor at the time it was signed, and before its delivery to the payee.—Abbott v. Mitchell, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 354.

[e] (Mo. 1866) Rev. Code 1855, p. 1578, § 6, which provides that no grantor, vendor, or assignor in any deed, instrument, or writing affecting property, real, personal, or mixed, or any claim or right therein or therefrom, shall be a competent witness to alter, change, or qualify the proper effect and operation of the words and terms of such deed, instrument, or writing, does not prevent an indorser of a note in blank for collection only from being a witness to prove that it was so indorsed.—Perry v. Siter, 37 Mo. 273.

[f] (N. Y. 1808) The indorser of a note is not competent to testify to an agreement between him and the maker to the effect that there shall be no recourse over, although he may show the agreement by other evidence.—Cummings v. Fisher, Anth. N. P. 1.

[g] (N. C. 1801) A subscribing witness to a note, to whom it is afterwards indorsed, and who then indorses it without recourse, is a competent witness to prove its execution.—Billingsly v. Knight, 4 N. C. 540.

[h] (Pa. 1851) An indorser of a note cannot be a witness to prove that it was indorsed to him merely for collection; the presumption of law being that he was the owner, and he is not a proper witness to rebut that presumption.—Miley v. Todd, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 101.

§ 316. —— Accommodation paper.

[a] (Conn. 1831) The first indorser of a note is competent, without a release, to prove, in a suit by the holder against a subsequent indorser, that defendant indorsed the note merely for the accommodation of the maker, and that the maker negotiated it fraudulently.—Hall v. Hale, 8 Conn. 336.

[b] (Pa. 1823) The indorser of a note given for his own accommodation cannot be a witness for the maker, to prove it an accommodation note, when it has been discounted by the holder, if such indorser has given the maker a bond of indemnity.—Bank of Montgomery County v. Walker, 9 Serg. & R. 229, 11 Am. Dec. 709.

[c] (Pa. 1823) An indorser of a note, who made an assignment before its maturity, is a competent witness, as between the holder of the note and the assignee, to testify that the note was in fact made for his accommodation, and to state any fact explaining the transaction which did not go to prejudice the holder of the note.—Bank of Pennsylvania v. Strawbridge, 11 Haz. Reg. 237.

[d] (Pa. 1833) Where a note was made and indorsed for the indorser's accommodation, and by him discounted at a bank, the bank, in an action against the indorser's assignee in insolvency to recover dividends declared, may prove by the indorser that the note was made for his accommodation and that he was in fact primarily liable thereon.—Bank of Pennsylvania v. McCalmont, 4 Rawle, 307.

[e] (Va. 1856) The last of several indorsers of an accommodation note, being obliged to take it up at maturity, sues his immediate indorser, who at the trial offers as a witness the indorser immediately preceding him on the note, to prove that all the indorsers had agreed at the time of executing the note to be liable as joint securities only. The court below ruled that, whether plaintiff recovered or not, the witness' interest would be the same, except as to costs of the action, and that a release by defendant for costs only would render him competent. While the release was preparing, it was discovered that, in consequence of the time elapsed since the payment of the money on the note by plaintiff, the witness was protected by the statute of limitations against any recovery on his part, and the witness was not permitted to testify. Held, the right of the witness to plead the statute in such an event disturbed his equality of interest in this suit and rendered him incompetent to testify.—Chapman v. Hiden, 2 Pat. & H. 91.

§ 317. Payee of bill or note.

[a] (U. S. 1847) In an action between the indorsers of a note, the payee was a competent witness to prove a contract between the two indorsers that they would divide the loss between them.—Phillips v. Preston, 46 U. S. (5 How.) 278, 12 L. Ed. 152.

[b] (U. S. 1812) The payee is not a competent witness in an action on the note.—Gilman v. King, Fed. Cas. No. 5,444 [2 Cranch, C. C. 48].

[c] (Ala. 1827) The payee is a competent witness to impeach the consideration of the note.—Todd v. Stafford, 1 Stew. 199.

[d] (Ala. 1840) The payee of a note payable to himself or bearer is a competent witness, in a suit by the bearer against the maker, to impeach the consideration. The objection is to his credibility merely.—Davidson v. Love, 1 Ala. 133.

[e] (Cal. 1861) The payee of a note is a competent witness in a suit against the maker.—Smith v. Richmond, 19 Cal. 476.

[f] (Del. 1869) The payee of a note negotiated before maturity, and still in the hands of an innocent indorsee without notice, is not a competent witness to prove the conditional delivery or failure of consideration. — Wilson v. Walker, 4 Houst. 96.

[g] (Ga. 1832) The payee of a note is a competent witness, under some circumstances, to prove its consideration.—Slack v. Moss, Dud. 161.

[h] (Ga. 1854) When the action is on a note payable to bearer, such bearer is not necessarily so interested as to render him an incompetent witness.—Rich v. Dupree, 14 Ga. 661.

[i] (Iowa, 1840) The payee of a note is competent, when not interested, to prove facts arising after the execution of the note, but not to prove anything affecting the original liability of the maker.—Strang v. Wilson, Morris, 84.

[j] (Ky. 1827) A. recovered a judgment at law on a note given by B. to C., and assigned by the latter to A. C. became insolvent, and B. filed his bill, with injunction, claiming demands due him from C. at the time of the assignment of the note, and prayed that they might be set off against the judgment. Held, that C. was an incompetent witness for A.—Brown v. Vance's Ex'rs, 20 Ky. (4 T. B. Mon.) 418.

[k] (La. 1830) A payee, who has transferred the note without indorsement or recourse, may prove its consideration.—Hughes v. Harrison, 2 La. 89.

[l] (Mass. 1807) The payee of a note, payable to him or bearer, is incompetent to prove the making of the note; otherwise, if indorsed without recourse.—Rice v. Stearns, 3 Mass. 225, 3 Am. Dec. 129.

[m] (Mo. 1862) The payee and assignor of a note is not a competent witness for the maker to prove a defense that avoids the note. Rev. Code 1855, p. 1577.—Kobbe v. Landecker, 32 Mo. 170.

[n] (N. Y. 1818) The payee of a note is not a competent witness for the holder in an action against the maker, although the holder took it at his own risk as to the solvency of the maker.—Herrick v. Whitney, 15 Johns. 240.

[o] (N. Y. 1832) In an action by the assignee of a note payable to A. B., or bearer, evidence of declarations made by the payee while he was holder of the note, in discharge of the maker, is inadmissible; the payee himself being a competent witness in such case.—Whitaker v. Brown, 8 Wend. 490.

[p] (Pa. 1833) The payee of a note is a competent witness to prove it an accommodation note, though the maker was indebted to the payee of the note at the time it was made.—Bank of Pennsylvania v. McCalmont, 4 Rawle, 307.

[q] (Pa. 1852) The payee of a note, who has negotiated it, is not a competent witness for a subsequent holder in an action against the maker.—Bailey v. Knapp, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 192.

[r] (Pa. 1861) The rule laid down in Walton v. Shelly, 1 Term R. 296, extends only to negotiable paper actually negotiated and in the hands of an innocent holder, who took it without any previous notice of any original defect in it; and it excludes only those parties whose names were on the paper when it was transferred to the holder.—Hawkins v. Cree, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 494.

[s] (Pa. 1861) Where a note is not indorsed, but assigned to the holder, with a general warranty by the assignor and a third party, and there is evidence in the cause to the effect that the holder had admitted that he thought there was something wrong about it, and did not want to take it unless the assignor would guaranty it, which he was for a long time unwilling to do, held, that the payee of the note is not incompetent as a witness for the maker. —Hawkins v. Cree, 37 Pa. (1 Wright) 494.

[t] (S. C. 1833) The payee of a note is a competent witness to prove the want of consideration and that the note has been altered in a material part.—Smith v. Cheney's Adm'r, 1 Hill, 148.

[u] (S. C. 1859) Where, in an action by the bearer on a note payable to A., or bearer, the defense is a discount for demands due by A. to defendant, A. is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that the note was transferred before it was due and for a valuable consideration.—Strickland v. Stevens, 12 Rich. Law, 78.

§ 318. —— Indorsement.

[a] (Ala. 1845) The payee of a gaming note, who has transferred it to another, is a competent witness for the maker, and may be compelled to testify as to the consideration of the note, on a bill in chancery filed by the maker against the indorsee.—Manning v. Manning, 8 Ala. 138.

[b] (Cal. 1864) S. made a note to A. & B., partners. A. indorsed the note to B., the partnership being dissolved, and B. sued the note, attaching property. The property attached was bought at a sheriff's sale by B., and he sold a portion of it to A. P. brought an action against B. and the sheriff to recover the property as belonging to himself. Held, that A. was not inadmissible as a witness in behalf of the defendants in this suit, under Prac. Act, § 422, as an "assignor," nor under section 391, as having a "present, certain, and vested interest in the suit."—Peterie v. Bugbey, 24 Cal. 419.

[c] (Del. 1863) In an action by the innocent holder of a note negotiated before maturity against the maker, the payee and indorser is a competent witness for defendant to prove that it had been altered in a material manner and fraudulently put in circulation, contrary to his intention, after he had indorsed and delivered it for a special purpose.—Sudler v. Collins, 2 Houst. 538.

[d] (Ill. 1840) In an action by an indorsee against the maker of a note, the indorser, who received the note as payee merely as agent of the indorsee, is a competent witness for defendant to impeach the consideration of the note.—Webster v. Vickers, 3 Ill. (2 Scam.) 295.

[e] (Ill. 1861) The payee and first indorser is a competent witness, in a suit on a bill against a subsequent indorser, to prove any fact which does not impeach the genuineness of the bill or go to its discharge before or at the time when he parted with it.—Rives v. Marrs, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 315.

[f] (Ill. 1862) The payee and indorser of a note is not a competent witness to prove that an assignee had not paid any consideration for a note, or that it had not been delivered to the assignee.—Coon v. Nock, 27 Ill. (17 Peck) 235.

[g] (Iowa. 1840) In a suit by the indorsee against the maker of a note indorsed before it was due, the payee is, if not interested, competent to prove that the indorsee paid full consideration for the note.—Strang v. Wilson, Morris, 84.

[h] (La. 1861) When the defense against a note was that the note belonged to the indorser and had been transferred for the purpose of depriving defendant of the defense of want of consideration, and merely for the accommodation of indorser, who was merely payee, held that, if this plea be true, the indorser would be liable to defendant for the reimbursement of whatever defendant was obliged to pay on the note, and that, at least until defendant released the indorser from liability over to himself, he could not be allowed to testify in the cause.—Price v. Emerson, 16 La. Ann. 95.

[i] (La. 1867) In a suit on a note by a third holder against the maker, the payee and indorser is a competent witness for the maker to prove a subsequent agreement between the maker and payee, he being then the holder, by which the note was to be extinguished.—Nash v. East, 19 La. Ann. 165.

[j] (Mass. 1831) In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a note, the payee is a competent witness to prove the time of indorsement.—Spring v. Lovett, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 417.

[k] (Mass. 1846) A note, signed by A. as principal, and by B. and C. as sureties, was made payable to the order of M., and placed in his hands for a special purpose, which was not effected. M. afterwards, with the consent of A., but without the consent or knowledge of B. and C., indorsed the note to an officer as security for property attached by him as the property of a corporation of which M. was the treasurer and agent. Held, in a suit on a note, brought by the officer against A., B., and C., that M. was a competent witness for defendants.—Strong v. Buck, 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 279.

[l] (Mass. 1860) The payee of a note is a competent witness to prove that it was given without consideration, and that after it had been paid and given up to the promisor it was again placed in the hands of the payee for another purpose than that of being paid, and that a subsequent indorser took it with notice of all these facts.—Fish v. French, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 520.

[m] (N. J. 1810) The payee of a note, who had indorsed it to plaintiff, was a competent witness in an action thereon to testify that the note was executed to him, subject to conditions of which he had informed plaintiff at the time of making the indorsement, and that by a fulfillment of the conditions there was nothing due on the note.—Rosevelt v. Gardener, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 694.

[n] (N. J. 1834) In an action brought by the indorsee against the maker on a note, the payee and indorser is not a competent witness, if it appear that he was the real debtor, and had borrowed the note of defendants for the purpose of raising money on it.—Letson v. Dunham, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 307.

[o] (N. Y. 1841) Defendants were indorsees of a draft, having received the same through several successive indorsements; the name of the payee appearing as the first. Plaintiff bank paid the draft to defendants, and afterwards sued to recover back the payment, on the ground that the payee's indorsement was a forgery. Held, that the payee was not incompetent, from interest, to testify in behalf of plaintiff.—Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, 1 Hill, 287.

[p] (Ohio, 1833) The payee of a note, in a suit between the indorsee and the maker, is a competent witness to prove the terms of the indorsement, if called to the stand by the maker; their interests being adverse.—Stone v. Vance, 6 Ohio (6 Ham.) 246.

[q] (Pa. 1834) Where a note in blank, payable to the order of the first indorser, was produced, and a certain amount of it was then paid by the second indorser, who afterwards received the amount from the drawer, the first indorser was not a competent witness to prove that such payment by the drawer was on account of the note, and not on account of a distinct claim on which suit was brought by the second indorser against a firm of which the drawer was a member.—Rhodes v. Lent, 3 Watts, 364.

[r] (Pa. 1856) The payee cannot be a witness for his indorsee in a suit by the latter against the maker.—Hatz v. Snyder, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 511.

[s] (Pa. 1867) The payee, who has indorsed a note, cannot testify in a suit proceeding on the consideration of a note, because, if not in strictness an indorser, he is the assignor of a chose in action, who comes in on the record as plaintiff to recover it.—Foreman v. Ahl, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 325.

§ 319. —— Indorsement without recourse.

[a] (Me. 1834) The payee of a note, having indorsed it without recourse, is a competent witness for the indorsee, in an action against the maker, to prove a new promise within six years.—Howe v. Thompson, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 152.

[b] (Me. 1849) In a suit by the indorsee against the maker on a note indorsed by the payee without recourse, the payee is a competent witness for defendant to prove the time of the indorsement, that a bond had been executed by defendant to plaintiff, and that the surrender of the bond was the consideration of the note.—Davis v. Sawtelle, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 389.

[c] (N. H. 1852) The payee of a note, which he has indorsed, "without recourse," is a competent witness for the indorsee, in an action on the note against the maker.—Edgerly v. Shaw, 25 N. H. (5 Fost.) 514, 57 Am. Dec. 349.

§ 320. Acceptor of bill.

[a] (U. S. 1824) In an action by the drawee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, where the acceptor is offered as a witness to prove that the bill was drawn by defendant for the accommodation of plaintiff, the circumstance that the act of limitations would be a bar to plaintiff's action against the witness on his acceptance if plaintiff fails in this action against the drawer, but would be no bar to an action which this defendant might bring against the witness on his acceptance in case this defendant should be compelled by this suit to pay the money, does not render the witness incompetent by reason of interest.—Knowles v. Stewart, Fed. Cas. No. 7,900 [2 Cranch, C. C. 457].

[b] (Conn. 1819) One having funds in the hands of his correspondent drew a bill on him for the amount, which the latter accepted, but failed to pay. Held, in an action brought by the payee against the drawer, that the acceptor was a competent witness for the drawer.—Barnwell v. Mitchell, 3 Conn. 101.

[c] (La. 1841) A statute which excludes the drawer of a bill from being a witness in a suit by the holder against the indorser, being in derogation of the settled rules of evidence, will not be extended beyond its letter, and will not be construed to apply to the acceptor.—Buckner v. Watt, 19 La. 216, 36 Am. Dec. 671.

[d] (La. 1841) An acceptor of a bill, who is without interest in the suit by the holder against the indorser, is a competent witness.—Buckner v. Watt, 19 La. 216, 36 Am. Dec. 671.

[e] (Mass. 1838) In an action by the indorsee against the drawer of a bill of exchange, the acceptor is a competent witness to prove that he has not had in his hands any funds of the drawer.—Kinsley v. Robinson, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 327.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) A debtor assigned his property in trust for the benefit of creditors, giving a preference to persons who had accepted paper for his accommodation. Held, that the acceptor of a draft was a competent witness to prove that the acceptance was for the accommodation of the drawer, in order to entitle the holder of the draft to preference in payment out of the estate of the drawer under the assignment.—Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615.

§ 321. Assignor and assignee or indorsee.

[a] (U. S. 1815) Plaintiff, being sole owner of a bill of exchange, indorsed it in blank and delivered it to B., to deliver to defendant for collection; and, when collected, the amount was to be placed to the credit of plaintiff and B. on account. Defendant collected the amount, but refused to place it to the credit of plaintiff and B., who settled their account with defendant and paid him the balance. Held that, in an action by plaintiff against defendant for the amount received on the bills, B. was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Taber v. Perrott, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 39, 3 L. Ed. 649.

[b] (Ala. 1833) Evidence of the handwriting of the subscribing witness to a note, or of the signature of the maker, and his admission of its execution, is not admissible in an action against the maker, brought by the subscribing witness, who, after attesting the note, became the assignee thereof.—Bennet v. Robinson's Adm'r, 3 Stew. & P. 227.

[c] (Ala. 1848) In an action on a note by an indorsee against the first indorser, the indorsee of defendant is a competent witness for plaintiff to disprove an agreement set up by defendant, in defense, by which certain claims against the witness were in a certain contingency to be set off against the note, the claims of defendant against the witness not being disputed, as his interest is balanced, and he is not rendered incompetent by a release from plaintiff.—Isbell v. Brown, 13 Ala. 383.

[d] (Ala. 1859) The assignor of a note is not competent to prove the cause of action, but is to disprove payment, release, or matter in discharge.—Eaton v. Kirkman, 35 Ala. 272.

[e] (Conn. 1836) It is no objection to the competency of a witness, called to impeach the validity of a note, that he had assigned it and thereby given it currency.—Johnson v. Blackmar, 11 Conn. 342.

[f] (Ga. 1854) Where A. assigns a note to B., on the question whether an indorsement on it is a forgery, A.'s testimony to prove the genuineness of the note is inadmissible from interest.—Sneed v. Hughes, 14 Ga. 542.

[g] (Ky. 1840) An assignor of a note, who assigns it without recourse, stating the defense which would be made to it, but assuring the assignee that it was unpaid, will be liable, if it turns out that the note was in fact paid before the assignment. He is not, therefore, a competent witness for the assignee without a release.—Woolfolk v. McDowell, 39 Ky. (9 Dana) 268.

[h] (Ky. 1841) The assignee of a note, which was not in the mercantile sense negotiable paper, but assignable merely under the statute authorizing the assignment of notes, so as to invest in the assignee the legal right of the obligee, and no other or greater right as against the obligor, was a competent witness to prove that the note was executed without any good or valuable consideration.—Bement v. McClaren, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 296.

[i] (Me. 1841) Where one having in his hands a draft, void as to him for want of consideration, passes it over in payment of a pre-existing debt, he is a competent witness in a suit between the holder and the parties to the draft; his interest being balanced.—Norton v. Waite, 20 Me. (2 App.) 175.

[j] (Me. 1845) Where a note secured by a mortgage has been indorsed by the payee, and the mortgage assigned, and the indorsee, without indorsing the note, by an instrument in writing on the mortgage, conveys "all his right, title, and interest in and to the within mortgage, and the premises described therein, and also the mortgaged note named therein," to A., the assignor is a competent witness for A. in an action by him upon the note.—Fuller v. Hodgdon, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 243.

[k] (Miss. 1850) The fraudulent assignor of a note is not a competent witness for the assignee, in an action against the maker, to support the consideration.—Brodnax v. Brodnax, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 369.

[l] (Mo. 1865) The assignor of a note is an incompetent witness as to facts occurring before the assignment.—Hendricks v. Ebbitt, 37 Mo. 24.

[m] (Mo. 1866) An assignor of a note, the principal defendant in a prior garnishment suit, is a competent witness to prove that at the date of the garnishment he was the owner of the note, the subject of the garnishment, and that there was no consideration for the assignment.—Weil v. Tyler, 38 Mo. 558, 90 Am. Dec. 441.

[n] (N. Y. 1819) Where the holder of a note payable to bearer transfers it to another person for a valuable consideration, under an agreement that the person to whom it is transferred shall collect it at his own risk, he is not a competent witness for such person, in an action by him on the note, as he is still responsible if the note should prove to be a forgery.—Shaver v. Ehle, 16 Johns. 201.

[o] (N. Y. 1824) One who held a note indorsed in blank, and sold it to another without indorsing it, is, after the execution of the note is proved, a competent witness for the holder, in an action by him against an indorser.—Williams v. Matthews, 3 Cow. 252.

[p] (N. Y. 1838) Since a transfer of a note at the risk of the party receiving it leaves the implied warranty that the note is genuine, a party to the transfer is not a competent witness in an action upon it, if its genuineness is disputed.—Watson's Ex'rs v. McLaren, 19 Wend. 557.

[q] (N. Y. 1852) A former holder of a note, who has transferred it without recourse or guaranty, is a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit thereon.—James v. Chalmers, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 413.

[r] (Pa. 1852) The former owner of a note, who has transferred it by delivery without indorsement, is a witness for the maker to prove that plaintiff holds it in trust for the use of the witness, and that the maker has paid the amount in full to the party entitled in equity to receive it.—Wallace v. McElevy, 2 Grant, Cas. 44.

[s] (Pa. 1853) In a scire facias against a garnishee in a foreign attachment, who had possession of a note, he pleaded nulla bona, on which issue was joined. Held that one who appeared on the note as second and last assignee thereof was incompetent to prove that the first assignment was made for value before the attachment was issued, and that the assignment to him was made solely for the purpose of collection.—Anderson v. Young's Ex'rs, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 443.

[t] (Pa. 1859) The former holder of a note, who had parted with it before maturity, is a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit on the note.—Dela v. Evans, 3 Phila. 397.

[u] (Pa. 1865) One who sells a note or bill of exchange, although not indorsing it himself, is incompetent to testify for his vendee in an action on the note.—Swanzey v. Parker, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 441, 88 Am. Dec. 549.

[v] (S. C. 1832) A. gave a note to B., of which note C. obtained possession fraudulently and transferred it to D. B. gave notice to A. of the fraud, and directed him not to pay it to D.; but he did pay it to him, and B. brought this suit against A. to obtain the amount of the note. Held, that D. was an incompetent witness for A.; he being liable to D. in case of B.'s recovery.—Proctor v. McCall, 8 Rich. Law, 425.

[w] (Vt. 1848) The holder of a note transferred it for a valuable consideration and without any express contract of warranty or guaranty, and the purchaser commenced an action on the note in the name of the payee, and the maker, on trial, conceded his original and continued indebtedness on the note. Held, that the vendor was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Hough v. Barton, 20 Vt. 455.

[x] (Va. 1827) Previous to the act of 1807, a remote assignor of a note was a competent witness, in a suit between the last assignee and his immediate assignor, to prove that the latter was not liable.—Caton v. Lenox, 5 Rand. 31.

§ 322. Testimony as to payment.

[a] (Ala. 1850) In an action against an attorney for money collected by him on a note, the principal in the note is an incompetent witness to prove that he has paid it to defendant, since the principal is interested in effecting a recovery by plaintiff.—Moore v. Henderson, 18 Ala. 232.

[b] (Ark. 1843) A. brought his bill, alleging that he had executed his note to B., who indorsed the note to C.; that a payment was made to C., who failed to give credit for it on the note, and indorsed the note to D., who had recovered judgment on it; that he and defendants were partners, and that he was retained by them as counsel, and that, if defendants should account with him, there would be nothing due on said note; and that C. was further indebted to him for fees as counsel in another suit. Held, that C. was a competent witness at law, in a suit between complainant and D., to establish the fact of payment alleged to have been made on the note, and that on that ground A. could not be relieved in equity.—Cummins v. Bentley, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 9.

[c] (Conn. 1786) In an action on a note, defendant offered as a witness the drawer of an order, to prove that plaintiff accepted such order in payment of the note. Held, that he was incompetent.—Huntington v. Champlin, Kirby, 166.

[d] (Conn. 1836) The assignee of a note not negotiable is not precluded, by St. 1822, § 1, from giving testimony to prove the payment of the note to him.—Johnson v. Blackman, 11 Conn. 342.

[e] (Ga. 1846) In an action against an attorney to recover money collected by him on a note, an indorser on the note is incompetent to testify that he paid the amount to the attorney, unless released.—Nisbet v. Lawson, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 275.

[f] (Ga. 1856) The answer, payment having been pleaded, "The note was paid off by defendant to myself, in harness, when I had it in possession," does not prove a witness to be interested for defendant.—McNeill v. Rousseau, 20 Ga. 593.

[g] (Iowa, 1846) The drawer of a bill on one person, payable to the order of plaintiff, was, in an action brought by plaintiff against such other person, an incompetent witness to prove payment.—Webb v. Mauro, Morris, 488.

[h] (La. 1815) In a suit against the indorser, the maker of a note is incompetent to prove the extinguishment of the note.—Abat v. Dollole, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 657.

[i] (La. 1850) The payee of a note is a good witness for the holder against the drawers, where the defense is payment.—McCraw v. Tomkins, 5 La. Ann. 183.

[j] (Me. 1853) The payee may testify that the maker paid to him the amount of a note which plaintiff received after its maturity.—Smith v. Morgan, 38 Me. 468.

[k] (Mass. 1814) In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a note, the payee is a competent witness to prove that the note was paid before he indorsed it.—Fitch v. Hill, 11 Mass. 286.

[l] (Pa. 1850) A. sold B. a note, the indorsement on which was forged, and signed a receipt for the purchase-money. B., on discovering the forgery, sued A. on the receipt. Held, that the maker of the note was a competent witness to show that the money was paid to himself, and not to A., as stated in the receipt.—Dutton v. Tilden, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 46.

[m] (Pa. 1861) The indorser of a note may testify to facts amounting to subsequent payment.—Barton v. Fetherolf, 39 Pa. (3 Wright) 279.

[n] (S. C. 1824) In an action against the maker of a note, an indorser on the same is competent to testify that it has been paid.—Nichols v. Artman, Harp. 285.

[o] (S. C. 1831) The payee of a note, if not actually interested, is a competent witness, in an action by the holder against the maker, to prove that it has been paid.—Bobo v. Bostick, 2 Bailey, 106.

§ 323. Guardian and ward.

Parties to action, see ante, § 242.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 512.

[a] (Ala. 1857) A guardian, who has invested his ward's funds in a partnership, is not a competent witness for the ward, when the latter seeks, while still an infant, to enforce the partnership for his benefit.—Stein v. Robertson, 30 Ala. 286.

[b] (Ga. 1862) In an action by a guardian, charging that defendant had purchased a note from the former guardian and seeking to enforce the same, such former guardian is not incompetent on the score of interest.—Fountain v. Anderson, 33 Ga. 372.

[c] (Ill. 1859) A guardian of infant children is not a competent witness to establish a claim by their mother for their maintenance.—Ex parte Guernsey's Estate, 21 Ill. (11 Peck) 443.

[d] (Ky. 1847) A guardian of a testatrix is a competent witness to prove her competency to make a will.—Howard v. Coke, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 655.

[e] (La. 1828) A curator, the legality of whose conduct is at issue, is not competent. He is not within the rule making agents witnesses ex necessitate.—Barbineau's Heirs v. Castille, 7 Mart. (N. S.) 186.

[f] (Md. 1831) Upon a bill for an account of the rents and profits of an infant's estate against an alleged intruder, the infant's guardian is not a competent witness to prove an agreement between himself and defendant that the latter should keep the estate and pay the rents to the infant and another party, who were jointly interested.—Hungerford v. Bourne, 3 Gill & J. 133.

[g] (Md. 1831) In replevin for a slave, plaintiff proposed to prove by his former guardian that the negro in controversy was plaintiff's property. Held, that the mere fact that the negro constituted a part of plaintiff's estate during his minority, and during one period thereof had been in the witness' possession, did not render the witness incompetent.—Watts v. Garrett, 3 Gill & J. 355.

[h] (Miss. 1849) Whether a prochein ami is a competent witness for the infant, or not, yet, where his testimony is addressed to the court, and is adverse to the interests of the infant, the validity of the decree will not be affected by its admission.—Quinn v. Moss, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 365.

[i] (Mo. 1863) In a suit by a guardian to recover money of an intestate estate in the hands of an administrator, the wards are competent witnesses to show his indebtedness to their guardian, as they have no right to the particular sum due as their own absolute property.—Bowman v. Stiles, 34 Mo. 141.

[j] (N. C. 1842) In a suit by an executor on a bond for rent of lands belonging to the testator's estate, the guardian of wards, who are in equity entitled to the rent, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Waddell v. Moore, 24 N. C. 261.

[k] (Pa. 1833) In account rendered by a legatee against the trustee in the will, the legatee's guardian is a competent witness.—Bredin v. Dwen, 2 Watts, 95.

[l] (Tex. 1852) In a suit on behalf of the heirs against an administrator, a person who has been guardian of a minor is a competent witness to prove that he had never received any money from the administrator, as guardian. The objection would, at most, affect his credibility.—Givens' Adm'r v. Davenport, 8 Tex. 451.

[m] (Tex. 1859) The guardian of a defendant to a suit, not himself a party to it, is not incompetent because of interest to testify in such suit at the call of plaintiff.—Todd v. Dysart, 23 Tex. 590.

§ 324. Grantor, trustee, and beneficiary

Parties to action, see ante, § 241.
Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 449.

[a, b] A naked trustee, without interest, is a competent witness.
—(Ala. 1840) Johnson v. Cunningham, 1 Ala 249;
(Ga. 1850) Hardwick v. Hook, 8 Ga. 354;
(N. Y. 1808) Main v. Newson, Anth. N. P. 11;
(N. C. 1836) Jones v. Sasser, 18 N. C. 452.

[c] (Ala. 1837) A cestui que trust is not a competent witness for the party sustaining the deed of trust, in an action against the grantor in which the trust property is attached.—Bank of Alabama v. McDade, 4 Port. 252.

[d] (Ala. 1840) Where a trustee has done no act which affirms the fairness and validity of the deed of trust, he may be examined to show it fraudulent.—Johnson v. Cunningham, 1 Ala. 249.

[e] (Ala. 1840) The mere possibility that a trustee, while acting as such, may have subjected himself to liability for a breach of trust, and may therefore be interested to defeat the deed, will not make him an incompetent witness. The interest is too remote and uncertain.—Johnson v. Cunningham, 1 Ala. 249.

[f] (Ala. 1842) The grantor in a deed of trust of personal property, who has the interest of a resulting trust therein, is not a competent witness for the grantee to show the consideration for the deed.—Stewart v. Fowler, 3 Ala. 629.

[g] (Ark. 1854) A bill was brought to redeem a slave, and exceptions taken by defendant, on a decree for complainant, that a witness had an interest in the event of the suit. Held, that as the witness acted as trustee for the benefit of others, and had therefore no direct, certain, and vested interest, he was competent.—Folsom v. Fowler, 15 Ark. 280.

[h] (Cal. 1856) On the trial of an issue of fact involving the validity of a will, a subscribing witness thereto is not rendered incompetent as a witness by holding lands devised therein in trust for a devisee, and without having any interest himself therein.—Peralta v. Castro, 6 Cal. 354.

[i] (Del. 1855) A trustee under a will giving a compensation for his services is not a competent witness in support of the will.—Davis v. Rogers, 1 Houst. 44.

[j] (Ill. 1867) A trustee, who has misapplied a portion of the trust fund, is not a competent witness by whom to show the purposes for which the trust was created.—Heartrunft v. Daniels, 43 Ill. 369.

[k] (Ky. 1851) A testator devised certain property to B., to be held in trust for the benefit of B.'s wife. Held, that B., after his wife's death, was not a competent witness in a suit to invalidate the will.—Allen v. Everett, 51 Ky. (12 B. Mon.) 371.

[l] (Ky. 1859) One who is constituted by a will a mere trustee for one of the devisees is a competent witness to prove facts necessary to establish the instrument.—Montgomery v. Perkins, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 448, 74 Am. Dec. 419.

[m] (Me. 1840) If the depositary of papers assume the execution of the trust, he becomes responsible to any party who may suffer by the violation of it. His interest is therefore balanced, and he is a competent witness for either party.—Lewis v. Hodgdon, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 267.

[n] (Md. 1831) A trustee, whose liability cannot be altered by opening the decree, is a competent witness on an application for a bill of review.—Hodges v. Mullikin, 1 Bland, 503.

[o] (Md. 1846) An assignor of an account for medical services rendered, the assignment being made in consideration of love and affection to a third person, in trust for the assignor's children, is, under Acts 1829, c. 51, a competent witness for the assignee to prove the services and defendant's promise to pay therefor within three years before the institution of the suit.—Crawford v. Brooke, 4 Gill, 213.

[p] (Mo. 1849) Where one of several trustees is interested to keep the trust as large as possible, he is incompetent to testify in an action against the other trustees.—Hayden v. Cornelius, 12 Mo. 321.

[q] (N. Y. 1816) Where land was held in trust for A. for life, with power of appointment to her among her children, her son was a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit to recover land sold in violation of the trust.—Murray v. Finster, 2 Johns. Ch. 155.

[r] (N. Y. 1853) A sole cestui que trust, having an immediate right, if not to the whole, yet to a definite portion, of the sum sought to be recovered, is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—St. John v. American Mut. Life Ins. Co., 9 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Duer) 419.

[s] (N. C. 1854) On a bill to convert a purchaser, who has taken a conveyance to himself absolute on its face, into a trustee, alleging as part of the parol trust that a part of the property was to be reconveyed to plaintiff's daughters on their marriage, no consideration moving between the daughters and defendant, neither they nor their husbands are incompetent to testify for the plaintiff by reason of interest.—Lamb v. Pigford, 54 N. C. 195.

[t] (Pa. 1814) A trustee, who is lessor of plaintiff in ejectment, is a good witness for defendant to show that the real interest is different from that declared in the conveyance, as, though he has the legal title, he is considered as having no interest.—Drum v. Simpson's Lessee, 6 Bin. 478, 6 Am. Dec. 490.

[u] (Pa. 1834) A person for whom a tract of land was conveyed in trust, and who paid a small part of the purchase money, and who afterwards was present and made no objection to a conveyance by the trustee to another, was a competent witness in ejectment by the grantee of the trustee against one who claimed under the same trust.—Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Watts, 357.

[v] (Pa. 1836) A cestui que trust is not competent as a witness, in a cause affecting the trust fund, by the trustee having made an assignment to a third person without a valuable consideration.—Hoak v. Hoak, 5 Watts, 80.

[w] (Pa. 1836) A cestui que trust cannot be a witness, in an action of ejectment brought in the name of his trustee, unless he actually pay all costs into court, due and to become due, as well as assign his interest in the land.—Campbell v. Galbreath, 5 Watts, 423.

[ww] (Pa. 1861) In an issue between a trustee and an attaching creditor of the cestui que trust, the latter being interested for both plaintiff and defendant, and no certain and preponderating interest being shown for plaintiff, is a competent witness; the jury being instructed that, if they find his interest in favor of plaintiff greater than in favor of defendant, they should reject his testimony altogether.—Rees v. Livingston, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 113.

[x] (Pa. 1861) Where property, raised by the contributions of friends and conveyed in trust to a trustee, for the benefit of the family of one who has failed in business, is attached by a former creditor of the cestui que trust, in an interpleader process between the trustee and the attaching creditor, one of the original contributors to the trust fund, having no interest in the suit, is a competent witness for the trustee.—Rees v. Livingston, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 113.

[xx] (Pa. 1863) A cestui que trust is incompetent to testify in support of the title of the trustee.—Buchanan v. Buchanan, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 186.

[y] (Pa. 1867) In an action of assumpsit by an administrator, claiming money which had been placed by the decedent in the hands of defendant in trust for the use of the children of the decedent, one of the children is not a competent witness for defendant.—Cox v. McKean, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 243.

[yy] (S. C. 1791) A trustee is not competent to prove that the trust deed was never intended to have any operation for the purposes expressed therein.—Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Desaus. 219.

[z] (Va.) A mere naked trustee is a competent witness in a suit by a creditor to set aside the deed of trust on the ground of fraud.—(1822) Harvey v. Alexander, 1 Rand. 219, 10 Am. Dec. 519; (1824) Taylor v. Moore, 2 Rand. 563.

[zz] (Va. 1835) In an action by a purchaser from a trustee to recover the property, the cestui que trust is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Petermans v. Laus, 6 Leigh, 523.

§ 325. Assignor.

Assignor for benefit of creditors, see post, § 333.
—— of bill or note, see ante, § 321.
Effect of calling assignor, see post, § 531.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, §§ 503–505.

[a] The transferror of a chose in action is an incompetent witness for the transferee in a suit brought by him for its recovery.
—(Ala. 1846) Houston v. Prewitt, 8 Ala. 846; (1849) Clifton v. Sharpe, 15 Ala. 618;
(Pa. 1844) Reading R. Co. v. Johnson, 7 Watts & S. 317.

[b] (Ark. 1861) An assignor of a certificate of swamp lands containing no warranty of title is a competent witness for his assignee in a suit against a third person for the purchase money due upon a sale of the lands.—Alexander v. McCauley, 22 Ark. 553.

[c] (Conn. 1793) On an action of account by the assignees of certain debts against the attorney who received them to collect, the assignor may be a witness for defendant.—Cobb v. Baldwin, 1 Root, 534.

[d] (Conn. 1809) A sum of money was awarded by the commissioners under the British treaty to A. for a vessel and cargo which had been captured and condemned, and for the expenses of B., his agent, in endeavoring to prevent a condemnation. A. for a valuable consideration assigned his right in the award to C. B. then brought an action against C. to recover the sum allowed in the award for his expenses, and offered A. as a witness to prove the whole transaction. Held, that A. was inadmissible, as a recovery by B. would discharge his liability to him for the expenses.—Alsop v. Magill, 4 Day, 42.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) In an action on an open account, in the name of an assignee, where the assignment is bona fide and without recourse, and where no set-off or cross-claim against the assignor is pleaded, the assignor is a competent witness to prove the account.—Platt v. Hedge, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 386, 392.

[f] (Ky. 1825) Where an obligor brings his bill to enjoin a judgment at law obtained by the assignee, the assignor is not competent to prove the discharge of the obligation on himself, unless he is released from his liability on the assignment.—Brown v. Vance's Ex'rs, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 136.

[g] (Mo. 1856) An assignor of a chose in action is a competent witness in a suit brought by his assignee, and does not fall within the rule of practice excluding as witnesses those who have assigned for the purpose of being made witnesses; this rule not embracing such as have effectually assigned, so as to have no interest in the event of the suit.—McKinley v. Williamson, 23 Mo. 65.

[h] (Mo. 1862) An assignor of a chose in action is not a competent witness for the assignee, to prove facts about the claim which occurred anterior to the assignment. Rev. Code 1855, p. 1577, § 3.—Parish v. Frampton, 32 Mo. 396.

[i] (Mo. 1867) In an action brought by the assignee of a policy of insurance against the insurers, the assignor is a competent witness to prove that there was no consideration, either for the policy or for the assignment.—Bidwell v. St. Louis Floating Dock & Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 42.

[j] (N. Y. 1834) The assignor of a chose in action is a competent witness for an attorney, who commences a suit on the same for the assignee and subsequently sues such assignee for the costs of such suit.—Watson v. Smith, 13 Wend. 51.

[k] (N. Y. 1840) A party to an instrument, who has transferred it for good consideration, is competent to impeach it, where he is not interested, or is released, except in cases where a party to negotiable paper is prevented from impeaching it.—Topping v. Van Pelt, 1 Hoff. Ch. 545.

[l] (Pa. 1796) Where A. has written a letter for an aged person, directing certain rents to be paid to himself, he is competent to testify.—Buchanan v. Montgomery, 2 Yeates, 72.

[m] (Pa. 1809) The assignor of a bond is a competent witness to prove that he obtained it fraudulently.—Baring v. Shippen, 2 Bin. 154.

[n] (Pa. 1822) The assignor of a chose in action, equitably assigned, is a witness in a suit brought by the assignee, if he has no interest.—Fetterman v. Plummer's Adm'r, 9 Serg. & R. 20.

[o] (Pa. 1840) The assignor of a claim alleged to be due him as heir of an intestate, is not a competent witness in behalf of the assignee in a suit on the claim, since, in case of a judgment for defendant on the ground that there was nothing due at the time of the assignment, the assignor would be liable to refund the money paid him by the assignee, and hence is interested in the suit.—Stecker v. Shimer, 5 Whart. 452.

[p] (Pa. 1844) The assignor of a chose in action is not a competent witness for the assignee, in an action by him to recover the claim assigned, at least where the assignor pledges himself, before the assignment, to testify for plaintiff as to the liability of defendant.—Patterson v. Reed, 7 Watts & S. 144.

[q] (Pa. 1845) A legal plaintiff, who before suit brought had bona fide assigned for a valuable consideration, and without expectation of gain from a recovery or responsibility of failure, a claim for professional services alleged by him to have been admitted by defendants at a general settlement of their accounts is not allowed to sustain it by his testimony.—McClelland v. Mahon, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 364.

[r] (Pa. 1846) The assignor of a debt is incompetent to prove it, when offered as a set-off by his assignee.—Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 425.

[s] (Pa. 1847) Where the assignee of a chose in action also assigns it, neither he nor his assignor is a competent witness to support it.—Appeal of Grayson, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 395.

[t] (Pa. 1847) The assignor of a judgment is not a competent witness for the assignee on the trial of a feigned issue to try the validity of a judgment in which the assignee, by reason of being such, is a party plaintiff.—Burrows v. Shultz, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 325.

[u] (Pa. 1854) The payment of a claim by an executor can have no greater effect than that of purchasing a claim and making it his own, in relation to qualifying the vendor as a witness to support it.—Appeal of Hottenstein, 2 Grant, Cas. 301.

[v] (Pa. 1854) In an action on an assigned claim for money paid out and expended by the assignor for the use of defendant, the assignor is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Broker v. De Hamm, 1 Phila. 517.

[w] (Pa. 1855) There is no rule of policy which prohibits the assignor of a judgment from testifying when called by defendant. His interest, if he has any, must be against the party calling him.—Himblewright v. Armstrong, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 428.

[x] (Pa. 1860) In an action on a certificate of deposit by an assignee, the assignor is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Hagerstown Sav. Bank, 36 Pa. (12 Casey) 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390.

[y] (Pa. 1870) The assignor of an insurance policy was not a competent witness for the assignee, in an action thereon, against the company, prior to Act 1869.—Spring Garden Ins. Co. v. Scott, 27 Leg. Int. 76.

§ 326. —— Liability on covenant.

[a] (La. 1831) The transferror of a mortgage, who warrants only its existence, may prove transferee's possession.—Orillon v. Nerault, 2 La. 292.

[b] (La. 1857) The assignor of a claim, being bound to warrant the existence of the debt assigned, is not a competent witness to prove the debt, without a previous release, and cannot establish such release by his own testimony.—Delee v. Sandel, 12 La. Ann. 208.

[c] (Md. 1847) A party who has assigned a judgment, without recourse, except as to his right to assign and transfer the same, is a competent witness for the assignee, in a suit to enforce the judgment, the warranty extending only to the right to make the assignment.—Doub v. Barnes, 1 Md. Ch. 127.

[d] (Pa. 1843) In an action by the assignee of a debt, the assignor is incompetent to rebut a defense to the original cause of action, unless released from the implied warranty, which arises in all cases of assignment for a valuable consideration, that the debt is due.—Ludwig v. Meyre, 5 Watts & S. 435.

§ 327. Assignee.

Assignee for benefit of creditors, see post, § 333.
—— of bill or note, see ante, § 321.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, §§ 503–505.

[a] (U. S. 1806) The assignee of a pre-emption warrant is a competent witness, if his testimony does not tend to support the title of the party producing him.—Wilson v. Speed, 7 U. S. (3 Cranch) 283, 2 L. Ed. 441.

[b] (Mo. 1848) Where an action is brought by the assignee of a bankrupt on a claim which has been assigned by him to another for the use of such other party, the assignee of the claim is not a competent witness.—Benoist v. Darby, 12 Mo. 196.

(b) DEBTOR, BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT, ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE FOR CREDITORS, AND CREDITORS.

DEBTORS IN GENERAL, § 328.
DEFENDANTS IN EXECUTION OR ATTACHMENT, § 329.
—— ACTION BY OR AGAINST OFFICER, § 330.
TESTIMONY AS TO PAYMENT, § 331.
BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT IN GENERAL, § 332.
ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE OR TRUSTEE FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, § 333.
CREDITORS, § 334.
—— DIRECTNESS AND CERTAINTY OF INTEREST, § 335.
—— OF BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT, § 336.
—— OF DECEDENT, § 337.

§ 328. Debtors in general.

Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see ante, § 306.

[a] (Ky. 1827) A debtor is not a competent witness for a creditor seeking to make his debt out of property claimed by a third person.—Paul v. Rogers' Adm'r, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 164.

[b] (Md. 1848) Where a fund is to be applied to one of two sets of creditors, a party liable to both, and who has been relieved from the costs of the suit, is a competent witness in the case.—Ohio Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, 2 Md. Ch. 25.

[c] (Mass. 1821) In an action between creditors, where the issue is as to their respective rights to hold property of the debtor for the payment of their respective debts, the debtor is a competent witness for either.—Rice v. Austin, 17 Mass. 197.

[d] (Pa. 1865) In an action to try the title to goods attached between the execution creditor and one claiming by assignment from the debtor, the debtor is a competent witness for such creditor.—Clark v. Watson, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 317.

[e] (Pa. 1868) A debtor delivered a certificate of stock with a power of attorney to transfer to one of his creditors. Another creditor having levied on the stock, held, in a contest between the creditors, that the debtor was competent to prove an error in the date of the power of attorney.—Appeal of Finney, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 398.

§ 329. Defendants in execution or attachment.

[a] The execution defendant is a competent witness on a trial of the right of property.
—(Ala. 1860) Durden v. McWilliams, 36 Ala. 345;
(Ill. 1832) Clifton v. Bogardus, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 32;
(Ind. 1835) Hankins v. Ingols, 4 Blackf. 35; (1845) Bradbury v. Dougherty, 7 Blackf. 467;
(Pa. 1865) Allentown Bank v. Beck, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 394;
(Tex. 1855) Converse v. McKee, 14 Tex. 20.
(Ga. 1831) Edwards v. Musgrove, Dud. 219; (1849) Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365.

[b] (Ala. 1832) When the interest of a defendant in execution is perfectly balanced between the claimant and plaintiff, he is a competent witness for either party, and must be produced, and evidence of his declarations is not admissible.—Standefer v. Chisholm, 1 Stew. & P. 449.

[c] (Ala. 1836) In an action between plaintiff in execution and the claimant of property levied on under it, to try the right of property, defendant in execution, at any time before the sale on execution, is a competent witness to show that he had sold the property to the claimant before the levy.—Holman v. Arnett, 4 Port. 63.

[d] (Ala. 1843) In the case of a claimant of property taken on execution, in order that the execution debtor may be a witness, it must appear that the claimant deduces his title from the debtor, otherwise his interest is not balanced.—Yarborough's Ex'r v. Scott's Ex'r, 5 Ala. 221.

Digitized by Google

[e] (Ala. 1852) The act of 1845, which renders the defendant in execution an incompetent witness on a trial of the right of property under the statute, allowing a claim to be put into property levied on, is in derogation of the common law, and will not be extended to the ordinary common-law actions, or causes in equity, for the recovery of damages, or the specific property, in which the title may be put in issue.—Kirksey v. Dubose, 19 Ala. 43; Zackowski v. Jones, 20 Ala. 180.

[f] (Conn. 1831) On a bill of foreclosure, by a mortgagee, against a levying creditor, the original debtor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Carter v. Champion, 8 Conn. 549, 21 Am. Dec. 695.

[g] (Ill. 1863) An execution was levied on personal property, when a third party, claiming the property, took it from the officer making the levy, by a writ of replevin. In an action on the replevin bond, in which the title to the property came in question, held, that the defendant in execution was not a competent witness, in regard to the question of title, in behalf of plaintiff in the action, the latter being the plaintiff in execution, because he would have a direct interest in subjecting the property to the payment of his debt, thus having a disqualifying interest in the result of the suit, and in favor of the party calling him.—James v. Stratton, 32 Ill. 202.

[h] (Ill. 1863) But he would have been competent to testify in behalf of defendant in the action on the replevin bond, who was the claimant of the property, as against the plaintiff in the execution, because in that case the interest of the witness would have been adverse to the party in whose behalf he would be called to testify.—James v. Stratton, 32 Ill. 202.

[i] (Ky. 1822) The defendant, on whose property an execution was levied, and the property sold, is a competent witness to prove the extent of his title to the property, in a controversy arising between the purchaser at such sale and a person claiming the same property by title adverse to that of the defendant.—Baylor v. Smithers' Heirs, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 105.

[j] (Me. 1828) A judgment debtor, whose goods have been seized and sold on execution, does not stand in the relation of vendor to the purchaser; and, therefore, not being liable on any implied warranty, he is a competent witness in any suit between other persons, respecting the goods.—Lathrop v. Muzzy, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 450.

[k] (Md. 1797) A person whose land was sold under a fieri facias cannot be received as a witness to impeach his title to the land.—Plummer v. Lane, 4 Har. & McH. 72, 1 Am. Dec. 395.

[l] (Miss. 1849) In a trial of right of property levied on execution, the defendant in execution is a competent witness for the claimant, who claims under purchase from the trustees in a deed of trust in which the same defendant was grantor.—Ewing v. Cargill, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 79.

[m] (Mo. 1863) In an action on a bond given by the execution creditor to the claimant of property taken under execution, where the plaintiff claims under a bill of sale from the execution debtor, the debtor is not a competent witness to testify to facts changing or qualifying the effect of the bill of sale, under the provisions of the statutes declaring that any grantor, vendor, or assignor in a deed, instrument, or writing, shall not be a competent witness to alter, change, or qualify the proper effect and operation of the words and terms of such deed, instrument, or writing.—Bruce v. Sims, 34 Mo. 246.

[n] (Mo. 1866) A defendant in an execution is a competent witness for plaintiff in a proceeding against a garnishee on the execution.—Scales v. Southern Hotel Co., 37 Mo. 520.

[o] (N. J. 1830) In ejectment brought by the purchaser under a decree of the court of chancery, and a fi. fa., and a sale thereon, to recover possession of the premises, the defendant in execution, whose property was sold, may be a witness for plaintiff.—Sharp v. Hamilton, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 109.

[p] (N. Y. 1830) A debtor whose title to lands, acquired under a judgment and execution against him, is sought to be recovered by a purchaser, is not a competent witness for such purchaser, in an action of ejectment to recover the lands.—Jackson v. Peek, 4 Wend. 300.

[q] (N. Y. 1839) The defendant in the execution is not a competent witness against the plaintiff in a subsequent controversy between him and other creditors, though it seems he would be competent for the plaintiff.—Gardenier v. Tubbs, 21 Wend. 169.

[r] (N. Y. 1854) A. recovered two judgments against B. and resorted to proceedings supplementary to the execution, had plaintiff appointed as receiver, and an order that the property of the debtor, not exempt, be applied to the judgments. B. made the assignment to the receiver in the usual form. The receiver brought an action against defendant to recover a debt due B., and B. was made the principal witness to establish the debt. Held, that the action was for the immediate benefit of B., and therefore B. was not a competent witness. Code. §§ 398, 399.—Vanduzen v. Worrell, 18 Barb. 409.

[s] (N. C. 1845) One, the title to whose land, as alleged by a creditor, has been sold by this creditor at execution sale, is an incompetent witness, in a suit between other parties, to prove that the title was really in him.—Quinn v. Rippey, 39 N. C. 181.

[t] (N. C. 1861) Where land has been sold, as the property of A., under execution, and he has received a portion of the sum raised, which was over and above the call of the execution, he cannot be a witness for the purchaser, in an action for the recovery of the land.—Brown v. Smith, 53 N. C. 331.

[u] (Pa.) Where the proceeds of the property of a defendant in execution are in court for distribution, he may be examined as a witness on the trial of a feigned issue, since his interest as regards the plaintiff and defendant in such issue is equal.—(1832) Stewart v. Stocker, 1 Watts, 135; (1845) Guillou v. Healy, 9 Leg. Int. 50.

[v] (Tex. 1852) In a suit to try the right to property levied on, the defendant in execution is a competent witness for the claimant, to prove that a previous sale by him to the claimant was bona fide.—McQuinnay v. Hitchcock, 8 Tex. 33.

[w] (Va. 1845) In an action on an indemnifying bond, at the relation of parties who claim under a deed of trust from the debtor in the execution, on the levy of which the bond was taken, the debtor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Patteson v. Ford, 2 Grat. 18.

§ 330. —— Action by or against officer.

[a] In an action against an officer for the escape of a defendant in execution, the defendant is a competent witness for the officer.
—(Ind. 1843) Bond v. Brady, 7 Blackf. 39;
(N. Y. 1817) Waters v. Burnet, 14 Johns. 362.

[b] (Ala. 1836) In an action against a sheriff for wrongfully taking his goods on execution, defendant in the execution is not a competent witness to prove that he had sold the goods to plaintiff before the levy.—Burns v. Taylor, 3 Port, 187.

[c] (Ala. 1845) In detinue against a sheriff for a slave seized under execution as belonging to the defendant in execution, the latter is not a competent witness for the sheriff to prove property in himself.—Leiper v. Gewin, 8 Ala. 326.

[d] (Ala. 1853) The defendant in attachment is a competent witness for his commission merchant, in a suit brought by the latter against the sheriff to recover certain bales of cotton, which he had seized under attachment, as the property of defendant therein, and which defendant had previously assigned to his commission merchant.—Bryan v. Smith, 22 Ala. 534.

[e] (Conn. 1831) In an action by an execution creditor against a sheriff for not assigning the bail bond taken by him on mesne process, the execution debtor, who is the principal in the bond, is a competent witness for defendant.—Newell v. Hoadley, 8 Conn. 381.

[f] (Ind. 1843) In debt against a constable for a false return of a fieri facias, the execution debtor is a competent witness for the constable.—Limpus v. State, 7 Blackf. 43.

[g] (Ky. 1814) In an action against a sheriff for a false return on an execution, defendant in the execution is a competent witness to prove that he had sufficient property to satisfy the execution at the time it was delivered to the sheriff.—Taylor v. Commonwealth, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 356.

[h] (Mass. 1835) In an action of replevin of goods, attached by defendant as an officer, on a writ against a stranger, such stranger is an incompetent witness, by reason of interest, to prove that the property was in himself.—Pratt v. Stephenson, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 325.

[i] (N. J. 1834) The vendor, who was defendant on execution, is a competent witness for the vendee, in an action of trespass by him against a constable for taking the property sold, since the vendor's interest is balanced as between the parties.—Sherron v. Humphreys, 14 N. J. Law (2 J. S. Green) 217.

[j] (Pa. 1850) In trespass against a sheriff for selling the goods of A., on an execution against B., returned satisfied, B. is a competent witness to show that the goods belonged to A.—Forsyth v. Palmer, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 96, 53 Am. Dec. 519.

[k] (S. C. 1849) The defendant in execution is a competent witness for the sheriff, in an action to recover from a purchaser the amount of his bid, at a sale of the defendant's property.—Yongue v. Aiken, 3 Strob. 533.

[a] (Ga. 1858) The rule that a party having no direct interest in the suit, and not bound by the judgment in respect of his liability over, is a competent witness, applies to the case of a debtor who swore to payment in a suit against an agent for not paying over.—Edwards v. McKinnon, 25 Ga. 337.

[b] (Ind. 1842) An attorney brought suit on a note delivered to him for collection and obtained judgment, which did not appear by the record to have been satisfied. The judgment creditor sued the administrator of the attorney for the amount of the judgment, in an action for money had and received. Held, that plaintiff could not introduce the judgment debtor as a witness, to prove that the latter had paid to the attorney the money due by the judgment.—Jenners v. Oldham, 6 Blackf. 235.

[c] (Ind. 1846) In a suit on a justice's bond, the breach assigned was the justice's failure to pay over money collected on a judgment. Held, that the judgment debtor was not a competent witness to prove his payment of the money to the justice.—Parker v. State, 8 Blackf. 292.

[d] (Mass. 1827) In an action against an attorney to recover money collected by him of plaintiff's debtor, the debtor is a competent witness to prove that he paid the money to the attorney.—Gifford v. Coffin, 22 Mass. (5 Pick.) 447.

[e] (Mo. 1848) In an action against an administrator for money alleged to have been received by him from a debtor of his intestate, such debtor is not a competent witness, without a release, to prove the payment of such debt.—Horine v. Horine, 11 Mo. 649.

[f] (Pa. 1848) Where a debtor has deposited goods with the agent of his creditor in satisfaction, or as a security for his debt, he is a competent witness for the creditor in an action of trover against the agent for the value of the goods, sold by the agent without authority.—Etter v. Bailey, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 442.

[g] (Pa. 1853) Upon an issue between creditors to determine whether a judgment has been paid, the debtor or defendant in the judgment, not being a party to the issue, is a competent witness.—Smith's Ex'rs v. Wagonseller, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 491.

[h] (Pa. 1859) In a proceeding before an auditor for distribution among lien creditors of a fund which is insufficient for the payment of all the liens upon it, the debtor is a competent witness for a junior lien creditor to prove payment in part of an elder lien; as the auditor's distribution is a proceeding between the lien creditors, and is an estoppel only to them, and the debtor is not by such testimony discharging himself from any liability.—Appeal of Galway, 34 Pa. (10 Casey) 242.

§ 332. Bankrupt or insolvent in general.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 462.

[a] (U. S. 1847) Where the event of the suit may increase the effects of the bankrupt in the hands of his assignee, and thus increase the surplus which will belong to him, he is an incompetent witness.—Bridges v. Armour, 46 U. S. (5 How.) 91, 12 L. Ed. 64.

[b] (U. S. 1810) In an action against a sheriff for an escape upon mesne process, the escaped prisoner is not a competent witness to prove his bankruptcy at the time of his escape.—Duryee v. Webb, Fed. Cas. No. 4,198 [16 Conn. 558, note].

[c] (U. S. 1810) The interest of the witness is not balanced so as to make him competent because, while liable for the debt to both parties, he is further liable to the sheriff for the cost and expense consequent upon the escape and defense of the action.—Duryee v. Webb, Fed. Cas. No. 4,198 [16 Conn. 558, note].

[d] (U. S. 1843) The bankrupt is a competent witness where his assignee is a party, as he can have no legal interest in the decision of the case.—Wright v. Rogers, Fed. Cas. No. 18,090 [3 McLean, 229].

[e] (Ala. 1845) A voluntary bankrupt is not a competent witness for the assignee in bankruptcy, to establish a debt due the bankrupt.—Cromwell v. Comegys, 7 Ala. 498.

[f] (Ala. 1846) A bankrupt who had transferred bills of exchange, as collateral security, to one of his scheduled creditors, is an incompetent witness for the creditor, because the discharge of the debt by the bills would release the estate of the bankrupt from its payment, and increase the surplus.—Houston v. Prewitt, 8 Ala. 846.

[g] (Ala. 1852) A bankrupt is not a competent witness to testify for his assignee, for the purpose of increasing the fund in his hands; but when his testimony tends to decrease that fund, he is considered as swearing against his interest, and is competent.—Colgin v. Redman, 20 Ala. 650.

[h] (La.) In a contest between creditors, neither the insolvent's declarations, though in writing, nor his books of account, can be received. Such admissions are presumed to be fraudulent.—(1814) Menendez v. Larionda's Syndics, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 256; (1815) Id. 705; (1822) Planters' Bank v. Lanusse, 12 Mart. (O. S.) 157.

[i] (La. 1814) In a contest between creditors of an insolvent, he is incompetent for any.—Menendez v. Larionda's Syndics, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 256.

[j] (La. 1822) Claims against an insolvent cannot be established by his testimony, as it is presumed to be fictitious and made with a deliberate intent to elude the rights of creditors.—Planters' Bank v. Lanusse, 12 Mart. (O. S.) 157.

[k] (Md. 1792) In a suit by an assignee of an insolvent for property belonging to the insolvent's estate, the insolvent is an incompetent witness to prove the property in himself, though he appears by his schedule to be entitled to no surplus.—Bussy v. Ady, 3 Har. & McH. 97.

[l] (Md. 1847) Where the rights of an insolvent debtor are identically the same, whichever way the decision passes, he is a competent witness for either party.—Glenn v. Baker, 1 Md. Ch. 73.

[m] (Mass. 1847) In an action brought by the assignees of an insolvent debtor to try the validity of a sale of chattels made by him shortly before proceedings in insolvency were instituted against him, he is a competent witness for the purchaser to prove that the sale was not made for such purpose, or with such intent and knowledge, as rendered it void against his creditors.—Clark v. Gordon, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 434.

[n] (N. H. 1845) In an action by an assignee of a bankrupt, the latter is not a competent witness for plaintiff, by reason of his interest in the surplus.—Coleman v. Tebbetts, 20 N. H. 408.

[o] (S. C. 1810) The testimony of a bankrupt in England, offered to prove a debt due in this country, will be rejected on the ground that he may have an interest in the surplus.—Coit v. Owen, 3 Desaus. 175.

[p] (S. C. 1831) An insolvent debtor is a competent witness in a suit between his assignee and a creditor, to defeat a lien claimed by the creditor.—Gilchrist v. Martin, Bailey, Eq. 492.

§ 333. Assignor and assignee or trustee for benefit of creditors.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 464.

[a] (Ala. 1835) Where a conveyance of a slave was absolute on its face, the assignee of the grantor is not a competent witness to prove a defeasance.—Hatfield v. Montgomery, 2 Port. 58.

[b] (Ala. 1846) The grantor in a deed of trust, by which property is conveyed to a trustee for the benefit of creditors, is not a competent witness for the trustee, in a suit by him to recover the trust property from a purchaser claiming through a sheriff's sale, by virtue of an execution against the grantor.—Hodge v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 131.

[c] (Ala. 1856) A. having become insolvent, and being about to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, indorsers, and sureties, refused to make any assignment which was not approved by B., who was his indorser and surety, unless B. and the debts on which he was bound were placed in the preferred class of creditors. C. was also indorser and surety for A., and in consideration that B. would consent that A. might make a deed which would prefer C., and postpone B., promised to pay a certain sum, and in pursuance of this contract A. made an assignment. In an action on the contract, it was held that A. was a competent witness for B.—Hatton's Adm'rs v. Jordan, 29 Ala. 266.

[d] (Cal. 1854) Where, after a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, the assignee seeks to recover goods belonging to the assignor from consignees, holding them under a claim for advances and commissions, the assignor is incompetent as a witness for the assignee.—Griffin v. Alsop, 4 Cal. 406.

[e] (Cal. 1862) Where a debtor assigns his property for the benefit of creditors to one creditor, against whom suit is brought by another for his share of the funds, the assignor is a competent witness to prove that the defendant creditor, in consideration of the assignment, promised to give priority to plaintiff's debt.—Lockwood v. Canfield, 20 Cal. 126.

[f] (Conn. 1850) In an action of trespass against B., an officer who had attached the property by direction of C., defendant offered D. as a witness. It appeared that C., being insolvent, had assigned his estate, under the statute of 1828 against fraudulent conveyances, to D., he being a creditor of that estate, and that D. had executed the trust, distributed the estate assigned to him, and settled with the court of probate; no claim having been presented by B., against such estate, on account of said attachment. Held, that D. had no interest in the event of the suit, and was, therefore, a competent witness.—Patch v. Hoyt, 20 Conn. 334.

[g] (Ill. 1844) A. transferred to B. certain personal property in trust to pay certain debts. C. and D., whose tenant A. was, subsequently distrained said property for rent. B. brought an action against C. for taking the same, and, at the trial, called A. to prove the value of the property taken. Held, that he was incompetent from interest.—Favor v. Marlett, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 385.

[h] (Ky. 1867) The grantor in a deed of trust for the payment of his debts, in a suit by his creditors against the trustee, is not a competent witness for the creditors unless they release him from all liability, and he releases the trustee.—Smith's Ex'r v. Vertress, 65 Ky. (2 Bush) 63.

[i] (Mass. 1837) A bond having been assigned by the obligee to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and the trustees having brought an action on it, but in the name of the obligee, and attached property supposed to belong to the obligor, held, that the trustees were incompetent, by reason of interest, to testify in an action of replevin brought by a stranger, claiming the property, against the attaching officer.—George v. Kimball, 41 Mass. (24 Pick.) 234.

[j] (Mo. 1862) One who has made an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors is a competent witness to support the title of his assignees. He is not a party for whose immediate benefit the suit is instituted by the assignee.—Krum v. Beard, 31 Mo. 505.

[k] (N. Y. 1844) Where A., B., and C. were sued, as partners, for goods sold A. alone, it appeared that they had assigned their property to pay debts due from them "jointly and severally, or where either was indorser or surety for the other." The assignees had debts against the assignors jointly and severally, and the property was not sufficient to pay the debts charged on the fund. Held, that the assignees were not competent witnesses for plaintiff to prove the alleged partnership.—Carpenter v. Creal, 6 Hill, 556.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) One who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors is a competent witness in an action by the assignee, and in an action by one to whom he has assigned a policy of insurance to secure a debt, and no notice of an intention to examine the assignor is necessary.—Allen v. Hudson River Mut. Ins. Co., 19 Barb. 442.

[m] (N. Y. 1854) The assignor is a competent witness for the assignee in an action brought by the assignee to recover on a demand belonging to the assigned estate, as the assignor, though interested, can receive no immediate benefit from the prosecution of the action.—Allen v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. Prac. 501.

[n] (N. Y. 1854) Where an assignment has been made in trust to pay creditors, the assignor has no interest in property applied to payment of his debts to render him incompetent as a witness for his assignee.—Legee v. Burbank, 2 E. D. Smith, 419.

[o] (N. Y. 1855) One who assigns property for the benefit of his creditors is a competent witness in an action relating to the property by the assignee, the suit not being for the immediate benefit of the assignor.—Jones v. Church of Rochester, 21 Barb. 161.

[p] (Pa. 1820) One who has made an assignment of all his estate in trust to pay his debts and to return the surplus, if any, to himself, is a competent witness, without a release, in trover by his assignees against one of his creditors, who claims to hold the goods as security for the debt due by the assignor, because the interest which the witness has in the surplus is balanced by his interest in the application of the property in the hands of the defendant to the extinguishment of the debt to him.—Jacoby v. Laussatt, 6 Serg. & R. 300.

[q] (S. C. 1856) An assignor who has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors is a competent witness for defendant, if he consents to be sworn, in an action brought in his name for the benefit of the assignee.—Pinchback v. Killian, 9 Rich. Law, 413.

[r] (Tex. 1857) One to whom property is conveyed in trust for the benefit of creditors, with power to sell, is a competent witness in a suit by the creditor to recover the debt secured and asking for a sale of the trust property.—Ware's Adm'rs v. Bennett, 18 Tex. 794.

[s] (Tex. 1859) In an action brought by an assignee against a sheriff for levying an execution on the property assigned, the assignor, because of interest, is inadmissible as a witness for the assignee when the property has been appropriated in satisfaction of the execution.—Howerton v. Holt, 23 Tex. 51.

[t] (Va. 1812) The trustee, in a deed of trust, conveying property to be sold for payment of a debt, is equally the agent of the debtor and creditor, and is therefore a competent witness in ejectment against the debtor by a purchaser from himself, under a quitclaim deed, to prove that the sale of the property was advertised according to the terms of the deed of trust.—Ross v. Norvell, 3 Munf. 170.

[u] (Va. 1844) The grantor in a deed of trust for the benefit of his creditors is a competent witness for the claimant under the deed to prove that the property levied on by the officer, under an execution against the grantor, is the same conveyed in the deed.—Kevan v. Branch, 1 Grat. 274.

§ 334. Creditors.

Transactions fraudulent as to creditors, see ante, § 305.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 465.

[a] (U. S. 1809) In an action on a note signed by one person only, where plaintiff seeks to charge another person as a secret partner and liable on the note, the creditor of the former is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the existence of the partnership.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Fed. Cas. No. 851 [1 Cranch, C. C. 573].

[b] (U. S. 1809) In an action for the recovery of a debt, said to be due by the defendant, as the dormant partner of a firm, a person who is a creditor of the partnership is not a competent witness to prove the defendant a dormant partner in the firm indebted to him.—Corps v. Robinson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,252 [2 Wash. C. C. 388].

[c] (Ala. 1840) A creditor who is secured by the provisions of a trust deed is not a competent witness to support the deed, in a suit between the trustee and an execution creditor.—Stone v. Stone, 1 Ala. 582.

[d] (Ala. 1854) Where a deed of trust is attacked for fraud, a general creditor of the grantor, whose debt is not secured by the deed, is a competent witness to prove the bona fides of any secured debt, although he may have another security.—Alabama Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Pettway, 24 Ala. 544.

[e] (Cal. 1855) In an action by a claimant of property attached against the sheriff, a subsequent attaching creditor, who had given a bond to the sheriff to save him harmless in holding the identical property which was the subject of the action, was not a competent witness.—Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450.

[f] (Conn. 1787) A constable took certain property by attachment on the suits of A. and B., and by execution in favor of C. He acted by order of all three of the creditors. C.'s execution, however, was satisfied out of the estate, so that the whole of the property was finally applied to the demand of A. and B. Held, that C. was not a competent witness in an action against the constable by one who claims title in the property.—Bulkley v. Richards, Kirby, 203.

[g] (Ky. 1835) In a suit by a surety for relief, on the ground of a new agreement between the principal and creditor, the latter is a competent witness.—Bartlow v. Boude, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 591.

[h] (Ky. 1842) A witness whose debt would be extinguished by a recovery in the suit is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Richardson v. Bartley, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 328.

[i] (Ky. 1843) In an action by a vendor against the vendee to recover the goods on the ground that the sale was procured by fraud, a creditor of defendant is a competent witness, where it appears that the goods are in boxes which formerly belong to defendant's agent and have his private marks on them, to explain the facts as to the boxes and marks thereon, if he neither has nor sets up any claim to the goods.—Morrow v. Smith, 43 Ky. (4 B. Mon.) 99.

[j] (La. 1819) The creditor of one, who, though an absconder, is not shown to be insolvent, and as whose surety defendant is sued, is competent for plaintiff.—Hewes v. Lauve, 6 Mart. (O. S.) 502.

[k] (La. 1828) A creditor who swears he believes defendant amply solvent is competent for him.—Thompson v. Chauveau, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 460.

[l] (La. 1843) A creditor may testify for his debtor.—Lard v. Strother, 4 Rob. 95.

[m] (Me. 1841) A creditor of plaintiff is competent to testify for him, although plaintiff has no other means of paying than the proceeds of the suit.—Noyes v. Sturdivant, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 104.

[n] (Me. 1841) Where the result of a trial determines only which creditor of a witness will be paid, he is competent; but where, if the party calling him prevail, his debt is paid, while, if the other party prevail, his creditor is unpaid, and the witness is left with a claim to the same amount against an insolvent man, the interest is not balanced, and he is not a competent witness.—Danforth v. Roberts, 20 Me. 307.

[o] (Mo. 1824) Where A. has a claim against B. for a sum of money, and C. pays it, A. is not a competent witness for C. to prove that it was paid at the request of B.—Rector v. McNair, 1 Mo. 471.

[p] (N. Y. 1827) One to whom the master of a ship is liable for advances on account of the ship is a competent witness for the master, in an action by him to enforce a lien in his favor on account of such liability.—Ingersoll v. Van Bokkelin, 7 Cow. 670.

[q] (Pa. 1842) A judgment creditor is not a competent witness for plaintiff, in an action by the judgment debtor to recover all the lands to which he pretends to claim title, the judgment being a lien on the debtor's lands.—Seltzinger v. Ridgway, 4 Watts & S. 472.

[r] (Pa. 1865) In an action to ascertain the validity of a judgment bond given by a husband to his wife's trustee for money received from her, the testimony of a subsequent judgment creditor of the husband, who was not a party to the issue, and whose lien cannot be paid out of the fund for distribution, is competent.—Gicker's Adm'rs v. Martin, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 138.

[s] (Pa. 1866) Several execution attachments were issued and served the same day against the same defendant and garnishees. Held, that a plaintiff in one of them was a competent witness for the plaintiff in another on the trial of the latter against the garnishees.—King v. Faber, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 387.

[t] (Pa. 1866) In a contest between creditors as to a certain fund of the debtor's, a creditor whose claim is secured on the fund is competent as a witness when plaintiff's claim, if it prevails, will leave enough of the fund to satisfy the secured debt.—Updegraff v. Rowland, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 317.

[u] (Pa. 1868) On an issue between two judgment creditors to try the validity of a judgment in favor of one of them, a third judgment creditor is a competent witness.—Brown v. Parkinson, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 336.

[v] (S. C. 1830) Where property has been sold on execution, the execution creditor is a competent witness to support the title of the execution debtor where the property is claimed by a third person.—Rowe v. Cockrell, Bailey, Eq. 126.

[w] (S. C. 1844) A judgment creditor of the petitioner for the benefit of the prison bounds act is not a competent witness in behalf of the actors in the suggestion of fraud.—Clerry v. Spears, 2 Speers, 686.

[x] (S. C. 1858) In a creditor's bill filed for the purpose of setting aside a judgment confessed by the debtor, and certain sales of property made by the debtor to plaintiff in that judgment, and praying for an account of all moneys received by said plaintiff on account of such property, through sales of the same, held, that neither judgment, nor simple contract creditors of such debtor, were competent witnesses for complainant.—Guignard v. Aldrich, 10 Rich. Eq. 253.

[y] (S. C. 1858) Where the object of a bill is to subject equitable assets to the demand of a judgment creditor, simple contract creditors are incompetent witnesses for complainant, being interested in the event; equitable assets being always distributed pro rata among all creditors.—Guignard v. Aldrich, 10 Rich. Eq. 253.

[z] (Vt. 1851) An attachment had been dissolved by a judgment in favor of the defendant in the suit in which the attachment was made, and the defendant then brought trover against the officer for the property attached, which had been sold upon the mesne process, under the provisions of the statute. Held, that the original attaching creditor was a competent witness for the officer upon the trial of the action of trover, notwithstanding it appeared he had executed to the officer a bond, conditioned to indemnify him from all costs, losses, and damages, which the officer might sustain in consequence of selling the attached property upon the writ.—Abbott v. Kimball, 23 Vt. 542.

[a] (U. S. 1879) A creditor of one of the parties to a suit before the court of claims has no such legal and immediate interest in the event of the suit as to render him incompetent as a witness in favor of his debtor.—Merchants' Exch. Co. v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 270.

[b] (Ill. 1844) A general creditor will be a competent witness, although he swears that he expects that his prospects for the recovery of his debt will be increased by the recovery of a judgment in the particular suit.—Illinois Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co., 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 236.

[c] (Mo. 1845) A creditor of the plaintiff is not an incompetent witness for him, because he expects to be paid out of the money which may be recovered, unless he has some legal interest in a right to the fund on recovery.—Warne v. Prentiss, 9 Mo. 544.

[d] (N. Y. 1831) Creditors of the obligor, where the defense is lunacy, are competent witnesses to prove the obligor incapable of managing his concerns at the time of the execution of the bond; but if a direct and certain interest appears, they will not be competent.—Hart v. Deamer, 6 Wend. 497.

[e] (Pa. 1854) Where a witness was shown to be a creditor of one who was surety for another for a debt which the latter would recover, if the insolvent's assignee, plaintiff, recovered in the suit pending, and that otherwise the witness's debtor would be compelled to pay the debt, whereby her property would be rendered insufficient to satisfy the claim of the witness, the interest of the witness was too remote to exclude him.—McCaskey v. Graff, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 321, 62 Am. Dec. 336.

[f] (Pa. 1862) A judgment creditor of defendant in execution may be a witness in a feigned issue, under the sheriff's interpleader act, where he has no direct interest in the event of the suit.—Lothrop v. Wightman, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 297.

[g] (Tex. 1858) The interest in a suit which disqualifies a witness must be a legal, fixed, and certain benefit, and although a creditor has a substantial interest in a recovery by a debtor, if he looks to the proceeds of the judgment to be recovered for the payment of his debt, he is not disqualified as a witness, unless he has a specific lien on the judgment when recovered, and a promise to give him an order for the amount of the judgment when recovered does not render him incompetent; but otherwise, if the order has been given.—Bigham v. Carr, 21 Tex. 142.

§ 336. —— Of bankrupt or insolvent.

[a] (U. S. 1810) In a suit by the trustee of an insolvent debtor, where the purpose of the suit is to enlarge the assets of such debtor, a creditor of the insolvent is not a competent witness.—Herbert v. Bannatyne, Fed. Cas. No. 6,396 [2 Cranch, C. C. 12].

[b] (U. S. 1853) A creditor of a bankrupt is not a competent witness for the assignee, in a suit to increase the estate.—Carr v. Hilton, Fed. Cas. No. 2,437 [1 Curt. 390].

[c] (Conn. 1834) A., an insolvent, mortgaged his estate to B., C., and D. to secure them, and then on the same day made a general assignment of his property, including the mortgaged premises, to B. and C., in trust for all his creditors, under St. 1828, c. 3. This property was afterwards attached by E., one of A.'s creditors, and, in an action by the mortgagees against the officer for the taking, F., another of A.'s creditors, who had proved his debt under the assignment, was offered by the defendant as a witness to prove the mortgage deed and assignment fraudulent and void. Held that, as the effect of defeating the mortgage would be to augment the fund in the hands of the assignees, F. was thus far interested and incompetent, and that as the facts which F. was called to disclose were not stated, it did not appear that his interest was balanced by the effect of his testimony upon the assignment.—Bates v. Coe, 10 Conn. 280.

[d] (La. 1832) In a contest between an insolvent and his creditors, one of the latter is incompetent for either party.—Coquet v. His Creditors, 4 La. 201.

[e] (Me. 1832) Where an officer had attached partnership property in a suit against an individual partner, and afterwards, with the consent of the partnership, which was insolvent, permitted the goods to be applied to pay a partnership debt, whereon the creditor of the individual partner brought an action against the officer for not having retained the goods under the first attachment, the partnership creditor was a competent witness for the officer, having no interest in either event of the suit.—Commercial Bank v. Wilkins, 9 Me. (9 Greenl.) 28.

[f] (Mass. 1808) A petitioning creditor is a competent witness to prove his debt, in an action where the validity of an assignee's sale of the bankrupt's land is in question, if he have no interest in the event of the suit.—Farrington v. Farrington, 4 Mass. 237.

[g] (Mass. 1808) In an action between other parties, the petitioning creditor is a competent witness to prove his own debt, on which a commission of bankruptcy was awarded.—Farrington v. Farrington, 4 Mass. 237.

[h] (N. J. 1852) It is no objection to a witness, offered by an insolvent company in support of a money claim, that he is a creditor of the company, and that a recovery would increase the fund out of which he is to be paid.—Delaware & A. R. Co. v. Irick, 23 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 321.

[i] (N. Y. 1846) In a suit to avoid an assignment for the benefit of creditors, a creditor provided for in the assignment is not a competent witness for the assignee.—Jacks v. Nichols, 3 Sandf. Ch. 313.

[j] (N. Y. 1847) In replevin, brought by the trustees under an assignment for the payment of the debts of the assignor, against one who had taken a part of the assigned property, one of the preferred creditors is a competent witness for plaintiffs, unless it is shown that the remaining property assigned is insufficient to pay the preferred debts.—Duel v. Fisher, 4 Denio, 515.

[k] (N. Y. 1848) A creditor of the bankrupt is a competent witness against the latter, in favor of another creditor, on an issue impeaching the discharge.—Cutter v. Taylor, 3 N. Y. Super Ct. (1 Sandf.) 593.

[m] (N. Y. 1852) A creditor of an insolvent estate is not a competent witness to swell the fund out of which he is to be paid.—Marre v. Ginochio, 2 Bradf. Sur. 165.

[n] (N. C. 1803) In an action by an assignee to recover a debt due to his separate estate, a creditor of a firm of which the bankrupt was a member, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Barclay's Assignees v. Carson, 3 N. C. 243.

[o] (Pa. 1796) A creditor is a competent witness to prove fraud in the petitioner, on an application to be discharged under the insolvent laws.—In re Greene's Case, 2 Dall. 268, 1 L. Ed. 376.

[p] (Pa. 1845) A judgment creditor of one who may be insolvent is a competent witness for him, in a suit for a recovery of land.—Jones v. Brownfield, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 55.

[q] (Pa. 1845) In a suit by the assignee of a bankrupt, plaintiff offered as a witness a person who was a creditor of the bankrupt to a small amount, but was also an indorser to a much larger amount on certain notes of bankrupt. Held, that having a direct interest in the event of the suit he was not a competent witness, although his contingent liability as indorser rendered the balance of interest against him.—Atkinson v. Purdy, 4 Pa. Law J. 96.

[r] (Pa. 1862) On the question of the acceptance by the company, of an amendment to the charter, a creditor was competent, the company being insolvent.—Fell v. McHenry, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 41.

§ 337. —— Of decedent.

—(Mo. 1830) Foster v. Wallace, 2 Mo. 231;
(Pa. 1826) Boyer v. Kendall, 14 Serg. & R. 178.

[b] (U. S. 1804) Creditors of the plaintiff's intestate are competent witnesses to support a claim by plaintiff as administrator against defendant.—Robertson v. Selby, Fed. Cas. No. 11,929 [1 Cranch, C. C. 211].

[c] (U. S. 1804) In an action by an administrator of an insolvent estate, it is not a good objection to the plaintiff's witness that he is a creditor of the intestate, although that circumstance may affect his credit.—Talbot v. Selby, Fed. Cas. No. 13,729 [1 Cranch, C. C. 181].

[d] (U. S. 1847) A creditor with no specific lien is not incompetent to testify so as to increase the amount of his debtor's estate.—Macy v. De Wolf, Fed. Cas. No. 8,933 [3 Woodb. & M. 193].

[e] (Del. 1844) A judgment creditor, fully secured by the real estate of an intestate, and who has no specific lien on the personal property, is a competent witness for the administrator, in an action to recover a debt due the intestate.—Nicholson v. Frazier, 4 Har. 206.

[f] (Ind. 1852) In assumpsit by an administrator a person having a claim against the intestate's estate is competent as a witness for plaintiff if the estate is not insolvent.—Martin v. Barlow, 3 Ind. 367.

[g] (Ind. 1856) Part of the heirs of A. sued the heir and legatee of A.'s administrator for an account of administration, charging a failure on the part of the administrator to account for assets and to make final settlement, and alleging the amount of assets to be greater than the debts. Plaintiffs offered one B. a creditor of the estate, to show that A. had failed to account for all the assets received. Held that, as the effect of his testimony, as apparent from the facts, would be to make an estate on which he had a claim solvent, when, unless the fact to which he testified were proved, it would be insolvent, B. was incompetent.—Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 692.

[h] (N. H. 1825) In a writ of entry brought against the administrator of an intestate, where the demandant claimed under an instrument purporting to be the deed of the intestate, and one of the subscribing witnesses was dead, and the other was a creditor of the intestate's estate, which was insolvent, held, that the creditor had no interest in the event of the suit, and that the demandant was bound to call him, although his interest would incline him to testify against the demandant.—Barns v. Hatch, 3 N. H. 304, 14 Am. Dec. 369.

[i] (N. Y. 1867) In an action by an administrator to recover a debt due to the intestate, where the estate is proved to be insolvent, a creditor of the estate is not a competent witness for the administrator.—Flinn v. Chase, 4 Denio, 85.

[j] (Pa. 1817) A witness was competent, in ejectment, who had a judgment against the testator whose title was in dispute, but who had left abundant personal property to satisfy the judgment, and whose administrator had given ample bonds.—Youst v. Martin, 3 Serg. & R. 423.

[k] (S. C. 1853) Where one is sued as a surviving partner, a creditor of the deceased partner who died insolvent, and whose estate will be liable for the entire demand in suit unless the fact of partnership be made out, is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the existence of the partnership, since his interest is not direct and certain.—Haseltine v. Madden, 7 Rich. Law, 16.

[l] (S. C. 1853) Where a party is sued as a surviving partner, a creditor of an alleged deceased partner, who holds by assignment from him effects of the alleged partnership to secure the payment of his own and other's claims, is a competent witness for defendant to disprove the existence of a partnership. — Chamberlain v. Madden, 7 Rich. Law, 20.

[m] (Tex. 1853) A witness in behalf of an estate of which he was a creditor, testified upon his voir dire that he did not know whether the estate was solvent or not, but that he understood, from rumor, that it would be insolvent unless the administrator gained that suit. Held, that the witness was incompetent.—Dial v. Crain, 10 Tex. 444.

[n] (Va. 1849) When land charged with payment of debts is sold on application of a creditor of the testator, such creditor is a competent witness for the purchaser to prove that the debt for which it was sold was a just one.—Hudgin v. Hudgin's Ex'r, 6 Grat. 320, 52 Am. Dec. 124.

§ 338. Principal.

[a] The principal in a bond is not a competent witness for his surety.
—(Pa. 1853) Commonwealth v. McKee's Ex'r, 2 Grant, Cas. 27;
(Va. 1826) Jones v. Raine, 4 Rand. 386.
CONTRA, see
(U. S. 1808) Harper v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 6,092 [1 Cranch, C. C. 495].

[b] In an action against a surety, the principal is an incompetent witness for defendant.
—(Ky. 1827) Hunter v. Gatewood, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 268;
(S. C. 1853) Vandiver v. Glaspy, 7 Rich. Law, 14.

[c] (U. S. 1809) The principal obligor is a competent witness for the surety on a collateral issue where defendants plead separately in an action on a bond with a collateral condition.—Virginia v. Evans, Fed. Cas. No. 16,969 [1 Cranch, C. C. 581].

[d] (U. S. 1836) The principal in a bond is competent to prove a change in his relation to his obligee, which would release the surety from liability, in a suit between the surety and the obligee, in which the surety sought relief from his bond, and an injunction on a suit, for if the plaintiff had succeeded, the principal would not have been discharged from his liability, and if he failed, he must have borne his own costs.—Gass v. Stinson, Fed. Cas. No. 5,260 [2 Sumn. 453].

[e] (Ala. 1832) The obligor in an attachment bond, conditioned for the payment of the property attached, or for the satisfaction of any judgment, is an incompetent witness in the attachment cause.—Stowe v. Sewall, 3 Stew. & P. 67.

[f] (Ill. 1863) Where a judgment at law has been rendered against a principal and his surety, and the surety seeks relief in equity against the judgment, on the ground of an extension of the time of payment of the debt having been given to the principal debtor, before the judgment, the principal defendant in the judgment is a competent witness on behalf of his surety.—Kennedy v. Evans, 31 Ill. 258.

[g] (Ky. 1830) On a bill filed by sureties, to be released on account of indulgence granted to their principal, the deposition of the principal ought to be admitted in evidence.—Reid v. Watts, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 440.

[h] (Md. 1846) The principal obligor in a bond is a competent witness to prove its execution by his surety therein, in an action on such bond, under the plea of non est factum by the surety.—Buckingham v. Clary, 4 Gill, 223.

[i] (Mass. 1836) In an action against the surety of a vendee for the purchase money, the vendee is a competent witness to show that the sale was fraudulent, and has been rescinded.—Hazard v. Irwin, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 95.

[j] (N. Y. 1839) The principal debtor is competent to prove that the surety has been discharged by the creditor, by giving time to such principal debtor, without the knowledge of the surety.—Holmes v. Dole, 1 Clarke, Ch. 71.

[k] (N. Y. 1851) Where an attachment against a nonresident is issued and the property attached has been discharged on a bond given by sureties for the defendant in the attachment, such defendant is a competent witness for the makers of the bond in a suit on it, if not nominally a party to the action.—Mitchell v. Weed, 6 How. Prac. 128, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 196.

[l] (N. C. 1813) The acknowledgment of the principal that he had given the bond in suit is not admissible.—Johnson v. Knight, 6 N. C. 237.

[m] (N. C. 1826) A creditor recovered a joint judgment against his principal debtor and his surety. On a bill by the surety to be relieved against the judgment, on the ground that he was discharged by laches of the creditor, the principal is not a competent witness for complainant.—Cannon v. Jones, 11 N. C. 368.

[n] (N. C. 1841) A. and B. were co-sureties, but A. became surety, in consideration of a guaranty of the debt by B. A. paid the debt, and recovered judgment therefor against B.; whereupon B. filed a bill alleging that the principal debtor had paid A. the whole or a part of the debt before the recovery of A.'s judgment. Held, that the principal debtor was not a competent witness to prove the facts charged in such bill.—Davidson v. Woodruff, 36 N. C. 467.

[o] (Pa. 1823) In a suit against the surety of a recognizance given for a stay of execution, the defendant in the original suit is not a competent witness for the surety.—Milliken v. Brown, 10 Serg. & R. 188.

[p] (Pa. 1846) In a scire facias on a recognizance of bail for stay of execution, the defendant in the judgment in the original suit, who had subsequently became a certificated bankrupt, is a competent witness to prove that the original debt, for payment of which he had been sued, was satisfied; he not being a party to the scire facias, and not having any interest in the event of the issue tried therein.—Boas v. Hetzel, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 298.

[q] (Pa. 1850) In scire facias, on a recognizance for stay of execution, the principal debtor is not a competent witness for defendant. —Morrison v. Hartman, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 55.

[r] (Pa. 1855) A principal debtor, though not sued, is not a competent witness to prove payment of the debt, being liable to his surety in the event of a recovery against the latter.—Marshall v. Franklin Bank, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 384.

[s] (S. C. 1844) The principal to a bond is not a competent witness for his surety to prove that he had made payments thereon.—Cantey v. Blair, 1 Rich. Eq. 41.

[t] (S. C. 1845) A principal is not a competent witness to diminish the amount of his demand against his surety.—Cantey v. Blair, 2 Rich. Eq. 46.

[u] (S. C. 1851) A sheriff attached property and delivered it to the creditor to be taken out of the district for sale; an agent of the creditor having given a bond of indemnity to the sheriff. In an action of trover by the creditor against one who took the property out of his possession, held, that the obligor was a competent witness.—Bank of Kentucky v. Shier, 4 Rich. Law, 233.

[v] (Tenn. 1836) A judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace against A. and B., on which execution was stayed for nine months, and C. was entered by the justice as security for the stay of the execution. C. alleged that the justice had no authority to enter him as security, and removed the judgment and execution, by certiorari into the circuit court. On the trial before the jury, C. offered A. as a witness to prove that his name was entered as security for the stay of the execution without proper authority. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Barnes v. Dick, 17 Tenn. (9 Yerg.) 430.

[w] (Tenn. 1859) The principal in a joint and several bond, or in a judgment against several, is not a competent witness, on behalf of the surety, to prove payment of the debt or judgment.—Hurst v. Word, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 564.

[x] (Va. 1835) The principal is a proper witness for the surety to prove an agreement between the creditor and himself, and an indulgence given for the debt, by which the surety is released.—Steele v. Boyd, 6 Leigh, 547, 29 Am. Dec. 218.

§ 339. Co-obligors.

[a] (Ky. 1827) In an action against one of two co-obligors, the other is a competent witness for the obligee.—Williams v. Cummins, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 157.

[b] (Ky. 1833) A co-obligor who is not sued is a competent witness, unless it be shown that he is interested in the event of the pending trial. —Long v. Ray, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 430.

[c] (Ky. 1834) In a suit against an officer for not levying an execution issued upon a replevin bond, an obligor in the bond is a competent witness to show that it was not acknowledged according to law.—Williams v. Hall, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 97.

[d] (Ky. 1847) The deposition of one of several obligors in a bond given for the performance of a decree which might be rendered upon an attachment levied upon a steamboat, or the deposition of one of the owners of such boat, is incompetent evidence for defendant.—Strader v. Graham, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 633.

[e] (Mo. 1846) In an action against one of two obligors in a bond, his co-obligor is not a competent witness for defendant; the statute of 1845 not applying to such case.—Callaway County Court v. Craig, 9 Mo. 846.

[f] (N. Y. 1829) A co-obligor not sued is a competent witness to prove the terms on which a joint and several bond has been executed; the suit being commenced against a part only of the obligors.—Lovett v. Adams, 3 Wend. 380.

[g] (Pa. 1846) In an action on a bond against one of two joint and several obligors, the obligor not sued is a competent witness for defendant under the plea of non est factum; but if his testimony do not sustain the plea, the judgment will not be reversed, although the witness was rejected.—Ely v. Hager, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 154.

§ 340. Surety in general.

[a] (U. S. 1809) A surety is not a competent witness for his principal.—Virginia v. Evans, Fed. Cas. No. 16,969 [1 Cranch, C. C. 581].

[b] (U. S. 1879) In a contractor's action in the court of claims, his surety is incompetent to testify under Rev. St. § 1077 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 742], if the government has set up a breach; otherwise, where the contract has been performed, and the demand is for extra work, and no breach of the contract is alleged. —Merchants' Exchange Co. v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 270.

[c] (Ark. 1854) A. sold lands to B., and took his obligation for the purchase money, giving him a bond to make title when the obligation should be paid. A mistake in the description of the land being discovered, additional security for the purchase money was required by A., and C., with others, gave his obligation to A. for the amount as collateral to A.'s obligation. A bill in equity was filed, asking to have the mistake in the description corrected, but the bill prayed for no rescission of the contract or other relief. Held that, B.'s obligation being unpaid at the time of the hearing, C. was interested in the result of the suit, and was not a competent witness for B.—Carnall v. Wilson, 14 Ark. 482.

[d] (Conn. 1837) An execution, issued on a judgment recovered by A., on a probate bond, against B. (the principal) and C. (the surety), was levied on land as the estate of B., whose sole duty it was to pay the debt, and the land was duly set off to A. in satisfaction of the execution. A. then brought ejectment for the land against B. and D. On the trial defendants showed a deed of the same land from B. to A., executed before the judgment on the probate bond, and a subsequent conveyance from A. to D. A. claimed that the deed from B. to him was fraudulent and void, and in support of this claim offered C. as a witness. Held, that he was inadmissible for this purpose, being interested to show a satisfaction of the judgment against B. and himself.—Leeds v. Leeds, 12 Conn. 176.

[e] (Del. 1857) A person is not incompetent as a witness for defendant in an action of replevin against a sheriff to recover goods taken on execution, by reason of his being surety for the defendant in execution on a judgment against him in another case. The surety might have something to pay thereon if the sheriff's claim to the goods should not be sustained, as the defendant in execution might not be able to satisfy the judgments in both cases, but such interest is too slight to be regarded.—Cleaver v. Ogle, 1 Houst. 453.

[f] (Ga. 1852) The fact that a witness is security for the party calling him on another and distinct debt does not disqualify him to testify.—Riggins' Ex'rs v. Brown, 12 Ga. 271.

[g] (Ga. 1853) A surety called to testify against his interest is competent, if consenting to testify.—Molyneaux v. Collier, 13 Ga. 406.

[h] (Ky. 1811) A person who is bound as surety for a title sold by the heirs is incompetent as a witness against the devisee.—Collett v. Wiley's Heirs, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 466.

[i] (Ky. 1820) The security of a complainant in an original bond for the purchase of land, on which the judgment at law enjoined by complainant's bill was formed, is not a competent witness for his principal.—Shelby v. Smith's Heirs, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 504.

[j] (Ky. 1855) The fact that a witness is bound as surety for the party calling him to depose, in liabilities unconnected with the matter in controversy, does not render him incompetent.—Covington & L. R. Co. v. Ingles, 54 Ky. (15 B. Mon.) 637.

[k] (La. 1829) A surety on a bond to release property sequestered is incompetent for his principal.—Lane v. De Peyster, 7 Mart. (N. S.) 372.

[l] (La. 1829) A surety is not competent for his principal, even to prove a novation by which the surety became the principal debtor.—Lesassier v. Hertzel, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 265.

[m] (La. 1842) On an opposition by a purchaser at an execution sale to the homologation, under Monition Acts 1834, No. 91, of a second sale at his risk, the surety tendered on his 12-month bond having been rejected as insufficient, such surety may prove his own solvency.—Debuys v. Connolly, 2 Rob. 338.

[n] (Me. 1830) A member of a corporation, who is its surety for the payment of a debt not in controversy in the suit on trial, is not on that account an incompetent witness for the corporation.—Miller v. Mariners' Church, 7 Me (7 Greenl.) 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341.

[o] (Me. 1851) A surety on a bond, given by one of two joint debtors, arrested on mesne process, to procure his release, is not competent as a witness for defendants on the trial of the suit.—Cates v. Noble, 33 Me. 258.

[p] (Md. 1854) The interest of a witness who is surety on a bond given to the administrator of a testator by one of the heirs, who would be a distributee in case the will should be vacated, is too remote and contingent to disqualify him from testifying in a suit to test the validity of the will.—Townshend v. Townshend, 6 Md. 295.

[q] (Mass. 1819) One who has become bail for defendant in an action of assumpsit is so far interested in the event of the suit as to be incompetent as a witness for defendant.—Niles v. Brackett, 15 Mass. 378.

[r] (Mass. 1849) The surety in a bastardy bond is not a competent witness for the principal; nor can he be made so by offering the complainant another bond, with sufficient sureties.—Chapel v. White, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 537.

[s] (Mich. 1862) A surety in an appeal bond is a competent witness at the trial on the appeal.—White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155.

[ss] (Miss. 1845) In a trial of right of property, the sureties in the claimant's bond are incompetent witnesses in his behalf.—Moore v. McKie, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 238.

[t] (N. H. 1839) Where an individual was surety on a bond, with a condition to pay plaintiff the amount due on a judgment recovered in his favor, unless the judgment was reversed on the review of the action, held, that he was incompetent as a witness, on such review, until he had received money sufficient to respond to the amount of such judgment, with interest on the same up to such period as there was any probability the action might be pending.—Dearborn v. Dearborn, 10 N. H. 478.

[tt] (N. H. 1840) The court ordered a new indorser to be furnished, in a suit appealed from a justice, and the indorsement was made on the certified copy of the writ brought up with the papers. Held, that such indorsement bound the individual to liability as indorser, and disqualified him as a witness in the suit.—Amerisco-gin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H. 102.

[u] (N. J. 1794) Bail may testify against the principal, but are not compellable to do so.—Shotwell v. Morris, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 224.

[uu] (N. J. 1840) A surety in an insolvent's bond is not a competent witness to prove a compliance by the insolvent with the requirements of law.—Browning v. Cooper, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 196.

[v] (N. J. 1841) A surety in the official bond of the assignee of an insolvent's estate is a competent witness to testify relative to a claim against the estate, when offered for proof.—Mann v. Drost, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 336.

[vv] (N. Y. 1822) One of two lessees, after the lease has expired, is a competent witness to show that he had no beneficial interest in the lease, and joined in the execution of it merely as a surety for the payment of the rent by the co-lessee.—Jones v. Clark, 20 Johns. 51.

[w] (N. Y. 1836) On dissolution of a partnership, the property was assigned to A., one of the partners, who gave B., another partner, a bond to save him harmless against the partnership debts, in which the witness joined as surety. In a suit by B., against a pretended creditor of the firm, for the purpose of barring such claim, held, that the witness was incompetent to prove that the debt of defendant was the separate debt of C., another partner.—Woods v. Skinner, 6 Paige, 76.

[ww] (N. Y. 1864) The surety in the undertaking given to obtain a provisional remedy in an action is not incompetent as a witness, for he is not a person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted or defended.—Jessop v. Miller, 2 Abb. Dec. 449.

[x] (N. C. 1805) A surety of an appeal bond is an incompetent witness for appellant.—Lavender v. Pritchard, 3 N. C. 337.

[xx] (N. C. 1830) A surety for a delinquent cashier is not a competent witness in an action brought to recover money improperly paid by his principal, and for which the latter is chargeable.—State Bank v. Littlejohn, 13 N. C. 381.

[y] (Ohio, 1817) Bail cannot be witnesses for their principals, because they have a direct interest in the event of the suit; but when this interest is put an end to, by the condition of the bond or recognizance being complied with, bail become competent witnesses.—Bail may also be called as witnesses against the principals, for a man shall not, by his own act, deprive another, without his consent, of his testimony.—Ohio v. Gardner, Tapp. 124.

[yy] (Pa. 1826) A surety who is directly interested in the event of the suit cannot be a witness.—Reigart v. Hix, 14 Serg. & R. 134.

[z] (S. C. 1830) A surety of a deceased debtor is a competent witness to disprove a demand against the estate of his principal, though he believed the estate to be insolvent, and that the demand which he is called to disprove is a preferred claim and will exhaust the assets.—Ogier v. Holmes, 1 Bailey, 473.

[zz] (S. C. 1846) In a proceeding to prevent the discharge of a debtor under the prison bonds act, a surety of the debtor for a debt on which judgment has been recovered against both is not therefore incompetent to testify for plaintiff.—Ex parte Hinton, 3 Rich. Law, 97.

§ 341. Surety on replevin or attachment bond.

[a] (Ala. 1845) The sureties to a bond for attachment are competent witnesses to prove that an affidavit therefor was made and is lost, so that another may be substituted.—Ex parte Simpson, 7 Ala. 842.

[b] (Ala. 1852) The surety on a replevin bond, which has been returned forfeited, is a competent witness for the plaintiff in an action against the sheriff for failing to make the money on the execution.—Poe v. Dorrah, 20 Ala. 288, 56 Am. Dec. 196.

[c] (Ark. 1860) A security on an attachment bond is not disqualified, on the ground of interest, to testify in favor of his principal in a proceeding brought by the defendant for an injunction against the attachment suit.—Atkins v. Guice, 21 Ark. 164.

[d] (Iowa, 1860) In a replevin suit, a surety on the bond is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Cook v. Lyon, 10 Iowa, 433.

[e] (La. 1839) Where an attachment bond is signed by a firm as surety, in the absence and so far as appears without the authority of a partner, he is prima facie a good witness.—Denton v. Commercial & R. Bank, 13 La. 488.

[f] (Me. 1850) On the trial of an action, in which there has been an attachment of property, a surety on a replevin bond, by virtue of which the same property was replevied from the attaching officer, is a competent witness for defendant.—Johnson v. Whidden, 32 Me. 230.

[g] (Md.) A surety in a replevin bond is not a competent witness for the plaintiff in replevin.—(1827) Sanderson's Ex'rs v. Marks, 1 Har. & G. 252; (1828) Morton v. Beall's Adm'r, 2 Har. & G. 136.

[h] (Mass. 1849) Where several actions of replevin are tried together before the same jury, by order of the judge, a surety in one of the replevin bonds is a competent witness to testify in the cases in which he is not interested, in the same manner as if the actions had been separately tried.—Kimball v. Thompson, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 441.

[i] (Miss. 1843) On the trial of an issue taken between the plaintiff in an attachment and the garnishee on his answer, the surety in the attachment bond is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Peters v. Moss, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 331.

[j] (Pa. 1848) In an action of replevin, the surety of a defendant in the replevin bond is an incompetent witness for defendant.—Dannels v. Fitch, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 495.

§ 342. Surety on administration bond.

[a] A surety in an administration bond is a competent witness for the executor or administrator.

—(U. S. 1812) Thompson v. Affick, Fed. Cas. No. 13,940 [2 Cranch, C. C. 67]; (1814) Davies v. Davies, Fed. Cas. No. 3,612 [2 Cranch, C. C. 105]; (1816) Craig v. Reintzel, Fed. Cas. No. 3,336 [2 Cranch, C. C. 128; (1823) Burch v. Spaulding, Fed. Cas. No. 2,140 [2 Cranch, C. C. 422];

(Md. 1825) Ferguson v. Cappeau, 6 Har. & J. 394;

(Ohio, 1833) Spencer v. Brooks, Wright, 178;

(Pa. 1848) Reeme v. Parthemere, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 460.

CONTRA, see

(Md. 1801) Bean's Ex'r v. Jenkins' Adm'r, 1 Har. & J. 135.

[b] (U. S. 1811) On the issue of plene administravit, a surety in the administration bond is a competent witness for defendant.—Fairfax v. Fairfax, Fed. Cas. No. 4,613 [2 Cranch, C. C. 25].

[c] (Ala. 1861) In an action by an administrator, an obligor in a bond given under the statutes of Alabama, when administration is given to the general administrator, sheriff, or coroner, conditioned for the payment of the fees, and allowances made by the court on such administration, "if the property of the estate is insufficient therefor," is a competent witness for the plaintiff under the statutes of that state.—Coate v. Coate's Adm'r, 37 Ala. 695.

[d] (Ala. 1850) A surety on the administration bond is not a competent witness for the administrator on the settlement of his accounts.—McCreeliss' Distributees v. Hinkle, 17 Ala. 459.

[e] (Ala. 1858) The surety of an administrator is not a competent witness to prove a credit on the final settlement.—Henderson v. Simmons, 33 Ala. 291, 70 Am. Dec. 590.

[f] (Ala. 1861) A person is not incompetent as a witness for an administrator under section 2302 of the Code, in consequence of being an obligor in a bond given under section 1691 of the Code, conditioned to pay the fees and allowances made by the probate court on the administration, if the property of the estate is insufficient therefor.—Coate v. Coate's Adm'r, 37 Ala. 695.

[g] (Del. 1832) The surety on an administration bond is a competent witness in an action against the administrator, if there is no suggestion of a devastavit.—Bennington v. Parkin's Adm'r, 1 Har. 128.

[h] (Ky. 1854) In a will one of the executors was also a legatee. The will was proved in the county court, and the executors entered on the performance of their duties. Nearly a year afterwards a bill was filed in chancery to set aside the will, and a surety on the executor's bond was offered as a witness to prove it. Held, that as the property bequeathed to the executor was not made subject to the payment of the debts, but the testator directed his debts to be paid out of his other estate, it was a reasonable presumption that the property was in the possession of the person to whom it was bequeathed, and that he held and used it as legatee before the commencement of the present suit; therefore, the surety would not be liable for it, if the will should be annulled, and had no interest in the result of the suit.—Jones' Ex'r v. Jones' Widow, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 464.

[i] (Md. 1830) The sureties in an administration bond are not competent witnesses in a suit brought by the distributee, against the administrator, to prove that the assets of the deceased have been consumed in the payment of his debts.—Owens v. Collinson, 3 Gill & J. 25.

[j] (Md. 1841) The surety of a defendant executrix is not competent to prove the payment of plaintiff's demand by the testator of defendant.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Gill & J. 388.

[k] (Md. 1841) Plaintiff's intestate died in September, 1830, in possession of claims due on the 1st of June of that year, and his administrator did not commence his action until the claims were barred by the statute of limitations. Held, that the surety of such administrator was an incompetent witness to prove a new acknowledgment of the debt.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Gill & J. 388.

[l] (Mass. 1847) In a suit by heirs, to recover land of which their ancestor died seised, upon the alleged ground that the sale thereof by his administrator, under a license, was fraudulent and voidable, the surety of the administrator, on his administration bond, and also on the bond given by him on his obtaining license to sell it, is a competent witness.—Blood v. Hayman, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 231.

[m] (N. H. 1852) The sureties on an administrator's bond, not being liable for breach of covenant in his deed of the real estate of the deceased, are not therefore incompetent witnesses for the administrator.—Merrill v. Harris, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 142, 57 Am. Dec. 359.

[n] (N. C. 1823) On an issue devisavit vel non, the security to the administration which had been granted pendente lite is admissible as a witness to support the will.—Martin v. Hough, 9 N. C. 368.

[o] (N. C. 1838) In a petition against an administrator, on an issue made up to try whether the petitioners are the next of kin of the intestate, the sureties to the administration bond are competent witnesses for defendant; they being neither parties nor privies to the record.—Kaywood v. Barnett, 20 N. C. 88.

[p] (Pa. 1859) In an action by a widow against an administrator, for refusing to set apart $300 of the property of the intestate, which she claimed as her portion, one who signed the administration bond as surety may be a witness, as the judgment must be de bonis propriis.—Hill v. Hill's Adm'r, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 511.

[q] (S. C. 1846) On a bill by the remainderman, against the administrator of the tenant for life of a slave, for a specific delivery and an account for the hire, the surety of the administrator, on his bond, is a competent witness for him on the question of the value of the hire.—Anderson v. Smoot, 2 Rich. Eq. 285.

§ 343. Parties to bills and notes.

Competency in general, see ante, §§ 309–322.

[a] (Ala. 1848) One co-maker of a note, not sued, who is a surety for the other, is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, in a suit on the note; and the case is not varied by the fact that he was the agent of the principal debtor in signing his name.—McCall v. Sinclair, 14 Ala. 764.

[b] (Ala. 1854) When the sureties of a principal debtor are sued on a note, their principal is not a competent witness for them without a release.—Garrett v. Holloway, 24 Ala. 376.

[c] (Ala. 1856) In a suit against the principal, founded on a note executed by him in this state jointly with sureties, a surety who is not sued is a competent witness for his principal.—Atwood's Adm'r v. Wright, 29 Ala. 346.

[d] (Ark. 1842) A. and B. as principal, and C. as surety, made a note, which C. was compelled to pay. Held, in an action by C. against B. to recover the amount paid, that A. was an incompetent witness for plaintiff to prove a partnership between A. and B., or the liability of B.—Williams v. Brummel, 4 Ark. (4 Pike) 129.

[e] (Conn. 1826) A. owed a debt to B., and C. became the surety of A. on notes given for such debt, and also mortgaged land to B. as collateral security; A. being one of the subscribing witnesses to such deed. B., on a bill of foreclosure brought by him, called A. to prove the execution of the deed. Held, that A. was a competent witness for B., as his interest was either balanced, or against the party calling him.—Bigelow v. Benedict, 6 Conn. 116.

[f] (Ga. 1857) The maker of a note is not a competent witness for the surety.—McGinnes v. McGinnes, 23 Ga. 613.

[g] (La. 1852) In an action on a note the surety is not a competent witness for his principal.—Rousseau v. Lovering, 7 La. Ann. 616.

[h] (Me. 1836) In an action by the payee of a note against the surety, the principal is a competent witness for the surety, as the principal's interest is balanced.—Freeman's Bank v. Rollins, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 202.

[i] (Me. 1851) A surety on a note made a partial payment thereon before six years had expired, and thereby prevented the statute of limitations from attaching, as against him, for six years longer. After the expiration of six years from the date of the note, but within six years from the date of the partial payment, a suit was brought against the surety for the balance, and he offered the principal as a witness. Held, that the principal was liable over to the surety, in case of a recovery against the latter, and therefore was disqualified as a witness in his favor, by reason of interest.—Odell v. Dana, 33 Me. 182.

[j] (Mass. 1840) In an action by the payee against one of the sureties on a note, the principal promisor, and also the other surety, are competent witnesses for defendant to prove that the sureties have been discharged by plaintiff.—Greely v. Dow, 43 Mass. (2 Metc.) 176.

[k] (Miss. 1846) In a suit by one surety on a note against another for contribution, the principal, being equally liable to both, is a competent witness.—Hunt v. Chambliss, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 532.

[l] (Mo. 1845) A principal in a note is not a competent witness in an action against his sureties, to show that they are sureties, and to release them, as his liability would be increased by a recovery against them.—Garrett v. Ferguson's Adm'rs, 9 Mo. 125.

[m] (N. H. 1830) In an action by a payee against one who has signed a note as surety, the principal on the note is a competent witness for the defendant when released from liability to costs; his interest being balanced.—Hill v. Sweetser, 5 N. H. 168.

[n] (N. H. 1842) If a note be signed by a principal and surety, and an action be brought thereon by the payee against the surety, the principal will be a competent witness for plaintiff.—Morse v. Green, 13 N. H. 32, 38 Am. Dec. 471.

[o] (N. Y. 1814) Where A. and B. sign a joint note, which is delivered to C., for goods sold by him to A., and A. brings an action against C. for an alleged deficiency in the goods, B. is a competent witness to prove that he signed the note as security only, and not as partner, he having no interest in the event of the suit, the note not being in question.—Hopkins v. Smith, 11 Johns. 161.

[p] (N. C. 1858) A co-obligor, who is a surety in a sealed note, and who is not sued, is a competent witness to prove the execution of the instrument as to the principal, because his interest is as much on one side as on the other.—Gilliam v. Henneberry, 51 N. C. 223.

[q] (Pa. 1824) One who has given a bond and judgment, as collateral security for a note indorsed by defendant, is not a witness for defendant to prove that the note is paid.—Sterling v. Marietta & S. Trading Co., 11 Serg. & R. 179.

[r] (Tenn. 1868) W. brought an action against the maker and security on a note, and judgment was rendered against both parties, from which judgment H., the surety, alone appealed to the circuit court. Upon the trial of the appeal held that the maker was not a competent witness for H. to prove that he had been discharged from liability on the note, as he was liable to H. for the amount of the judgment which might be rendered against him including costs.—Holt v. Winstead, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 568.

[s] (Tex. 1862) In a trial of a suit for breach of a contract, wherein C. had bought of H. certain cattle, on condition of C.'s being able to find 33 head thereof in a certain range, within three days of search, giving in part payment a note with N. as security, the condition being unfulfilled, and the note being unpaid, held, that N. was a competent witness for C. to the contract.—Hudson v. Clark, 26 Tex. 291.

[t] (Vt. 1848) In an action in favor of the payee of a note against one who signed it as surety for the principal signer, the principal, having received from defendant a release of all liability for the costs and expenses of the suit, is a competent witness for defendant; for he will be liable to plaintiff for the damages, if defendant recover, to the same extent that he would be liable to defendant if plaintiff should recover; and, therefore, his liability for costs and expenses being released, his interest is equally balanced.—Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 38.

[u] (Vt. 1848) And it makes no difference that the testimony of the principal tends to reduce the amount of plaintiff's recovery against the surety. The judgment in favor of plaintiff transfers the principal's liability to the surety only to the extent of that judgment, leaving the principal still liable to plaintiff for the balance of the debt, if justly due. The record would be no defense to the principal, for the purpose of limiting the amount of recovery in a suit against him by plaintiff.—Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 38.

§ 344. Co-sureties.

[b] (Ga. 1860) A surety on a bond is not a competent witness against his co-sureties on an issue of non est factum.—Rowe v. Ware, 30 Ga. 278.

[c] (Mo. 1848) A co-surety, who is not a party to the suit, is a competent witness in an action on a bond in which he is surety.—Craig v. Callaway County Court, 12 Mo. 94.

[d] (N. H. 1831) Where a suit is brought on a note transferred to a surety for his indemnity, a co-surety is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Low v. Smart, 5 N. H. 353.

[e] (N. Y. 1837) Where two persons are sureties for a third, the maker of a note, and payment of the note is enforced from one of the sureties, in an action by him against the principal, to recover the amount of money so advanced, the other surety is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Benedict v. Hecox, 18 Wend. 490.

[f] (S. C. 1849) One co-surety to a single bill is a competent witness to prove the handwriting of the other surety, the latter alone being sued.—Leech v. Kennedy, 3 Strob. 488.

[g] (S. C. 1850) A witness was offered in a suit by a surety in an administrator's bond, who was co-surety with him on a bond in which there were three sureties, and the object of the suit was to establish a bond on which the witness was co-surety, with but one other surety. Held, that the witness was incompetent from interest.—Glenn v. Wallace, 4 Strob. Eq. 149, 53 Am. Dec. 657.

[h] (Vt. 1833) Where five sureties of an insolvent principal confess a joint judgment, execution issues, and four are committed to prison and give separate bonds to the keeper, in an action by the fifth, whose property has been taken to pay the judgment, against one of the four, for the one-fifth part of the amount paid, another one of the four is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Foster v. Johnson, 5 Vt. 60.

§ 345. Obligee.

[a] (Ind. 1832) In an action by a road commissioner on a bond, his predecessor, to whom the bond was given, not being interested, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Cox v. Way, 3 Blackf. 143.

[b] (Ky. 1842) In a suit by one surety against another, the original obligee, to whom the debt has been paid, is a competent witness.—McNeil v. Sanford, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 11.

[c] (S. C. 1796) In an action on a bond, brought by an assignee, in the name of the obligee, the latter is incompetent as a witness to prove a partial payment to him by the obligor.—Cantey v. Sumter, 1 Brev. 17.

§ 346. Principal and guarantor.

[a] (Cal. 1861) A guarantor of a note, the effect of whose testimony would be to render himself liable thereon, is a competent witness for defendant in a suit against the maker, to prove payment of the debt for which the note had been pledged.—Mayo v. Avery, 18 Cal. 309.

[b] (Ind. 1841) In a suit against a guarantor for the price of goods sold to another on defendant's letter of credit, the person to whom the goods were sold is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Smith v. Bainbridge, 6 Blackf. 12.

[c] (Ind. 1852) In a suit on a note, a guarantor of the solvency of the maker is not a competent witness to prove that the note was given without consideration.—Hanna v. Spencer, 3 Ind. 351.

[d] (Me. 1840) A guarantor "to pay the execution which may be recovered on" a certain note, "in the lifetime of said execution," is interested to lessen the amount to be recovered, and is not competent to prove a partial failure of consideration.—Paine v. Hussey, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 274.

[e] (Miss. 1850) A guarantor of a note is not a competent witness for the assignee in an action against the maker to support the consideration.—Brodnax v. Brodnax, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 369.

[f] (N. Y. 1857) The assignor and guarantor of a mortgage and the bond secured by it, who has also, upon a subsequent foreclosure, purchased the mortgaged premises, is not such a party for whose "immediate benefit" a suit on a policy of insurance on the mortgaged premises, which have been burned, is prosecuted by his assignee, as to be an incompetent witness for plaintiff.—Grosvenor v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 469.

[g] (Pa. 1824) An assignor of a bond guarantying the payment thereof has such an interest therein that he would be an incompetent witness, in an action by a subsequent assignee thereon, to prove that the bond had been discharged.—Reed v. Garvin, 12 Serg. & R. 100.

[h] (Pa. 1845) A guaranty, without the request of the debtor, has no consideration as to him so as to incapacitate him as a witness in an action on the guaranty.—Kean v. McKinsey, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 30.

[i] (Pa. 1848) In a suit by a creditor against a guarantor, where the principal debtor has been discharged in bankruptcy, such principal is not a competent witness for the guarantor; being liable to the guarantor, in case of a compulsory payment by the latter, after the discharge.—Cake v. Lewis, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 493.

[j] (S. C. 1824) One who had guarantied the ultimate payment of a bond was an incompetent witness to prove that it had not been paid to himself, while in his possession, assigned in blank.—Stoney v. McNeill, Harp. 156.

[k] (Tenn. 1849) A. was indebted to B. for materials furnished for the steamboat Bolivar. Subsequently to the contraction of the debt, A. sold the boat to C., and took his guaranty against all debts contracted for the boat. B. sued A. for the materials, and introduced C. as a witness. Held, that he was incompetent, for he was liable on the covenant of indemnity to the extent of the recovery against A.—Weller v. Gilbert, 29 Tenn. (10 Humph.) 357.

[l] (Va. 1866) Although one who, in transferring a bond, verbally undertook with the transferee to guaranty it, provided the transferee should call on him to do so, to enable the latter to transfer it, yet the latter having disposed of it without calling for the guaranty, the former was not disqualified by interest from testifying, on behalf of the holder, against the obligors.—Fant v. Fant, 17 Grat. 11.

§ 347. Indemnitor.

[a] (Ala. 1846) One who has indemnified the sheriff for seizing goods conveyed to a trustee for the benefit of creditors is not a competent witness to sustain the title of the purchaser from the sheriff, when the suit is by the trustee, because, when the sheriff is indemnified, the purchaser, if evicted, may sue him as a warrantor of the goods purchased.—Hodge v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 131.

[b] (Ark. 1853) In an action for deceit in the sale of a horse, a third person, who furnished defendant with the horse for the purpose of his being sold to plaintiff, under an agreement to indemnify him for any damages and costs that plaintiff might recover against defendant, is not a competent witness for defendant to prove that the horse was sound at the time of sale to plaintiff; but having been admitted to testify without objection, the jury are the judges of his credibility.—Turner v. Huggins, 14 Ark. 21.

[c] (Conn. 1845) A., being appointed sheriff, gave bond with sureties for the faithful discharge of his official duties, and B. executed a bond to the sureties to indemnify them. A. afterwards brought an action against C. on a receipt given by him for property attached by A., as sheriff, in a suit between D. and E. On the trial of such action, A. offered B. as a witness to prove a demand of the property. The bond given by B. was then outstanding, but it did not appear that any suit had ever been brought against A. for any default in his office. Held, that B. was a competent witness.—Allen v. Adams, 17 Conn. 67.

[d] (Me. 1851) A. recovered judgment against B. for an installment of the purchase money for land, and C., D., and E. were interested in the purchase money and liable to indemnify B. to the extent of their proportions in the same. Held, that they were not competent witnesses for B. on a petition to recover the judgment.—Hobbs v. Burns, 33 Me. 233.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) Where two persons claimed title to a note, and the one having possession brought suit thereon, the fact that the other notified the maker not to pay it, and indemnified him against the expense of defending the suit, did not bring him within Code, § 352, making incompetent as a witness one for whose immediate benefit an action is prosecuted.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Paddock, 1 Code Rep. 81.

§ 348. Receiptor.

[a] (Ga. 1852) In an action of trover, a party who has sued out a possessory warrant against plaintiff for the property, and given a bond under the statute for the forthcoming of the property to answer a judgment for the same, is incompetent to testify for defendant.—Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125.

[b] (Me. 1841) In a suit against a sheriff for neglecting to satisfy an execution upon goods which had been attached and receipted for, on the original writ, a judgment debtor, who is likewise a receiptor, is a competent witness for the sheriff.—Pillsbury v. Small, 19 Me. (1 App.) 435.

[c] (Me. 1855) One who had signed a receipt given to the sheriff for goods attached on mesne process in which was a clause as follows: "They are not to be demanded except on the executions which may be recovered in such suits"—was properly excluded, when offered as a witness at the trial.—Oxnard v. Swanton, 39 Me. 125.

[d] (Mass. 1839) Where personal property was attached by a deputy sheriff, and, at the request of defendant, a third person receipted therefor, and agreed to indemnify the officer against the consequences of intrusting the property to him, and the property was delivered by the receiptor to defendant, the receiptor was interested in the event of the suit, and was therefore incompetent as a witness for defendant.—Pollard v. Graves, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 86.

[e] (N. H. 1844) A receiptor for attached property, whatever he may have done with it, is not a competent witness for defendant in the suit.—Woolcott v. Clifford, 16 N. H. 457.

[f] (Vt. 1845) The receiptor of property attached is not a competent witness for defendant in the same suit, where the property attached has been, by the receiptor, suffered to remain in defendant's possession.—Haskins v. Smith, 17 Vt. 263.

[g] (Va. 1819) Where, in an action against a constable and his sureties on his official bond for not delivering attached property, the constable pleads that the plaintiff in the attachment, having taken from a certain person a bond for the delivery of the attached effects, afterwards directed him to give them up to the debtor, with which direction he complied, he cannot introduce such person as a witness to prove it, since he was interested in the controversy.—Smith v. Cooper, 6 Munf. 401.

[a] One partner may be a witness for the other in a matter in which they have no joint interest.

—(N. J. 1818) Ward v. Coulter, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 208;

(S. C. 1818) Mooreman v. De Graffenread, 2 Mill, Const. 195.

[b] (Ala. 1845) A partner who is not sued is a competent witness for his copartner, where he is required to testify against his interest and where such evidence is within the scope of the issue, the court should not assume his incompetency, and reject him in limine.—Anderson v. Snow, 8 Ala. 504.

[c] (Ala. 1849) Where money is received to the use of a firm, and suit is instituted for its recovery against one of the partners alone, the other, being liable to his copartner for contribution in the event of a recovery, is an incompetent witness for him.—Cochran v. Cunningham's Ex'r, 16 Ala. 448, 50 Am. Dec. 186.

[d] (Ala. 1850) In an action against A. to charge him as a partner for goods sold to the firm of B. & Co., B., whose liability is admitted, is not a competent witness to prove the sale and delivery of the goods, unless it be first shown by aliunde proof that A. was a member of said firm.—Dickson v. Collins, 17 Ala. 635.

[e] (Ala. 1850) A partner who is still liable to the creditor for the demand in controversy is not a competent witness for him to prove that, as between him and his copartner, the latter has, by agreement, made the debt several and assumed its payment.—Hoyt v. Murphy, 18 Ala. 316.

[f] (Ala. 1850) Where one partner, in a matter connected with the business of the partnership, does an act to the injury of a third person, which is a tort by construction or inference of law merely, his copartner is equally liable with him for the consequences of the act, and, being so liable, is an incompetent witness for him when sued alone by such third person to recover damages for the tort.—Myers v. Gilbert, 18 Ala. 467.

[g] (Ala. 1854) When a witness testifies, on his voir dire, that he was a partner of the firm which is shown by other evidence to have been defendant's vendor of the goods in suit, he may testify to the further fact that said firm was also plaintiff's vendor, thus balancing his interest, and restoring his competency.—Tarleton v. Johnson, 25 Ala. 300, 60 Am. Dec. 515.

[h] (Ark. 1851) A. sued B. for work. C. was offered as a witness by A. It appeared that B. and C. agreed to cultivate a farm in partnership. B. was to furnish a hand on his part, and thereupon hired A., who labored on the partnership farm, and sued B. for his wages. Held, that C. was not liable for A.'s wages, and was a competent witness.—Rapley v. Brown, 12 Ark. (7 Eng.) 80.

[hh] (Conn. 1831) In an action against a partnership, one partner, who is not sued, is an incompetent witness for those who are sued.—Bill v. Porter, 9 Conn. 23.

[i] (Conn. 1842) H., an officer, attached the goods of B., in a suit against him by A., and C. subsequently attached the same goods, then in the custody of H., in a suit brought by another creditor against B.; after which H. brought trespass against C., and, on the trial, H. offered a partner of A. as a witness. Held, that such witness was not incompetent by reason of interest in the event of the suit, as that event would not affect H.'s liability over to A., and as the judgment in this suit would not furnish evidence of the rights of A., in a suit by him against H., nor constitute a fund for the benefit of A.—Huntley v. Bacon, 15 Conn. 267.

[ii] (Del. 1850) One of the partners is competent, not to prove the existence of the partnership, but, that being proved, to prove anything in which his declarations could bind it.—Little v. Hazzard, 5 Har. 291.

[j] (Ga. 1853) Where partners agree that real estate owned by the firm shall be leased, and that each partner shall be entitled to his proportion of the rent, and shall collect and may discharge it, and the lessee rents with the knowledge of that agreement, in an action by one partner for his proportion of the rent, the other partner is not disqualified as a witness for plaintiff by reason of interest.—McDougald v. Banks, 13 Ga. 451.

[jj] (Ill. 1851) A partner who is not joined as a defendant may be called as a witness by plaintiff to prove the cause of action against the partner sued.—Crook v. Taylor, 12 Ill. (2 Peck) 353.

[k] (Iowa, 1856) In an action against a partnership, it was proposed by defendants that judgment should be taken against one of them, and that he should then be called as witness to prove that a codefendant was not a member of the partnership, which judgment plaintiffs refused to take. Held that, having no interest except that which was against the party calling him, he was a competent witness for such purpose, and plaintiffs could not debar his testimony by refusing to take the judgment offered.—Danforth v. Carter, 4 Iowa, 230.

[kk] (Ky. 1832) A partner may testify as to the rectitude of an account set up by another partner against the firm; but the witness cannot testify to his own account against the firm.—Garner v. Beaty, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 225.

[l] (La. 1813) One partner cannot be a witness for or against his copartner in any partnership matter.—Rochelle v. Musson, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 73.

[ll] (La. 1826) In a firm, not commercial, one partner is competent for the other.—Castleman v. Stone, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 282.

[m] (La. 1834) A partner is a good witness for his copartner in a matter which occurred before the partnership.—Kellar v. Banks, 6 La. 529.

[mm] (La. 1857) A partner cannot be a witness to prove a debt to the firm.—Porche v. Le Blanc, 12 La. Ann. 778.

[n] (Me. 1853) The buyer of a horse sued an officer who had attached it in a suit against the seller and his copartner. Held, that the copartner was a competent witness for the officer; his interest in the event of the suit not being a legal interest, but uncertain and contingent.—Ward v. Chase, 35 Me. 515.

[nn] (Md. 1852) A grantor was indebted to a firm, which was indebted to A., a member. A. was the grantee, and it was agreed that the purchase money should be charged on the books of the firm to A., and credited to the grantor, which was done. Held, that another member of the firm was a competent witness for A. in a suit by which other creditors of the grantor attacked the validity of the deed.—Falconer v. Clark, 3 Md. Ch. 151, affirmed (1854) 7 Md. 177.

[o] (Mass. 1815) In an action for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to become a copartner with defendant's insolvent debtor, and afterwards inducing the firm to assume all his debts, such debtor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bean v. Bean, 12 Mass. 20.

[oo] (Miss. 1846) A. and B. being partners in a race course, A. sold out his interest to C., who assumed to pay A.'s share of the debts due on account of the course. In an action by D., against A. and B., for work done on the course, held, that C. was an incompetent witness to prove payment by A. to D. for the work done by D., and for the value of which he was suing.—Perry v. Randolph, 14 Miss. (6 Smedes & M.) 335.

[p] (Mo. 1854) On a suit against one partner for a claim on the firm, copartners are competent to testify in behalf of defendant.—Weston v. Hunt, 19 Mo. 505.

[pp] (N. Y. 1828) A partner with plaintiff's attorney, who is interested in the costs, and probably expects higher fees as counsel in case of success, is not therefore an incompetent witness.—Griswold v. Sedgwick, 1 Wend. 126.

[q] (N. Y. 1829) Where the allotted share of one partner was taken under an execution against the original owner of the goods, the other partner is an incompetent witness to prove the title of his partner to the goods, without a release.—Chapman v. Andrews, 3 Wend. 240.

[qq] (N. C. 1840) A., B., and C. entered into a copartnership in the name of A. & Co., for the purchase and sale of negroes, and it was afterwards agreed between them that A. and B. should alone be interested in the negroes purchased with cash, but all three should be equally interested in the negroes purchased on a credit. Held that, though C. might be held responsible on all contracts by third persons dealing with the firm of A. & Co., yet, that he would be a competent witness to testify for the firm in an action on the warranty of soundness contained in a bill of sale for a negro purchased in the name of the firm for cash.—Williamson v. Canaday, 23 N. C. 113.

[r] (N. C. 1844) In an action seeking to charge defendant as a partner in a certain firm, it is competent for him to introduce as a witness in his behalf a person who was an acknowledged member of that firm, unless it is admitted by the pleadings, or sworn by the witness on his voir dire, that defendant was also a member.—Hunn v. McKee, 26 N. C. 475.

[rr] (N. C. 1847) In a suit against part of the members of a partnership, a partner not a party to the record is not a competent witness for defendants, because in a suit for contribution he would be bound for his part of the debt recovered, and also for his proportion of the costs.—Cummins v. Coffin, 29 N. C. 196.

[s] (N. C. 1847) Where two of three partners are sued, the one not sued may testify for plaintiff, but he cannot be compelled to do so.—Cummins v. Coffin, 29 N. C. 196.

[ss] (N. C. 1847) A person not a party to the record may be introduced as a witness by plaintiff in a suit against another member of the firm, for goods sold to the firm.—Washing v. Wright, 30 N. C. 1.

[t] (N. C. 1850) Where it was claimed that a firm was liable for the board of one of the partners, one of the firm was an incompetent witness to prove that fact.—Street v. Meadows, 33 N. C. 130.

[tt] (Ohio, 1851) In the prosecution of a partnership claim, as a general rule, all the partners are necessary parties, and if one of the partners has been omitted, he is not a competent witness for plaintiffs, although the counsel for defendants may have stipulated before the trial that the omission to make the proper party shall not defeat the action.—Choteau v. Raitt, 20 Ohio, 132.

[u] (Pa. 1796) In a suit against two partners, one of them who has not been arrested is competent to prove the amount of the demand on the part of plaintiff.—Norman v. Norman, 2 Yeates, 154.

[uu] (Pa. 1797) A partner is not a competent witness to prove the payment of a partnership debt.—Gardiner v. Levaud, 2 Yeates, 185.

[v] (Pa. 1817) A member of a firm cannot be a witness to prove that one of his copartners used firm money to pay his private debts.—Purviance v. Dryden, 3 Serg. & R. 402.

[vv] (Pa. 1840) Where one who is partner in a business carried on in premises held under lease is not a party to the lease, still he is not a competent witness in an action on the lease.—Lomis v. Ruetter, 9 Watts, 516.

[w] (Pa. 1848) Where a partnership receives goods on consignment, and one of the firm, alleging that he had instructions to retain the proceeds, to secure the claim of a third person, without the knowledge of his partner, paid over the proceeds in satisfaction of that claim, under a promise of indemnity to himself, after which he was compelled to pay the value of the goods to the rightful owner, the other partner, not being liable to contribute to the loss, is a competent witness for his copartner in an action on the indemnity.—Thomas v. Brady, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 164.

[ww] (Pa. 1862) It must appear affirmatively that the interest of a partner offered as a witness is real, and the cause of action must be one for which he is answerable, in order to render his testimony inadmissible for his copartners in a suit in which he is not joined with them as a defendant.—Dunlap v. Smith, 5 Phila. 69.

[x] (S. C. 1857) In a suit on a contract made solely with one member of a firm, and on which he alone is liable, his copartner is a competent witness.—Sloan v. Bangs, 11 Rich. Law, 97.

[xx] (Tenn. 1825) Partners are not competent witnesses for a copartner, unless released.—Wilson v. Smith, 13 Tenn. (5 Yerg.) 379.

[y] (Tenn. 1858) A partner is not a competent witness to prove the existence of the partnership; but, when proven, he is competent to prove the justice of the demand against the firm. This principle does not render a partner competent to prove that an obligation, not within the scope of the partnership business, was authorized, or adopted, by the other members, so as to render the firm liable.—Scott v. Bandy, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 197.

[yy] (Tex. 1860) In a suit by a firm a partner is himself a competent witness for defendant, on the issue whether he had the authority of the firm to pay his individual debt, his interest in the matter being balanced.—Young v. Read, 25 Tex. Supp. 113.

[z] (Tex. 1866) A partner, in an action by the firm on an open account, testified on his voir dire that he was entitled to one-third of the profits of the business, but that he considered there were none, that he had an account with the firm, which he would have to pay if the other assets of the firm should be insufficient to pay the whole liabilities of the firm except $10,000, placed in the firm by his partner, who would not call upon him therefor, etc., but that the other assets would be sufficient. Held, that the objection to interest was well taken.—Wade v. Eckford, 28 Tex. 520.

§ 350. Actions between partners.

[a] (Ky. 1832) In a dispute between partners, one of the firm is a competent witness to prove the claims of the other members of the firm who call him as a witness, but is not competent to diminish claims set up against the firm by partners who did not call for his testimony.—Garner v. Beaty, 30 Ky. (7 J. J. Marsh.) 223.

[b] (Mo. 1847) On a settlement between partners, one may be a witness for another against a third, to recover the amount to be paid by him.—Cinnamond v. Greenlee, 10 Mo. 578.

[c] (Mo. 1847) Where A., B., and C. enter into copartnership, and A. lends B. money to enable him to furnish his share of the partnership fund, the money thus advanced constitutes no part of the partnership fund, and, in an action by A. against B. to recover the same, C. is a competent witness.—Cinnamond v. Greenlee, 10 Mo. 578.

[d] (N. Y. 1852) In a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, and for a sum of money, a member who has withdrawn since the liability accrued is not a competent witness for defend ants, where the effect of a judgment in their favor would be to discharge a claim for which he remains jointly liable.—Kapp v. Barthan, 1 E. D. Smith, 622.

[e] (Pa. 1870) K., C., and M. entered into an agreement to purchase land in partnership. Held, in an action by K. against M. for one-third the purchase money paid on his account, that C. was not a competent witness, on the ground of interest.—Meason v. Kaine, 63 Pa. (13 P. F. Smith) 335.

[f] (Va. 1808) In a bill to settle the concerns of a partnership, all the partners ought to be made parties; and if one be omitted, he cannot be a witness for another partner to charge a third in relation to the partnership.—Waggoner v. Gray's Adm'rs, 2 Hen. & M. 603.

§ 351. Testimony as to existence of partnership.

[a] (U. S. 1802) In assumpsit for goods sold and delivered, the defendant may prove a partnership between plaintiff and the witness by the witness.—Lovejoy v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 8,551 [1 Cranch, C. C. 102].

[b] (Ala. 1840) In an action against L., charging him as the partner of B., the latter is not a competent witness to prove the partnership.—Lewis v. Post, 1 Ala. 65.

[c] (Del. 1874) In an action of replevin, a third person in whom property is pleaded is not competent to testify for defendant that he and plaintiff were partners in business, and that the property belonged to them as partners and was seized on execution at the suit of another person against him individually.—Lalley v. Truitt, 4 Houst. 578.

[d] (La. 1860) Where a defendant is sued as partner of a commercial firm, on an obligation not signed by him or with his name, the members of the firm are competent witnesses for him to prove that he was not a partner.—James v. Brooke, 15 La. Ann. 541.

[e] (Me. 1833) Where defendant pleads in abatement the nonjoinder of his copartner, such copartner is not a competent witness for defendant to prove the fact of partnership.—Spaulding v. Smith, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 363.

[f] (Miss. 1850) Where the partnership has been proved in respect to the subject-matter of a suit against one of the partners, his copartner is not a competent witness to disprove the partnership.—Randolph v. Govan, 22 Miss. (14 Smedes & M.) 9.

[g] (N. Y. 1857) When the insured described the property in his application as his own, and in his affidavit of loss states that he is the principal member of a firm which possesses such property, that he furnished all the capital, and his interest covers all the assets of the firm, the other partner is competent to testify, in a suit brought by the insured on the policy, that although ostensibly a partner and sharing the profits, he yet practically had no interest whatever in the property.—Irving v. Excelsior Fire Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 507.

[h] (Pa. 1850) In a suit against one alleged partner, another person who admits himself to be a partner is not a competent witness to testify as to the articles of partnership alleged to have existed between himself and a defendant, and now lost.—Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 641.

[i] (R. I. 1853) In a suit against two as copartners of a firm, the testimony of the person who contracted the debt for which the suit is brought, testifying that it was contracted by him as a third copartner of the same firm, is not admissible to charge the defendants.—Sherman v. Kelton, 2 R. I. 532.

§ 352. Dormant or secret partner.

[a] (Cal. 1855) An agent may testify as to his authority in the performance of acts for his reputed principal; and that the agent should appear, by his own testimony, to be a secret partner in business with the party for whom he acted, would make no difference.—Tomlinson v. Spencer, 5 Cal. 291.

[b] (Pa. 1837) A dormant partner, though he is not a party to a suit, cannot be a witness for the partnership.—Wood v. Connell, 2 Whart. 542.

§ 353. Surviving partner.

[a] (Ala. 1836) A surviving partner, who contracts debts in the name of the dissolved partnership, is a competent witness in a proceeding by the creditor to subject the estate of the deceased partner in the hands of the distributees to the payment of such debts, as his interest is balanced.—Pyke v. Searcy, 4 Port. 52.

[b] (N. Y. 1828) In assumpsit against the administrators of a deceased partner, the surviving partner is competent to prove the partnership.—Grant v. Shurter, 1 Wend. 148.

[c] (Pa. 1858) In an action against an administrator of a deceased partner to recover a partnership debt, the surviving partner is a competent witness.—Brewster's Adm'x v. Sterrett, 32 Pa. 115.

§ 354. Actions on notes.

[a] (Ala. 1852) A partner who executes a note in the name of the partnership is not a competent witness against his copartner, when the latter is sued alone on the note.—Barney v. Earle, 20 Ala. 405.

[b] (Ga. 1855) S. brought suit against D. & M. on a note, purporting to be signed by them as partners. D. filed a plea of non est factum. A verdict was rendered against the defendants, from which D. only appealed. Held, that plaintiff could not be permitted to use M. as a witness for the purpose of proving a fact, which would cast a liability on D. which was previously sustained by the witness.—Davis v. Stanford, 18 Ga. 289.

[c] (Ill. 1861) In an action against one partner, on a firm note, the copartners are not competent witnesses.—Hurd v. Brown, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 616.

[d] (La. 1813) One partner cannot invalidate a note of the firm on which another partner is sued.—Rochelle v. Musson, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 73.

[e] (Md. 1827) In an action against one partner, by the payee of a partnership note, to recover the amount thereof, the other partner is a competent witness for defendant to prove that the consideration of said note was for the witness' exclusive benefit, given to secure a debt due by him on his own account; and that, when he signed the note, he informed plaintiff that he was not authorized to sign defendant's name to it.—Robertson v. Mills, 2 Har. & G. 98.

[f] (N. Y. 1829) The maker of a firm note is competent to prove that the note was given by him for his individual debt without the assent of his copartner.—Williams v. Walbridge, 3 Wend. 415.

[g] (Pa. 1847) A. and B. being partners, A. assigned a note payable to himself to C., to indemnify him against certain liabilities for A., and for the firm of A. & B. In an action on the note by C. against the makers, held, that B. was an incompetent witness for plaintiff.—Martin v. Jones, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 82.

[h] (Pa. 1848) The maker of a negotiable note is not a competent witness to prove that the note was drawn for the benefit of a firm composed of the plaintiff and another partner and himself, and that it was indorsed by defendant for his particular accommodation when there is no evidence that the note was taken after it was past maturity.—Snyder v. Wagonseller, 1 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 170.

[i] (Pa. 1862) One of a firm to whom a note payable at a banking house has been indorsed for collection is a competent witness to prove demand of payment at the maturity of the note, though demand and protest was not regularly made by a notary until the next day.—Scull v. Mason, 43 Pa. (7 Wright) 99.

[j] (Tenn. 1840) In an action against A. as the maker of a note signed by A. and B. and made by B., plaintiff introduced B. as a witness. Held, that he was incompetent to prove that he and A. were partners at the time of the execution of the note; but that he was competent, the partnership being proved, to prove the justice of plaintiff's demand.—Vanzant v. Kay, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 106.

[k] (Tenn. 1843) Where one member of a firm executes his individual note to obtain money, he is not a competent witness to prove that the money was obtained on the credit of the firm, and went into the business of the firm.—Foster v. Hall, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 346.

[l] (W. Va. 1873) A note under seal was executed in favor of plaintiff by a partner, for himself and copartner (but without authority of the copartner), in the partnership name, for money loaned the partnership, and with the name of A. C. signed thereto, also with a seal annexed. In an action of debt thereon against A. C. by plaintiff, A. C. pleaded non est factum. Held, that the partner who did not sign was a competent witness, because his interest was equal between the plaintiff and defendant, defendant by deed having released him from all liability for costs of that suit.—Black v. Campbell, 6 W. Va. 51.

§ 355. After dissolution or assignment.

[a] (Ky. 1855) Where one member of a firm, after dissolution, executes a note for the payment of a partnership debt, on which the statute of limitations has run, he binds himself for the payment of the debt, and is, therefore, incompetent to testify in favor of the payee of the note, as his testimony would tend to make his former copartner liable to contribution.—Merrit v. Pollys, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 355.

[b] (Miss. 1845) In an action against some of the members of an unincorporated banking company, after its dissolution, one not a party, who was a member during the whole period of the company's existence, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Lake v. Munford, 12 Miss. (4 Smedes & M.) 312.

[c] (N. H. 1842) A person, who was indebted to a firm at its dissolution, settled the debt by giving his notes to the two partners separately, each for a part of the debt. In an action on one of the notes against the maker, held, that the other partner was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Morse v. Green, 13 N. H. 32, 38 Am. Dec. 471.

[d] (Pa. 1868) In an action on a note to which was signed the name of a firm of which defendant had been a member, a witness offered for defendant stated that the firm whose name was attached to the note had been dissolved and a new firm, consisting of witness and defendant, had been established, at which time witness was shown a list of liabilities of the firm, which he had agreed to assume, and that the note in suit was not among them. Held, that the witness had shown that he had no interest, and that he was competent; his credibility being for the jury.—Weisel v. Marr, 25 Leg. Int. 181.

[e] (S. C. 1859) On the dissolution of the partnership of G. & R., G. released R. from all the liabilities of the firm, and R. released to G. all his interest in the goods and choses of the firm. G., having been arrested on writs of ca. sa. at the suits of sundry judgment creditors, applied for the benefit of the insolvent debtors' act. The creditors filed suggestions, and on the trial of the issues it was held that R. was an incompetent witness, as he had an interest to increase the fund by which his own liability would be discharged.—Yeakle v. George, 12 Rich. Law, 153.

[f] (Tex. 1860) Defendant's partner (after dissolution) is a competent witness for the plaintiff.—White v. Tudor, 24 Tex. 639, 76 Am. Dec. 126.

[g] (Vt. 1841) Two partners assigned their joint and separate property to an assignee, to pay their joint and separate debts, and a suit was brought by the assignee to recover a debt due to one of the partners. Held, that the other partner was interested, and could not be a witness.—Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 441.

Husband of legatee or heir, see post, § 418.
Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 515.
Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, §§ 472–475.

§ 356. Executors and administrators.

Liability for costs, see post, § 400.
Parties to action, see ante, § 240.

[a] (Ala. 1838) In an action by the administrators of A., against the administrators of B., for money received by B. of the estate of C., the administrator of C. is competent to prove the payment of the money to B. by him.—Wiggins' Adm'rs v. Pryor's Adm'r, 3 Port. 430.

[b] (Ala. 1856) An executor, administrator, or other trustee, in the absence of any proof of an express warranty, or fraud, or gross negligence, is a competent witness for a person to whom he has sold or hired a slave, in an action against the hirer to recover the same, although it is shown that he, as executor, is the real party in interest.—Walden v. Smith, 29 Ala. 417.

[c] (Ark. 1856) In a bill in equity by a widow for dower, against the heirs and executors of her husband, an executor is incompetent to testify for complainant, on account of his interest in being discharged from liability, and charging the estate in the hands of heirs, and his liability for costs.—Price v. Notrebe's Heir, 17 Ark. 45.

[d] (Ark. 1857) An administrator is a competent witness to prove the existence, loss, and contents of a bond for title, given by his intestate, for an interest in land sold by him in his lifetime; though the administrator has, in pursuance of law, executed a deed, with warranty, to the purchaser, in accordance with the bond.—Moore v. Maxwell, 18 Ark. 469.

[e] (Ga. 1856) An administrator is not a competent witness to prove failure of consideration of a draft drawn by his intestate, even when having no personal interest in the case, and when the estate in his hands is sufficient to pay the debt and costs, if recovered, and when the estate is liable to him for reimbursement thereof.—Shannon v. Fuller, 20 Ga. 566.

[f] (Ga. 1857) The administrator of the owner of one third of a lot of land in dispute is not incompetent to testify merely from that fact, unless the objector shows a certain and fixed interest sufficient to disqualify.—Hester v. Coats, 22 Ga. 56.

[g] (Ind. 1835) In a suit against the administrator of a guardian to recover money received by the guardian for the distributive share of the ward in the estate of his father, the administrator of the father is not a competent witness to prove that the guardian received the money.—Raymond v. Simonson, 4 Blackf. 77.

[h] (La. 1857) As a general rule, an executor who indorses a bill or note, although he does so as executor, is personally bound; he is, therefore, incompetent as a witness to fix a liability on a prior party to it.—Leverich v. Bossier, 12 La. Ann. 583.

[i] (La. 1860) The commission allowed an executor does not constitute such an interest as disqualifies him from testifying on behalf of the estate which he represents.—Smith v. Lambeth's Ex'r, 15 La. Ann. 566.

[j] (Md. 1804) A second husband, surviving his wife, who was administratrix of the first husband, is a competent witness for her surety in an action on the administration bond.—Wallis' Ex'r v. Britton, 1 Har. & J. 478.

[k] (Md. 1848) An executor, who, relying on his own knowledge, admits that lands charged with the payment of debts are sufficient to satisfy the creditors, and permits manumitted slaves belonging to testator to go free, and assents to their legacy of freedom, while the personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts, is incompetent to testify in justification of his acts.—Cornish v. Willson, 6 Gill, 299.

[l] (Mass. 1815) An executor or administrator is incompetent to testify in an action against or in favor of the estate he represents.—Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358.

[m] (Miss. 1851) An administrator who has been guilty of an actual devastavit, and is liable to a suit therefor on his bond, is incompetent as a witness for a distributee who sues for the recovery of the property of the decedent from a stranger, where the property in litigation has been converted by the administrator.—Kilpatrick v. Bush, 23 Miss. (1 Cushm.) 199.

[n] (Mo. 1822) An administrator, not interested in an estate further than the per centum to be allowed him, is a competent witness to prove a debt or demand due the intestate.—Graves v. Priest, 1 Mo. 214.

[o] (N. H. 1838) An executor who has delivered a note, payable to his testator and indorsed in blank, to a third person, on a supposition that it is included in a legacy to such person, is a competent witness for such third person in an action on the note.—Lock v. Noyes, 9 N. H. 430.

[p] (Pa. 1843) An administrator who voluntarily pays money on account of a claim against the estate which he represents is not thereby rendered an incompetent witness in an issue between the claimant and another creditor of the estate to try the validity of the claim.—Christman v. Siegfried, 5 Watts & S. 400.

[q] (Pa. 1845) In an action by heirs against a purchaser at the administration sale, alleging that the sale was fraudulent, the contingency that the purchase money not having been paid over, if the heirs succeed the administrator will be able to keep it himself, is an advantage affecting his credibility as a witness but not his competency.—Kifer v. Brenneman, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 452.

[r] (Pa. 1848) An administrator is a competent witness to prove the facts connected with an apparent sale, by order of court, of real estate, to pay debts, being a sale of one-third to the husband of one of the heirs, and of the other two thirds to the guardian of the other two heirs, in order to show that it was, in fact, merely a partition between the heirs, and not an actual sale, and also to prove that no money was paid.—Kinzer v. Mitchell, 8 Pa. (8 Barr) 64.

[s] (Pa. 1854) The executor of plaintiff's grantor is a competent witness in ejectment for plaintiff, though the assets of the estate in his hands consist of a bond from defendant for the payment of purchase money for part of the subject-matter of the suit, which price defendant has declared his intention of procuring to be abated in the event of his losing in the pending suit.—Turner v. Reynolds, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 199.

[t] (Tex. 1853) An administrator is a competent witness, in a suit between other persons, to prove that a conveyance made by his intestate, which appeared on its face to be absolute, was, in fact, in trust to reimburse both contending parties for money paid by them as the intestate's sureties.—Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 60 Am. Dec. 172.

[u] (Tex. 1860) Defendant's executor is a competent witness for plaintiff.—White v. Tudor, 24 Tex. 639, 76 Am. Dec. 126.

[v] (Va. 1810) An administrator to whom a credit has been allowed by final decree in chancery for a sum of money paid by him to the guardian of one of the distributees is a competent witness for the ward to prove the payment of the money to the guardian, though the guardian was not a party to such final decree.—Hooper v. Royster, 1 Munf. 119.

[w] (Va. 1814) In detinue for a legacy, plaintiff may show by the executor, if he is willing to testify, his assent to the legacy; but he cannot prove by him that the testator had title to the slave, and could bequeath it.—Smith v. Townes' Adm'r, 4 Munf. 191.

[x] (Va. 1842) In an action brought by keepers of a boarding school against a guardian, for board, tuition, and other necessaries furnished to the ward, the administrator of a previous guardian is a competent witness for plaintiffs.—Young v. Warne, 2 Rob. 420.

§ 357. —— Coexecutors or administrators and successive or surviving executors or administrators.

[a] (Ala. 1846) A former executor, who has resigned his trust, may be a witness against the administrator subsequently appointed.—McLaughlin v. Nelms' Creditors, 9 Ala. 925.

[b] (Ala. 1857) In an action by a special administrator, who is superseded, during the pendency of the suit, by the appointment of an administrator in chief, if the latter is thereupon substituted as the plaintiff of record, the former is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Farrow v. Bragg's Adm'r, 30 Ala. 261.

[c] (Ala. 1865) In an action by the administrator de bonis non, to recover money paid by the administrator in chief through a mistake in fact, the latter is a competent witness for the former.—Walker v. Mock's Adm'r, 39 Ala. 568.

[d] (Ky. 1846) An administrator who has been removed is a competent witness for the administrator de bonis non, in a suit against him, where it does not appear that he has committed a devastavit.—Anderson's Adm'r v. Irvine, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 209.

[e] (La. 1827) One coexecutor is competent for plaintiff who sues the other.—Taylor v. Hollander, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 295.

[f] (N. H. 1855) If an administrator is removed, pending a suit against him as such, and his successor appears and assumes the defense, he becomes a competent witness in the case, as he is no longer a party, nor liable for the costs. —Wiggin v. Plumer, 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 251.

[g] (N. M. 1871) A former administrator de bonis non is a competent witness for one subsequently appointed, in a suit relating to the estate, where such witness is not shown to be interested in the event of the suit.—Beall v. Territory, 1 N. M. 507.

[h] (Pa. 1836) In an action for a legacy, brought against the personal representatives of a deceased coexecutor, on the ground of funds coming into the hands of the deceased after the accounts were settled, the surviving executor is not a witness for plaintiff.—Doebler v. Snavely, 5 Watts, 225.

[i] (Pa. 1856) In an action against one administrator on an award made subsequent to his appointment, a coadministrator is a competent witness to show that the amount of the award is in the administrator's hands, but not to prove the original liability of the estate.—Lobb v. Lobb, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 327.

[j] (Pa. 1857) A discharged administrator is a competent witness to support the claims of an estate, in an action brought for their recovery by his successor.—Burd's Ex'rs v. McGregor's Adm'r, 2 Grant, Cas. 353.

[k] (Tex. 1857) An executor who has been removed from his office is a competent witness in behalf of the estate in an action by an administrator pro. tem., notwithstanding proceedings are pending to reverse the action of the court removing him.—Saunders v. Duval's Adm'r, 19 Tex. 467.

[l] (Va. 1854) Where a slave was bequeathed to A. for life, he being one of two administrators, and then over to B., in an action by B. against A. and a purchaser, the other administrator is a competent witness for B. to prove the assent of the administrators to the legacy.—Frazer's Adm'r v. Bevill, 11 Grat. 9.

§ 358. —— Proceedings to establish will.

[a] (Ala. 1859) A special administrator is a competent witness for the proponent of a will, as although the decree in favor of the proponent might affect his liability, yet it would not be competent evidence for or against him.—Blakey's Heirs v. Blakey's Ex'x, 33 Ala. 611.

[b] (Conn. 1796) An executor is not a competent witness to prove the sanity of the testator.—Hayden v. Loomiss, 2 Root, 350.

[c] (Conn. 1830) An executor who has accepted the trust and acted under the will, but derives no beneficial interest under it, is a competent witness to establish it; his remuneration for his services and expenses not depending upon the establishment of the will.—Comstock v. Hadlyme Ecclesiastical Soc., 8 Conn. 254, 20 Am. Dec. 100.

[d] (Fla. 1857) An executor is not an incompetent witness to a will or devise, unless he is a legatee or devisee, or has an interest in the estate bequeathed to him; commissions to which he may be entitled as executor will not exclude him under our laws.—Meyer v. Fogg, 7 Fla. 292, 68 Am. Dec. 441.

[e] (Md. 1854) A person named in a will as executor, who never acted as such, but renounced the executorship and took no interest under the will, is a competent witness to sustain the probate of the will against a caveat.—Dorsey v. Warfield, 7 Md. 65.

[f] (Md. 1870) Upon the hearing of a caveat to a will, an executor who is not a party to the proceeding as such is competent to testify on his own offer, and in his own behalf as caveatee.—Schull v. Murray, 32 Md. 9.

[g] (Mass. 1814) On appeal from a decree of the probate court disallowing an instrument purporting to be the will of a decedent, the executor named in the instrument is incompetent as a witness on the trial of the sanity of the decedent.—Durant v. Starr, 11 Mass. 527.

[h] (N. J. 1806) An executor who is not a subscribing witness may be a witness to prove a will, unless he takes an interest under it.—Snedeker v. Allen, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 35.

[i] (Pa. 1846) An executor who has paid a legacy is an incompetent witness to establish a will on an issue of devisavit vel non.—Hinkle v. Eichelberger, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 483.

§ 359. —— Executor who is legatee or devisee.

[a] (Del. 1854) An executor, largely interested in a codicil, is not a competent witness to prove the circumstances under which a will was found.—Sutton v. Sutton, 5 Har. 459.

[b] (Miss. 1860) The executor of a will, who is also the principal legatee and devisee under the will, is a competent witness to sustain the will.—Kelly v. Miller, 39 Miss. 17.

[c] (N. J. 1829) Where defendant in a suit on his duebill pleaded payment and gave notice of his intention to prove on the trial that a third person, since deceased, paid the bill, the executor and residuary legatee of such third person is a competent witness to prove that his testator promised to pay, and in fact paid, the amount of the bill to plaintiff.—Henarie v. Maxwell, 10 N. J. Law (5 Halst.) 297.

[d] (Tenn. 1867) On the trial of an issue of devisavit vel non, an executor under the will, who is not a party to the record, but who has accepted a legacy and transferred it for value after notice of the issue, is not a competent witness in support of the will.—Barbee v. Mason, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 108.

§ 360. Legatees and devisees.

[a] A legatee is not a competent witness for the executor, so long as his legacy is subject to abatement.

—(Ala. 1824) Strong's Ex'rs v. Finch, Minor, 256;

(N. J. 1818) La Rue v. Boughaner, 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 104;

(Va. 1811) Temple's Ex'r v. Ellett's Ex'x, 2 Munf. 452.

[b] (Ala. 1849) Where an execution against A. is levied on slaves which are claimed by B., on a motion to quash the execution by A., B. having departed this life, a son of B., and joint legatee of his estate, is an incompetent witness for A.—Gilbert v. Bradford, 15 Ala. 769.

[c] (Ala. 1849) A legatee under a will is prima facie an incompetent witness for the executors in a suit against them for money alleged to have been due by the testator.—Robertson's Ex'rs v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106.

[d] (Ala. 1850) The interest of a legatee whose legacy has been paid is too remote and contingent to render him incompetent as a witness for the executor.—Clealand v. Huey, 18 Ala. 343.

[e] (Ala. 1851) When a testator devises all his estate, both real and personal, to his wife, during her life or widowhood, and at her death or on her marriage to be equally divided among his children, and also directs his estate to be kept together during her life or widowhood, "for the support, maintenance, and education of the family," a son, who has continued to reside on the farm with his mother after the testator's death, is a competent witness for her, in an action brought by her to recover for board, washing, etc., furnished after the testator's death.—McClung's Ex'rs v. Spotswood, 19 Ala. 165.

[f] (Ga. 1875) On the trial of an issue of devisavit vel non, a legatee is a competent witness.—Harris v. Harris, 53 Ga. 678.

[g] (Me. 1825) In an action of trover by an executor for the conversion of goods since the decease of the testator, a legatee under the will is a competent witness, the event of the suit having no tendency to increase or diminish the assets.—Carlisle v. Burley, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 250.

[h] (Md. 1805) Where defendant, in an action of ejectment, claimed under a separate bequest of property, and A. had a similar bequest by the same will, and there was also an ejectment pending against A. for the property so bequeathed to him, brought by the same plaintiff, who is executor of the will, A. is a competent witness for defendant to prove that plaintiff assented to the legacy to defendant.—Cole's Lessee v. Cole, 1 Har. & J. 572.

[i] (Md. 1854) In an action by the administrator under a will, against defendant, to recover two slaves alleged to belong to the estate of his testator, in possession of defendant, plaintiff offered to introduce the evidence of the son of the testator, which was objected to; the following disposal of the personal property of the testator having been made: "I give to my wife, Caty J. Melvin, all my personal property during her life, and to dispose of it as she pleases, after my death among our children." Held, that the interest of the witness to the property was not so certain, direct, and existing as to disqualify him from giving his testimony in the case.—Townshend v. Townshend, 6 Md. 295.

[j] (Mo. 1837) Whether a witness who is both devisee and heir at law is competent to prove a will depends on whether he would take more by the will or as heir.—Graham v. O'Fallon, 4 Mo. 601.

[k] (N. J. 1823) Legatees of specific movable property are not competent witnesses for the executors, in a suit against them for a debt of testatrix, though the executors have paid the specific legacies.—Hedges' Ex'rs v. Boyle, 7 N. J. Law (2 Halst.) 68.

[l] (N. J. 1863) The interest of a residuary legatee under a will which was destroyed by him does not disqualify him as a witness as to its contents, in proceedings to establish the will.—Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. (1 C. E. Green) 401.

[m] (N. Y. 1826) In ejectment against a devisee, a co-devisee, and tenant in common with defendant, not in actual possession, and who, on his voir dire, states that he does not know that he is interested, may be a witness for defendant.—Jackson v. Nelson, 6 Cow. 248.

[n] (N. Y. 1827) A residuary legatee is not a competent witness in favor of the personal representative of the testator.—Campbell v. Tousey, 7 Cow. 64.

[o] (N. Y. 1857) In an action against an executor for services rendered his testatrix, a legatee under the will was offered by defendant as a witness. Held, that the action was not defended for the "immediate" benefit of the witness, so as to exclude her under section 399 of the Code.—Lisk v. Sherman, 25 Barb. 433.

[p] (N. C. 1810) A specific legatee, not entitled to any share of the residuum, is a competent witness to prove the delivery of goods, unless there be a reasonable probability that his legacy must be resorted to for the payment of debts.—Learey's Ex'rs v. Littlejohn, 5 N. C. 406.

[q] (N. C. 1823) A. became the subscribing witness to an instrument executed by his father. On the trial, the handwriting of A. was proved. Defendant offered the deposition of A., taken after his father's death, to prove that the instrument never was delivered. The father of A. had made a will. Held, that the deposition was admissible until plaintiff showed an interest in A.—McKinna v. Hayer, 9 N. C. 422.

[r] (Pa. 1806) A legatee under a will may give evidence to impeach a deed of a testator, if there is no remedy for the recovery of such legacy payable out of the lands of testator.—Shultz's Lessee v. Hahn, 4 Yeates, 299.

[s] (Pa. 1846) A legatee in a will more than 20 years old, which charges his legacy on the land, is a competent witness for the devisees; it appearing that there was other property, and no evidence that he could be called on to refund.—Levers v. Van Buskirk, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 309.

[t] (Pa. 1855) On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, legatees under the alleged will are competent witnesses against its validity.—Landis v. Landis, 1 Grant, Cas. 248.

[u] (Pa. 1874) The testimony of a plaintiff, who was one of the devisees or legatees under a will, is not admissible to affect his co-heirs or co-legatees.—Irwin v. West, 31 Leg. Int. 397.

[v] (S. C. 1847) In an action of trover, by a legatee, to recover from the purchaser the value of a slave bequeathed to him, sold under an execution against the executor, the residuary legatee, under the same will, is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the assent of the executor to the legacy.—Nunn v. Owens, 2 Strob. 101.

§ 361. —— Proceedings to establish will.

[a] (U. S. 1820) The person to whom an estate in fee is given by testator, if she should survive his daughter dying without issue then living, is not a competent witness in support of the will.—Harrison v. Rowan, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141 [3 Wash. C. C. 580].

[b] (Ala. 1848) A legatee is incompetent to testify against the validity of the will, where it is for his interest to defeat it.—Roberts v. Trawick, 13 Ala. 68.

[c] (Ala. 1863) The mere fact that a legacy is bequeathed to one does not render him incompetent to testify against the validity of the will by which the bequest is made.—Leslie v. Sims, 39 Ala. 161.

[d] (Ill. 1875) The execution of a will cannot be proved by the testimony of a devisee.—Crowley v. Crowley, 80 Ill. 469.

[e] (La. 1876) In proceedings to establish a will, a legatee is a competent witness to testify as to any material fact within his knowledge.—Succession of Hall, 28 La. Ann. 57.

[f] (La. 1893) A beneficiary under a holographic will offered for probate is competent to testify as to whether the handwriting is that of deceased, though he cannot be a subscribing witness.—Succession of Morvant, 45 La. Ann. 207, 12 South. 349.

[g] (Mass. 1835) A devisee under a will which may possibly be allowed and take effect if a subsequent one should be set aside is not a competent witness against the latter.—Hall v. Hall, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 373.

[h] (Mich. 1860) A legatee in a will is neither a party to the probate proceeding, nor one "in whose immediate and individual behalf" the proceedings are wholly or in part had, within the meaning of the statute, and is therefore a competent witness to sustain the will.—Lawyer v. Smith, 8 Mich. 411, 77 Am. Dec. 460.

[i] (Mo. 1836) A legatee or devisee, who is also heir at law, is a competent witness to prove a fact to establish the will under which he takes the legacy, where the establishment of the will is clearly against the interest he would have as heir.—Graham v. O'Fallon, 4 Mo. 338.

[j] (Mo. 1839) A devisee in a will, who is also heir at law, is a competent witness to establish the contents of a will lost or destroyed, where the establishment of the will is against his interest as heir.—Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177, 34 Am. Dec. 130.

[k] (N. Y. 1838) A legatee, one of the heirs at law of a testator, may be a witness in support of the will, where his interest is adverse to that of the party calling him.—Clark v. Vorce, 19 Wend. 232.

[l] (Pa. 1875) A devisee is not a competent witness to prove the execution of a married woman's will, made before the passage of the act allowing parties in interest to be witnesses. —Camp v. Stark, *81 Pa. (32 P. F. Smith) 235.

[m] (Tenn. 1891) A beneficiary under a will is a competent witness as to the handwriting of the deceased, though under the statute of wills he could not have been a subscribing witness.—Franklin v. Franklin, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 44, 16 S. W. 557.

§ 362. Heirs, distributees, and next of kin.

[a] A distributee of an estate is not a competent witness where his distributive share will be affected by the event of the suit.

—(Miss. 1841) Carter v. Graves, 7 Miss. (6 How.) 9;

(Mo. 1835) Foster v. Nowlin, 4 Mo. 18.

[b] (U. S. 1820) A co-heir or co-next of kin is not a competent witness for plaintiff, in a suit brought for an account of a trust fund, created for the benefit of all the heirs, or next of kin.—West v. Randall, Fed. Cas. No. 17,424 [2 Mason, 181].

[c] (U. S. 1824) The heirs of a deceased mortgagor are not competent witnesses in a suit in equity by an assignee to redeem, to prove the assignment fraudulent, for that is to establish their own title.—Randall v. Phillips, Fed. Cas. No. 11,555 [3 Mason, 378].

[d] (U. S. 1850) In a proceeding under Act Sept. 18, 1850 (9 Stat. 462), a son of the master from whom it is alleged that the fugitive escaped is not a competent witness, when it appears that such master has since died, and there is no competent evidence before the court as to the disposition of his property; for in such case a son is presumably a party in interest. Nor is it competent to examine the son on his voir dire to show that he has no interest.—Ex parte Garnet, Fed. Cas. No. 5,243.

[e] (Ala. 1844) In an action on a note, if the nominal plaintiff dies, and the suit progresses in the name of the real plaintiff, who is liable for costs, a distributee of the estate of deceased is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bates v. Terrell, 7 Ala. 129.

[ee] (Ala. 1846) In an action of trover against the purchaser from one who is dead, his widow and son are competent witnesses for defendant, it being shown that the estate of their relation is insolvent.—Tatum v. Manning, 9 Ala. 144.

[f] (Ala. 1849) In a trial of the right of property, between one claiming under deed of trust, for the benefit of certain creditors of the debtor, and an attaching creditor, the debtor being dead, and a decree of insolvency and distribution having been passed on his estate, his distributees are prima facie competent witnesses for the claimant.—Scales v. Desha, 16 Ala. 308.

[ff] (Ala. 1849) In a proceeding to try the validity of a will which gives to the widow of the deceased a larger portion of the estate than she would be entitled to under the statute of distribution, her heirs, she being dead, are competent witnesses to defeat, but not to sustain, the will.—Roberts v. Trawick, 17 Ala. 55, 52 Am. Dec. 164.

[g] (Ala. 1852) A distributee of an estate is prima facie an incompetent witness when his testimony tends to increase the funds of the estate, and the presumption of interest is not removed by proof to the court that the estate had been declared insolvent before the witness was sworn, the party against whom the evidence is offered being neither the personal representative nor a creditor of the estate.—McGuire v. Shelby, 20 Ala. 456.

[gg] (Ala. 1859) A distributee, who had come into possession of personal property without any administration, brought trover against a stranger who took the property from him. Held, that a co-distributee was a competent witness for him under Code, § 2302, for the judgment was not evidence for or against the witness in another suit; neither did it determine the right of the intestate's estate.—Cook v. Patterson, 35 Ala. 102.

[ggg] (Ala. 1861) A distributee of the estate of a married woman, deceased during the pendency of an action brought by her trustee for her benefit, is not a competent witness for plaintiff. —McLemore v. Nuckolls, 37 Ala. 662.

[h] (Ala. 1863) A distributee of the estate of a deceased co-maker of a joint note is a competent witness for defendant in an action by an assignee against the other maker.—Broadhead v. Jones, 39 Ala. 96.

[hh] (Conn. 1831) In an action for the diversion of a water course from land to which plaintiff had a title as tenant in dower, she offered one of the heirs at law of her deceased husband as a witness to prove the injury, which heir, on her death, would be entitled to a distributive share in the land. Held, that he was a competent witness, there being no privity in estate between him and plaintiff.—Adams v. Butts, 9 Conn. 79.

[i] (Del. 1860) An heir at law and distributee of the personal estate of a decedent was not a competent witness for his administrator, in an action to recover a share due the deceased on a recognizance.—State v. Connoway, 2 Houst. 206.

[ii] (Ga. 1831) A distributee of the estate of an intestate is not a competent witness for plaintiff in an action against defendant as executor de son tort, as a recovery would increase the residuum for distribution to the amount of the recovery.—Anderson v. Primrose, Dud. 216.

[j] (Ind. 1857) One entitled to a distributive share of an estate is a competent witness for the administrator, in a suit against him to recover money due from the estate.—Swofford v. Gray, 8 Ind. 508.

[jj] (Iowa, 1855) In an action by a widow to recover the rent due for a portion of the homestead, the children are competent witnesses on behalf of plaintiff.—Floyd v. Mosier, 1 Iowa (1 Clarke) 512.

[k] (Ky. 1811) In an action against an administratrix to recover property in her possession and claimed by her as part of the estate, a distributee is not a competent witness for her. —Denny v. Booker, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 427.

[kk] (Ky. 1834) In a suit by an executor on a bond which is his individual property, but given for property of his testator, a distributee is a competent witness for the executor.—Boon v. Nelson's Heirs, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 391.

[l] (Ky. 1845) A father who is heir at law of his son is not a competent witness for his administrator.—Botts' Adm'r v. Fitzpatrick, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 397.

[ll] (La. 1827) In a suit against an administrator, the heir is a good witness to testify against his own interest.—Levesque v. Anderson, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 293.

[m] (La. 1829) A judgment debtor's heir is incompetent for her coheirs sued on the judgment, though she state that, having received her portion in the estate, she is without interest, when she may still be responsible on a final partition if her share have exceeded the disposable portion.—Dangerfield's Ex'x v. Thurston's Heirs, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 232.

[mm] (Md. 1832) In an action on an administration bond, brought for the use of the president and trustees of a school, who claimed the residue of the intestate's estate under the acts of 1719 and 1729, for default of kin within the fifth degree of either consanguinity or affinity, defendant pleaded, in bar, that the intestate left one B., within the fifth degree, who was entitled to the residue. Held, that B. could not be called to prove that she was related to the deceased within such degree, as she had a direct interest in establishing that fact.—State v. Greenwell, 4 Gill & J. 407.

[n] (Md. 1849) A distributee of a testator's estate is not a competent witness for the executor in an action of replevin.—Smith v. Morgan, 8 Gill, 133.

[nn] (Md. 1854) The facts that a witness is a distributee of the estate of his father, and that a suit is pending by plaintiff against the father's trustee, involving the title to which he is called to testify, do not disqualify him.—Stewart v. Spedden, 5 Md. 433.

[o] (Md. 1854) And if the father's estate would be liable upon an implied warranty of title, if plaintiff recovered, such witness would still be competent, for his interest is balanced.—Stewart v. Spedden, 5 Md. 433.

[oo] (Md. 1864) The testimony of the grandchildren of a grantor, tending to set aside the deed for incapacity in the grantor, is not incompetent, on the ground of interest; the objection goes to their credibility, rather than their competency, since their interest is contingent, not certain.—Highberger v. Stiffler, 21 Md. 338, 83 Am. Dec. 593.

[p] (Mass. 1804) In an action by an executor, the heir of the testator is not a competent witness for the executor.—White v. Derby, 1 Mass. 239.

[pp] (Miss. 1844) A son of an intestate is incompetent to prove that his father did not execute a note, on which it is attempted to charge the estate.—McIntyre v. Ledyard, Smedes & M. Ch. 91.

[q] (Miss. 1848) Where a married woman, by bill in chancery, claims certain property, and she dies before the decision of the suit, and the bill is revived in her husband's name, as administrator, the testimony of her children, in support of the bill, taken after her death, will not be competent without proof of the insolvency of her estate, they being interested as distributees thereof.—Dillard v. Wright, 19 Miss. (11 Smedes & M.) 455.

[qq] (Miss. 1856) In an attempt to show the illegitimacy of a party claiming as heir, the deposition of the next of kin, who would be entitled to inherit next after the supposed heir, is not admissible.—Spears v. Burton, 31 Miss. 547.

[r] (Mo. 1850) A distributee of an estate is a competent witness to prove liabilities of the estate.—Richmond v. Cross, 13 Mo. 75.

[rr] (Mo. 1860) The distributee of a solvent estate is a competent witness for the estate, in a suit brought by the administrator to recover a debt due to the intestate.—Perry's Adm'rs v. Maguire, 31 Mo. 287.

[s] (N. H. 1843) In an action by an administrator to recover a debt due the intestate, the son and heir at law of the deceased is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Sawyer v. Tappan, 14 N. H. 352.

[ss] (N. J. 1852) In a suit brought by the administrator of a deceased obligee to foreclose a bond and mortgage, where the defense is payment, a brother of the deceased, who is entitled to a distributive share in his personal estate, is not a competent witness for the administrator.—King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 44.

[t] (N. Y. 1832) Where, in a suit against two defendants, one of them dies after the commencement of the suit, the son of the party dying is not a competent witness, although the death is not suggested on the record.—Shepard v. Ward, 8 Wend. 542.

[tt] (N. Y. 1857) Under St. 1847, c. 450, "requiring compensation for causing death by wrongful act, neglect, or default," the mother of the deceased, being also his sole distributee and next of kin, is a competent witness.—Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432.

[u] (N. C. 1855) In an action on a covenant made by an administrator that a certain slave belonged to him as administrator, the next of kin of the intestate are competent witnesses.—Cowles v. Rowland, 47 N. C. 219.

[uu] (Ohio, 1848) The heirs of a deceased person are not competent witnesses in a suit in which the estate of the decedent is interested, unless it be shown affirmatively that they have no interest in the event of the suit.—Fagin v. Cooley's Adm'r, 17 Ohio, 44.

[v] (Pa. 1821) An heir is competent to testify against coheirs where the witness is not a party to the suit, as to exclude a witness on the ground of interest he must be interested in the event of the suit; and it is not sufficient that he is interested in the question merely, but the verdict must establish something in his favor or against him.—Nass v. Vanswearingen, 7 Serg. & R. 192.

[vv] (Pa. 1855) On the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, heirs at law are competent witnesses against the validity of the will unless it appears that it is to their interest to defeat it.—Landis v. Landis, 1 Grant, Cas. 248.

[w] (Pa. 1859) In an action against the administrator for his refusal to set apart the widow's allowance of the decedent's estate, the heirs of the intestate are competent witnesses.—Hill v. Hill's Adm'r, 32 Pa. (8 Casey) 511.

[ww] (Pa. 1863) In trespass for taking away personal property, where the defense was that it belonged to the estate of an intestate, which defendants represented as administrators, the heirs of the intestate are incompetent witnesses for them.—Buchanan v. Buchanan, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 186.

[x] (S. C. 1827) The heirs of an estate are incompetent witnesses in behalf of the estate in a suit by the executors.—Christie's Ex'rs v. Furman's Ex'rs, Harp. 553.

[xx] (S. C. 1846) In trespass to try titles, the land in dispute was granted to one A. Plaintiff claimed under a conveyance from one who was called A. of B., and defendant contended that the true grantee was A. of C., who was dead. Held, that a brother of A. of C., who, as one of his heirs at law, was entitled to a portion of the land, was a competent witness to prove that A. of C. was the true grantee, being perfectly indifferent as to the result of the trial.—Smith v. Asbill, 2 Rich. Law, 546.

[y] (S. C. 1878) In an action by administrators of a junior judgment creditor against the administratrix of the senior judgment creditor and the administrator of the judgment debtor, to set aside a senior judgment by confession as fraudulent, conversations and transactions which led to the confession of the senior judgment between the judgment debtor and the senior judgment creditor may be proved by a distributee of the judgment debtor.—Roe v. Harrison, 9 S. C. (9 Rich.) 279.

[yy] (Tenn. 1850) A. by will provided that certain slaves should be the property of his wife for life, with remainder to his daughters B. and C. By agreement between the tenant for life and the daughters, a slave was delivered to B. by parol gift, who held the slave 30 years. C. and her husband brought a bill against B. to recover a share of said slave and her increase. Held, that the children of B. were competent witnesses for her in the case, for they could neither gain nor lose by the decision of the case, nor could the decree be given in evidence against or for them in any subsequent proceeding.—Farnsworth v. Lemons, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 140.

[z] (Vt. 1857) In a suit against an intestate estate, the testimony of a married woman, who is an heir at law, is not inadmissible on account of interest.—Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Lincoln's Estate, 29 Vt. (3 Williams) 206.

[zz] (Va. 1837) In an action against an executor's administrator, involving transactions of the executor in his individual capacity, distributees of the first decedent were not incompetent witnesses on the ground that they were interested in preventing the diminution of the individual estate of the executor lest it would hinder the application of the estate he was representing to the payment of legacies, as the interest was too remote and contingent.—Janey v. Blake's Adm'r, 8 Leigh, 88.

[a] (U. S. 1845) On the trial of a case involving the validity of a seizure of goods by United States revenue officers, the officers were competent witnesses, notwithstanding they were liable to an action at the suit of the claimants if reasonable cause for the seizure was not established.—Taylor v. United States, 44 U. S. (3 How.) 197, 11 L. Ed. 559.

[b] (Ga. 1857) In an action for the recovery of land, the defendants in the declaration signed an acknowledgment of "due and legal service of the within writ, and waive the necessity of a copy of it, and service thereof by the sheriff." This acknowledgment was drawn up by the clerk of the court, and signed by the defendants. Held, that the clerk was not incompetent on the ground of interest to testify as a witness for plaintiff, as to his intention to waive the process by such acknowledgment.—Ingram v. Little, 21 Ga. 420.

[c] (Ga. 1860) A clerk of the court is not a competent witness for plaintiff in an action to prove that process was annexed to the declaration when filed. If the process was annexed the clerk would be entitled to a fee therefor at the end of the suit, otherwise not.—Ballard v. Bancroft, 31 Ga. 503.

[d] (Mich. 1843) Where the register of deeds had received a check from complainant in redemption of mortgaged premises, and given him a receipt for the same, as money, on behalf of defendant, who was the purchaser at the mortgage sale, he was a competent witness for either party, as being equally liable to both.—Woodbury v. Lewis, Walk. Ch. 256.

[e] (N. Y. 1825) In an action by a commissioner to make partition of lands, under 1 Rev. Laws, p. 507, for his fees and disbursements, his co-commissioner is not a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the disbursements.—Smyth v. Bradstreet, 5 Cow. 213.

[f] (N. C. 1799) A collector of arrearages, under the act of 1793, is not a competent witness against a defendant, charged with fraudulently buying the property of delinquents to the state.—Treasurer of State v. Nall, 1 N. C. 102.

[g] (S. C. 1827) A commissioner in chancery is a competent witness to prove a sale by himself, and the facts attending it, where the written entry of the sale has been lost.—Gordon v. Saunders, 2 McCord, Eq. 151.

[h] (Tenn. 1840) A register who has made an incorrect registration of a deed is a competent witness to prove such fact in any suit between third parties.—Baldwin v. Marshall, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 116.

[i] (Vt. 1851) In an action against a postmaster for negligence, by reason of which a letter directed to his office, and alleged to have been received there, was lost, the postmaster of the office at which the letter was deposited is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that the letter was forwarded in due course of mail.—Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663.

§ 364. Notaries.

[a] (La. 1839) In an action for a note against a broker who bought it of a notary's clerk, the notary, though employed to protest it, may prove that his clerk purloined and sold it to defendant.—Nicholson v. Patton, 13 La. 213.

[b] (La. 1845) The notary who has protested a note and given notice to the indorsers is not disqualified as a witness to prove such facts because of his contingent liability for negligence in making such protest.—Ducros v. Jacobs, 10 Rob. 453; Follain v. Dupre, 11 Rob. 454.

[c] (La. 1868) The word "maturity" in a note was erased and the word "date" interlined, so that it read "with interest from date," while the mortgage securing the note described the note as bearing interest from maturity. Held, that evidence being admissible to explain the erasure and interlineation in the note, the notary before whom the act was passed was a competent witness for that purpose.—Bernstien v. Ricks, 20 La. Ann. 409.

[d] (S. C. 1831) A notary who omitted to give notice to an indorser is not thereby made an incompetent witness in an action on the note by the holder against the indorser.—Johnson v. Harth, 2 Bailey, 183.

§ 365. Sheriffs, constables, and marshals.

[a] (Ala. 1844) Defendant was arrested at the suit of W., and escaped from the sheriff's custody. W. sued out an ancillary attachment, and levied it upon the same property before levied on at the suit of plaintiff. Held that, as the judgment in the case could not be evidence in an action against the sheriff for the escape, he was a competent witness for defendant, although, to defeat a recovery and subject the property attached to W.'s attachment, would diminish, pro tanto, the sheriff's liability for the escape.—Massey v. Rogan, 6 Ala. 647.

[b] (Ala. 1851) A constable who has collected money on an execution is an incompetent witness, without a release, to prove that he has paid it over to the justice of the peace who issued the execution.—McGrew v. Governor, 19 Ala. 89.

[c] (Ala. 1852) In an action of debt on a claim bond, where the plea of non est factum is interposed, the sheriff is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, without a release, to prove the execution of the bond.—Alexander v. Trask, 20 Ala. 805.

[d] (Ala. 1852) In assumpsit to recover money paid by plaintiff as defendant's surety on his official bond as deputy marshal, the marshal is a competent witness for plaintiff, the money having been paid on a compromise in full discharge of plaintiff's liability on said bond.—Love v. Dargan, 21 Ala. 583.

[e] (Conn. 1810) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the indorser, it appeared that the officer, having an execution against the maker of said note, took property of less value than the debt, and afterwards relinquished it and took the debtor's body. Held, that the officer was not a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the fact of the relinquishment.—Sheldon v. Ackley, 4 Day, 458.

[f] (Conn. 1848) An officer who has levied an execution on land, and in all his proceedings has conformed to the directions of the creditor, is a competent witness for the creditor, in a suit brought by him to recover possession of the land so taken in execution, involving the legality of the proceedings.—Graves v. Merwin, 19 Conn. 96.

[g] (Del. 1855) A constable who has delivered money collected on execution to a third person to pay it to the plaintiff in execution is not a competent witness to testify to such delivery, in an action by said plaintiff against such third person to recover the money. And it makes no difference that the claim against the constable for the money is barred by the statute of limitations.—Hosea v. Kinney, 1 Houst. 141.

[h] (Ill. 1846) On a trial under a distress warrant, for the purpose of determining the amount of rent due, the bailiff who served the distress warrant is not, on that account, incompetent.—Stow v. Gregory, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 575.

[i] (Ind. 1841) In an action on a sheriff's bond for the escape of a debtor, alleged to have been arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum by a constable, and delivered by him, with a copy of the capias ad satisfaciendum to the sheriff, the constable is not a competent witness for the plaintiff to prove the delivery of the copy of the capias ad satisfaciendum to the sheriff.—Linsee v. State, 5 Blackf. 601.

[j] (Ind. 1853) An action was brought for failure in the levy of an execution, against a sheriff, whose duty it was to have delivered it to his successor in office. Held, that the latter was not a competent witness to prove that it was not so delivered.—Hughes v. McClelland, 4 Ind. 92.

[k] (Ky. 1822) On a motion to set aside a sale on execution, on the ground of a small excess, produced by a miscalculation of the officer, the officer is a competent witness against such motion.—Merrill v. Housley, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 277.

[l] (Ky. 1846) A sheriff, who takes a delivery bond, is a competent witness for plaintiff, in an action on the bond.—Kelly v. Lank, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 220.

[m] (Me. 1832) If the purchaser at a sheriff's sale of a right in equity of redemption refuses to receive the deed and complete the purchase, and a bill for specific performance is filed by the judgment creditor alone, the sheriff is a competent witness for plaintiff.—French v. Sturdivant, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 246.

[n] (Mass. 1807) In an action on a prisoner's bond, given for the liberty of the prison yard, the sheriff is a competent witness to prove that the debtor in execution was discharged from prison by the parol direction of the creditor.—Bridge v. McLane, 2 Mass. 520.

[o] (Mass. 1837) Personal property which had been attached upon several writs was sold by consent of the parties, and the proceeds paid over by the officer to the attorney of all the plaintiffs, and the attorney, as such, received the same, as an aggregate sum, and, subsequently, having obtained judgment in the actions, retained the executions in his possession. Held, that in assumpsit by a creditor for his portion of the proceeds, according to the priority of his attachment, the officer would be a competent witness.—Hardy v. Peters, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 370.

[p] (Mass. 1850) An officer, who after serving a writ of replevin allows, as agent of plaintiff, the property replevied to remain in the possession of a third person, taking his agreement to account therefor, is a competent witness for plaintiff in an action brought by the latter on the agreement.—Fiedler v. Smith, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 336.

[q] (N. H. 1837) An officer who on mesne process made a return of an arrest and of a rescue is a competent witness in an action for damage arising from the rescue, to show by whom it was committed.—Buckminster v. Applebee, 8 N. H. 546.

[r] (N. H. 1851) A sheriff may testify respecting facts stated in his return on a writ.—Meserve v. Hicks, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 295.

[rr] (N. J. 1831) A constable is competent to prove the execution of a bail bond taken by himself.—Day v. Hall, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 203.

[s] (N. Y. 1815) A constable who is an inhabitant of one town and pays taxes to support the poor is a competent witness in a suit brought against another town relative to the settlement of a pauper.—Bloodgood v. Overseers of Poor of Jamaica, 12 Johns. 285.

[ss] (N. C. 1805) An execution issued after the death of the execution defendant, and the sheriff levied on certain property and sold it to the plaintiff in execution. The sheriff had previously purchased lands of the defendant in execution, promising to apply the purchase money to the payment of the execution. Held, in a suit by the debtor's administrator against the plaintiff in execution to recover the property, that the sheriff was a competent witness on the ground that he was equally interested in either event in the action.—Williams' Adm'rs v. Bradley, 3 N. C. 363.

[t] (N. C. 1811) An officer who sells property under an execution for A., for whom he bids it in, and as whose agent he executes a bill of sale as an officer to a third person, is a competent witness to prove these facts.—Reid v. Powell, 6 N. C. 53.

[tt] (N. C. 1882) A deputy collected money on account of taxes and deposited the same with A., with instructions to pay it over to the sheriff, which was not done, and the deputy was afterwards required to pay the sum so collected to the sheriff. Held, in suit by the deputy against A.'s administrator, that the sheriff had no interest in the event of the suit, and was a competent witness under Code, § 343.—Allen v. Gilkey, 86 N. C. 64.

[u] (Pa. 1829) The sheriff is competent to prove an indorsement on a writ, "Proceedings stayed," made by an attorney.—Meredith v. Shewall, 1 Pen. & W. 495.

[uu] (Pa. 1850) In an action of trespass for wrongfully attaching and levying on property, the officer who made the attachment complained of is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bowen v. Burk, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 146.

[v] (Pa. 1863) In an action on a sheriff's official bond, the testimony of the sheriff, as taken by the auditor appointed to distribute the proceeds of the sale under the execution which the complaint alleged was defectively served, is inadmissible in behalf of defendant.—Linton v. Commonwealth, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 294.

[vv] (S. C. 1822) Where the agents of the captors libeled the prize in their own names for the captors, and the prize goods were sold by order of an admiralty court, the marshal who made the sale is a competent witness to prove them.—Depeau v. Hyams, 2 McCord, 146.

[w] (S. C. 1828) In an action by a jailer for jail fees, a sheriff is not an incompetent witness merely from his official relation to plaintiff, and in the absence of a showing that he is interested in the event of the suit.—Saxon v. Boyce, 1 Bailey, 66.

[ww] (S. C. 1833) A sheriff who has sold land under an execution is a competent witness, in an action to recover the possession, to prove that before the sale the execution was paid to him.—Hunter v. Stevenson, 1 Hill, 415.

[x] (S. C. 1836) In an action brought by the city council of Charleston to recover the penalty for violating the ordinance requiring badges to be taken out for slaves hired in the city, the city marshal is a competent witness; but even if he were incompetent from interest, a release of his interest to plaintiff would restore his competency.—City of Charleston v. England, 3 Hill, 56.

[xx] (S. C. 1848) A sheriff, after the assignment of a judgment, sold under execution the property covered thereby, and appropriated a part of the proceeds as directed by the assignee, retaining the balance under rule, subject to litigation. The assignor of the judgment, who had afterwards confessed a judgment to A. on debts older than the assignment, was subsequently arrested by him, and enlarged for the bounds by the sheriff, on a bond which might, perhaps, prove insufficient, which bond was assigned to A. The assignor broke the bounds, and left the state. On the trial of an issue between A. and the assignee of the judgment, made up to try the validity of the assignment of the judgment, held, that the sheriff was a competent witness for A.—Maddox v. Williamson, 3 Strob. 294.

[y] (Tenn. 1838) The sheriff is competent to give evidence of his own failure to give notice of the time and place of an execution sale, as required by statute.—Valentine v. Cooley, 19 Tenn. (Meigs) 613, 33 Am. Dec. 166.

[yy] (Vt. 1841) A. bought a quantity of hay at a sheriff's sale, as the property of an execution debtor who had no title, and the owner of the hay recovered the value of it against A., who then brought suit against the execution creditor, claiming on an implied warranty of the title of the debtor. Held, that the officer who sold the hay was an incompetent witness for plaintiff.—Kelsey v. Silver, 13 Vt. 586.

[z] (Va. 1790) In an action against a sheriff for an escape, a succeeding sheriff is not a proper witness to prove the prisoner was not turned over to him, as it goes to exonerate himself.—Johnston v. Macon, 4 Call, 367.

[zz] (Wis. 1849) In an action by a client against his attorney, a sheriff is a competent witness to prove that he collected and paid over to the attorney the money sued for.—Eaton v. Gentle, 1 Chand. 10.

§ 366. Deputies.

[a] (Del. 1855) The deputy of a sheriff who has executed a fieri facias is a competent witness in an action against the sheriff's successor for negligence in executing a second fieri facias in the same case.—State v. Gemmill, 1 Houst. 9.

[b] (Ga. 1860) In an action by a sheriff for the use of execution creditors to recover the price of property sold under the execution, a deputy sheriff who did not make the sale, and who is not a party to the suit, is a competent witness.—Glenn v. Black, 31 Ga. 393.

[c] (Ill. 1841) In an action against a sheriff for malfeasance in office, the deputy of the sheriff is a competent witness against him.—Ryder v. Buckmaster, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 196.

[d] (Ky. 1824) In an action of trespass against a sheriff for levying on property, the deputy sheriff who made the levy was not a competent witness for the sheriff on account of his liability over, if the levy was wrongful.—Harris v. Paynes, 15 Ky. (5 Litt.) 105.

[e] (N. H. 1856) The deputy sheriff, who is liable for neglect to attach a specific chattel, is not a competent witness for the defendant in the action on the writ in which he thus neglected to make the attachment.—Perkins v. Pitman, 34 N. H. 261.

[f] (N. Y. 1810) In an action against a sheriff for the escape of a prisoner under execution who had given a bond for the jail limits, the deputy sheriff and jailer, who had taken the bond for the prisoner, are competent witnesses.—Stewart v. Kip, 5 Johns. 256.

[g] (N. C. 1853) A deputy sheriff, to whom a judgment debtor alleged that he had paid the judgment, is a competent witness to disprove the allegation.—State v. Simpson, 46 N. C. 80.

[h] (Pa. 1841) In an action against a sheriff's sureties to recover the amount of a fieri facias which came to the hands of his deputy for execution, the deputy is a competent witness for defendant, unless it appear that such deputy is liable to his principal for the amount of the writ by reason of negligence or misfeasance.—Juniata Bank v. Beale, 1 Watts & S. 227.

[i] (Pa. 1850) In a suit on the official bond of a sheriff for negligence of his deputy, the deputy, being ultimately liable, is not a competent witness for defendant without a release.—Dorrance's Adm'rs v. Commonwealth, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 160.

[j] (Vt. 1839) A person who has not been appointed to the office of deputy jailer, but with whom the sheriff intrusts the keys of the prison, and who is suffered to take prison bonds for the enlargement of persons committed, and who signs such bonds as a witness, is competent to testify, on the part of plaintiff, in a suit on such bond in the name of the creditor, at least to the execution of the instrument.—Dean v. Swift, 11 Vt. 331.

[k] (Vt. 1839) A person acting as deputy jailer by the consent of the sheriff, who has given no bond, and has not been appointed at his own solicitation, or for his own benefit, but merely as servant, and for the convenience of the sheriff, is competent to testify to the execution of a bond taken by him for the limits.—Clark v. Kidder, 12 Vt. 689.

[l] (Vt. 1843) The default complained of, in a suit against a sheriff, was the neglect of the deputy to arrest a debtor upon execution, and it appeared that the deputy was with the debtor during the life of the execution, and forebore to arrest him, and permitted him to go into a neighboring state upon his promise to return during the life of the execution and settle the amount due, and the sheriff had released the deputy from all liability on account of the alleged default. Held, that the promise of the debtor created in him no existing interest which could exclude him from being called as a witness by defendant.—Hopkinson v. Holmes, 18 Vt. 18.

[m] (Vt.) In an action on a receipt for property attached, a deputy sheriff, to whom the execution was delivered, is a competent witness to testify that he made a seasonable demand of the property of the officer who made the attachment.—(1846) Allen v. Carty, 19 Vt. 65; (1851) Ferris v. Smith, 24 Vt. 27.

[n] (Va. 1835) In an action by the high sheriff, against the purchaser of an insolvent debtor's interest in land sold by the deputy, to recover the purchase money, the deputy is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the facts.—Brent v. Green, 6 Leigh, 16.

[o] (Va. 1838) In an action on an indemnifying bond, brought by a person claiming the property sold, the deputy sheriff who sold the property under the execution, and took the bond, is not a competent witness for defendants to prove that the property belonged to the person against whom the execution issued.—Wilson v. Alexander, 9 Leigh, 459.

§ 367. Military and naval officers.

[a] (Me. 1840) The clerk of a company is competent to explain the meaning of marks, on the company roll, set against the names of the persons enrolled, and in columns headed, "present," "absent," etc.—Robinson v. Folger, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 206.

[b] (Me. 1844) The commanding officer of a militia company is a competent witness on the trial of action against a town for its failure to furnish money in lieu of rations for soldiers present at militia review.—Inhabitants of Williamsburg v. Gilman, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 206.

[c] (Pa. 1809) The commander of a public armed vessel, capturing a prize, is a competent witness in an action by a seaman against the prize agent.—Murray v. Wilson, 1 Bin. 531.

§ 368. Municipal officers.

[a] (U. S. 1809) The superintendent of the city of Washington was a competent witness in an action brought in the name of the former commissioners, although all their rights and duties had devolved on him by force of the statute.—Thornton v. Stoddert, Fed. Cas. No. 14,000 [1 Cranch, C. C. 534].

[b] (Conn. 1824) In a suit by a town for the maintenance of a bastard child, a selectman who signed the complaint is a competent witness for plaintiffs.—Fuller v. Town of Hampton, 5 Conn. 416.

[c] (Ill. 1867) In a suit in the name of the people for the benefit of a county on the county treasurer's bond, a defaulting county collector is not competent to prove payments by him in his official capacity to the treasurer.—Frink v. People, 43 Ill. 27.

[d] (Me. 1830) In an action by a town treasurer on a collector's bond, given to his predecessor in office, such predecessor is not admissible, as a witness for plaintiff, to disprove the payment of money for which the collector held his receipt.—Pingree v. Warren, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 457.

[e] (Me. 1830) In an action for contribution, between the sureties of a collector of taxes, for money paid by one of them without suit, the town treasurer is a competent witness to prove the collector's delinquency.—Nason v. Read, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 22.

[f] (N. H. 1844) In a suit by a town against a tax collector to recover money officially received by him, the treasurer who settled with the collector and receipted for the money is a competent witness to show the receipt to have been given by a mistake occurring in the settlement.—Town of Grafton v. Follansbee, 16 N. H. 450, 41 Am. Dec. 736.

[g] (N. J. 1808) It is no objection to a witness that he is a member of a board of chosen freeholders of the county, and that the suit is prosecuted at the instance of the board, and notwithstanding the board has advanced money to carry on the suit.—Schank v. Stevenson, 2 N. J. Law (1 Penning.) 387.

[h] (N. J. 1844) In a suit brought by the board of chosen freeholders of a county, the collector of such county is a competent witness in the cause.—Peck v. Essex County, 20 N. J. Law (Spencer) 457.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) In an action against the corporation of the city of New York by its corporate name of "the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of New York," one of the aldermen is a competent witness for defendants both at common law and under the Code.—Pack v. City of New York, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 489.

[j] (N. C. 1854) The intendant of police of an incorporated town, who issues a warrant against a slave for a penalty for violating a town ordinance, which warrant is in the name of the commissioners of the town, as plaintiffs, of whom he is also one, is a competent witness to prove the disorderly conduct of such slave, alleged as a breach of such ordinance.—Town of Washington v. Frank, 46 N. C. 436.

[k] (Ohio, 1834) Trustees of a township, sued in their official capacity, may be witnesses, if they have no individual interest.—Stewart v. Saybrook Tp., Wright, 374.

[l] (Pa. 1825) A commissioner who is taxable, and has paid his taxes, is a competent witness for the township, under Act April 2, 1822, in a suit commenced prior to the act.—McFarland v. Moyamensing Tp., 12 Serg. & R. 297.

[m] (Pa. 1851) In an action by a board of county commissioners against the surety on a tax collector's bond, a former commissioner is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Fritz v. Montgomery County, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 130.

[n] (S. C. 1828) In an action against a tax collector for not paying over the poor tax, the clerk of the commissioners of the poor is a competent witness to prove that he had not at any time received from defendant any moneys for the use of the poor.—State v. Davidson, 1 Bailey, 35.

[o] (Vt. 1849) Where a suit is commenced and prosecuted in favor of a town, it is no objection to the competency of a witness, offered on the part of plaintiff, that he is an inhabitant and taxpayer of the town, and is one of the selectmen of the town, and, in connection with the other selectmen and the town agent, directed the suit to be commenced. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court will presume the suit to have been duly authorized by the town.—Town of Peacham v. Carter, 21 Vt. 515.

§ 369. School officers.

[a] (Ill. 1859) A school trustee is a competent witness to prove the loss of a treasurer's bond.—Holbrook v. Trustees of Schools of Tp. 33, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 539.

[b] (Ill. 1860) The school treasurer has a commission on all funds passing through his hands; therefore he is interested and incompetent in a suit, the money recovered in which will pass through his hands.—Marks v. Butler, 24 Ill. 567.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) Where a suit is brought in the name of a school district, on a note made payable to certain persons by name, as school directors, and their successors in office, the fact that the note is made payable to them and others as directors, it not appearing that they have any legal interest in the note, does not render them incompetent as witnesses.—School Dist. No. 2 of Madison Tp. v. Rogers, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 316.

[d] (La. 1847) A school commissioner, waiving his exemption, may, though objected to, be sworn; but on declaring he is interested will be discharged.—Edwards v. Farrar, 2 La. Ann. 307.

[e] (Me. 1840) A recovery in an action against a school district for the price of building a schoolhouse, alleged to have been built in pursuance of a contract with a committee of the district, does not imply any fault on their part by reason of which they would be liable to the district, nor would a verdict be evidence against them in an action for mismanagement; they are, therefore, competent witnesses for the district.—Hill v. School Dist. No. 2 in Millburn, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 316.

[f] (Mass. 1833) A prudential committee of a school district is competent to testify to a contract made in that capacity, in an action against the district upon such contract.—Allen v. School Dist. No. 2 in Westport, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 35.

[g] (Ohio, 1844) In an action by a township against an ex-treasurer of the township school fund, his successor is not a competent witness for the township to show that he received less money of him than he receipted for to him on settlement.—State v. Williams, 13 Ohio, 495.

[h] (Pa. 1868) In an action by a school district against a person to recover money paid to procure a substitute, held that testimony of the school directors was inadmissible to prove his contract to repay, they being liable to the district for unauthorized payments. — Longswamp School Dist. v. Trexler, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 141.

§ 370. Surveyors.

[a] (Ill. 1847) In a proceeding against a person for obstructing a public road, the supervisor is a competent witness.—Ferris v. Ward, 9 Ill. (4 Gilman) 499.

[b] (Mass. 1845) A surveyor of highways is a competent witness for the town, in an action against the town to recover damages for an injury received by reason of a defect or want of repair in a highway within the surveyor's district, he not being liable to the town for the amount of the damages that may be recovered in such action.—White v. Inhabitants of Phillipston, 51 Mass. (10 Metc.) 108.

[c] (N. H. 1854) A surveyor of highways who has caused all the taxes on the list to be worked out is a competent witness for the town, without a release, in an action against it to recover for injuries occasioned by defects in a highway within the limits of the district, where the injury was received after he had so expended such taxes.—Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 94.

[d] (Vt. 1834) In a suit against a town for damages sustained for want of repairs in a bridge, the surveyor of highways for the district is not a competent witness for the town, nor will a release by a selectman, nor, it seems, by the selectmen, qualify him.—Yuran v. Inhabitants of Randolph, 6 Vt. 369.

[e] (Vt. 1849) In a suit, brought by a town against an individual, to recover a sum of money paid by the selectmen to him for damages which he claimed to have sustained by reason of the want of repair of a highway in the town, and in which plaintiffs claimed to recover, on the ground that the payment was procured by defendant wholly by fraud, the highway surveyor of the district in which the injury was alleged by defendant to have been sustained is a competent witness on the part of the town. —Town of Peacham v. Carter, 21 Vt. 515.

[f] (Vt. 1851) In an action against a town, brought to recover damages occasioned by an alleged insufficiency of the public highway, one who was, at the commencement of the year during which the injury occurred, duly elected highway surveyor of the district in which the highway was situated, and received from the selectmen a tax bill, in usual form, and acted as highway surveyor for a time, and then, previous to the occurring of the alleged injury, refused longer to act as highway surveyor, and resigned, and returned to the selectmen of the town his tax bill, which they accepted, and who did not afterwards act as highway surveyor, is not thereby rendered incompetent as a witness for the town.—Battey v. Town of Duxbury, 23 Vt. 714.

[g] (Vt. 1851) A highway surveyor can only be held incompetent as a witness for the town on the ground that he would be liable to the town if plaintiff should succeed; but no suit could be maintained against him by the town after the selectmen had received from him his tax bill and warrant, with the mutual intention to release him from further responsibility, even if it should be held that he had strictly, under the statute, no right to resign.—Battey v. Town of Duxbury, 23 Vt. 714.

[b] (U. S. 1809) A stockholder in a company which itself owns stock in plaintiff company is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Fed. Cas. No. 851 [1 Cranch, C. C. 575].

[c] (Cal. 1862) In cases of corporations, the exception to the rule forbidding interested parties to testify admits only keepers of corporate documents. Members acting for the corporation in ordinary matters of business are incompetent. —Blen v. Bear River & A. Water & Mining Co., 20 Cal. 602, 81 Am. Dec. 132.

[d] (Ill. 1851) Notwithstanding the rule that the testimony of a stockholder is excluded as that of an interested party in a suit by or against a corporation, yet from reasons of convenience and necessity a stockholder who had charge of the minutes of the commissioners appointed to organize the company is a competent witness to identify them.—Ryder v. Alton & S. R. Co., 13 Ill. (3 Peck) 516.

[e] (Ill. 1861) Stockholders in a corporation are not competent witnesses for the company, and can be made so only by an assignment of their stock.—Thrasher v. Pike County R. Co., 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 393.

[f] (Ind. 1861) A corporator or stockholder is a competent witness to prove the account of the corporation.—Cooper v. Sisters of Providence of St. Mary's of the Woods, 16 Ind. 164.

[g] (La. 1841) A corporation cannot offer its stockholders as witnesses, though the opposite party may.—Hart v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 1 Rob. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 689.

[h] (Md. 1827) An interested corporator is a competent witness to prove himself either to be or to have been the depositary of the muniments of his corporation. — Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Har. & G. 324.

[i] (Mass. 1839) In an action against a manufacturing corporation to recover a debt, it appeared that the annual notice published by the corporation, next before the debt was contracted, did not certify the amount both of their debts and of their capital stock, as required by St. 1829, c. 53, but only of their debts. Held, that one who was a member of the corporation when the debt was contracted, but had ceased to be such when the action was tried, was individually liable for the debt, and, consequently, was not a competent witness for the corporation.—Proprietors of Milldam Foundry v. Hovey, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 417.

[j] (Mass. 1844) A clerk of a corporation is a competent witness to identify its books and verify its records, though he is a member of the corporation, and interested in the suit in which those books and records are used as evidence.—Wiggin v. Freewill Baptist Church in Lowell, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 301.

[k] (Mich. 1843) A stockholder in a corporation, who is, as such, liable individually for its debts, is a competent witness for plaintiff, in a suit against the corporation; his interest being against plaintiff, and not being a party to the suit by virtue of his being such stockholder. —Hasey v. White Pigeon Beet Sugar Co., 1 Doug. 193.

[l] (N. H. 1855) Where the members of a corporation are made personally liable for the corporate debts in certain events, the liability is too uncertain and contingent to render a member who has assigned his stock incompetent as a witness for the corporation, unless it is shown that all the facts exist which the statute requires to render his liability fixed and certain. —Manchester Bank v. White, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 456.

[m] (N. H. 1856) It is no sufficient ground for excluding a witness from testifying for a corporation that he may be liable, under the statute, for the debts of the corporation on account of his having been a stockholder therein. —White Mountains R. Co. v. Eastman, 34 N. H. 124.

[n] (N. Y. 1843) One who is a stockholder of the Galena Company, and liable for its debts, under Laws 1837, p. 455, cannot be a witness in a suit brought to charge the defendant as a co-stockholder.—Pierce v. Kearney, 5 Hill, 82.

[o] (Pa. 1842) A stockholder in a company is a competent witness in an ejectment by the company to prove service of a notice on defendant's agent, and the admission of such person that he was agent, and that notice was served.—Union Canal Co. v. Loyd, 4 Watts & S. 393.

[p] (Pa. 1853) A stockholder of a corporation is not a competent witness for plaintiff, in a suit against a director, who, if judgment be rendered against him, can have no recourse against the corporation.—Hill v. Frazier, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 320.

[q] (Pa. 1862) Upon the question of the acceptance, by the company, of an amendment to the charter, a stockholder who had paid up his stock in full was a competent witness for plaintiffs to prove the acceptance, not having any interest in the result of the suit, nor in the fund to which the proceeds were to go, and the company being insolvent.—Fell v. McHenry, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 41.

[r] (Tenn. 1826) In questions respecting the rights and immunities of a corporation, individuals not personally interested, though members, are competent witnesses for the corporation; but where they have a private or individual interest, they are incompetent.—City of Jonesborough v. McKee, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 167.

§ 372. — Particular corporations.

[a] A stockholder in a railroad corporation is a competent witness for the company.

—(Ind. 1854) Newcastle & R. R. Co. v. Brumback, 5 Ind. 543; (1855) New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Gillespy, 7 Ind. 245.

[b] (Ala. 1848) In an action against a sheriff for failing to return an attachment which he had levied on slaves, the stockholder of a bank was a competent witness for the sheriff to prove a mortgage and sale of the slaves to the bank previous to the levy of the attachment.—Governor v. Baker, 14 Ala. 652.

[c] (Ind. 1855) A stockholder in a turnpike company is a competent witness for the company.—Unthank v. Henry County Turnpike Co., 6 Ind. 125.

[d] (Ky. 1838) Members of a turnpike corporation are not, in general, incompetent witnesses to prove the signature of a party to an agreement to take and pay for shares in the company.—Danville, L. & N. Turnpike Road Co. v. Burdett, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 99.

[e] (Ky. 1868) A stockholder in a bank is a competent witness in behalf of the bank, and however his interest might be regarded as affecting his credit, his deposition is admissible, especially where he is shown to have been indemnified against loss by the result of a suit by the bank.—Petitt v. First Nat. Bank, 67 Ky. (4 Bush) 334.

[f] (Mass. 1843) A note was made by a firm, payable to A., B., and C., and a corporation, joint owners of a vessel. The promisees assigned the note to A. toward his share of the earnings of the vessel. The corporation assigned all its property, under the insolvent law, for the benefit of all its creditors, one of which creditors was a bank. A suit against said firm was brought on said note, in the name of all the promisees, for the benefit of A. Held, that a stockholder in the bank, which was a creditor of said corporation, was a competent witness for plaintiffs.—Hathaway v. Crocker, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 262.

[g] (N. Y. 1852) A stockholder in a bank is not a party for whose immediate benefit an action by it is prosecuted, and he may testify in its behalf.—Bank of Lansingburg v. McKie, 7 How. Prac. 360.

[h] (N. Y. 1856) The stockholders of an incorporated bank, however few in number, are admissible as witnesses on behalf of the corporation.—New York & V. State Stock Bank v. Gibson, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 574.

[i] (N. C. 1856) A stockholder in a bank is not a competent witness to prove a debt due to the bank.—Stevenson v. Simmons, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, Law) 12.

[j] (Pa. 1796) A stockholder in a bank is an incompetent witness to prove notice, in an action by the bank against the indorser of a note. —Bank of North America v. Wycoff, 4 Dall. 151, 1 L. Ed. 778.

[k] (Pa. 1855) The contingent liability to the noteholders of a bank of one who has been a stockholder is too remote an interest to disqualify him from testifying in favor of the bank, unless there is some evidence of the inability of the institution to meet its engagements.—Meighen v. Bank, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 288.

[l] (Vt. 1847) Depositions of stockholders in a banking corporation are inadmissible as evidence in favor of the corporation.—Porter v. Bank of Rutland, 19 Vt. 410.

§ 373. Officer, director, or trustee of corporation.

[a] (Ala. 1846) Under the act of 1845, which declares defendants in execution incompetent as witnesses in a claim, interposed by a third person on the levy, a trustee of a corporation is, notwithstanding, a competent witness for the claimant, although the levy is made under a fi. fa. against the corporation.—Brumby v. Langdon, 10 Ala. 747.

[b] (Ala. 1848) In an action against a sheriff for failing to return an attachment which he had levied on slaves, the president of a bank was a competent witness for the sheriff to prove a mortgage and sale of the slaves to the bank previous to the levy of the attachment.—Governor v. Baker, 14 Ala. 652.

[c] (Cal. 1860) One allowing himself to be represented on the books of a water company as a stockholder, and holding the office of secretary, which is open only to stockholders, is an incompetent witness for the company, although the stock was the property of other parties.—Wolf v. St. Louis Independent Water Co., 15 Cal. 319.

[d] (Cal. 1862) In a suit against a corporation, on a contract for a purchase of land, the president of the company is incompetent to testify in its behalf.—Blen v. Bear River & A. Water & Mining Co., 20 Cal. 602, 81 Am. Dec. 132.

[e] (Conn. 1836) A person who was a trustee of a bank under the charter, but who was neither a depositor nor stockholder therein, and who had, in fact, no interest in the event of the suit, was a competent witness for the institution in a suit to which it was a party.—Middletown Sav. Bank v. Bates, 11 Conn. 519.

[f] (Conn. 1844) In September, 1839, A., the president, and B., the treasurer, of a railroad company, acting as the agents of the corporation, purchased of C., with a view to obtain a supply of gravel for the road, a piece of land lying near it, for the sum of $24,788, and without authority took a deed thereof to themselves. They paid $88 of the purchase money from the funds of the corporation, and gave to C. their individual note for the balance. The company paid the interest on such note until the 23d of February, 1841, when A. and B., by direction of the company, sold a part of such land for a sum sufficient to pay the note and leave in their hands the sum of $599, which sum, together with the legal title to the unsold part of the land, they retained. Held, in an action against the corporation and A. and B. by the state commissioners, to recover from A. and B. the property and funds so retained by them to satisfy notes of the corporation, approved by them, issued under Act 1839 to aid in construction of the road, payment of which at maturity the corporation had refused, that A. with his consent was a competent witness for plaintiffs, though a stockholder, since his corporate interest was overbalanced by his private interest in the controversy.—Church v. Sterling, 16 Conn. 388.

[g] (Del. 1879) The secretary of a corporation who keeps its books is not a competent witness on its behalf in a case in which he is counsel for the corporation.—Bancroft v. Wilmington Conference Academy, 5 Houst. 577.

[h] (Ill. 1856) The secretary of a corporation, though a stockholder, is from the necessity of the case competent to identify the books and records of the company, and such books are competent evidence of their contents.—Peake v. Wabash R. Co., 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 88.

[i] (Me. 1854) The trustees of a ministerial fund are competent witnesses in an action brought in the name of the corporation, when they are not personally named as parties to the suit.—Trustees of Ministerial & School Fund in Andover v. Reed, 39 Me. 41.

[j] (Me. 1855) A stockholder in a corporation is competent to testify to his official acts as treasurer, in an action to which the corporation is a party.—York & C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 40 Me. 447.

[k] (Md. 1860) The president and secretary of an insurance company, not being stockholders therein, are competent witnesses for the company, in an action on a policy executed by the company.—National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289.

[l] (Mass. 1851) A stockholder and director in a manufacturing corporation, which has failed to comply with the provisions of Rev. St. c. 38, §§ 16, 17, 19, 22, and who is therefore individually liable for its debts, is an incompetent witness in favor of the corporation, in an action brought against it by one claiming to be a stockholder, to recover the value of shares withheld by it from him.—Wyman v. American Powder Co., 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 168.

[m] (Ohio, 1843) The secretary of a corporation who is also a stockholder therein is not a competent witness in behalf of the corporation because he is interested.—Imbush v. Mechanics' & Traders' Bank, 1 Ohio Dec. 8.

[n] (Pa. 1839) In an action brought by the trustees of a company, incorporated for the purpose of embanking certain meadows, against one of the corporators, to recover the amount of a tax assessed against him for the support of the embankment, one of the trustees, who is also a corporator, is not a competent witness to prove that a notice required to be given to the members to work out their assessments, before bringing suit to recover the tax, was given to defendant.—Crozer v. Leland, 4 Whart. 12.

[o] (Pa. 1854) The president of the trustees of an insurance company, who states that he was a salaried officer of the company, but not a member, nor interested in the suit, and that he gave the order for the reinsurance forming the cause of action, is not incompetent to testify on the ground of interest.—Philadelphia Ins. Co. v. Washington Ins. Co., 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 250.

§ 374. —— Cashier of bank.

[a] (U. S. 1829) In an action by a bank for money overdrawn, the cashier is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bank of Alexandria v.

McCrea, Fed. Cas. No. 849 [3 Cranch, C. C. 649].

[b] (Ga. 1849) The cashier of the Central Bank is not a competent witness to prove the contents of the books of the bank, not within his own knowledge, except in those cases in which the bank is a party, under the ninth section of the amendatory act of the charter of the bank.—Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365.

[c] (La. 1841) A cashier, as agent of a bank to collect a claim, may prove the circumstances of its payment, and how, by whom, and for what purpose, such payment was made. So, generally, he is competent for the bank in a matter within the scope of his employment.—Williams v. Bank of Louisiana, 17 La. 378.

[d] (La. 1849) A cashier of a bank is a competent witness for the bank in a matter within the scope of his employment.—Union Bank v. Meeker, 4 La. Ann. 189, 50 Am. Dec. 559.

[e] (Pa. 1848) In a sci. fa. against a bank, as the garnishee of a depositor, the cashier is a competent witness for the bank, although the money was paid out on the checks of the principal defendant by his direction.—Jackson v. Bank of United States, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 61.

[f] (S. C. 1847) On a bill to foreclose a mortgage which the cashier of the mortgagee bank had, by mistake, satisfied on the record in the register's office, under his own seal, the cashier is a competent witness to explain the mistake.—Bank of State v. Rose, 1 Strob. Eq. 257.

§ 375. Member or officer of association or society.

[a] (Ala. 1861) A member of the society of freemasons is a competent witness for the society, which is a charitable organization.—Burdine v. Grand Lodge of Alabama, 37 Ala. 478.

[b] (Ark. 1854) The corporators of the Clarksville Institute are mere trustees in aid of a benevolent object, and as such have no pecuniary or personal interest in the property and assets belonging to it, which should exclude them from giving testimony, when they are a party to the record.—Hershy v. Clarksville Institute, 15 Ark. 128.

[c] (Ark. 1866) In an action where a masonic fraternity is defendant, a party who is a mason and one of the trustees of the institution, but without any personal or pecuniary interest in the controversy, is a competent witness for defendant.—Trapnall v. Burton, 24 Ark. 371.

[d] (Ill. 1863) Where the corporators of a cemetery association were to be reimbursed for their outlays in purchasing and improving the grounds, and also expected to realize profits from the sale of lots, they were incompetent to testify in behalf of the corporation in a suit brought against it for labor and materials employed in building a vault.—Springdale Cemetery Ass'n v. Smith, 32 Ill. 252.

[e] (Ill. 1890) A member in a benefit society, liable to an assessment to pay a benefit, is not thereby rendered incompetent as a witness for the society in an action by the beneficiary.—Sherret v. Royal Clan of the Order of Scottish Clans, 37 Ill. App. 446.

[f] (Miss. 1845) In a suit against some of the members of an unincorporated company, one of the members thereof is a competent witness.—Lake v. Munford, 12 Miss. (4 Smedes & M.) 312.

[g] (Pa. 1855) In mandamus against a beneficial society to compel the restoration of a member illegally expelled, a member of the society is incompetent as a witness for defendants (1) because the fund, to which the members would have to look for aid, in case of sickness, would be diminished by the relator's recovery; and (2) because it seems the members may be compelled in equity to raise a fund for the payment of the relator's damages.—Marion Ben. Soc. v. Commonwealth, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 82.

[h] (Vt. 1845) If an action be brought against the agent of a voluntary association by one with whom he contracted for the benefit of the association, to recover for services rendered in pursuance of such contract, the individual members of the association are competent witnesses for defendant; their interest being equally balanced.—Abbott v. Cobb, 17 Vt. 593.

§ 376. Member or officer of religious society.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 518.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 456.

[a] A member of a religious or charitable corporation, having no individual interest, is a competent witness where such corporation is a party.

—(Me. 1830) Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341;

(Ohio, 1831) Methodist Episcopal Church v. Wood, 5 Ohio (5 Ham.) 283.

[aa] (U. S. 1870) The trustees of a religious corporation are competent witnesses for the corporation in a suit in the court of claims, notwithstanding Act June 25, 1868, § 4 (15 Stat. 75), which prohibits "claimants" and "persons interested" from testifying against the government.—Hebrew Congregation Benai Berith Jacob v. United States, 6 Ct. Cl. 241.

[b] (Ky. 1847) In suit between the members of a church and other parties, who are litigating the right to the exclusive use of the church, one of the members of the church, who is himself no party to the suit, is a competent witness.—Hadden v. Chorn, 47 Ky. (8 B. Mon.) 70.

[c] (Me. 1829) The members of a society of shakers are competent witnesses, without releases, in any suit in which the deacons are parties, not directly concerning the common property.—Richardson v. Freeman, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 57.

[d] (Mass. 1811) Where a corporation, created for pious and charitable uses, was made the residuary legatees in a will, its members were competent as witnesses on the question of the sanity of the testator, which was at issue between the executors and the heirs at law.—Nason v. Thatcher, 7 Mass. 398.

[e] (Mass. 1842) The members of an association entered into for religious purposes, without any lay organization, but solely under the advice of the ministers and elders of their denomination, and who maintain public worship, are competent witnesses in a suit brought by or against such association.—Christian Society in Plymouth v. Macomber, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 155.

[f] (N. H. 1833) The members of a parish are competent witnesses for the parish.—Congregational Soc. in Troy v. Perry, 6 N. H. 164, 25 Am. Dec. 455.

[g] (N. Y. 1811) In a penal action against a member of a religious society or sect called "Shakers," a member of that society is a competent witness, although the members hold all things in common, and have a partnership interest in all their concerns, as a religious sect.—Wells v. Lane, 8 Johns. 462.

[h] (Pa. 1841) Merely being one of a church council, without any concern in a suit brought for the use of the church, or personal interest in the result, does not disqualify a witness.—Shortz v. Unangst, 3 Watts & S. 45.

[i] (Pa. 1851) Members of a church, who have no direct personal interest in the matter, are competent witnesses in a suit in which the church or corporation is a party.—Davies v. Morris, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 205.

[j] (Pa. 1870) Trustees of a charitable or religious corporation, if they have no personal or private interest in the property of the corporation, are competent witnesses in an action, notwithstanding the corporation is a party.—Sorg v. First German Evangelical St. Paul's Congregation, 63 Pa. (13 P. F. Smith) 156.

[k] (Vt. 1842) Members of a society organized with corporate powers, under the statute for the support of the gospel, are not competent witnesses, at common law, for the corporation; and it is not a case within the act passed in 1816, making corporators witnesses in certain cases.—Stone v. Congregational Soc. of East Berkshire, 14 Vt. 86.

[l] (Vt. 1846) A committee of a religious society executed a lease in behalf of the society, and as their agents, and the society subsequently brought an action against the tenant. Held, that one of the committee, who had ceased to be a member of the society, was not incompetent as a witness for plaintiffs by reason of his having executed the lease on the part and behalf of the society.—Congregational Soc. in Newport v. Walker, 18 Vt. 600.

§ 377. Inhabitant or citizen of municipality or state.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 519.

[a] Members of public corporations are competent witnesses in suits in which the corporation is a party and interested, where they have no individual interest.

—(U. S. 1809) Virginia v. Evans, Fed. Cas. No. 16,969 [1 Cranch, C. C. 581]; (1846) Hunter v. Marlboro, Fed. Cas. No. 6,908 [2 Woodb. & M. 168];

(Ala. 1835) Town of Tuskaloosa v. Wright, 2 Port. 230;

(Conn. 1790) Smith v. Barber, 1 Root, 207; (1796) Town of Salisbury v. Town of Harwinton, 2 Root, 435;

(Ky. 1835) City of Maysville v. Shultz, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 10;

(Mo. 1844) Barada v. Inhabitants of Carondelet, 8 Mo. 644;

(N. J. 1793) Schenck v. Corshen County Collector, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 189; (1818) Overseers of Poor of Orange Tp. v. Overseers of Poor of Springfield Tp., 4 N. J. Law (1 Southard) 186; (1819) Roll v. Maxwell, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 493;

(N. C. 1835) Jackson v. Commissioners of Town of Hillsborough, 18 N. C. 177;

(Ohio, 1831) Methodist Church v. Wood, Wright, 12;

(Tenn. 1826) City of Jonesborough v. McKee, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 167; (1859) Ezell v. Giles County Justices, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 583;

(Tex. 1848) Kemper v. Victoria Corp., 3 Tex. 135; (1851) Lewis v. City of San Antonio, 7 Tex. 288; (Vt. 1814) Pond v. Sage, 1 D. Chip. 250.

[b] (Ill. 1841) The interest of a member of a municipal corporation and a taxpayer is too remote to render him incompetent to testify for the corporation, in an action by the corporation to recover taxes or a penalty imposed by the corporation.—Sawyer v. City of Alton, 4 Ill. (3 Scam.) 127.

[c] (Me. 1843) Where a party sets up a common right in all the inhabitants of a town, an inhabitant of such town is not a competent witness to establish the right.—Moore v. Griffin, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 350.

[d] (Mass. 1817) An inhabitant of another state is a competent witness in an action to which such state is a party.—State of Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296.

[e] (Mass. 1825) In an action of trespass by a grantee of a town of a portion of its sea flats, against one of the inhabitants, for taking clams from a bed claimed by plaintiff to be included in his grant, other inhabitants of the town are not competent witnesses to prove a custom of the inhabitants to take clams from this bed, since a verdict for defendant would in effect inure to their benefit, and they are therefore interested in the action.—Lufkin v. Haskell, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 356.

[f] (Mass. 1847) When the right of all the inhabitants of a town to fish in a certain pond and creek is tried on the general issue, in a suit between two of them, the other inhabitants are competent witnesses to prove such right, although defendant files a specification of defense, in which he sets forth such right; aliter, before St. 1836, c. 273, when such right was put in issue on a special plea in bar.—Look v. Bradley, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 369.

[g] (Miss. 1856) An inhabitant and taxpayer of a municipal corporation is a competent witness for the corporation.—Mann v. Yazoo City, 31 Miss. 574.

[h] (N. Y. 1807) An inhabitant of a place is incompetent to prove a right of fishery common in all the inhabitants of the place; but he is a competent witness for a party denying such right.—Jacobson v. Fountain, 2 Johns. 170.

[i] (N. Y. 1826) An inhabitant of a particular place is not a competent witness to prove a prescriptive right, common to all the inhabitants of that place; but he would be competent to prove a public right of fishery in all the citizens of the state.—Gould v. James, 6 Cow. 369.

[j] (N. Y. 1834) In a suit by a mere municipal corporation, as a village, the interest of a corporator is not such as to disqualify him as a witness in behalf of the corporation; and an agent or trustee for such corporation has no greater interest than any other corporator.—Trustees of Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80.

[k] (N. Y. 1850) The mere fact that a party is a corporator is not sufficient at common law to exclude him as a witness in a suit by or against a public corporation, unless it appears that he has some further personal interest in the suit.—Pack v. City of New York, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 489.

[l] (Pa. 1843) In an action to which the school directors are a party, a rated inhabitant of the district is a competent witness under the statute of 1840.—Barnet v. School Directors, 6 Watts & S. 46.

[m] (Vt. 1816) An inhabitant of a town, who is rated and taxed in that town, cannot testify in an action between that town and another to compel the support of a pauper.—Chester v. Rockingham, Brayton, 239.

(a) PRINCIPAL AND EMPLOYÉS OR REPRESENTATIVES IN GENERAL.

PRINCIPAL, § 378.
REPRESENTATIVES IN GENERAL, § 379.
EMPLOYÉS, § 380.
MASTER AND CREW OF VESSEL, § 381.
CAPTAIN AND PILOT OR HELMSMAN OF VESSEL, § 382.
STEVEDORE, § 383.

§ 378. Principal.

[a] (Ala. 1848) The principal is not a competent witness for the agent, in a suit brought by him against an attorney for the recovery of a debt due the principal which the agent had placed in the attorney's hands for collection, as the record would be evidence for the principal, of the amount recovered, in a suit by him against the agent.—Wallace v. Peck, 12 Ala. 768.

[b] (Ill. 1865) In an action of replevin by the agent of the mortgagee of personal property levied upon under execution by a creditor of the agent as his property, the mortgagee is not, as between the agent and the creditor, a competent witness for the former. A recovery by the agent is, in effect, a recovery by the mortgagee, and he will not be permitted to testify in his own favor.—Sherman v. Bruce, 37 Ill. 39.

[c] (La. 1842) One for whom articles were ordered cannot testify for defendant who ordered them.—Leeds v. Caldwell, 1 Rob. 256.

[d] (Md. 1859) A witness whose title is set up by his agent, a defendant in replevin, is incompetent for defendant.—Russell v. McKenzie, 13 Md. 560.

[e] (N. Y. 1842) In replevin by the owner of goods against the sheriff, one in whose name the goods were purchased by an agent fraudulently representing himself authorized is a competent witness, though the fraudulent agent had given notes in his name.—Cutter v. Rathbun, 3 Hill, 577.

[f] (Pa. 1811) In a suit by a county treasurer against an agent for nonpayment of his principal's taxes, the principal is not a competent witness.—Hayes v. Grier, 4 Bin. 80.

[g] (Pa. 1823) The principal is a competent witness for the agent who is sued for money had and received on account of his principal; the ground of suit being that there is nothing due the principal.—Seidel v. Peckworth, 10 Serg. & R. 442.

[h] (Tenn. 1850) On the issue whether defendant was acting as agent in making the sale, in an action for fraud in the sale of an execution, the alleged principal is a competent witness for defendant.—Lipscomb v. Kitrell, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 256.

§ 379. Representatives in general.

[a] An agent may be a witness for his principal and a servant for his master without a release.

—(Ala. 1840) Stringfellow v. Mariott, 1 Ala. 573;

(Ind. 1838) Morris v. Himelick, 4 Blackf. 494;

(La. 1813) Duplantier v. Randolph, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 194; (1821) Finlay v. Kirkland, 9 Mart. (O. S.) 463; (1824) Robertson v. Nott, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 122; (1824) Pratt v. Flowers, Id. 333; (1826) Martial v. Cotterel, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 274; (1827) O'Brien v. Louisiana State Bank, Id. 305; (1827) United States Bank v. Johnson, Id. 310; (1829) Lane v. De Peyster, 7 Mart. (N. S.) 372; (1829) Cornie v. Leblanc, Id. 591;

(Mo. 1842) Stothard v. Aull, 7 Mo. 318;

(N. H. 1851) Bailey v. Shaw, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 297;

(Vt. 1843) Wainwright v. Straw, 15 Vt. 215, 40 Am. Dec. 675.

[b] Servants or agents are competent witnesses, without a release, to prove the payment or receipt of money, or the delivery of goods, on the part of their principals, though their evidence tends to discharge themselves.

—(Ky. 1822) Alexander v. Emerson, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 25;

(N. H. 1823) Phelps v. Sinclair, 2 N. H. 554.

[c] (U. S. 1809) In an action against a deputy postmaster for negligence, the plaintiffs' clerk who puts the letter into the post office is a competent witness for the plaintiffs, without a release.—Dunlop v. Munroe, Fed. Cas. No. 4,167 [1 Cranch, C. C. 536], affirmed (1812) 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 242, 3 L. Ed. 329.

[d] (Ga. 1854) Nothing is better settled than that the cases of agents, carriers, factors, and other servants of this description, constitute a class of special exceptions to the general rule that a witness interested in the subject of the suit is not competent to testify on the side of his interest; and this principle is extended to every species of agency or intervention by which business is transacted, unless the case is overborne by some other rule.—Collins v. Lester, 16 Ga. 410.

[e] (Mich. 1891) The fact that a physician, who is employed to examine a person injured through the negligence of another, is employed for the express purpose of giving his testimony in a suit to be brought for such injury, does not make him an incompetent witness.—Jones v. Village of Portland, 88 Mich. 598, 50 N. W. 731, 16 L. R. A. 437.

[f] (N. H. 1851) A cartman, employed by the owner of goods to deliver them for transportation to a railroad company, is a competent witness for the owner to prove the delivery, without a release.—Moses v. Boston & M. R. R., 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 71, 55 Am. Dec. 222.

[g] (N. J. 1820) The agent or servant of defendant in making purchases of goods for which defendant is sued is a competent witness.—Ayres v. Van Lieu, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 765.

[h] (Pa. 1857) A clerk in the office of the state treasurer, by whom an erroneous entry was made crediting a county treasurer with more money than he actually paid, is a competent witness to show such mistake.—Young v. Commonwealth, 28 Pa. (4 Casey) 501.

[i] (S. C. 1850) Where a postmaster is sued for the negligence of his assistant, the latter is an incompetent witness for the former.—Coleman v. Frazier, 4 Rich. Law, 146, 53 Am. Dec. 727.

[j] (Tenn.) Code, § 1169, which excludes particular witnesses in certain cases where a railroad company is defendant, excludes only such agents, employés, or engineers whose tortious act or acts, carelessness, and negligence are drawn in question in the case, and for which he or they would be liable over to the railroad company, if the latter should be held responsible for the wrong or injury.—(1860) Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co., 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 72; (1866) Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Fugett, 43 Tenn. (3 Cold.) 402.

[k] (Wis. 1849) The true test of the interest of a witness is whether he will gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment in the cause, or whether the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action; but this rule does not extend to agents, carriers, factors, brokers, or other servants, when offered to prove any acts done within the scope of their employment.—Eaton v. Gentle, 1 Chand. 10.

§ 380. Employés.

[a] The engineer in charge of a train causing an injury is not a competent witness for the company in an action to recover damages therefor without a release.
—(Ill. 1864) Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Hutchins, 34 Ill. 108;
(Pa. 1865) Catawissa R. Co. v. Armstrong, 49 Pa. (13 Wright) 186;
(Tenn. 1860) Memphis & O. R. Co. v. Tugwell, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 91.

[b] (U. S. 1826) Plaintiff's bookkeeper, who has given a credit to defendant instead of another person by mistake, is a competent witness to prove the mistake, without a release from plaintiff.—Patriotic Bank v. Frye, Fed. Cas. No. 10,808 [2 Cranch, C. C. 684].

[c] (U. S. 1836) In an action for the negligence of defendants' driver in running against plaintiffs' stagecoach, plaintiffs' driver is not a competent witness for plaintiffs, without their release.—Beltzhoover v. Stockton, Fed. Cas. No. 1,283 [4 Cranch, C. C. 695].

[d] (Ala. 1853) In an action against the owners of a steamboat to recover damages for the loss of a stage, caused by a collision between the steamboat and a ferryboat, on board of which was the stage, the stage driver, who had the control of the stage at the time, is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, without a release.—Otis v. Thorn, 23 Ala. 469, 58 Am. Dec. 303.

[e] (Ark. 1853) In a suit in chancery by one partner against the other, who had charge of the business, for general settlement of partnership accounts, a clerk whose wages was to depend on the amount of sales was not on that account an incompetent witness for complainant, as the decree would embrace many items other than the amount of sales at a particular place, as to which the clerk was called to depose, and would not therefore be used by the clerk in a suit by him against the firm for wages as evidence of the amount of sales.—Roberts v. Totten, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 609.

[f] (Ill. 1860) In an action against a railroad company for injury from the washing away of their road, the engineer who built the alleged defective portion is not a competent witness for the company, without a release from them.—Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Welch, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 31.

[g] (Ky. 1829) A servant paying money, or a porter delivering goods, in the common course of business, is a competent witness to charge another, although he thereby exonerates himself.—Bank of Kentucky v. McWilliams, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 256.

[h] (La. 1823) A witness is not incompetent because he is in the service of the party who calls him, and receives a salary.—Lafon's Ex'x v. Gravier, 1 Mart. (N. S.) 243.

[i] (La. 1853) One employed at a fixed salary, in lieu of which he is to receive such portion of the profits as exceeds it, is competent for his employer; the disqualifying interest being too remote.—Diggs v. Kirkland, 8 La. Ann. 309.

[j] (La. 1866) A clerk receiving for his compensation a percentage of profits in lieu of a regular salary, but without any control of his employer's business, is a competent witness for his employer; his interest being too remote to disqualify him.—Wright v. Rogers, 18 La. Ann. 671.

[k] (Me. 1839) Where a person is hired by the month to sell goods as a peddler, and was to be paid in proportion to his earnings, this is not such an interest in the goods as to render him incompetent to testify for the owner, in an action to recover the goods from a person who had unlawfully seized them.—Campbell v. Thompson, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 117.

[l] (Me. 1846) In an action against a town to recover the value of plaintiff's goods, alleged to have been lost by reason of a defect in a highway, while loaded on a wagon which, with the team, was under the care of a driver in the employment of plaintiff, held, that such driver was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Littlefield v. City of Portland, 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 37.

[m] (Mass. 1825) In an action by a bank against a depositor, who was supposed to have overdrawn in consequence of a mistake in the ledger, the clerk who made the mistake said he did not know whether he was accountable or not, and that, if the money should be lost, he should remunerate the bank, if required. Held, that he was not liable to the bank, or, at most, only on a contingency, and that he was a competent witness on the part of the bank.—Union Bank v. Knapp, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 96, 15 Am. Dec. 181.

[n] (Mass. 1838) In an action of trespass by an officer, by whom certain goods had been attached, against another officer who subsequently attached and carried away the same goods, held, that a servant for him, appointed by plaintiff to keep the goods, was not a competent witness to prove that the property was faithfully and carefully kept, and that defendant knew it was under attachment when he made the second attachment, since a recovery by plaintiff against defendant would be either a bar to an action by plaintiff against the servant for negligence or a part satisfaction of plaintiff's claim.—Thompson v. Lothrop, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 336.

[o] (Mass. 1846) In an action against a railroad to recover damages for the nondelivery of goods intrusted to defendants for transportation, and in an action of trover to recover the value of such goods, a servant of defendants, employed by them to load and unload cars, and deliver freight, at the depot where the goods arrived, is a competent witness for defendants to prove that all the goods were delivered at such depot to plaintiff or his agents.—Draper v. Worcester & N. R. Co., 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 505.

[p] (Mo. 1851) A clerk who pays out the money of his employer by mistake is a competent witness for his employer in an action to recover it back.—Burd v. Ross, 15 Mo. 254.

[q] (Neb. 1895) A contract under which the work was done for which a mechanic's lien is claimed may be proved by an employé of the claimant.—Blazer v. Rogner, 45 Neb. 588, 63 N. W. 846.

[r] (N. H. 1856) Plaintiff's hay in the freighthouse of a railroad company, in charge of a servant employed to attend to the receipt and delivery of goods there, was taken, through the mistake of the servant, by him and defendant, from the freighthouse, and sent away as defendant's. Held, that the servant was a competent witness for plaintiff in an action of trover for the hay thus taken.—Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151.

[s] (N. Y. 1836) A teller in a bank is a competent witness for the bank, though he has given a bond with sureties for the discharge of his duties.—United States Bank v. Stearns, 15 Wend. 314.

[t] (N. Y. 1840) A servant in charge of his master's property, which has been injured by the negligence of another, is a competent witness in an action by the master for damages.—Dudley v. Bolles, 24 Wend. 465.

[u] (Pa. 1822) Where plaintiff's witness testified that he was in the employ of plaintiff and was sent with the goods with orders not to deliver them to defendants without receiving pay, but that defendant obtained possession of the goods by stratagem and refused to redeliver them unless witness would receive the note of a third person in payment, he was not incompetent on the ground of interest, where it appeared that he did not voluntarily surrender the proceeds of the goods, and was therefore not liable to an action by plaintiff.—Wilmarth v. Mountford, 8 Serg. & R. 124.

[v] (Pa. 1846) A wagoner, in charge of a team from which a horse has been forcibly taken, is a competent witness for plaintiff, though he had been permitted to hold himself out to the world as owner.—Moore v. Shenk, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 13, 45 Am. Dec. 618.

[w] (Tex. 1886) It is error in an action on an insurance policy to exclude testimony as to the excessive valuation placed on the goods insured, because the testimony is that of a witness who was an employé of defendant's agent, as that fact, if it could affect the witness at all, could only do so as to his credibility.—Lion Fire Ins. Co. v. Starr, 71 Tex. 733, 12 S. W. 45.

[x] (Vt. 1846) In a suit brought by a bank against a common carrier, to recover for a package of bank bills intrusted to the carrier and lost by him, the teller of the bank, who delivered the package to the carrier, is a competent witness for plaintiffs.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co., 18 Vt. 131.

§ 381. Master and crew of vessel.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 459.

[a] Seamen are competent witnesses for each other in suits for wages earned on the same voyage.

—(U. S. 1829) The Cypress, Fed. Cas. No. 3,530 [1 Blatchf. & H. 83];

(Mass. 1837) Baker v. Corey, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 496;

(N. Y. 1808) Hoyt v. Wildfire, 3 Johns. 518.

[b] (U. S. 1800) The master is not a competent witness in an action by the seamen against the owner or the vessel for wages, as the master is personally liable for the wages, where the owner is insolvent, or the vessel is not sufficiently valuable to discharge the lien.—Jones v. The Phœnix, Fed. Cas. No. 7,489 [1 Pet. Adm. 201].

[c] (U. S. 1804) A mate, who by the death of the master becomes master of the ship for the rest of the voyage, not being responsible on a contract for seamen's wages made by his predecessor, is a competent witness in a suit by the seamen against the owners.—Anonymous, Fed. Cas. No. 467a [1 Pet. Adm. 247, note].

[d] (U. S. 1805) Where a seaman sues for wages, and the question involved is one affecting the whole crew, such as embezzlement, where all must contribute in damages, one of the crew cannot be admitted as a witness for another; but where especial circumstances distinguish the cases, as where special indulgences are given to one, though not to the rest, a seaman may be a witness for another.—Thompson v. The Philadelphia, Fed. Cas. No. 13,973 [1 Pet. Adm. 210].

[e] (U. S. 1805) Where seamen are involved in similar breaches of contract, and the agreement of each is separate and independent, and one seaman is sworn a witness for another, the fact that he has been involved in similar breaches of contract affects his credit only and not his competency.—Thompson v. The Philadelphia, Fed. Cas. No. 13,973 [1 Pet. Adm. 210].

[f] (U. S. 1814) The master of a ship is not a competent witness in an information in rem for a forfeiture occasioned by his misconduct.—The Hope, Fed. Cas. No. 6,678 [2 Gall. 48].

[g] (U. S. 1816) One seaman may be a witness for another in any suit respecting the same voyage, although interested in the question, if not interested in the suit.—Spurr v. Pearson, Fed. Cas. No. 13,268 [1 Mason, 104].

[h] (U. S. 1830) In a suit in rem for seamen's wages, the master is a competent witness for the libelant, though he may have executed a bill of sale of the vessel to the claimant.—The Trial, Fed. Cas. No. 14,170 [1 Blatchf. & H. 94].

[i] (U. S. 1833) In a libel against a vessel for a forfeiture, the master under whom the alleged illegal act was done is inadmissible as a witness for the claimant.—The Nymph, Fed. Cas. No. 10,389 [1 Ware (257) 259].

[j] (U. S. 1835) Seamen, having a common interest in the immediate point in dispute, are competent to testify for each other, and the objection of interest goes to their credit only.—The Elizabeth v. Rickers, Fed. Cas. No. 4,353 [2 Paine, 291], modifying The Elizabeth Frith (1831) Fed. Cas. No. 4,361 [Blatchf. & H. 195].

[k] (U. S. 1837) In a libel against a vessel for wages, the master is incompetent to prove any matter of defense which originates in his own acts, for which he is responsible.—The William Harris, Fed. Cas. No. 17,695 [1 Ware (367) 373].

[l] (U. S. 1837) Upon a libel for seamen's wages, the master is not a competent witness to prove that a medicine chest was on board, for the purpose of throwing the expense of medical advice on a seaman.—The William Harris, Fed Cas. No. 17,695 [1 Ware (367) 373].

[m, n] (U. S. 1844) The master of a vessel who hypothecated her on bottomry is a competent witness in favor of the holder of the bottomry, particularly if released by him.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Fed. Cas. No. 5,163 [Olcott, 55].

[o] (U. S. 1846) The master of a vessel is a competent witness for the owner in a suit in rem for wages by one of the ship's company. Though the master has a contingent interest in the result of the suit, his interest lies in casting the debt upon the boat.—The Hudson, Fed. Cas. No. 6,831 [Olcott, 396].

[p] (U. S. 1846) In a suit by the holder of a bottomry bond, given by the master of a vessel, in a foreign port, for necessary supplies, the master is a competent witness to prove that the supplies were furnished, and that they were necessary.—The Medora, Fed. Cas. No. 9,391 [1 Spr. 138].

[q] (U. S. 1847) The master and crew of a vessel are competent witnesses for the owner of the vessel in a cause of collision.—The Neptune, Fed. Cas. No. 10,120 [Olcott, 483].

[qq] (U. S. 1854) In a libel against the ship on a contract of affreightment by the shipper, the master is not a competent witness for the owners without a release.—The Peytona, Fed. Cas. No. 11,059 [1 Ware, 541], affirmed (1854) Fed. Cas. No. 11,058 [2 Curt. 21].

[qqq] (U. S. 1859) A master of a vessel is a competent witness for the owners in a suit brought by the owners for contribution by way of general average for the loss of the masts, sails, and rigging of the vessel, alleged to have been sacrificed for the common benefit of the ship, cargo, and freight, except in a case where he would be exonerated from some certain liability, provided the owners should prevail.—Patten v. Darling, Fed. Cas. No. 10,812 [1 Cliff. 254].

[r] (U. S. 1861) In a suit by the owners of a vessel, against the shippers of a cargo, for freight, where the defense is that the cargo was never delivered to the consignee, the master, although interested, is a competent witness.—

Swett v. Black, Fed. Cas. No. 13,690 [1 Spr. 574].

[rr] (Del. 1832) In an action on the warranty of a vessel at the suit of the owner, the master is not a competent witness to prove that the vessel was lost through unsoundness and not from negligence.—Newbold v. Wilkins, 1 Har. 43.

[ss] (La. 1826) The mate or clerk of a ship is a good witness for the captain when sued by the owners for negligence; all persons employed in the navigation of vessels are direct servants of the owners in different grades of authority. Civ. Code, art. 2261.—Jordan v. White, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 335.

[ss] (La. 1826) As all persons employed in the navigation of the vessel are the direct servants of the owners in different grades of authority, on a charge of negligence against any one of them, the others are competent witnesses.—Jordan v. White, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 335.

[t] (La. 1844) The master and others employed to navigate a vessel, though servants of the owners in different grades of authority, are competent for the latter. A witness is not incompetent because he is, or has been, employed by the party who calls him.—Randall v. Laguerenne, 7 Rob. 327.

[tt] (La. 1851) Where, in an action on a policy of insurance on goods shipped, the defense is that the loss was occasioned by the barratry of the master, he is a competent witness for plaintiff, and the object of his interest goes only to his credibility.—Paradise v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 6 La. Ann. 596.

[u] (La. 1857) The clerk of the ship is a competent witness for his employers to prove the instructions given by the owner to the clerk in shipping the slave.—Farwell v. Harris, 12 La. Ann. 50.

[uu] (La. 1861) Under the act of 1840, the mere fact of a slave being found on board a boat without a written permission creates a presumption against the owners of the boat that such slave was received with the intention of depriving his master of him, or of transporting him out of the state, or from one part of the state to another. Held, that the requirement of the act that the witnesses called to rebut the presumption must be such as are not employed on the vessel referred to the time when they are called to testify.—Pelham v. The Messenger, 16 La. Ann. 99.

[v] (La. 1861) The exclusion of a citizen from giving evidence is somewhat opposed to natural right, and ought not to be extended beyond the letter of the statute.—Pelham v. The Messenger, 16 La. Ann. 99.

[vv] (Me. 1832) The master of a vessel, having, in a foreign port, borrowed money, on the credit of the owner, for the necessary purposes of the voyage, is a competent witness for the lender, in a suit against the owner of the vessel to recover the money borrowed, though he may have drawn a bill of exchange on his owner for the amount.—Descadillas v. Harris, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 298.

[w] (N. C. 1858) In an action against the owner of a vessel for failing to deliver goods according to his written contract, which excepted in his favor the dangers of the sea, the master in charge of the vessel is competent to prove that the goods were lost in consequence of a storm at sea.—Willard v. Carter, 50 N. C. 395.

[ww] (Pa. 1796) In an action against the owner for unskillful storage by the mariners, the mate and seamen are competent witnesses without a release.—Arnold v. Anderson, 2 Yeates, 93.

[www] (Pa. 1802) The master, unless released by the owners, is not a witness to prove the legality of discharging the mate in a foreign port.—Galloway v. Morris, 3 Yeates, 445.

[x] (Pa. 1842) In an action by the owner to recover for an injury to a boat, the master is incompetent by reason of interest, it being alleged that the injury was occasioned by the master's mismanagement.—Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Harris, 5 Watts & S. 28.

[xx] (Pa. 1842) In an action by the owner to recover for an injury to a boat, the hands employed are competent.—Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Harris, 5 Watts & S. 28.

[y] (Pa. 1847) In an action on a marine policy of insurance for a loss, the master and crew are competent witnesses for the insured.—American Ins. Co. v. Insley, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 223, 47 Am. Dec. 509.

[yy] (Pa. 1854) Defendants, who had insured a vessel, obtained reinsurance by plaintiffs, and sought to have the amount of the reinsurance allowed on an account. A deposition of the master of the vessel was offered, which was objected to by plaintiffs on the ground of interest. Held that, as it did not appear on the paper book that the verdict and judgment could ever be evidence against the master, the admission of such evidence was not error.—Philadelphia Ins. Co. v. Washington Ins. Co., 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 250.

[z] (S. C. 1819) A seaman of the vessel is a competent witness to the diligence of the master.—Reeves v. Burrows, 1 Nott & McC. 427.

§ 382. Captain and pilot or helmsman of vessel.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 459.

[a] (Ala. 1859) The pilot is a competent witness to disprove negligence of the carrier (a boatman), unless it appear that the pilot was in fact guilty of the negligence, so as to be liable therefor.—Johnson v. Lightsey, 34 Ala. 169, 73 Am. Dec. 450.

[b] (Ky. 1856) A pilot is a competent witness for defendants in an action against the managers of a steamer for loss by jettison claimed to be unjustifiable.—Bentley v. Bustard, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 643, 63 Am. Dec. 561.

[c] (Mass. 1847) In trespass against a master of a vessel for carrying to sea an officer who went on board to arrest a person just as the vessel was leaving the wharf, the pilot is a competent witness to prove that he got the vessel off under the direction of the owner, and that the master had no agency in the matter.—Spoor v. Spooner, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 281.

[d] (Miss. 1856) In an action against the owners of a steamboat, as common carriers, for negligence, the captain is a competent witness for plaintiff, as his only interest is to defeat the action, which would disqualify him for the defense.—The General Worth v. Hopkins, 30 Miss. 703.

[e] (N. Y.) In an action against the master of a canal boat for negligence in navigating her, whereby injury is done to her, the helmsman of defendant is a competent witness for him, if defendant had the immediate charge and direction of the boat at the time of the injury.—(1838) Noble v. Paddock, 19 Wend. 456; (1839) Barnes v. Cole, 21 Wend. 188.

[f] (N. Y. 1852) In an action to recover damages for a collision between vessels, the captain of defendant's ship is not disqualified as a witness, on the ground that he would be responsible for a loss sustained by the collision. Such interest in the event cannot affect his competency.—Crary v. Marshall, 1 E. D. Smith, 530.

[g] (N. C. 1805) A captain of a ship is not a competent witness for the owner, in an action for the loss of a cargo, to prove that the loss was not occasioned by negligence.—Gardner v. Smallwood, 3 N. C. 349.

[h] (Ohio, 1835) In a suit between the insurer and insured on a steamboat policy, the captain of the boat at the time of the loss is a competent witness.—Howell v. Cincinnati Ins. Co., 7 Ohio (7 Ham.) 276, pt. 1.

[i] (Ohio, 1840) In an action upon a policy of insurance for the loss of the steamboat insured, the pilot at the wheel is a competent witness; for, if he is liable at all on account of his negligence, he will be liable to the losing party, whichever it may be.—Vairin v. Canal Ins. Co., 10 Ohio, 223.

[ii] (Pa. 1763) In an action on a policy of insurance, the captain of the ship, having goods on board insured by other underwriters, who refused to pay until the determination of this suit, was examined on his voir dire, and swore himself disinterested, held, that he might be sworn in chief.—Wallace v. Child, 1 Dall. 7, 1 L. Ed. 13.

[iii] (Pa. 1796) In an action against the owner for unskillful stowage by the mariners, the captain may be a witness, if released by the owners.—Arnold v. Anderson, 2 Yeates, 93.

[j] (Pa. 1808) The captain is a competent witness to prove the sale and delivery of goods, in an action against his owner.—McIndoe v. Lunt, 1 Browne, 85.

[k] (Pa. 1841) Where the captain of a boat delivered goods at the wharf of defendants, who were commission merchants, with instructions not to deliver them to the consignee until the freight was paid, but defendants delivered them without receiving freight, and the owner of the boat brought trover for the goods, in which defendants claimed that, in consequence of the unskillfulness or negligence of the persons employed in the management of the boat, the goods were injured, so that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the stipulated freight, the captain and steersman of the boat were not competent witnesses for plaintiff without a release.—Humphreys v. Reed, 6 Whart. 435.

[l] (Pa. 1849) In action by the owner of a boat for her loss, where the defense is that the loss accrued through the want of skill or negligence of the pilot, such pilot is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Plumer v. Alexander, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 81.

§ 383. Stevedore.

[a] (N. Y. 1829) In an action on a policy of insurance for a claim for damages sustained by the perils of the sea, a stevedore employed by the master to stow the cargo is a competent witness to prove that it was properly stowed, though he might not have been, had the action been directly against the master for negligence in the loading of the vessel.—Rankin v. American Ins. Co., 1 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Hall) 682.

(b) AGENTS.

IN GENERAL, § 384.
NEGLIGENCE AND BREACH OF DUTY IN GENERAL, § 385.
FACT OF AGENCY AND SCOPE OF AUTHORITY IN GENERAL, § 386.
CONTRACTS IN GENERAL, § 387.
PURCHASES, § 388.
SALES, § 389.
BILLS AND NOTES, § 390.
BONDS, § 391.
TESTIMONY AS TO PAYMENT, SETTLEMENT, AND RELEASE, § 392.
FACTORS AND BROKERS, § 393.
ATTORNEYS, § 394.

Usurious transactions, see ante, § 301.

§ 384. In general.

[a] Agents are generally competent witnesses.
—(Ill. 1858) Nichols v. Guibor, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 285;
(Ind. 1846) State v. Holloway, 8 Blackf. 45;
(Ky. 1820) Connelly's Heirs v. Chiles, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 242;
(N. C. 1843) Ward v. Griffin, 38 N. C. 150.

[b] An agent is a competent witness, ex necessitate, to prove his acts as such agent.
—(U. S. 1847) Pendall v. Rench, Fed. Cas. No. 10,917 [4 McLean, 259]; (1848) Chapin v. Siger, Fed. Cas. No. 2,600 [4 McLean, 378];
(Ala. 1847) Bean v. Pearsall, 12 Ala. 592;
(Ind. 1846) State v. Holloway, 8 Blackf. 45;
(La. 1846) Britton v. Andrews, 1 La. Ann. 398;
(Mass. 1814) Phillips v. Bridge, 11 Mass. 242;
(S. C. 1828) Covington v. Bussey, 4 McCord, 412.

[c] The general rule is that an agent is competent as a witness for his principal, except in cases where the principal is sued on account of the negligence of the agent.
—(La. 1826) Jordan v. White, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 335; (1839) Nicholson v. Patton, 13 La. 213; (1845) Ducros v. Jacobs, 10 Rob. 453; (Pa. 1856) Cushman v. Adams, 2 Phila. 83; (1862) Struthers v. Kendall, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 214, 80 Am. Dec. 610.

[d] (Ala. 1858) In an action to recover damages for a wagon lost in crossing a ferry, plaintiff's agent, who had charge of the property, is, under Code, § 2302, a competent witness for his principal.—Harris v. Plant, 31 Ala. 639.

[e] (Ark. 1853) In an action by the principal against a third party, the agent of plaintiff is a competent witness to prove all acts done by him within the scope of his authority; but where he has acted without authority, and laid himself liable to plaintiff, he is not a competent witness, where the verdict for plaintiff would release him from all liability.—Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 437.

[f] (Cal. 1861) An agent is a competent witness to prove matters of which his testimony affords the only means of obtaining any knowledge.—Mills v. Beard, 19 Cal. 158.

[g] (Del. 1819) The attorney in fact, by whom a bill in equity is filed, is not a competent witness for complainant.—De Pusey v. Du Pont, 1 Del. Ch. 77.

[h] (Fla. 1855) If the agent has prima facie a direct interest in the suit, this is not sufficient to render him incompetent, without examining him on his voir dire as to his situation; and, in general, it must be shown that he had a legal, certain, and immediate interest in the event of the suit, before he can be declared incompetent.—Croom v. Noll, 6 Fla. 52.

[i] (Fla. 1855) Even if an agent is a party interested in the suit, he is often a competent witness, ex necessitate, but cannot be allowed to testify to matters out of the usual and ordinary course of business.—Croom v. Noll, 6 Fla. 52.

[j] (Ky. 1858) An agent is a competent witness to prove his own acts, done for the principal in the usual course of business, although directly interested in the result of the suit; and there is no distinction in this respect between private and public agents.—Weaver v. Bracken County Court, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 728.

[k] (La. 1841) An agent interested only for his commissions is competent; aliter, if his interest be distinct from them, and not growing out of his agency.—Stetson v. Gurney, 17 La. 162; Burke v. Breazeale, 1 Rob. 73.

[l] (La. 1849) An agent is a competent witness against his principal in regard to the business of the agency.—Forman v. Walker, 4 La. Ann. 409.

[m] (La. 1859) The agent is a competent witness to prove acts done within the scope of his authority; his liability for damages for falsely representing himself as agent going only to his credibility.—Barriere v. Peychaud, 14 La. Ann. 370.

[n] (Mass. 1843) One, as the agent of others, commenced and prosecuted a suit in their names, and they afterwards ratified his acts and became responsible to him for the costs, and he made no agreement with them respecting the avails of the suit, and had no interest therein. Held, that he was a competent witness for plaintiffs in the trial of the action.—Medbury v. Watson, 47 Mass. (6 Metc.) 246, 39 Am. Dec. 726.

[o] (Miss. 1843) Where an agent of defendant was called by plaintiffs, who stated on the voir dire that he was not interested in the event of the suit, and that he did not know whether he should be liable to defendant in the event of his failure in the suit, he was competent.—Austin v. Feamster, 9 Miss. (1 Smedes & M.) 166.

[p] (N. H. 1855) An agent, authorized to demand goods alleged to have been converted, has no such interest in the suit as to make him incompetent to testify as to the demand.—Phelps v. Gilchrist, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 171.

[q] (N. J. 1845) The rule which allows an agent, ex necessitate rei, to give evidence, applies only to agents employed in the ordinary transactions of commerce.—Runyon v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank, 4 N. J. Eq. (3 H. W. Green) 480.

[r] (N. Y. 1837) An agent is a competent witness in a suit commenced by his directions, where he has not assumed any personal responsibility for the costs of the prosecution.—Morris v. Wadsworth, 17 Wend. 103.

[s] (N. Y. 1848) An agent, who had acted within his instructions, and was therefore not personally liable, is not incompetent by reason of interest.—Hoffman v. Delihanty, 13 Abb. Prac. 388.

[t] (N. Y. 1850) In an action brought by the consignor, he being the owner of the property, against the carrier, for damage to the goods, the consignee, if he is only an agent, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Price v. Powell, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 322.

[u] (N. C. 1848) An agent is not necessarily an incompetent witness for his principal. A prima facie case of the agent's liability over to the principal ought first to be made out in support of his incompetency as a witness, and then the principal has the right to examine him on his voir dire, in order that he may explain his situation.—Ashe v. Murchison, 30 N. C. 215.

[uu] (N. C. 1859) An agent, who has intrusted a claim belonging to his principal to a constable for collection, is a competent witness for the principal in a suit on the constable's bond.—Nixon v. Bagby, 52 N. C. 4.

[v] (Pa. 1839) An agent may prove the loss of an instrument, parol or under seal, though given to himself.—Grayson v. Bannon, 8 Watts, 524.

[vv] (Pa. 1856) An agent of the sheriff's deputy was a competent witness in an action against the sheriff for not returning the writ; the liability of the witness being too remote and contingent to affect his competency.—Commonwealth v. Allen, 2 Phila. 22.

[w] (Pa. 1856) An agent is a competent witness for the landlord in proceedings to obtain possession of demised premises.—Reid v. Christy, 2 Phila. 144.

[ww] (Pa. 1867) An agent of an attorney in fact, who collects and pays over to the attorney the proceeds of a sale of land, is a competent witness to support a claim against the attorney by the owner of the land.—In re Harper's Estate, 1 Brewst. 471.

[x] (S. C. 1860) A witness having no personal interest, but only an interest as agent for others, is competent.—Salas v. Cay, 12 Rich. Law, 558.

[xx] (Tex. 1849) The owner of a slave hired it to the witness as the agent of another, and while the slave was in the possession of the principal under the contract of hiring he was attended by plaintiff, who was a physician. Held, in a suit by plaintiff against the owner for the value of professional services rendered to the slave, that the agent was incompetent as a witness to prove that there was an understanding that the owner was to pay for the medical attendance.—McGee v. Currie, 4 Tex. 217.

[y] (Tex. 1857) Agents are in some cases admitted as witnesses notwithstanding their interest, on the ground of public convenience and necessity.—Ware's Adm'rs v. Bennett, 18 Tex. 794.

[yy] (Vt. 1851) An agent of plaintiff, to whom a letter was directed for the benefit of plaintiff, is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove that he never received the letter from the post office.—Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663.

[z] (Vt. 1851) An agent, factor, or broker is not a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit, without a release, when his testimony would discharge him from plaintiff's demand by establishing it against defendant.—Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663.

[zz] (W. Va. 1868) A party acting for and in the name of another as his agent, and at the time declaring his principal, is a competent witness in a suit arising out of the transaction; for he is not personally liable.—Piercy v. Hedrick, 2 W. Va. 458, 98 Am. Dec. 774.

§ 385. Negligence and breach of duty in general.

[a] (Cal. 1857) Where the defense to an action is based on a breach of duty on the part of plaintiff's agent, he cannot be called to disprove such defense, because of his liability over.—Finn v. Vallejo Street Wharf Co., 7 Cal. 253.

[b] (Ga. 1831) Where an agent lost money of his principals at gaming, in an action by the principals against the winners to recover it, the agent was not a competent witness for plaintiffs without a release from them.—Allen v. Lacy, Dud. 81.

[c] (Ind. 1851) Where the right of action turns upon the question whether an agent has been guilty of negligence or other breach of duty, the agent is incompetent to testify for defendant.—McClure v. Whitesides, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 573.

[d] (Ky. 1838) An agent is not a competent witness for his principal, where the principal is sued for a tort done by the agent, while in his service, but without his authority.—Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Kidd, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 245.

[e] (Md. 1851) In an action against the principal for damages occasioned by the neglect of his agent, the latter is not a competent witness for defendant without a release, as the record of the case would be evidence of the amount of damages recovered against his principal, in a suit by him against the agent.—Middlekauff v. Smith, 1 Md. 329.

[f] (N. C. 1858) In assumpsit to recover from defendant money which he had, by gaming or other unlawful means, obtained from plaintiff's agent, such agent is not a competent witness without a release.—Jones v. McRay, 51 N. C. 192.

[g] (S. C. 1856) In an action against employers founded on the imputed negligence of their agent, the testimony of the latter for defendant will be excluded, on the ground of interest in defeating the action; for although, in an action against him by the employers, the record will not be evidence to establish his misconduct, it will be admissible to establish the quantum of damages.—Charleston Gas-Light Co. v. City of Charleston, 9 Rich. Law, 342.

[h] (Tex. 1857) An agent is incompetent as a witness where he has been guilty of any tortious act or negligence in executing the orders of his principal, in respect to which he would be liable over to the latter, should he fail in his suit.—Ware's Adm'rs v. Bennett, 18 Tex. 794.

[i] (Tex. 1857) An agent deposited money consigned to him by his principal in a bank in his own name, and afterwards drew it from the bank for his own use, and, on being called on to account for it by his principal, gave him his notes of hand for the amount. Held, in a suit brought by the principal against the bank for complicity of its officers in the fraud, which was not known by the principal when he received the notes, that the agent was a competent witness for plaintiff; the notes being then barred by the statute of limitations, and plaintiff having offered to surrender them to the bank, and the agent being insolvent.—Commercial & Agricultural Bank v. Jones, 18 Tex. 811.

§ 386. Fact of agency and scope of authority in general.

[a] Generally an agent is a competent witness to prove his own agency and authority.

—(U. S. 1828) Pannill v. Eliason, Fed. Cas. No. 10,707 [3 Cranch, C. C. 358];

(Ala. 1848) Gayle v. Bishop, 14 Ala. 552;

(Ill. 1855) Cadwell v. Meek, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 220;

(Ky. 1813) Kirkpatrick v. Cisna, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 244;

(Mass. 1839) Rice v. Gove, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724;

(Mo. 1891) Crothers v. Acock, 43 Mo. App. 318;

(N. H. 1844) Caldwell v. Wentworth, 16 N. H. 318;

(Tenn. 1844) Harvey v. Sweasy, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 449.

[b] An agent, acting under a parol authority, is a competent witness to prove his own agency and authority.

—(Fla. 1855) Croom v. Noll, 6 Fla. 52;

(Ind. 1860) Wolf v. Smith, 14 Ind. 360;

(Mass. 1852) Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 338, 57 Am. Dec. 50;

(N. H. 1849) Kent v. Tyson, 20 N. H. 121;

(W. Va. 1868) Piercy v. Hedrick, 2 W. Va. 458, 98 Am. Dec. 774.

[c] (U. S. 1838) An agent is a competent witness to prove his own authority, if not in writing, and is not incompetent by reason of his liability to either of the parties.—Welch v. Hoover, Fed. Cas. No. 17,368 [5 Cranch, C. C. 444].

[d] (U. S. 1847) An agent is a competent witness to prove the nature of his agency.—Pendall v. Rench, Fed. Cas. No. 10,917 [4 McLean, 259].

[e] (Ala. 1854) In trover for the conversion of a slave, a witness who, as agent of plaintiff, brought the slave into the state, is competent to prove his own agency.—Napier v. Barry, 24 Ala. 511.

[f] (Ala. 1854) In trover for the conversion of a slave, though the testimony of a witness who, as agent of plaintiff, brought the slave to the state, tends to show that the slave was sold under attachment against himself sued out by defendant, this does not render him incompetent to prove his own agency, if there is no evidence showing that he consented to the levy or sale.—Napier v. Barry, 24 Ala. 511.

[g] (Ky. 1813) Where an agency is created by a letter, which is lost, the agent is a competent witness to prove its contents.—Kirkpatrick v. Cisna, 6 Ky. (3 Bibb) 244.

[h] (Me. 1845) Where the alleged authority of an agent is by parol and for a specified purpose, the principal may prove the nature and extent of the agency by the agent, unless he is otherwise disqualified.—Crooker v. Appleton, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 131.

[i] (Me. 1845) When the question is whether the agent did or did not exceed his authority, he is equally liable to the losing party, if he exceeds his powers, for the damage done thereby, and is competent without a release.—Crooker v. Appleton, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 131.

[j] (Mass. 1839) In an action on a note, reciting that "we jointly and severally promise to pay," etc., and signed by third persons for defendant, one of such signers is a competent witness to prove that they were authorized to execute the note as the agent of defendant, over objection that it was not competent for one professing to have acted as agent to establish the fact of his authority by his own testimony.—Rice v. Gove, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 724.

[k] (Miss. 1849) If an agent's authority be by parol, he is a competent witness to prove it. If the attempt be to prove agency, when in fact the person did not purport to act as agent, he may be called to prove that he is not an agent.—Dean v. Young, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 118.

[l] (N. H. 1853) When an agent's authority is given by parol, he is a competent witness to prove his authority, and to show that he acted according to the directions of his principal and within the scope of his authority.—Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. (6 Fost.) 338.

[m] (N. Y. 1843) A mortgagee assigned the mortgage, and afterwards, at the request of the assignee and as his agent, surrendered the bond, and took a conveyance of the equity of redemption, to the assignee. Held, that the agent was a competent witness to prove the agency, and his acts as such.—Reed v. Marble, 10 Paige, 409.

[n] (Pa. 1796) An agent not being a competent witness to prove his agency, if the agency is created by a written contract, which is mislaid, he is not a competent witness to prove its contents.—Nicholson's Lessee v. Mifflin, 2 Dall. 246, 1 L. Ed. 367.

[o] (Pa. 1854) An agent to make an entry upon land, so as to toll the statutes of limitation, is competent to prove his own agency.—Miles v. Cook, 1 Grant, Cas. 58.

§ 387. Contracts in general.

[a] (U. S. 1804) The agent who makes the insurance, after purging himself on his voir dire, is a good witness for the assured to prove matters respecting the policy.—Ruan v. Gardner, Fed. Cas. No. 12,100 [1 Wash. C. C. 145].

[b] (U. S. 1843) On a libel in rem upon a bill of lading, the clerks and agents of the transportation company claimant, having personally no interest in the business, and not being responsible for its defaults, are competent witnesses.—Howe v. The Lexington, Fed. Cas. No. 6,767b.

[c] (Ill. 1855) An agent of either of the parties to a suit is a competent witness to prove any contract made by him as agent, unless disqualified by interest.—Cadwell v. Meek, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 220.

[d] (Ill. 1857) In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, an agent of the parties sued, paid by a proportion of their business profits, is a competent witness in their behalf.—Hunter v. Blanchard, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 318.

[e] (La. 1844) An agent, in an action on a contract executed by him, may prove the extent of his powers for his principal, who has released him from any liability.—Miller v. New Orleans Canal & Banking Co., 8 Rob. 236.

[f] (Me. 1852) A witness introduced by plaintiff may prove by his own testimony that he was the agent of plaintiff to make the contract sued on, and that it was made in conformity with the authority given him.—Perkins v. Jordan, 35 Me. 23.

[g] (Md. 1836) Where an agent has a direct interest in the event of a suit relating to a contract made by him independently of his acts as agent, he is not a competent witness for his principal in regard to such contract.—Pennsylvania, D. & M. Steam Nav. Co. v. Dandridge, 8 Gill & J. 248, 29 Am. Dec. 543.

[h] (Md. 1861) An agent of an insurance company, who, at the request of the insured, draws up for him an application for insurance, becomes the agent of the insured, and is a competent witness for the company in a suit on the policy.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Deale, 18 Md. 26, 79 Am. Dec. 673.

[i] (Pa. 1792) One who writes and signs an order at the request of another, if uninterested in the event of the suit, should be produced as a witness.—McKee v. Myers, Add. 31.

[j] (Pa. 1796) One who contracts as an agent is a competent witness to establish the contract.—Steward's Lessee v. Richardson, 2 Yeates, 89.

[k] (Pa. 1823) An agent is admissible to prove his own authority by parol to make a parol lease.—McGunnagle v. Thornton, 10 Serg. & R. 251.

[l] (Pa. 1834) A person who has undertaken as the agent of plaintiff in ejectment to give a lease of the land in controversy to the defendants, under which they claim a right to hold the possession, is competent to establish by his own testimony his authority as agent, for his having undertaken to act in the character of an agent for plaintiff is not sufficient to render him incompetent.—McDowell v. Simpson, 3 Watts, 129, 27 Am. Dec. 338.

[m] (Pa. 1842) If a member of an association is the agent of it to make a contract, in an action on that contract against the members of the association, such agent may be examined by plaintiff to prove the contract and his authority.—Ridgely v. Dobson, 3 Watts & S, 118.

[n] (Vt. 1868) The rule that an agent is a competent witness, either for or against the principal, to prove his acts done and contracts made as agent, and his authority therefor from the principal, is equally applicable to the case of a written contract purporting to be executed by an agent in the name and behalf of his principal as to a case of a verbal contract.—Lytle v. Bond's Estate, 40 Vt. 618.

§ 388. Purchases.

[a] (U. S. 1845) An agent, who purchased a chattel and is interested therein, is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, in a suit by the purchaser against the vendor for fraud in the sale.—Ferson v. Sanger, Fed. Cas. No. 4,751 [2 Ware (Dav. 252) 256].

[b] (Ala. 1843) An agent who purchases goods for his principal, which, without the consent of the agent, are attached as the property of the agent in favor of a third person, and sold to satisfy the execution, is a competent witness in trespass by the principal against the officer.—Bush v. McGee, 4 Ala. 710.

[c] (Ala. 1853) An agent of a commission merchant, who receives commissions on all the cotton which he procures and ships to his principal, is a competent witness for the latter in a suit concerning the title to certain bales of cotton, which the agent had procured and shipped and on which he had received his commissions.—Bryan v. Smith, 22 Ala. 534.

[d] (Ala. 1853) In assumpsit to recover for lumber furnished by plaintiffs to defendant, defendant's agent by whom it was procured is a competent witness for plaintiffs; and evidence that he was indebted to defendant for money advanced on the building contract at the time he procured the lumber is irrelevant.—Ortez v. Jewett, 23 Ala. 662.

[e] (Ala. 1858) An agent employed to procure lumber, which his principal has agreed to furnish, is a competent witness for the latter under Code, § 2302, in a suit brought by him to recover for the lumber, although defendant pleads the unsuitableness of the lumber.—Moore v. Lea's Adm'r, 32 Ala. 375.

[f] (Ala. 1859) A defense being that plaintiff had promised to sell a slave to defendant, and had refused to keep his promise, an agent, whom defendant had employed to buy the slave, and who had bought him in his own name, and was ready to deliver the slave to defendant on payment, though defendant, on the agent's refusal to deliver the slave, making certain allowances from the price, had brought detinue, which was then pending, against the agent, will be allowed to testify to these facts on behalf of plaintiff, since the judgment in this case could not be evidence for the agent in the other suit.—Nesbitt v. Pearson's Adm'rs, 33 Ala. 668.

[g] (Ill. 1856) An agent, acting under parol authority in the purchase of land, is competent to prove his agency as between his principal and a third person.—Collins v. Smith, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 160.

[h] (La. 1852) Where the principal's property is seized as the agent's, the latter, whose agency to purchase it is established allunde, is competent for the principal, in an action to recover it, to prove that he acted within the scope of his instructions.—McLeod v. Frost, 7 La. Ann. 50.

[i] (La. 1852) The agent of a vendee is from necessity a competent witness to prove the contract of sale and the price.—Boardman v. Glenn, 7 La. Ann. 581.

[j] (Me. 1833) A. furnished goods to B. at the request of C., to sell the same in the name of and as agent for C., under a fraudulent arrangement between the three to protect the goods from attachment at the suit of B.'s creditors. Held, in an action by A. against C. to recover the price of the goods, that B. was a competent witness to show the fraud as a defense.—Smith v. Hubbs, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 71.

[k] (Me. 1835) A. purchased a quantity of goods of B., and gave his bill on C. at 30 days for the amount, which was protested for nonacceptance. In an action by B. against C. to recover the price, held, that A. was incompetent, as a witness for B., to prove that, in making the purchase, he acted as the agent of C.—Hewitt v. Lovering, 12 Me. (3 Fairf.) 201.

[l] (N. J. 1820) The agent of the vendee is a competent witness for the vendor, in an action for the price of goods sold and delivered, to show the purchase and delivery of the goods.—Ayres v. Van Lieu, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 765.

[m] (N. Y. 1807) An agent, in whose favor a written order to receive goods is given, and who indorses a receipt on the order, may be admitted as a witness, from necessity, in an action relative to the goods.—Burlingham v. Deyer, 2 Johns. 189.

[n] (N. Y. 1828) An agent who bought goods for his principal is a competent witness for the principal in an action against the vendor for not delivering the goods, though he did not disclose his agency at the time.—Sewall v. Fitch, 8 Cow. 215.

[o] (N. Y. 1841) An agent authorized to purchase lands for his principal, and draw on him for the purchase money, is not a competent witness to charge his principal with the price of the lands sold, in an action by the vendor against the principal, if the agent is prima facie liable to the vendor for the purchase money.—Sage v. Sherman, 25 Wend. 426.

[p] (Pa. 1791) An agent, factor, or attorney, who purchases property at a sale for another, may prove his power to act as such.—Miller v. Hayman, 1 Yeates, 23.

[q] (Pa. 1818) The purchaser of land in his own name, but as agent or trustee of another, to whom he afterwards conveys, is a witness to prove the trust.—Brown v. Downing, 4 Serg. & R. 494.

[r] (Pa. 1836) Where an agent deals in his own name, without disclosing his principal, he is not a witness for the vendee, the plaintiff, without a release from him.—Hickling v. Fitch, 1 Miles, 208.

§ 389. Sales.

[a] (Conn. 1826) An agent for the sale of goods is a competent witness for his principal, in an action between the latter and a third person for the avails of the goods.—Shepard v. Palmer, 6 Conn. 95.

[b] (Ill. 1856) An agent acting under parol authority in the sale of land is competent to prove his agency.—Collins v. Smith, 18 Ill. (8 Peck) 160.

[c] (Ill. 1859) The testimony of an agent acting under power of attorney is competent to prove that his principal ratified a sale made by such agent.—Head v. Bogue, 22 Ill. (12 Peck) 117.

[d] (Ky. 1833) The fact that an agent had exceeded his authority in selling and conveying land, and thereby incurred a liability, does not render him incompetent as a witness, in a suit for the land by persons who do not derive their title from his principal.—Swearingen v. Fields, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 387.

[e] (La. 1835) The agent may prove his agency, and that he sold and delivered the goods to defendant for his principal, though unknown at the time to defendant.—Brewster v. Saul, 8 La. 296.

[f] (La. 1843) In an action for the price of timber, plaintiff may prove by his agent that the latter delivered it without authority to the defendant's vendor.—Marks v. Landry, 4 Rob. 31.

[g] (Me. 1839) Where there is other evidence of the sale and delivery of goods, the agent by whom the sale is made, if interested, is not a competent witness to prove the sale and delivery.—Earle v. Clark, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 368.

[h] (N. H. 1851) An agent who sells the property of his principal in a mode not authorized is a competent witness for his principal. The balance of his interest is against the principal.—Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. (3 Fost.) 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195.

[i] (N. J. 1827) An agent, who has sold personal property belonging to his principal without authority, is not a competent witness for the vendee to prove that he was not agent, but that the property was sold on his own account, thereby to establish the validity of the sale.—Harwood v. Murphy, 9 N. J. Law (4 Halst.) 215.

[j] (N. C. 1805) A., as attorney in fact, conveyed land to B., and afterwards conveyed the same land to C. On a bill by complainants claiming through C. against those claiming through B., in the trial of the issue whether B. was a purchaser for a valuable consideration and whether a conveyance was made to him before the conveyance to C., held, that A. was competent to testify.—Alston's Ex'rs v. Jones' Devisees, 5 N. C. 45.

[k] (Pa. 1843) An agent selling a chattel is a competent witness for the principal in an action for the price, unless his liability for negligence or misfeasance be proved.—Scott v. Wells, 6 Watts & S. 357, 40 Am. Dec. 568.

[l] (Vt. 1832) A. and B., joint owners of timber, employed an agent to sell for their joint benefit. Held, that the agent was a competent witness, for A., that B., without his consent, directed the agent to apply the whole proceeds to his (B.'s) benefit, and that he so applied them.—Spencer v. Barnum, 4 Vt. 298.

[m] (Vt. 1835) Where an agent, authorized to sell lands and to receive payment, takes a horse in payment which is afterwards attached as his property, he is a competent witness for his principal in trover against the officer.—Waldo v. Peck, 7 Vt. 434.

[n] (Vt. 1847) Iron was sold by plaintiff's agent to defendant by parol, and on delivery, the agent not being present, defendant claimed that the sale was at gross weight, and not net weight, and plaintiff consented that it might be so computed, on defendant promising that, if it was not so agreed, he would make it right when they could see the agent. Held, that the agent was a competent witness for plaintiff, plaintiff and agent having executed mutual releases, although it appeared that the agent was to have all he could get for the iron above a certain price, and that plaintiff had received from defendant, toward the price of the iron, more than he was to receive as between him and the agent, and that plaintiff had no interest in the avails of the suit, and that the suit was commenced and prosecuted by the agent for his own benefit and at his own expense; it not appearing affirmatively that there was anything due from the agent to his attorneys in the case which would give them a lien upon the judgment.—Edwards v. Golding, 20 Vt. 30.

§ 390. Bills and notes.

[a] (U. S. 1815) A., the sole owner of a bill of exchange, indorsed it in blank, and delivered it to B. to deliver it to C. for collection, and, when collected, to place the amount to the credit of A. and B., in account. C. collected the amount, but refused to pass it to the credit of A. and B., who settled their account with C. and paid him the balance. A. afterwards sued C. for the amount received upon the bills. Held, that B. was a competent witness for A.—Taber v. Perrott, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 39, 3 L. Ed. 649.

[b] (U. S. 1829) Certain merchants entered into a written contract to subscribe certain sums for a voyage to Africa, and authorized their agent to draw bills for the amount, if he fitted out the expedition. He drew a bill on one of the subscribers for the amount subscribed by him to pay for goods bought for the voyage on the credit of the written authority above stated, which was shown to the payee of the bill. Held, that the agent, though drawer, was a competent witness to prove the facts in a suit brought by the payee against the subscriber on a constructive acceptance of the bill; it having been dishonored when presented for acceptance. —Lowber v. Shaw, Fed. Cas. No. 8,563 [5 Mason, 241].

[c] (Ala. 1842) One signing a note in behalf of others is a competent witness to show that his principals were indebted to the payees.—Childress v. Miller, 4 Ala. 447.

[d] (Ala. 1846) The agent of a corporation, who accepts bills drawn on him by a stockholder for the accommodation of the corporation, is a competent witness against the drawer or indorsers, when sued on the bills, and also if the action is for money paid by one party to the bill against another.—Rhodes v. Sherrod, 9 Ala. 63.

[e] (Ala. 1852) When an agent, acting within the scope of his authority, executes a note in the name of his principal and himself, he is an incompetent witness against his principal, when the latter is sued alone on the note.—Barney v. Earle, 20 Ala. 405.

[f] (Cal. 1861) One who acted as agent for the payee and indorsee of a note is competent to prove that he had waived demand and notice.—Mills v. Beard, 19 Cal. 158.

[g] (La. 1846) In an action against the principals on an unaccepted bill drawn on them by their agent, the latter is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Britton v. Andrews, 1 La. Ann. 398.

[h] (Mass. 1815) In an action on a note made by one assuming to be agent for defendant, he is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove his own authority to make the contract.—Emerson v. Providence Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66.

[i] (Mass. 1816) Where a general agent accepts in payment for goods of the principal sold by him an order of the vendee on a third person, payable to bearer, which is dishonored, the agent is a competent witness, in an action by the principal against the vendee on the order.—Fisher v. Willard, 13 Mass. 379.

[j] (N. H. 1841) One who was an agent in a particular transaction executed a note for his principal, pledged certain other notes and a mortgage as collateral security, and gave his own promise, at the same time, that the lands were of sufficient value to secure the debt, or, if they were not, that he would make it good, and the principal afterwards executed another note for the same sum in renewal of the first. Held, that the change of the note did not operate to discharge the debt, and that, as the agent was still liable, he was so interested as to be inadmissible as a witness for the principal in an action on the note.—Williams v. Little, 12 N. H. 29.

[k] (N. Y. 1823) One indorsing a note as agent is a competent witness for the indorsee in an action against the maker.—Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

[l] (N. Y. 1827) Where an agent drew a bill of exchange on his principal, but did not describe himself as "agent," which was protested, held, in an action against the principal, who denied the authority of the agent to draw the bill, that the agent was not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Shiras v. Morris, 8 Cow. 60.

[m] (Pa. 1836) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the drawer, the indorser is not a competent witness for defendant to prove that plaintiff constituted the witness his agent to receive payment of the note from defendants, and that he did receive payment. —Elias v. Teill, 1 Miles, 272.

[n] (S. C. 1803) An agent, with authority to purchase goods and draw bills for the amount, drew a bill upon his principal for the payment of a demand against himself, not within the scope of his authority, and which the principal declined to accept. Held, that the agent was a competent witness for the principal to prove the consideration of the bill, in an action brought against the principal for refusing to accept such bill.—Suckley v. Tunno, 1 Brev. 257.

[o] (Va. 1802) If an agent purchase a bill of exchange and indorse it to his principal, the latter may call the agent as a witness, if he first prove that he was agent by other testimony than such agent's own oath, or give him a release.—Murray v. Carrot, 3 Call, 373.

§ 391. Bonds.

[a] (Ala. 1852) An agent who sues out an attachment in the name of his principal, and executes an attachment bond purporting to bind the principal only, to which he signs his principal's name, and his own as agent, is an incompetent witness for the principal in the attachment suit.—Lankford v. Keith, 21 Ala. 342.

[b] (N. M. 1854) One signing a replevin bond as plaintiff's agent is disqualified by his interest from being a witness for plaintiff, though he denies that he is interested.—Ward v. Broadwell, 1 N. M. 75.

[c] (Pa. 1846) A., as the agent of C., but without disclosing his agency, directed B. to purchase stock, and gave his note, indorsed by C., for the price, with the stock and a bond payable to C., as collateral security. The amount of the bond was received by B., who applied the same to the payment of the note of A. indorsed by C., which was delivered up. In an action by C. against B. to recover the balance of the bond over the amount of the note, held, that A. was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Gilpin v. Howell, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 41, 45 Am. Dec. 720.

[d] (Pa. 1849) A., being indebted to B. for services rendered, requested a bond for the amount to be prepared, and, being unable from sickness to write, requested C., who acted as his agent, to sign it. C. signed and sealed the bond, styling himself "guardian," and authorizing judgment to be entered against him as guardian of A. Held, that C. was a competent witness for B., in a suit by B. against A. for the service.—Abrams v. Musgrove, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 292.

§ 392. Testimony as to payment, settlement, and release.

[a] (U. S. 1847) A creditor, who is employed by his fellow creditors to collect money under an agreement to apply it to his and their claims, is not an incompetent witness, for the reason of interest, to prove payment to his fellow creditors of their share of the amount collected. —Howe v. Wade, Fed. Cas. No. 6,777 [4 McLean, 319].

[b] (Ala. 1851) An agent is a competent witness for his principal to prove that he has paid over money left with him by his principal for that purpose.—Governor v. Gee, 19 Ala. 199.

[c] (Ark. 1861) On a petition for confirmation of title by a purchaser of land at a tax sale, the agent who paid the taxes for the owner of the land is not incapacitated as a witness for the respondent to prove the fact "on account of the interest of the witness arising out of his former relations with the respondent."—Townsend v. Wells, 23 Ark. 581.

[d] (Fla. 1848) Where money has been overpaid by an agent, or paid by mistake, he is a competent witness for his principal in an action to recover it back.—Williams v. McGhee, 2 Fla. 58.

[e] (Ga. 1850) In an action by B. against C. to recover money deposited with C. by A. as the agent of B., A. is not a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the liability of C.—Montgomery v. Evans, 8 Ga. 178.

[f] (La. 1845) An agent is competent for his principal, sued for money paid to the agent through error and admitted to have been paid by him to his principal, since the witness is indifferent, being responsible to one or the other party.—McDonogh v. Delassus, 10 Rob. 489.

[g, h] (Me. 1832) Where an agent, appointed by parol, paid the money of his principal to the creditor of the latter, in part payment, but took the creditor's receipt and promise in writing to account for the money to the agent himself, and the creditor afterwards received the whole amount of the original debt from the debtor, in an action by the principal against the creditor to recover back the sum thus paid by the agent, the agent is a competent witness to prove his appointment, the extent of his authority, the terms of his contract with the creditor, and that his agency was known to the latter.—Judkins v. Lancey, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 442.

[i] (Mass. 1830) A person who had been authorized by plaintiff to receive the money due from defendant on an account, and who had given defendant a receipt for the amount, was incompetent, by reason of interest, to prove that no money had been paid to him, and was not within the exception in regard to agents.—Fuller v. Wheelock, 27 Mass. (10 Pick.) 135.

[j] (Miss. 1846) In a bill to foreclose a mortgage, it appeared that defendant had made payments of money to the attorney in fact of plaintiff, and plaintiff offered the attorney to show that such payments were applied to a debt of defendant to the attorney individually. Held, that he was not competent to prove that fact, as it would give him the means of securing his own debt, and discharging himself from liability to his principal.—Poindexter v. La Roche, 15 Miss. (7 Smedes & M.) 699.

[k] (N. C. 1808) Where A. receives money for B., and pays it to C., who says he is authorized by B. to receive it, and B. sues A. for the money, C. is a competent witness to prove that B. authorized him to receive the money.—Blackledge v. Scales, 5 N. C. 179.

[l] (Pa. 1830) An attorney in fact is competent to prove that a settlement made with him for his principal, on which he executed a release to the party, was obtained by misrepresentations.—Irwin v. Allen, 1 Pen. & W. 444.

[m] (Vt. 1797) An agent is a competent witness that he paid over moneys received by him of his principal for that purpose, in an action by such principal against the party to whom the payment was made.—Eastman v. Hodges, 1 D. Chip. 101.

[n] (Vt. 1827) Where a receipt is explainable by parol, the agent, by whom and in whose name it was given, is a competent witness, though to limit its terms.—Giddings v. Munson, 4 Vt. 308.

§ 393. Factors and brokers.

[a] (U. S. 1793) A broker who makes a contract on behalf of his principal to deliver stock is competent to testify as to the transaction, and his authority to make such contract, in a suit against the principal for damages for non-delivery.—Livingston v. Swanwick, Fed. Cas. No. 8,419 [2 Dall. 300, 1 L. Ed. 389].

[b] (U. S. 1832) Where goods are shipped from one state to an agent to sell in another for shippers under a special agreement, and while in such other state the goods are attached for a debt of the agent due before such agreement, after which the agent abandons the goods to the shippers, who rescind the contract, such agent is a competent witness in an action by the shippers against the creditors for taking the goods.—Merrill v. Rinker, Fed. Cas. No. 9,471 [Baldw. 528].

[c] (U. S. 1849) Brokers who negotiate a contract of affreightment, their commissions not being dependent on its performance, are competent witnesses in a suit for breach.—Quirk v. Clinton, Fed. Cas. No. 11,518.

[d] (Ala. 1848) An agent who has made a contract for the sale of land, and is to be allowed a commission upon the sale, is not a competent witness for his vendor, in a suit by the vendee to rescind the contract for fraudulent representations made by the agent at the time of the sale.—Griggs v. Woodruff, 14 Ala. 9.

[e] (Cal. 1855) A broker, whose brokerage or compensation depends on plaintiff's recovery, is not a competent witness, inasmuch as he is directly interested in the event of the suit.—Shaw v. Davis, 5 Cal. 466.

[f] (Me. 1849) A note, on which there were two indorsements, was held by a broker without disclosing his principal or making any representations in regard to the note. The indorsements proved to be forgeries, but neither the seller nor the broker had any knowledge of that fact. In an action brought by the purchaser against the seller, on the ground of an implied warranty of the genuineness of the signatures, held, that the broker was under no liability to plaintiff, and in no way interested in the event of the suit, and therefore that he was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 434, 50 Am. Dec. 602.

[g] (Mass. 1814) One who has sold goods as the agent of another upon a del credere commission is not a competent witness in an action brought by the principal against the purchaser for the price of the goods sold.—New York Slate Co. v. Osgood, 11 Mass. 60.

[h] (Mass. 1824) A commission merchant, being called to prove that he sold goods of plaintiff to the two defendants jointly, stated that plaintiff was indebted to him for advances on the goods, and was insolvent; that he was uncertain whether he had sufficient security; that, if the proceeds of the goods should come into his hands, he should apply them to his debt; and that, as agent of plaintiff, he had applied to the attorney to commence this suit. Held, that he was not a competent witness.—Marland v. Jefferson, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 240.

[i] (Miss. 1858) Defendant shipped goods of plaintiff to a factor, who applied the proceeds to a debt due him by defendant. Held, that the factor was interested that plaintiff should establish his claim for the proceeds against defendant, and therefore was incompetent to prove it.—Kirkland v. Carr, 35 Miss. 584.

[j] (Mo. 1821) Where goods were consigned to a firm composed of A. and B., and, before their arrival, A. was directed by the owner to deliver them to B. to be sold on commission, and A. acted as the agent of the owner, B. having at the same time a concern distinct from the firm, held that, in an action by the owner against B. for the value of the goods, A. was a competent witness for the owner.—Hanly v. Blanton, 1 Mo. 49.

[k] (N. Y. 1827) A broker, who lends money and takes a check, including in it his commissions, and passes the check over to his principal, is a competent witness for his principal in an action against the drawer of the check.—Mauran v. Lamb, 7 Cow. 174.

[l] (N. Y. 1829) A factor, who has made advances for his principal, though he has a general lien on the goods and the proceeds in his hands as security for his advances, is a competent witness for his principal in assumpsit for the goods sold and delivered, unless he has a specific claim on the subject-matter of the controversy.—Mildeberger v. Baldwin, 2 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Hall) 196.

[m] (Pa. 1849) A. sent goods to B. to sell on commission. B. transferred them to C., a creditor of his own, to be sold by him at a limited price in payment of his debt. Not being able to sell them at that price, C. sold them on an execution against B. In trover by A. against C. for these goods, held, that B. was not a competent witness for plaintiff, on the ground of interest.—Keymborg v. Burbridge, 11 Pa. (1 Jones) 535.

[n] (Tenn. 1858) In an action against a common carrier for the loss of goods, the consignee, who is a mere factor, is, apart from the question of interest, a competent witness.—W. & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 158.

§ 394. Attorneys.

Liability for costs, see post, § 402.

[a] (U. S. 1849) In a suit at equity to restrain a suit at law, the attorney of plaintiff in the suit at law is not incompetent by reason of his holding the notes upon which the suit at law was brought, for the mere purpose of paying over the money to his clients when the same should be recovered thereon.—Patton v. Taylor, 48 U. S. (7 How.) 132, 12 L. Ed. 637.

[b] (Ala. 1858) An attorney, employed to file a wife's bill for a divorce and the removal of her husband from the control of her separate estate, who holds her note for his fees, is not incompetent to sustain the validity of her will, subsequently executed, of all her separate estate, attested by him.—Mosser v. Mosser's Ex'rs, 32 Ala. 551.

[c] (Me. 1833) An attorney, having taken a jail bond and begun a suit thereon for an alleged breach of it, without the knowledge of his client afterwards received the amount due on the bond, wrote a discharge thereon, and delivered it to the obligor, omitting to take pay for the writ and service in the case, and the obligor refused to redeliver the bond. The attorney then informed his client, who directed him to proceed with the suit, promising to be responsible for all costs and advancements. Held, that the attorney had no such interest as would exclude him from being a witness.—Steward v Riggs, 10 Me. (1 Fairf.) 467.

[d] (Me. 1847) In an action of trespass against an officer for taking a chattel on an execution, the attorney of the execution creditor is not incompetent as a witness for the officer by reason of his lien for his bill of costs, especially where it does not appear whether the bill of costs has or has not been paid.—Foord v. Hains, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 207.

[e] (Me. 1847) In an action of trespass against an officer for taking a chattel on an execution, the creditor's attorney, who was directed by the creditor to cause the chattel to be taken to satisfy the execution, if he thought it advisable, and who thereupon put the execution into the hands of defendant, directed him to levy upon the chattel, and informed him that the creditor would indemnify him for so doing, is not thereby rendered an incompetent witness for defendant on the ground of interest.—Foord v. Hains, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 207.

[f] (Mass. 1814) In an action against a sheriff for an alleged default of one of his deputies, the attorney for plaintiff is not incompetent as a witness on the ground that he himself may be liable to plaintiff for negligence in not delivering the execution seasonably to the sheriff or his deputy, in case the present suit should fail against the sheriff.—Phillips v. Bridge, 11 Mass. 242.

[g] (Mass. 1814) An attorney of record in a former suit is competent to testify, in an action against an officer for not seizing goods on an execution, that he delivered the execution to the officer within 30 days after rendition of judgment in the suit in which he was attorney.—Phillips v. Bridge, 11 Mass. 242.

[h] (Miss. 1848) In an action on a note, defendant set up in defense a payment made by him to the attorney of plaintiff. Held, that the attorney was a competent witness for plaintiff to explain the matter, as his interest was balanced.—Arthur v. Mitchell, 18 Miss. (10 Smedes & M.) 326.

[i] (N. Y. 1848) An attorney is an incompetent witness for his client, on the ground of interest.—Little v. Keon, 1 Code Rep. 4.

[j] (N. Y. 1882) The lien for costs which an attorney has does not disqualify him, by reason of interest, from testifying in his client's action.—Sherman v. Scott, 27 Hun, 331.

[k] (Vt. 1803) Where, in an action on a bail bond, defendant pleaded in bar an accord and satisfaction, in that plaintiff, in consideration of certain money paid to him, had agreed to discontinue the suit and release the person for whom the bail was given, and it appeared that the money was paid to plaintiff's attorney and plaintiff alleged that the payment was for another purpose, the attorney was not incompetent to testify, on account of interest, as the interest which will exclude a person must be direct, and not remote or contingent.—Phelps v. Hall, 2 Tyler, 399.

In criminal prosecution or penal action, see post, § 414.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of liability, see post, § 432.

§ 395. In general.

[a] An interest in the costs of a suit will exclude a witness.

—(Conn. 1786) Benedict v. Brownson, Kirby, 70; (1831) Bill v. Porter, 9 Conn. 23;

(Ind. 1833) Graven v. Updike, 3 Blackf. 272;

(Iowa, 1859) Cherry v. McCorkle, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 522;

(Miss. 1843) Commercial & R. Bank v. Lum, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 414;

(N. J. 1831) Lowrey v. Summers, 12 N. J. Law (7 Halst.) 240;

(S. C. 1837) Carter v. Bennett, Riley, 287.

[b] (Ala. 1852) A witness, who is, individually or with others, directly liable for costs in a cause, is not competent to prove any fact which would relieve him from these costs.—Ware v. Jordan, 21 Ala. 837.

[c] (Conn. 1817) If a witness is interested to avoid the costs of a judgment, though his interest as to the debt is balanced, he is incompetent.—Beach v. Swift, 2 Conn. 269.

[d] (Ga. 1847) A person who has no interest in the subject of the suit, if liable for costs, is incompetent to testify.—Vason v. Merchants' Bank of Macon, 2 Ga. (2 Kelly) 140.

[e] (Me. 1823) It is not the amount of interest which determines the question of the competency of a witness. Any direct interest, however small, is sufficient to exclude him, even if it be only in the costs of the suit.—Scott v. McLellan, 2 Me. (2 Greenl.) 199.

[f] (Mass. 1810) An indorser of an original writ is a competent witness for the original plaintiffs in the trial of the same action by a writ of review, although liable for costs that may be eventually recovered by defendant.—Ely v. Forward, 7 Mass. 25.

[g] (Miss. 1855) Where opposite interests are unequal, a witness has an interest on one side, measured by the excess of the one interest over the other; and therefore, where the interest is equiponderant in other respects, yet if the witness would be liable to costs in one event and not in the other, he is incompetent.—Cason v. Robson, 29 Miss. (7 Cushm.) 97.

[h] (N. Y. 1827) An assignee is not a competent witness for plaintiff, being liable for costs on plaintiff's failure.—Hopkins v. Banks, 7 Cow. 650.

[i] (Pa. 1838) If persons, either before or after suit brought, agree to divide the amount recovered, they are liable to defendant for costs, and cannot testify till the costs of the suit have been paid, though they execute mutual releases.—Mackinley v. McGregor, 3 Whart. 370, 31 Am. Dec. 522.

[j] (Tex. 1859) A liability for costs in one event only disqualifies the witness, though he must pay the debt in either event.—Bennett v. Dowling, 22 Tex. 660.

§ 396. Parties in general.

[a] A party who, as one of a fraudulent combination against which relief is sought, is properly made a party, may be so far liable for costs as to disqualify him as a witness, though no relief is sought against him.

—(N. Y. 1822) Neilson v. McDonald, 6 Johns. Ch. 201, reversed McDonald v. Neilson (1823) 2 Cow. 139, 14 Am. Dec. 431; (1837) Eckford v. De Kay, 6 Paige, 565; (Tenn. 1830) Breedlove v. Stump, 11 Tenn. (3 Yerg.) 257.

[b] (Ala. 1857) One of the contestants against a will, who is a party to the suit, and as such liable for costs, is an incompetent witness to defeat the probate of the will, even though he should release all his distributive interest in the estate.—Taylor v. Kelly, 31 Ala. 59, 68 Am. Dec. 150.

[c] (Ga. 1859) A party interested in the costs merely is not a competent witness for a party joined with him.—Wilkes v. McClung, 29 Ga. 371.

[d] (Ill. 1863) A defendant in chancery called a codefendant as a witness in his behalf. Held, that the witness' liability for costs would render him incompetent, except so far as his evidence had reference to the question of usury.—Kennedy v. Evans, 31 Ill. 258.

[e] (Iowa, 1851) A sheriff appearing as legal plaintiff on behalf of others, and as such interested only in the costs, may be a witness for defendant, though not for the real plaintiffs in interest.—Taylor v. Galland, 3 G. Greene, 17.

[f] (Ky. 1838) Where a witness, who is a party to a suit in equity, is liable for costs, his deposition must be rejected.—Allison's Devisees v. Allison's Heirs, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 90.

[g] (Ky. 1854) An original complainant in a suit in chancery, being liable for costs, is interested in the suit, and is an incompetent witness.—Walker v. McKnight, 54 Ky. (15 B. Mon.) 467, 61 Am. Dec. 190.

[h] (Ky. 1858) Where a right of action is assigned during the pendency of the suit, and by order of court, made without objection on the part of defendant, the assignee is substituted in the action for the assignor, and no security for costs is ordered, all claim on the original plaintiff for costs is waived, and the assignor is a competent witness for the assignee.—Warner v. Turner, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 758.

[i] (La. 1861) A party to a suit cannot be received as a witness if he is liable for costs. He cannot in such case be considered as testifying against his interest.—Butlitt v. Stewart, 16 La. Ann. 22.

[j] (Md. 1848) A party who is a legal plaintiff on the record, and as such responsible for the costs of the suit, is an incompetent witness in the cause, upon the ground of interest.—Selby v. Clayton, 7 Gill, 240.

[k] (Pa.) A plaintiff in a suit, who has assigned all his interest in the event of it, and has paid the accrued costs, but has only given security for accruing costs, is not a competent witness.—(1834) Clement v. Bixler, 3 Watts, 248; (1835) McLughan v. Bovard, 4 Watts, 308.

[l] (Pa. 1843) The plaintiff of record, although not in interest, is prima facie liable for the fees of witnesses subpœnaed in his behalf; and, in an action by the witnesses to recover such fees of another, he is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Utt v. Long, 6 Watts & S. 174.

[m] (Pa. 1851) The petitioners for contesting an election are competent witnesses to testify as to whom they voted for, though the act provided that, if the court decides their petition was not in good faith and on credible grounds, it may impose costs on them.—In re Kneass, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 553; In re Contested Election of Dist. Atty., 1 Phila. 159.

[n] (S. C. 1854) Although, where a motion is made to strike a party's name from the record, it may be required as a condition that costs should be paid, yet if no condition be then imposed, and the party be afterwards offered as a witness, it cannot be made an objection to his competency that he was liable for costs which had accrued before he ceased to be a party.—Freeman v. Jennings, 7 Rich. Law, 381.

[o] (S. C. 1858) A defendant is in equity a competent witness for his codefendants as to matters in which he has no interest, notwithstanding he may be contingently liable for costs.—Etheredge v. Partain, 10 Rich. Eq. 207.

[p] (S. C. 1859) A liability for costs will disqualify a master in chancery from being a witness on his own behalf in a suit brought by him in his official capacity.—Gray v. Ottolengui, 12 Rich. Law, 101.

[q] (Tex. 1859) A defendant who has filed a disclaimer is not thereby released from liability for previous costs, and is not therefore a competent witness for his codefendant.—Dikes v. Miller, 24 Tex. 417.

[r] (Tex. 1860) A bailee acts at his peril in undertaking to decide between conflicting claimants of property in his keeping as warehouseman, neither of whom is his bailor, and, if the claimant against whom he has decided sequestrates the property, such bailee, being liable, in case he decided wrong, for costs of detention till service of the writ, is incompetent to testify in behalf of his codefendant, the other claimant.—Freeman v. Perry, 25 Tex. 611.

§ 397. Liability to indemnify against costs.

[a] (Fla. 1848) Where a witness had verbally assumed the payment of the expenses of a suit for the benefit of plaintiff, so as to create a mere honorary or moral obligation on his part, he is not rendered incompetent to testify for plaintiff.—Williams v. McGhee, 2 Fla. 58.

[b] (Ind. 1841) A witness is not incompetent to testify for plaintiff because he considers himself bound in honor to indemnify plaintiff's surety for costs.—Orput v. Miller, 5 Blackf. 571.

[c] (Ky. 1836) A surety in a bond given by complainants to secure defendant his costs and damages is not a competent witness for complainants; but if his testimony, though admitted, is entirely immaterial, the decree will not be reversed for that cause.—Miller v. Henshaw, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 325.

[d] (La.) A witness is incompetent for a party to whom, liable in any event for the debt, he is liable for costs, only if the result be unfavorable. An interest in the costs disqualifies.—(1829) Lesassier v. Hertzel, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 265; (1845) Montross v. Hillman, 11 Rob. 87.

[e] (Mass. 1832) If, after a vote by a town not to defend an action, the selectmen defend, they are not competent witnesses in the action, because they are bound to indemnify the town for the costs.—Emerson v. Inhabitants of Newbury, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 377.

[f] (N. H. 1839) One who considers himself under an honorary obligation to indemnify for costs, but who is not legally interested, is a competent witness.—Howe v. Howe, 10 N. H. 88.

[g] (N. H. 1860) When a suit is brought by an administrator for the benefit of a residuary legatee, and a third person gives a bond to the administrator to indemnify him against the costs of the suit, such third person is in no sense a party to the suit, and is a competent witness.—Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 114.

[h] (N. Y. 1814) Where one has given a bond of indemnity to plaintiff against the costs of the suit, he is an incompetent witness for plaintiff to show service of notice on defendant to produce certain papers at the trial.—Butler v. Warren, 11 Johns. 57.

[i] (Vt. 1846) Plaintiff, in an action brought by a surety against his co-surety for contribution, had assigned his claim for contribution from defendant to three persons, who had incurred liabilities as sureties for him, and had been decreed a bankrupt after the commencement of his action for contribution. His assignee in bankruptcy had entered and prosecuted the suit, and it did not appear that he entered at the request of the assignees of the claim. One of those assignees, after having transferred his claim in the demand to his coassignees, was offered as a witness on the part of plaintiff. Held, that he was not incompetent by reason of interest arising from any liability to indemnify the assignee in bankruptcy against the costs of the suit.—Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 353.

§ 398. Parties to bills and notes.

[a] (U. S. 1846) A liability for costs in the event of a recovery on notes prevents the person so liable from being a competent witness in a bill in equity to have the notes surrendered and canceled.—Ferson v. Sanger, Fed. Cas. No. 4,752 [1 Woodb. & M. 138].

[b] (Ala. 1843) In an action by the holder of a note against an indorser for the accommodation of the maker, the maker is not a competent witness for defendant without a release of costs.—Commercial Bank of Columbus v. Whitehead, 4 Ala. 637.

[c] (Conn. 1839) A bill was drawn by A. and accepted by B. for the accommodation of B., and was then placed in the hands of A. that he, as the agent of B., might get it discounted and pay over the avails to B. In prosecution of this object, A. delivered the bill, with some other paper, to C., who indorsed such paper, got it discounted, and paid a part of the avails to A. The bill not being paid at maturity, C. brought a suit on it against B., as acceptor, and B., in support of his defense, offered A. as a witness. Held that, as A. was not liable for costs, he had no such interest in favor of either party as would disqualify him as a witness.—Jackson v. Packer, 13 Conn. 342.

[d] (La. 1847) Where a note was indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, he is not a competent witness for the indorser, as in such case he is not indifferent, but by virtue of Civ. Code, § 2260, he is liable for the costs in case of judgment against the indorser, but not liable if in his favor.—Union Bank of Louisiana v. Jones, 2 La. Ann. 345.

[e] (Miss. 1844) In a joint action against the drawer and indorsers of a bill of exchange, each is interested to the extent of costs, and is incompetent to testify for another indorser.—Scott v. Watkins, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 233.

[f] (N. Y. 1841) An indorser is not a competent witness for the maker of a note, in an action by the indorsee, if he is liable for the costs and expenses.—Tilden v. Gardinier, 25 Wend. 663.

[g] (S. C. 1858) The maker of a note is not a competent witness for his accommodation indorser on account of his liability for the costs.—Bank of Charleston v. Chambers, 11 Rich. Law, 657; Same v. Frost, Id.

§ 399. Principal and surety.

[a] In a suit against a surety alone, the principal, being interested to the extent of the costs, is not a competent witness for the defendant without a release.
—(Ala. 1843) Richards v. Griffin, 5 Ala. 195;
(Ga. 1846) Rackley v. Sanders, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 258;
(Ky. 1846) Kelly v. Lank, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 220.

[b] (U. S. 1812) The principal obligor in a bond is not a competent witness for the surety in an action on the bond; the principal being liable to the surety for costs in case the judgment should be against him.—Riddle v. Moss, 11 U. S. (7 Cranch) 206, 3 L. Ed. 317.

[c] (La. 1855) The maker of a note is not a competent witness for his surety in an action by the holder against the surety, as the eventual liability to the surety for costs, if plaintiff prevails, is sufficient to exclude the testimony of the maker.—Neda v. Simon, 10 La. Ann. 700.

[d] (Mass. 1828) In an action by a surety against a cosurety, for contribution, the principal debtor, not being liable for the costs, is a competent witness.—Leavenworth v. Pope, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 419.

[e] (Pa. 1848) Where A. becomes surety for B. without his knowledge or request, B. is not liable over to A. for the costs of an action by the creditor against A.; and B. is therefore a competent witness for A. in an action by the creditor on the contract.—Talmage v. Burlingame, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 21.

[f] (S. C. 1848) Unless something appears to constitute the case an exception to the general rule that the principal is liable for the costs of his surety, the principal is on that ground an incompetent witness on the part of his surety in his defense against their common creditor.—Cleveland v. Covington, 3 Strob. 184.

[g] (S. C. 1851) In an action on a bail bond against the bail, the principal, being liable for the costs in cases of recovery, is an incompetent witness for the bail to prove a render to the sheriff.—Douglass v. Owens, 5 Rich. Law, 149.

§ 400. Trustee, executor or administrator, and guardian.

[a] (Ga. 1859) Though an executor deposit money to pay the costs, he is still interested in the proof of the will, as, if it be proved, he is entitled to have his deposit back again, and is therefore an incompetent witness to prove the will.—Adams v. Sandige, 29 Ga. 563.

[b] (Ill. 1863) Where a surviving partner institutes a suit in regard to the partnership concerns, the administrator of the deceased partner is not a competent witness on behalf of plaintiff, although he may release all his interest in the suit, because, if the party so calling him should be defeated, he would have a right to pay the costs out of the partnership effects, and thus diminish the assets which would come to the hands of the witness as administrator. To that extent he would have an interest in the result of the suit, and therefore be incompetent, notwithstanding his release.—Myers v. Walker, 31 Ill. 353.

[c] (Md. 1825) An executor, administrator, or guardian is inadmissible to testify in an action against or in favor of the estate he represents; his being a party and liable eventually to costs having always been deemed a sufficient objection.—Fenwick's Adm'r v. Forrest, 6 Har. & J. 415.

[d] (Md. 1832) Where a married woman and her trustee united in a mortgage of her separate estate, and a bill was brought to enforce the mortgage, to which they were both made defendants, the trustee being responsible for costs, was not a competent witness for his co-defendant.—Chambers v. Chalmers, 4 Gill & J. 420, 23 Am. Dec. 572.

[e] (Mass. 1828) If one of the trustees of a charity resigns his trust during the pendency of an action, he is still liable for costs, and hence not a competent witness.—Adams v. Leland, 24 Mass. (7 Pick.) 62.

[f] (Mass. 1855) An executor or administrator is not rendered, by St. 1852, c. 312, § 60, a competent witness to matters known to him before he assumed his trust, without first releasing costs, or receiving or being tendered security against costs, as required by St. 1839, c. 107, § 2.—Wood v. Gannett, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 450.

[g] (Miss. 1844) On a revival by the administrator of a suit commenced by his intestate, the administrator is an incompetent witness, as he is liable to costs.—McIntyre v. Ledyard, Smedes & M. Ch. 91.

[h] (N. H. 1839) A guardian requested the administrator of an estate, in which his wards were interested, to object to a claim made before a commissioner, in order that it might be prosecuted in court in due course of law. The administrator declined to do so, unless indemnified. Whereupon the attorney, who appeared for the guardian, gave his personal bond of indemnity, without the request of the guardian. Held, that the guardian was not legally liable to indemnify either the administrator or the attorney, and that he was a competent witness for the administrator on the trial of the claim, notwithstanding he testified that he expected, if the attorney was obliged to pay anything, to indemnify him out of the property of the ward in his hands, but not out of his own.—Howe v. Howe, 10 N. H. 88.

[i] (Pa. 1808) On a feigned issue from the register's court to the court of common pleas to try the validity of a will, the executor, as plaintiff, was offered as a witness in support of the will. Held, that he was not competent; as a party in interest being liable to costs.—Vansant v. Bolleau, 1 Bin. 444.

[j] (Pa. 1843) In an action to recover fees as a witness for plaintiff in an ejectment brought by a lunatic in the name of his committee against one who was alleged to have instigated the action, the executor of the lunatic was a competent witness for plaintiff; it appearing that the estate of the lunatic was sufficient to pay the costs of the ejectment.—Utt v. Long, 6 Watts & S. 174.

[k] (Va. 1875) As a trustee in a deed of trust, who is made a party plaintiff in an original bill to enforce the trust, but whose name is omitted in the amended and supplemental bill, is not liable for costs, he is a competent witness to prove what passed between the grantor in the deed and himself as to the preparation of the deed.—Eacho v. Cosby, 26 Grat. 112.

§ 401. Corporators.

[a] (Cal. 1859) Under our statute corporators are personally liable, and are responsible for the costs, at least, of suits wherein the corporation is a party, and therefore are not competent witnesses.—Mokelumne Hill Canal & Mining Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 265.

[b] (N. H. 1855) A corporator who has assigned his stock is not rendered incompetent by any liability for costs of an action brought by the corporation. The liability for costs accrues by the rendition of the judgment.—Manchester Bank v. White, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 456.

§ 402. Attorneys.

Competency in general, see ante, § 394.

[a] (U. S. 1849) In a suit at equity to restrain a suit at law the attorney of plaintiff in the suit at law is not disqualified as a witness by reason of his being security for costs in the suit at law, where the party for whom he is security has already obtained a judgment against his adversary.—Patton v. Taylor, 48 U. S. (7 How.) 132, 12 L. Ed. 637.

[b] (Ga. 1860) The counsel of a nonresident plaintiff is liable for costs, and therefore is an incompetent witness in behalf of his client.—Robinson v. Towns, 30 Ga. 818.

[c] (Me. 1840) If the writ is indorsed by one of two partners as attorneys at law in his own name, and there is no agreement to indemnify him, the other partner is not bound by the partnership relation to contribute toward any loss, and is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Davis v. Gowen, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 387.

[d] (N. H. 1851) In a case where another person indorsed the writ at the request of the attorney, the latter cannot be a witness, because he is liable over to the indorser for costs.—Meserve v. Hicks, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 295.

[e] (N. Y. 1831) An attorney, prosecuting a suit in the name of plaintiff residing abroad, though for the benefit of a resident here, not being indemnified against his liability to the defendant for costs, is not a competent witness.—Jones v. Savage, 6 Wend. 658.

§ 403. Interest in criminal prosecution in general.

[a] Evidence of the particeps criminis in adultery is admissible.

—(Ala. 1848) State v. Crowley, 13 Ala. 172; (Vt. 1878) State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291.

[b] (U. S. 1809) On an indictment for bigamy, a person having an action pending against the prisoner for goods furnished to the supposed first wife is incompetent, by reason of interest, as a witness to prove the first marriage.—United States v. Maxwell, Fed. Cas. No. 15,749 [1 Cranch, C. C. 605].

[c] (U. S. 1823) A person who has given a receipt for goods, to be delivered to other persons, is a competent witness for the United States, upon a prosecution against another person for stealing the goods.—United States v. Bates, Fed. Cas. No. 14,543 [2 Cranch, C. C. 405].

[d] (Ala. 1851) A witness who has been examined in behalf of the state, on the trial of an indictment against three defendants for grand larceny, to show a common design and confederacy among them, may also testify to the same facts on a subsequent trial of two of the defendants on an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses from the same person at a different time and place.—State v. Davis, 19 Ala. 13.

[e] (Ala. 1879) On the trial of an indictment under Code 1876, § 4205, for selling or giving spirituous, etc., liquors to a person of known intemperate habits, the person to whom the sale was made is a competent witness to testify as to his intemperate habits.—Tatum v. State, 63 Ala. 147.

[f] (Ark. 1883) Under an indictment for gaming, a participant in the game, if not included in the indictment, is a competent witness for defendant.—Robinson v. State, 41 Ark. 400.

[g] (Conn. 1820) In a prosecution for theft, an innkeeper, in whose inn and from whose guest the goods were stolen, is a competent witness to prove the facts alleged in the information.—Salisbury v. State, 6 Conn. 101.

[h] (Ga. 1860) On the trial of an indictment for stabbing, defendant attempted to prove a conspiracy between two of the witnesses and the prosecutor to do him some bodily harm. Held, that the said witnesses were competent to give evidence exculpating themselves.—McAffee v. State, 31 Ga. 411.

[i] (Mass. 1841) A. conveyed an estate to a manufacturing company, which had been previously mortgaged to C., and a judgment was recovered by C. under the mortgage for the possession of the estate, and a petition for a review was afterwards filed by the company, at the hearing of which A. testified that he notified the company, at the time of such conveyance, of the existence of the mortgage, and was afterwards indicted for perjury in giving such testimony. Upon his trial, when the debt which was secured by the mortgage was still unpaid by the company, a stockholder of the company, who had been instrumental in procuring the indictment against A., was offered as a witness. Held, that the interest of such witness went to his credibility, and not to his competency.—Commonwealth v. Farley, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 654.

[j] (Mo. 1879) A witness is not rendered incompetent to testify in a murder trial by the fact the prosecuting officer has promised him that he will dismiss an indictment pending against him after he has testified.—State v. West, 69 Mo. 401, 33 Am. Rep. 506.

[k] (N. H. 1857) Acts 1855, § 4, providing for the suppression of intemperance, and that the officer, complainant, etc., may be examined as witnesses on the trial of the person arrested, as to any matters alleged in the complaint, does not render such persons competent witnesses, as they are competent upon general principles, not having any interest in the result of the proceedings.—State v. McGlynn, 34 N. H. 422.

[l] (N. Y. 1809) In criminal cases, the rule is that the witness is to be received, if the verdict in the cause in which he is produced cannot be given in evidence in an action in which he is a party. The interest which the witness may have in question is not the test, and it seems fit and proper that the rule should be applied to a case of forgery.—People v. Howell, 4 Johns. 296.

[m] (N. Y. 1845) The testimony of witnesses for the prosecution in a criminal case cannot be excluded, because they have contributed funds to carry it on, as such witnesses were not interested in the event of the trial, except in feeling, and that could only affect their credibility.—People v. Cunningham, 1 Denio, 524, 43 Am. Dec. 709.

[n] (N. C. 1800) On an indictment for perjury, a person who was convicted of the charge of assault and battery by the defendant's testimony is a competent witness.—State v. Hasset, 1 N. C. 139.

[o] (Pa. 1795) The bona fide indorser of a forged note, unless he has paid such note, is not a competent witness.—Respublica v. Ross, 2 Yeates, 1; Id., 2 Dall. 239, 1 L. Ed. 364.

[p] (Pa. 1798) In a criminal case, if circumstances be proved from which it is possible for the jury to assume facts amounting to guilt, the person against whom such circumstances have been proved cannot be received as a witness.—Pennsylvania v. Leach, Add. 352.

[q] (Pa. 1818) On trial of an indictment for selling spirituous liquors without license, a taxable resident of the city is a competent witness. It not appearing that he has been actually rated and taxed, the mere liability to assessment is not such an interest as would disqualify.—Commonwealth v. Baird, 4 Serg. & R. 141.

[r] (S. C. 1826) A witness in a criminal case is to be received, if he be not interested in the event of the suit, so that the verdict could be given in evidence in an action in which he was a party.—State v. Foster, 3 McCord, 442.

[s] (Va. 1843) On the trial of an indictment for perjury, the commonwealth offered as a witness a person against whom a civil action was pending, wherein the defendant in the indictment had been summoned as a witness for the opposite party. Held, that the witness so offered for the commonwealth had no such interest in the prosecution as to render him incompetent to testify.—Commonwealth v. Hart, 2 Rob. 819.

[t] (Wis. 1855) A person who has entered into a recognizance for appearance at court to answer to an indictment for seduction is not disqualified to be a witness for defendant at the trial on that ground.—Andrews v. State, 4 Wis. 385.

§ 404. Master of slave.

[a] The owner of a slave is a competent witness in a prosecution involving the life of the slave.

—(Ala. 1845) State v. Marshall, 8 Ala. 302; (1850) Spence v. The State, 17 Ala. 192; (Ark. 1854) Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 555; (Miss. 1841) Isham v. State, 7 Miss. (6 How.) 35; (N. C. 1856) State v. Jim, 48 N. C. 348.

[b] (Ark. 1855) On trial of a slave for rape, the master of the slave is a competent witness in his behalf; his interest going to his credibility.—Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624.

[c] (La. 1859) Slaves are prosecuted as persons, and their right to have all the testimony that may establish their innocence is superior to the principle which would exclude their owners on the ground of interest; and their testimony ought to be received, subject to the credibility which the jury may attach to it.—State v. Peter, 14 La. Ann. 521.

[d] (Tenn. 1839) A master is a competent witness for or against his slave, on his trial for an assault and battery with intent to commit murder in the first degree.—Elijah v. State, 20 Tenn. (1 Humph.) 102.

§ 405. Interest in reward.

[a] (U. S. 1830) It is no objection to the competency of a witness that a reward has been offered to be paid on conviction of the prisoner, to which witness may be entitled.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[b] (Conn. 1791) A person who will be entitled to a premium upon conviction may nevertheless be a witness, unless there are other circumstances which exclude him.—State v. Bennet, 1 Root, 249.

[c] (Ill. 1846) On a trial for murder, a witness swore that he assisted in the arrest of the prisoner, that a reward was offered by the state and by other persons for the arrest and conviction of the murderer, that he had received the reward offered by the state, but had received nothing from the other persons, and had not expected to. Held, that he was a competent witness for the government.—Baxter v. People, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 368.

[d] (Mo. 1888) The fact that a witness is to receive a reward in the event of conviction may affect his credibility in the minds of the jury, but does not disqualify him as a witness.—State v. Rush, 95 Mo. 199, 8 S. W. 221.

§ 406. Person injured in general.

[a] (U. S. 1806) On the trial of an indictment for casting away and destroying a vessel with intent to prejudice the underwriters, the president of the incorporated insurance company, by whom the property was assured, although a stockholder, may be a witness to prove the handwriting of defendant to the manifest of the cargo, because the conviction of defendant would not be evidence in a suit on a policy against the company.—United States v. Johns, Fed. Cas. No. 15,481 [1 Wash. C. C. 363, 4 Dall. 412, 1 L. Ed. 888].

[b] (U. S. 1812) On an indictment for taking usury, the borrower is a competent witness for the prosecution, if he has paid the money and be not the informer.—United States v. Moxley, Fed. Cas. No. 15,830 [2 Cranch, C. C. 64].

[c] (U. S. 1812) The person defrauded is a competent witness for the prosecution, upon an indictment for the fraud.—United States v. Porter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,072 [2 Cranch, C. C. 60].

[d] (Ala. 1849) On the trial of an indictment for malicious mischief, under the fifth section of the fourth article of the Penal Code, the person whose property is injured is not a competent witness for the state.—Blackstone v. State, 15 Ala. 415.

[e] (Ala. 1877) On prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, the person defrauded is a competent witness for the state.—Sandy v. State, 60 Ala. 58.

[f] (Ark. 1857) In an indictment under Dig. c. 51, art. 4, § 8, for wounding an animal, the owner of the animal is a competent witness for the state, under chapter 52, § 176, notwithstanding the provision of the statute that damages shall be assessed in his favor for the injury to his property; his interest going to his credit, not to his competency.—Lemon v. State, 19 Ark. 171.

[g] (Conn. 1811) In an information on the statute against "lascivious carriage and behavior," the person toward whom such acts are committed is a competent witness to prove them.—Fowler v. State, 5 Day, 81.

[h] (Ga. 1850) The injured party is a competent witness under an indictment for forcible entry and detainer.—Kersh v. State, 24 Ga. 191.

[i] (Me. 1851) In a criminal prosecution under Rev. St. c. 162, § 13, for willfully destroying property, the party injured may be a witness for the state.—State v. Pike, 33 Me. 361.

[j] (N. C. 1805) One entitled to restitution of goods taken by forcible entry cannot be a witness.—State v. Fellows, 3 N. C. 340.

[k] (Ohio, 1816) In the prosecution for uttering and publishing counterfeit bank notes, the person whom it was alleged the prisoner intended to defraud was a competent witness, whether or not the record in the case would be evidence for him in an action against the prisoner to recover back the money paid for the note.—Ohio v. Woodruff, Tapp. 58.

[l] (S. C. 1792) The swindling act of 1791 forfeits double the value of the property to the party aggrieved, and he, therefore, is an incompetent witness in a prosecution under the act.—State v. Vaughan, 1 Bay, 282.

[m] (S. C. 1850) Where A. gave a receipt for money, and such receipt was altered, A. was a competent witness to prove the alteration.—State v. Floyd, 5 Strob. 58, 53 Am. Dec. 689.

§ 407. Owner of property stolen.

[a] (U. S. 1842) Under Act Cong. April 30, 1790, for stealing on the high seas, the owner of the property stolen is a competent witness.—United States v. Murphy, 41 U. S. (16 Pet.) 203, 10 L. Ed. 937.

[b] (Ala. 1875) The owner of stolen property is a competent witness against a party charged with having received it, knowing that it had been stolen.—Gassenheimer v. State, 52 Ala. 313.

[c] (Ala. 1875) The fact that, upon conviction of a person for theft, judgment must be rendered in favor of the owner of the property for its value, does not render such owner incompetent as a witness in the case.—Hall v. State, 53 Ala. 634.

[d] (Conn. 1826) In a prosecution for theft, the owner of the goods is a competent witness to prove the facts alleged in the information.—Salisbury v. State, 6 Conn. 101.

[e] (Mass. 1812) A person from whom goods have been stolen is a competent witness for the government, notwithstanding he will be entitled, on a conviction, to the restoration of the goods stolen, if they can be found, or to a satisfaction out of the future earnings of the convict, in case the goods be not restored, and also to a recompense out of the county treasury for his labors and expenses in the prosecution; and, when a party from whom goods were stolen was by law entitled to recover treble the value, he was always received as a competent witness against the offender.—Commonwealth v. Moulton, 9 Mass. 30.

[f] (N. H. 1843) Upon the trial of an indictment for larceny, the party injured is not a competent witness for the prosecution, if he is entitled to treble the value of the property stolen upon the conviction of the prisoner.—State v. Pray, 14 N. H. 464.

[g] (S. C. 1818) The owner of stolen bank bills is a competent witness on the prosecution for the stealing.—State v. Casados, 1 Nott & McC. 91.

§ 408. Forgery.

[a] In forgery, the party whose instrument is alleged to be forged is a competent witness to prove the forgery.

—(U. S. 1827) United States v. Brown, Fed. Cas. No. 14,658 [3 Cranch, C. C. 268];

(Ala. 1828) Pope v. Nance, 1 Stew. 354, 18 Am. Dec. 60;

(La. 1811) Territory v. Barran, 1 Mart. (O. S.) 207; (1883) State v. Morgan, 35 La. Ann. 293;

(S. C. 1833) State v. Whitten, 1 Hill, 100.

[b] (U. S. 1810) The drawee of a forged draft, who has paid the same, is a competent witness to support the prosecution.—United States v. Bates, Fed. Cas. No. 14,542 [2 Cranch, C. C. 1].

[c] (U. S. 1823) The person intended to be injured by a forgery, and the person whose name is forged, if they have not paid money upon the forged paper, are competent to prove the forgery.—United States v. Crandell, Fed. Cas. No. 14,884 [2 Cranch, C. C. 373].

[d] (U. S. 1885) The person, to the prejudice of whose right a forgery is averred to be, is a competent witness to prove the forgery. So, also, is the person whose receipt is averred to be forged.—United States v. Jackson, Fed. Cas. No. 15,454 [4 Cranch, C. C. 577].

[e] (Ala. 1870) On the trial of an indictment for forgery, the agent of a company to whom application has been made for payment of the forged demand against the company is a competent witness to prove his agency.—Manaway v. State, 44 Ala. 375.

[f] (Conn. 1791) On an information for forgery, the person to whom the forged instrument was passed may be a witness.—State v. Nettleton, 1 Root, 308.

[g] (Mass. 1804) A person whose name it is alleged has been forged is not a competent witness to prove the forgery, unless the instrument is produced at the trial.—Commonwealth v. Hutchinson, 1 Mass. 7, 2 Am. Dec. 1.

[h] (Mass. 1807) Where, on the trial for passing a forged instrument, the instrument forged has been secured to protect the offender, the person whose name is charged to have been forged, and who had seen and copied the instrument, was a competent witness to prove the forged instrument.—Commonwealth v. Snell, 3 Mass. 82.

[i] (Mass.) On the trial of an indictment for forgery, the party whose signature is alleged to be forged is a competent witness to prove the forgery, and also the destruction of the instrument alleged to be forged, although civil actions are pending against him to which his only defense may be the forgery of said instrument.—(1807) Commonwealth v. Snell, 3 Mass. 82; (1809) Same v. Waite, 5 Mass. 261; (1840) Same v. Peck, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 428.

[j] (Mass. 1828) Upon the trial of an indictment for forging and uttering a counterfeit bank bill, the cashier of the bank, from which such bill purported to be issued, is a competent witness to the forgery.—Commonwealth v. Read, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 180.

[k] (N. Y. 1809) On an indictment for forging a check in the name of B. on the bank, which check was passed to C., and sent by him to D. to receive the money, but before it came to the hands of C. the forgery was discovered, and the money regained by the bank, B., on being released by the bank, is a competent witness, for he is not answerable to C.; the bank having acted without his directions, and C.'s remedy being against the bank if they had unduly taken the money out of his possession. If the check should be good, B. is not an interested witness, because no consideration had passed between him and C., who must be considered as an original party to the instrument.—People v. Howell, 4 Johns. 296.

[l] (N. C. 1841) On trial of an indictment for forgery, the person whose name is charged to have been forged, and whose interest, supposing the instrument to be genuine, is affected by it either as an obligation or acquiescence, is not, while the instrument remains in force, a competent witness to prove the forgery.—State v. Stanton, 23 N. C. 424.

[m] (N. C. 1843) Judgment was obtained against A. and his surety, B. B. paid a part of the judgment, and took the constable's receipt, which he fraudulently altered, so as to make the sum larger. Afterwards A. settled with B., and repaid him what appeared by the receipt to have bene paid by B. Held, on an indictment against B. for the forgery, that A. was a competent witness.—State v. Bateman, 25 N. C. 474.

[n] (S. C. 1811) A man who was swindled out of the possession of a slave, which he had as an agent to sell for another, was an incompetent witness, on an indictment against the swindler for stealing the slave, in order to prove that a bill of sale, purporting to be signed by the owner of the slave and transferring the property and possession to the swindler, was a forgery, and not made by such witness.—State v. Hope, 2 Brev. 463.

[o] (Vt. 1801) The promisor of a note, alleged to have been forged, cannot be a witness in support of the indictment for forgery, being "a party aggrieved," under the statute for "the punishment of high crimes and misdemeanors."—State v. A. W., 1 Tyler, 260.

§ 409. Perjury.

[a] (U. S. 1814) A defendant in equity is a competent witness upon an indictment against the plaintiff in equity for perjury in his affidavit made to procure an injunction.—United States v. Burford, Fed. Cas. No. 14,685 [2 Cranch, C. C. 102].

[b] (N. C. 1803) On the trial of one accused of perjury, a person who was interested in proving defendant guilty, because he would thereby exclude his testimony against him in a civil suit then pending, was incompetent to testify, as was also the adverse party in the civil suit, whose interest it was to secure the testimony of defendant.—State v. Hamilton, 3 N. C. 288.

[c] (S. C. 1824) One who had been charged with a crime by the oath of defendant was a competent witness against him on his trial for perjury.—State v. McKennan, Harp. 302.

[d] (Vt. 1797) A party to a suit is not disqualified as a witness to prove perjury therein, if a conviction would not entitle him to a new trial, or to damages as a party injured.—State v. Bishop, 1 D. Chip. 120.

§ 410. Prosecutor.

[a] (Ala. 1839) In an indictment for malicious mischief, the prosecutor, whose property has been injured, is a competent witness for the prosecution.—State v. Truss, 9 Port. 126.

[b] (Ala. 1877) On trial for trespass after warning, under Code 1876, §§ 4419, 4420, the prosecuting witness is a competent witness for the state.—Daniels v. State, 60 Ala. 56.

[c] (Ala. 1882) The prosecutor, in a trial for trespass after warning, is not incompetent as a witness because he is entitled to the fine in case of conviction.—Bohannon v. State, 73 Ala. 47.

[d] (Iowa, 1843) A private prosecutor is a competent witness for the government, although, on conviction of defendant, he will be entitled to recover of him double the amount stolen from the prosecutor, and although, on an acquittal of defendant, the prosecutor may be liable for the costs.—United States v. Everest, 1 Morris, 206.

[e] (Me. 1842) A person, by appearing voluntarily before the grand jury as a witness in support of a complaint, is not therefore to be deemed the complainant, but it must appear of record.—State v. Bailey, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 62.

[f] (N. C. 1798) In an indictment for perjury in swearing to attendance as a witness, the prosecutor is a competent witness, though he is the person liable to pay for the attendance to which the defendant had sworn.—State v. Wyatt, 3 N. C. 56.

[g] (S. C. 1858) In an indictment for perjury, the prosecutor, unless he has a direct, certain, and immediate interest in the record, is a competent witness.—State v. Farrow, 10 Rich. Law, 165.

[h] (S. C. 1866) The fact that the prosecutor on the trial of an indictment for larceny is a party to a civil suit which is pending for an alleged trespass in taking the stolen goods does not make him incompetent as a witness.—State v. McGrew, 13 Rich. Law, 316.

§ 411. Interest in fine or penalty in general.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 529.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 440.

[a] (U. S. 1807) The owner of goods stolen by a slave is not a competent witness for the prosecution, where it appears that he is entitled to one-half of the fine.—United States v. Rhodes, Fed. Cas. No. 16,152 [1 Cranch, C. C. 447].

[b] (U. S. 1808) Citizens of a municipal corporation are competent witnesses in an action of debt for a penalty for violation of a by-law.—Alexandria v. Brockett, Fed. Cas. No. 181 [1 Cranch, C. C. 505].

[c] (Ala. 1869) In a prosecution for malicious injury to animals, if the fine for the offense will go to the party injured, he is an interested witness, and cannot be examined on behalf of the state, if objection be made by the accused.—Northcot v. State, 43 Ala. 330.

[d] (Ga. 1854) Where the interest of the citizens of a county in the event of a suit is of the same kind which the citizens of a county have in the result of an indictment of an offense punishable by fine, they are not disqualified by such interest as witnesses in that suit.—Justices of Inferior Court of Pike County v. Griffin & W. P. Plank Road Co., 15 Ga. 39.

[e] (Ill. 1820) A person whose name is forged is a competent witness to prove the forgery, although upon conviction he receives one-half of the fine imposed.—Noble v. People, 1 Ill. (Breese) 54.

[f] (Ill. 1865) A wharfmaster, entitled to a certain percentage of wharfage fees collected, is not an incompetent witness on the ground of interest in a suit by the city to recover the penalty imposed by its ordinances on the owners, etc., of steamboats neglecting to pay wharfage fees. The penalty cannot be regarded as wharfage fees.—City of Beardstown v. Moody, 36 Ill. 347.

[g] (Ky. 1831) If an attorney has a per cent. on fines collected, he is an incompetent witness in any prosecution to inflict such fine.—Commonwealth v. Moore, 28 Ky. (5 J. J. Marsh.) 655.

[h] (Me. 1843) The inhabitants of the town wherein the offense is alleged to have been committed are competent witnesses to sustain the prosecution, on the trial of an indictment against an inhabitant of the same town for being a common seller of wine, brandy, rum, and other strong liquors without license, contrary to the provisions of Rev. St. c. 36, § 17, although the town would be entitled to the penalty incurred.—State v. Stuart, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 111.

[i] (Me. 1852) Inhabitants of a town, to which the law appropriates a penalty which may be recovered in a criminal case, are not therefore incompetent witnesses for the state in such case.—State v. Woodward, 34 Me. 293.

[j] (N. Y. 1812) In a qui tam action to recover a penalty given by the act concerning slaves, a member of a society for the manumission of slaves was a competent witness, he being under no legal obligation to contribute to the expense of the suit and having no interest in the event, though he testify on his voir dire that if plaintiff should fail he thought he should, as a member of the society, if asked, contribute to compensate plaintiff.—Gilpin v. Vincent, 9 Johns. 219.

[k] (Pa. 1856) An agreement between the informer and the witness to share the money to be recovered in a qui tam action renders him incompetent to testify in the suit, but his competency may be restored by a rescission of the contract before suit brought. If rescinded after suit brought, his liability for costs would still render him incompetent.—Commonwealth v. Ohio & P. R. Co., 1 Grant, Cas. 329.

§ 412. Informer or complainant.

[a] (U. S. 1802) In the District of Columbia, the informer is not entitled to one-half of the penalty imposed by Acts Md. 1777, c. 12, § 9, on a minister for marrying a woman under 16 years of age without the consent of her parents or guardian, and is therefore a competent witness in such action.—United States v. McCormick, Fed. Cas. No. 15,662 [1 Cranch, C. C. 106].

[b] (U. S. 1802) Upon an indictment for retailing spirituous liquors, where the informer is not entitled to any part of the penalty, he is a competent witness.—United States v. Voss, Fed. Cas. No. 16,628 [1 Cranch, C. C. 101].

[c] (U. S.) An informer is a competent witness, although he may receive a part of the penalty, though this is not strictly the rule of the common law. The law is, however, now fully established, and is founded on necessity and policy.—(1842) United States v. Patterson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,009 [3 McLean, 53]; (1843) Id., 16,010 [3 McLean, 299].

[d] (U. S. 1856) An inspector under Act Aug. 30, 1852, c. 106, §§ 3–5 (10 Stat. 62), requiring steam vessels carrying passengers to be provided with certain safety appliances, although he may be the informer, is not entitled to any part of the penalty (as he would have been under the act to which this is an addition), and is therefore not disqualified by interest from testifying in behalf of the libelants.—United States v. The Thomas Swan, Fed. Cas. No. 16,480.

[e] (Ala. 1849) A witness, sworn in support of an indictment founded on a statute which, in case of conviction, gives one-half the penalty to the informer, is not to be considered the informer, from the mere fact that he is the only witness in the case.—Williamson v. State, 16 Ala. 431.

[f] (Conn. 1786) Where the prosecutor in a qui tam action for breach of the peace by assault and battery committed on him demands personal damages, he is incompetent as a witness in the action.—Bill v. Scott, Kirby, 62.

[g] (Conn. 1792) In an action on the statute for passing a counterfeit certificate, the prosecutor can testify only touching defendant's passing the certificate to him.—Bradley v. Couch, 1 Root, 361.

[h] (Conn. 1792) On a qui tam prosecution for larceny, the prosecutor may be admitted to testify to the loss of the goods and the identity of them.—Gilbert v. Steadman, 1 Root, 403.

[i] (Me. 1848) Where a declaration in an action to recover a penalty alleges that the plaintiffs, being the inhabitants of a town, prosecute the action by certain persons named, one of the persons so named does not thereby become a party to the suit, and is not in consequence thereof rendered incompetent as a witness; and, even if he were to be considered a party, he is still made a competent witness in such case by Laws 1846, c. 205, § 6.—Inhabitants of New Gloucester v. Bridgham, 28 Me. (15 Shep.) 60.

[j] (Miss. 1855) The rule which excludes a prosecutor or informer from testifying in a case when the whole or part of the penalty is given by the statute to him, and thus rendering him interested in the event of the suit, has several exceptions, to wit: (1) When the statute cannot be enforced without the aid of such a witness. (2) In cases of necessity, when no other evidence can reasonably be expected. (3) Where, though a person is to receive a reward on the conviction of an offender, it can be inferred from the language or the professed objects of the statute which gives the penalty to the informer that it was intended to make him a competent witness.—Murphy v. State, 28 Miss. (6 Cushm.) 637.

[k] (Pa. 1831) A prosecutor for the penalties imposed by Act April 22, 1794, entitled "An act for the prevention of vice and immorality," is not a competent witness, and cannot become such by an assignment of the interest he may have in the penalties.—Commonwealth v. Hargesheimer, 1 Ashm. 413.

[l] (Pa. 1847) Act March 16, 1848, provides that any person who shall disturb a religious meeting shall be liable to a fine, to be collected for the benefit of the state. Held that, since no part of the fine imposed was payable to the complainant in a prosecution under such statute, he was a competent witness for the state.—Commonwealth v. Cane, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 265.

[m] (S. C. 1806) An informer, who is to have the whole or any part of the penalty imposed by a penal statute, cannot be a witness in any action or proceeding to recover the penalty.—City of Charleston v. Sibley, 2 Brev. 34.

§ 413. Officer.

[a] (U. S. 1896) An officer of the United States, who carries on a correspondence with one suspected of using the mails for illegal purposes in order to obtain evidence on which to base a prosecution, is not thereby disqualified from testifying in respect to an offense committed by defendant in the course of such correspondence.—Andrews v. United States, 162 U. S. 420, 16 Sup. Ct. 798, 40 L. Ed. 1023, following Grimm v. United States (1895) 156 U. S. 604, 15 Sup. Ct. 470, 39 L. Ed. 550.

[b] (Ky. 1846) An officer, whose fees depend on the contingency of the conviction of one accused, is an incompetent witness on his trial.—Bridgeford v. City of Lexington, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 47.

[c] (Me. 1838) The militia acts of 1834 and 1837, making the captain of a company a competent witness in an action for fine or forfeiture by the clerk, does not prevent him from rendering himself incompetent by the assumption of interest not imposed by his official station.—Bean v. Lane, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 190.

[d] (Mass. 1823) Where an officer would be liable as a trespasser for arresting a prisoner, if arrested wrongfully, the objection to the officer as a witness on the trial of the prisoner goes only to his credibility, and not to his competency.—Commonwealth v. Merrill, Thacher, Cr. Cas. 1.

[e] (Mass. 1826) The clerk of a militia company, being interested in the fine to be imposed in a suit by him against a private for neglect of militia duty, is incompetent to testify to any other fact than that he gave notice to the private to appear for duty, as St. 1809, c. 108, § 18, does not allow him to testify to other facts.—Commonwealth v. Paull, 21 Mass. (4 Pick.) 251.

[f] (Mass. 1831) The commander of a company has no interest in the money collected for fines, and he may therefore be a witness on a prosecution for a fine.—Burt v. Dimmock, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 355.

[g] (N. H. 1835) The fact that three-fourths of a military fine is by the statute to be paid over to the captain, to be expended in defraying the necessary expenses of the company, does not constitute such an interest as to disqualify him as a witness in a prosecution for such fine.—State v. Wilson, 7 N. H. 543.

[h] (Ohio, 1849) In a suit in the name of the state against an individual to recover a penalty incurred by a violation of the canal law, a collector of tolls who has instituted the prosecution is a competent witness, notwithstanding he may be liable in damages to the party aggrieved where he has commenced the suit without probable cause.—Smith v. State, 18 Ohio, 89.

§ 414. Liability for costs.

[a] (U. S. 1806) A mere honorary obligation to indemnify a prosecutor, who is liable for costs, is not a sufficient interest to exclude the testimony of the witness.—United States v. Lyles, Fed. Cas. No. 15,645 [1 Cranch, C. C. 322].

[b] (U. S. 1809) The prosecutor whose name is indorsed on an indictment for a misdemeanor is not a competent witness for the prosecution, where the prosecutor is made liable by statute for costs, where the defendant is not found guilty.—United States v. Birch, Fed. Cas. No. 14,595 [1 Cranch, C. C. 571].

[c] (Ky. 1835) The fact that a witness in a criminal case feels himself bound to save the prosecutor harmless from any costs incurred goes to his credit, but not to his competency.—Commonwealth v. Gore, 33 Ky. (3 Dana) 474.

[d] (Miss. 1818) A prosecutor in an indictment is a competent witness for the state upon the trial, though liable for costs if the prosecution be found frivolous or malicious.—State v. Blennerhassett, Walk. 7.

[e] (Va. 1823) The prosecutor in an information for assault and battery who is liable for the costs is a competent witness for the commonwealth.—Baker v. Commonwealth, 2 Va. Cas. 353.

§ 415. In general.

[a] Where a husband or wife is an incompetent witness by reason of interest, the other is also incompetent.
—(Ky. 1856) Smead v. Williamson, 55 Ky. (16 B. Mon.) 492;
(Mass. 1824) Griffin v. Brown, 19 Mass. (2 Pick.) 304;
(Mo. 1885) Swift v. Martin, 19 Mo. App. 488;
(S. C. 1853) Vandiver v. Glaspy, 7 Rich. Law, 14;
(Tex. 1873) Bell v. Byington, 37 Tex. 510.

[b] (Ky. 1867) A husband's testimony against his own interest and against the interest of his divorced wife is competent if it divulges no communication between them during coverture.—Storms v. Storms, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 77.

[c] (Mo. 1862) The wife of one of the defendants is not a competent witness for the other defendants who have joined in the defense.—Tomlinson v. Lynch, 32 Mo. 160.

[d] (N. H. 1849) The testimony of the wife of one defendant in equity is not admissible upon a question of fact, in which all the defendants are jointly interested.—Craig v. Kittredge, 20 N. H. 169.

[e] (Pa. 1860) An executor being an incompetent witness in a suit in which he is a party, notwithstanding he has no interest, his wife is also incompetent; husband and wife being so far identical in interest that when one is a party to the record the other is not competent.—Harwood v. Steel, 4 Phila. 88.

[f] (Tex. 1884) A wife need not be a party to a suit wherein her husband is a party, in order that she shall be incompetent, under the statute, to testify. If she has with him a community interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, she is incompetent.—Simpson v. Brotherton, 62 Tex. 170.

[g] (Vt. 1847) A married woman can only be admitted as a witness in a case when her husband would be a competent witness in the same case.—Abbott v. Clark, 19 Vt. 444.

§ 416. Nature and extent of interest in general.

[a] (Ala. 1841) It is no objection to a witness, in a trial of the right of property between an attaching creditor and a claimant, that he married the widow of the coexecutor of the claimant, unless it be shown that her former husband wasted the estate of his testator, and that the witness obtained by the marriage an estate chargeable with such devastavit.—Harrell v. Floyd, 3 Ala. 16.

[b] (Ala. 1845) When, by the terms of a written contract, money is to be paid to one as the agent of a married woman, the husband is not a competent witness to sustain the contract, in a suit by the agent to enforce payment.—Wier v. Buford, 8 Ala. 134.

[c] (Ill. 1890) The wife of a person who had given bonds for costs as next friend, in an action of trespass vi et armis, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Belk v. Cooper, 34 Ill. App. 649.

[d] (Ill. 1893) In an action to determine the rights of the parties to wall space for advertising under contracts from the same person, who is not a party to the action, the wife of such person is a competent witness.—R. J. Gunning Co. v. Cusack, 50 Ill. App. 290.

[e] (La. 1888) A wife who transfers a judgment, selling all her rights to it, and to all suits arising from it, warrants the existence of the debt, and has such an interest in a suit to revive said judgment as renders her husband incompetent as a witness, under Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2281, making a husband an incompetent witness when the wife has an interest in the suit.—Johnson v. Boice, 40 La. Ann. 273, 4 South. 163, 8 Am. St. Rep. 528.

[f] (Mass. 1839) Although the effect of a husband's testimony may be to increase a fund given to trustees for the benefit of his wife, and the income of which is to be paid over to her for her sole use, and upon her own receipts under her hand, he is not therefore an incompetent witness, his interest being contingent.—Dyer v. Homer, 39 Mass. (22 Pick.) 253.

[g] (Miss. 1849) In an action by a bank, a man whose wife is a stockholder in the bank is not a competent witness for the bank.—Routh v. Agricultural Bank, 20 Miss. (12 Smedes & M.) 161.

[h] (N. J. 1840) A wife may not testify in a suit in which the rights of her husband, though not a party, would be concluded by any verdict that could be rendered therein.—Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Law (3 Har.) 87.

[i] (N. J. 1855) At the trial of an action brought by a copartnership, a witness is incompetent to testify whose wife has money invested in the business of the firm.—Jackson v. Miller, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 90.

[j] (N. Y. 1854) The wife of the assignor of a claim is a competent witness for the assignee.—Prince v. Down, 2 E. D. Smith, 525.

[k] (Pa. 1890) An executor's executor may establish his decedent's account from declarations of the two decedents, though the wife of such living executor is administratrix d. b. n. of the original testator and interested in the estate.—In re Law's Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 296.

[l] (Tex. 1866) The testimony of a wife is not admissible when her husband has a contingent interest in the result of the suit favorable to the party for whom her testimony is offered, e. g., when the husband's fees as attorney depend upon it.—Whitehead v. Foley, 28 Tex. 268.

[m] (Vt. 1857) In a suit against an intestate estate, the testimony of a married woman, who is an heir at law, and whose husband has signed a bond with the administrator to prosecute the suit on appeal, is not inadmissible on account of the interest of her husband, under the present law, no confidence between husband and wife appearing to be violated.—Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Lincoln's Estate, 29 Vt. (3 Williams) 206.

[n] (Vt. 1882) Where one not a party to a suit is interested in its result, his wife cannot testify; and he is so interested if the judgment can be used for or against him in another case to which he may be made a party.—Labaree v. Wood, 54 Vt. 452.

[o] (Va. 1891) The fact that a bond and trust deed have been assigned to the wife of the grantor renders the latter incompetent as a witness in an action by creditors to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent.—Thornton v. Gaar, 87 Va. 315, 12 S. E. 753.

[p] (Va. 1891) The husband's interest in a suit by his creditors to set aside a deed of trust from him for his wife's benefit renders the wife incompetent as a witness.—De Farges v. Ryland, 87 Va. 404, 12 S. E. 805, 24 Am. St. Rep. 659.

§ 417. Interest in property.

[a] (U. S. 1844) On a motion to dismiss an ejectment, on the ground that the lessor of plaintiff was dead at the time of its institution, the wife is not a competent witness to prove that her husband is living.—Gilleland v. Martin, Fed. Cas. No. 5,433 [3 McLean, 490].

[b] (Ala. 1843) Where the claimant of property attached is the trustee of a wife, the husband is not a competent witness for the claimant.—Hall v. Dargan, 4 Ala. 696.

[c] (Ala. 1845) The wife of defendant in execution is a competent witness for the claimant, on a trial of right of property under the statutes.—Hemphill v. Townsend, 7 Ala. 853.

[d] (Ark. 1860) The wife of a grantor in a deed for a valuable consideration with general warranty is an incompetent witness to sustain the title of the grantee.—Leach v. Fowler's Devisees, 22 Ark. 143.

[e] (Cal. 1863) A. and B., married women, sole traders, each brought suits against a sheriff for seizing their property on execution against their husbands, who had been partners, and all parties agreed that B.'s suit should be determined by the result of A.'s. Held, that B.'s husband was admissible as a witness in A.'s suit, she calling him, his interest being adverse to hers.—Abrams v. Howard, 23 Cal. 388.

[f] (Ga. 1860) A husband is not a competent witness to testify in respect to the separate estate of his wife, when she is the direct beneficiary of the suit, although she is not a party to the record.—Cobb v. Edmondson, 30 Ga. 30.

[g] (Ill. 1878) In a suit for the partition of lands, in which the question of advancements made by the common ancestor was involved, held, that the clause of a statute which inhibited parties in interest or of record in such cases from becoming witnesses on their own motion had no application; and that, as the litigation concerned the separate property of married women in a case where they might properly be witnesses, their husbands were also competent witnesses in their behalf.—Pigg v. Carroll, 89 Ill. 205.

[h] (Ky. 1842) A feme covert has no legal interest in giving her husband an estate for life rather than a fee simple, and is a competent witness to establish a limitation in favor of her own children.—Knight v. Donahoo's Heirs, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 277.

[i] (La. 1847) Where a party to a petitory action is in joint possession of the property with a wife, whose husband ships and controls the crops, the latter is not a good witness for such party.—Beard v. Morancy, 2 La. Ann. 347.

[j] (Md. 1790) In ejectment, the wife of plaintiff's father is a competent witness to prove that her husband destroyed his father's will.—Wilmot's Lessee v. Talbot, 3 Har. & McH. 2, 1 Am. Dec. 374.

[k] (Md. 1824) In an action of replevin brought by A. against B. to recover two slaves held by B. under a bill of sale from C., the wife of C. is an incompetent witness to prove title in C. at the time of the execution of the bill of sale.—Corse v. Patterson, 6 Har. & J. 153.

[l] (N. H. 1848) On the trial of an issue between plaintiff and a trustee, the wife of the debtor is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Coburn v. Mellen, 19 N. H. 198.

[m] (N. Y. 1809) A feme covert, who has executed a deed with her husband, is a competent witness to prove that the deed has been antedated; for, although antedated, an acknowledgment made by her at any time would bar her right to dower, and, if not acknowledged, her signing is no bar in New York, so that in neither way is she interested.—Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. 230, 4 Am. Dec. 267.

[n] (N. Y. 1832) The contingent right of the wife, during the life of her husband, to dower in land to which he never had the legal title, is not such an interest as to disqualify her as a witness, in a suit by the assignee of the husband's right under a contract to convey, for a specific performance of such contract.—Town v. Needham, 3 Paige, 545, 24 Am. Dec. 246.

[o] (N. C. 1799) The husband of the widow of the lessor of plaintiff's ancestor may be a witness for plaintiff.—Beatty's Heirs v. ——, 1 N. C. 104.

[q] (Pa. 1863) Where property claimed by a wife is attached for the debt of her husband, he is not a competent witness for the garnishee on the trial of the attachment.—Gross v. Reddig, 45 Pa. (9 Wright) 406.

[r] (S. C. 1841) The wife of a tenant is a competent witness between the landlord and a third person, where such tenant is a competent witness.—Seigling v. Main, 1 McMul. 252.

[s] (Vt. 1892) In trover for certain hay, where the testimony of a man and his wife tends to show that the hay in question belonged to the wife, and that defendant fed it to her stock by her direction, the wife is a party in interest, and hence her husband is an incompetent witness.—Banister v. Ovitt, 64 Vt. 580, 24 Atl. 1117.

[t] (Va. 1806) In trover by R. against B. for goods which had been lent by B. to the wife of C., and conveyed by C. to R., the wife of C. is a competent witness, since in suits in which the husband is not immediately and certainly interested, but may be so eventually, the wife is a competent witness.—Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. 154.

[u] (Va. 1836) Land, being subject to two successive mortgages, the first being unrecorded, was sold under the provisions of the second mortgage, the second mortgagee becoming the purchaser. In a proceeding by the first mortgagee against the mortgagor and second mortgagee to enforce his mortgage, the mortgagor's wife is not a competent witness to prove notice of the first mortgage to the sec-end mortgagee.—Sitlington v. Brown, 7 Leigh, 271.

[v] (Va. 1894) A woman whose husband is tenant by curtesy initiate of her property cannot testify in a suit in which his interest in said property is involved.—Ginter v. Breeden, 90 Va. 565, 19 S. E. 656.

§ 418. Husband of legatee or heir.

[a] (U. S. 1886) In a suit by the receiver of a national bank against husband and wife jointly, to reach assets in the hands of the husband as executor of a deceased shareholder, and, on failure of such assets, to reach the interest of the wife as residuary legatee, such wife is the real party defendant in interest, and, under the laws of Vermont, the husband is not a competent witness.—Witters v. Sowles (C. C.) 28 Fed. 121.

[b] (Ala. 1859) The husband of a distributee who would gain by setting aside the will is not a competent witness against it.—Walker v. Walker's Ex'r, 34 Ala. 469.

[c] (Cal. 1859) The husband of an heiress is incompetent as a witness for the administrator in a foreclosure suit on a mortgage to the testator.—Lisman v. Early, 12 Cal. 282.

[d] (Conn. 1831) The defendant, in an action for the diversion of a water course by means of a dam on land occupied by him, offered as a witness, to establish his right, the husband of one of the heirs of A. It appeared that the land on which the dam was erected, and the water used, was held by B., the widow of A., as tenant in dower, and that the witness, if living at the death of B., would be entitled to a distributive share in such land. Held, that he was a competent witness, having no vested interest in the land.—Adams v. Butts, 9 Conn. 79.

[e] (Ga. 1860) In a suit by a distributeee against his ancestor's administrator to recover his share of property of the estate purchased by the administrator at his own sale, the husband of another distributee is a competent witness.—Shine v. Redwine, 30 Ga. 780.

[f] (Ind. 1861) In a suit between A. and B. relating to the boundaries of their adjoining lots, bought of C., a common grantor, B. filed a counterclaim, making the heirs of C. parties, alleging a mistake in the description in his deed, and asking to have it reformed, or for a proper rebatement of the purchase money by the heirs of C. A. offered D., the husband of one of C.'s heirs, as a witness in the suit. Held that, as between A. and B., D. was a competent witness, though he might not be so between B. and the heirs of C.—Charles v. Cones, 16 Ind. 492.

[g] (Md. 1856) The husband of a daughter of an intestate whose estate is not shown to be solvent is a competent witness in favor of the estate without a release.—Mitchell v. Clagett, 9 Md. 42.

[h] (Pa. 1791) In a suit against executors for money devised to plaintiff, defendants gave in evidence an agreement signed by the children and devisees referring the division to arbitrators, and gave evidence of an acceptance of the award. Plaintiff contended that the arbitrators had agreed on a prior award which was materially variant from the one shown, and that plaintiff and F., who had married a daughter of the testator, understanding that the arbitrators were about to reconsider the award, had revoked their authority. Held, that F. was a competent witness, as, not being directly interested in the event in the sense that the verdict could be used against him, his interest went to his credibility and not to his competency.—Cornogg v. Abraham, 1 Yeates, 84.

[i] (Pa. 1869) On the trial of an issue between the administrator and a party to whom the intestate has assigned bonds, to decide whether such assignments were delivered during the lifetime of the intestate, the husbands of daughters of the intestate are not competent witnesses, because of the interest of the daughters in the result.—Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 281.

[j] (Pa. 1878) At a hearing on an administration account, the husband of an exceptant testified before and after objection made. Held, that his testimony after objection was incompetent.—In re Bierly's Estate, *81 Pa. (32 P. F. Smith) 419.

[k] (S. C. 1837) Where a tenant for life of slaves loaned them to her son, and, after her death, the residue of her property was divided between her son and a daughter, held, on a bill by the remainderman to recover the slaves specifically of the son, that the husband of the daughter was a competent witness to prove the identity of the slaves, although, in case of a failure of complainant to prove their identity, and of defendant to prove that they had perished, the witness might be liable to contribute to their value, on the estate of the tenant for life being held liable.—Horry v. Glover, 2 Hill, Eq. 515.

[l] (Tex. 1859) Where the wife is a distributee, the husband is not a competent witness for the administrator in an action against him.—Gilkey v. Peeler, 22 Tex. 663.

[m] (Va. 1889) The husband of a distributee of an estate is incompetent to testify on his wife's behalf, in a suit involving the settlement of the administration accounts to which he and his wife are parties, as to a question of the allowance of disbursements made by the administratrix, as the wife would be directly benefited by its disallowance.—Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. 817.

§ 419. Husband or wife of party to bill or note.

[a] (Ill. 1889) In a suit against the surety on a note, where the defense is payment, the maker is directly interested in the event, and his wife is therefore incompetent to testify either for or against his interest, notwithstanding he is not a party to the suit.—Craig v. Miller, 34 Ill. App. 325, affirmed (1890) 133 Ill. 300, 24 N. E. 431.

[b] (Ill. 1890) In an action against one of two joint makers of a note, where the defense is payment by the other maker, the wife of such other maker is not a competent witness, since her husband is directly interested in the result of the action.—Craig v. Miller, 133 Ill. 300, 24 N. E. 431, limiting Lincoln Ave. & Niles Center Gravel-Road Co. v. Madans (1882) 102 Ill. 417.

[c] (Ill. 1894) In an action on a note by an assignee, where defendant denies its execution, the wife of the assignor and payee is not a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the genuineness of the note.—Woolverton v. Sumner, 53 Ill. App. 115, following Craig v. Miller (1890) 133 Ill. 300, 24 N. E. 431.

[d] (Ind. 1878) The assignor's wife is a competent witness for the assignee in his action against the maker of a note to recover thereon, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure it, where no question is raised as to the assignment.—Morgan v. Hyatt, 62 Ind. 560.

[e] (Md. 1832) In an action on the special guaranty of a note, brought by the payee of the note against the guarantor, the wife of the maker is not a competent witness to prove the note void for usury in its inception, without a sufficient release.—Thomas v. Catheral, 5 Gill & J. 23.

[f] (Mass. 1814) In an action on a note given to a wife when she was sole, and indorsed by her husband, she is admissible to prove payment before indorsement.—Fitch v. Hill, 11 Mass. 286.

[g] (N. Y. 1854) In an action by the holder on a note transferred after maturity, the payee is a competent witness for plaintiff, though there is no evidence that he paid value for the note, the presumption being that he did; and, therefore, in such a case, the wife of the payee is competent to testify for plaintiff.—Seeley v. Engell, 17 Barb. 530.

[h] (N. Y. 1859) A person offered as a witness for defendant was rejected on the ground that defendant had signed the notes, on which the action was brought, as surety for the witness' wife, who was not joined in the suit, and, if defendant should succeed, the record would be evidence in favor of the wife in an action to charge her. Held, that the witness offered was competent, notwithstanding his relation to the principal debtor, though he would not have been competent had she been a party.—Deck v. Johnson, 30 Barb. 283.

[i] (Vt. 1883) The wife of the payee of a note which has been transferred may testify in behalf of the maker in a suit brought by the holder, her testimony involving no breach of marital confidence, and it not appearing that her husband has any interest in the event of the suit.—Armstrong v. Noble, 55 Vt. 428.

§ 420. Criminal prosecutions.

[a] (U. S. 1806) The wife of one whose goods are stolen is not a competent witness for the prosecution unless the husband has released to the United States his share of the fine.—United States v. Shorter, Fed. Cas. No. 16,283 [1 Cranch, C. C. 315].

[b] (Ala. 1877) The wife of one who had been charged with the murder for which defendant alone was indicted and tried is competent to testify as to facts exculpatory of her husband, whom the defense seeks to prove the guilty agent in the murder.—Fincher v. State, 58 Ala. 215.

[c] (Ark. 1894) Where two persons are charged, in separate indictments, with the same murder, and it does not appear which is charged as principal, or that a conspiracy was formed by them to commit the murder, the wife of one is a competent witness for the other, unless her testimony tends directly to acquit her husband.—Gill v. State, 59 Ark. 422, 27 S. W. 598.

[d] (Ind. 1826) On the trial of an indictment against A. for receiving goods knowing them to be stolen, the wife of C. was offered as a witness for the prosecution. The evidence was objected to on the ground that C. had been charged on affidavit before a justice with stealing the same goods before A. was accused of receiving them; that the charge still existed; that the officers of justice were in pursuit of C., and that the witness had frequently expressed fears that C. would be taken and convicted of larceny. Held, that the objection was insufficient.—Redman v. State, 1 Blackf. 29.

[e] (N. Y. 1860) The wife of one who is himself a competent witness is competent.—Wixson v. People, 5 Parker, Cr. R. 119.

[f] (Pa. 1871) The evidence of the prosecutor's wife is admissible to prove a defense.—Commonwealth v. Paterson, 8 Phila. 609.

[g] (R. I. 1860) The wife of one who prosecutes criminally for an assault and battery committed on her person is a competent witness to sustain the complaint, notwithstanding her husband has entered into a recognizance, as required by statute, to pay costs in the event that the prosecution fails.—State v. Borden, 6 R. I. 495.

§ 421. —— Husband or wife of codefendant in general.

[a] On trial of several defendants jointly, the wife of one is not a competent witness for the others.

—(Ala. 1876) Childs v. State, 55 Ala. 25; (1894) Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, 17 South. 102;

(Ark. 1881) Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67; (1883) Carr v. State, 42 Ark. 204;

(Mass. 1804) Commonwealth v. Easland, 1 Mass. 15; (1854) Commonwealth v. Robinson, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 555.

[b] (U. S. 1826) If two be indicted jointly for assault and battery, the wife of one of them cannot be a witness for the other, although they sever in their pleas.—United States v. Wade, Fed. Cas. No. 16,629 [2 Cranch, C. C. 680].

[c] (Ala. 1878) The husband of a woman, jointly indicted with her paramour for living in adultery, is incompetent to testify against either of them.—Cotton v. State, 62 Ala. 12.

[d] (Ala. 1885) On indictment under Code, § 4184, against two persons for living together in adultery, when both are on trial together, the husband of the woman is not a competent witness for the man.—Birge v. State, 78 Ala. 435.

[e] (La.) In a trial of two persons jointly indicted for murder, the testimony of the wife of one of them is admissible for or against the other, under instructions to the jury to restrict such testimony to the case of the other defendant.—(1888) State v. Adams, 40 La. Ann. 213, 3 South. 733; (1889) Same v. Wright, 41 La. Ann. 600, 6 South. 135.

[f] (Me. 1838) In the case of an indictment against several for a conspiracy to charge the wife of one of them with adultery, such wife is not a competent witness.—State v. Burlingham, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 104.

[g] (Miss. 1856) The wife of one of several defendants, jointly indicted and on trial for murder, is not a competent witness for the others, to show that there was no conspiracy on their part to do any act connected with the murder of the deceased.—Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405.

[h] (N. Y. 1816) Where defendants are jointly indicted, the wife of one may be permitted to testify in behalf of her husband's codefendant where the latter made no application for a separate trial.—In re Shaw, 1 City Hall Rec. 177.

[i] (N. Y. 1823) Where two witnesses are charged in the same indictment, but one of them is not taken, on the trial of the other, the husband of the defendant not taken is not a competent witness, though a nolle prosequi is entered as to the wife.—People v. Colbern, 1 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 479.

[j] (N. C. 1886) When two are indicted in the same bill for an affray and mutual assaults on each other, the wife of neither is a competent witness for the state or for the other defendant.—State v. Harbison, 94 N. C. 885.

[k] (S. C. 1866) On the trial of an indictment for larceny, the wife of one of the defendants is an incompetent witness.—State v. McGrew, 13 Rich. Law, 316.

[l] (S. C. 1881) Two men being jointly tried for the same crime, the wife of one of them is not a competent witness for her husband, nor as to any common defense for the other defendant.—State v. Workman, 15 S. C. 540.

[m] (Tex. 1876) The wife of one of three defendants in an indictment is an incompetent witness against the other two, unless the indictment has been dismissed as to her husband.—Dill v. State, 1 Tex. App. 278.

§ 422. —— Husband or wife of accomplice, accessory, or principal.

[a] (U. S. 1862) When an accomplice and his wife are witnesses for the prosecution in a criminal trial, the wife is a competent witness to prove any independent facts not sworn to by her husband and not forming any part of his acts, although those facts fasten a guilty knowledge on the defendant.—United States v. Horn, Fed. Cas. No. 15,389 [5 Blatchf. 102].

[b] (Ala. 1877) Although a husband's testimony in a criminal case has tended to show that he was an accomplice of defendant, his wife may testify against the accused, the husband not being indicted.—Powell v. State, 58 Ala. 362.

[c] (Ark. 1859) The wife of an accessory before the fact, who is jointly indicted with the principal, is an incompetent witness for such principal.—Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36.

[d] (Ga. 1885) The wife of an accomplice may testify against the principal if the accomplice is not on trial and not affected by the testimony.—Askea v. State, 75 Ga. 356.

[e] (Nev. 1865) The wife of an accomplice in a robbery jointly indicted with others for the offense is a competent witness on the trial of the indictment, if her testimony does not affect her husband.—State v. Waterman, 1 Nev. 543.

[f] (N. C. 1868) The husband of one charged as accessory is not a competent witness in favor of one charged as the principal.—State v. Ludwick, 61 N. C. 401.

[g] (N. C. 1870) The wife of an accessory to a battery is a competent witness for the principal. —State v. Mooney, 64 N. C. 54.

[h] (Tex. 1893) Where, on a trial for arson, charging defendant as an accomplice, it appears that the principal has testified as to his own guilt, error cannot be predicated on the subsequent admission of the testimony of the wife of the principal as to a conversation overheard by her, between her husband and defendant, in reference to the burning.—Bluman v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. App. 43, 21 S. W. 1027; Id., 26 S. W. 75.

§ 423. —— Separate trials of defendants jointly indicted.

[a] Where two persons jointly indicted are tried separately, the wife of the one not on trial is a competent witness.
—(U. S. 1868) United States v. Addatte, Fed. Cas. No. 14,422 [6 Blatchf. 76];
(Ga. 1885) Whitlow v. State, 74 Ga. 819;
(Ky. 1858) Thompson v. Commonwealth, 58 Ky. (1 Metc.) 13; (1861) Cornelius v. Commonwealth, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 481;
(Mo. 1866) State v. Burnside, 37 Mo. 343;
(Tenn. 1840) Moffit v. State, 21 Tenn. (2 Humph.) 99, 36 Am. Dec. 301;
(Va. 1894) Smith v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 759, 19 S. E. 843.

[b] (Fla. 1891) The wife of an accomplice, jointly indicted, and as to whom the indictment has not been disposed of, can testify on behalf of the state against his codefendant on a separate trial.—Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 South. 106.

[c] (Ga. 1882) Although A. be jointly indicted with B., A.'s wife may, on the separate trial of B., testify as to matters not affecting A.'s guilt.—Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11.

[d] (Ky. 1861) Two persons, jointly indicted for stealing a cow, were tried separately. Held, that evidence by the wife of one, offered at the trial of the other, that this other had paid for the cow when he took her, was admissible evidence.—Cornelius v. Commonwealth, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 481.

[e] (Mich. 1843) Where two persons are jointly charged, in the same complaint, with the commission of the same offense, and neither of them has been either convicted or acquitted, the husband of one is not a competent witness for the other, who, by leave of the court, is tried separately.—Pullen v. People, 1 Doug. 48.

[f] (Pa. 1833) A wife cannot be a witness in a case where a joint charge is jointly tried against her husband and others; yet, if they are separately tried, she is a competent witness for the other codefendants; and to give them the benefit of her testimony, separate trials will be awarded them by the court in all cases except that of criminal conspiracy.—Commonwealth v. Manson, 2 Ashm. 31.

[g] (Tenn. 1857) Two persons were jointly indicted for murder—one as principal, the other as aiding and abetting. They were separately tried. The wife of the second was offered as a witness for the first. Held, that she was competent.—Workman v. State, 36 Tenn. (4 Sneed) 425.

§ 424. Widow.

Statutory removal of incompetency, see post, § 522.

Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest, see post, § 461.

[a] (Ala. 1848) The widow of a decedent is a competent witness in a controversy involving the amount of advancements for which each of the several distributees is accountable.—Andrews v. Hall, 15 Ala. 85.

[b] (Ala. 1853) The widow of a grantor in a trust deed, who was also, when it was executed, defendant in an execution in the hands of the sheriff on which the sheriff had advanced the money, is not debarred by interest from being a witness for the trustee in an action against him by the beneficiary under the deed to require him to account for trust property which he allowed to be sold under an alias execution to reimburse the sheriff, to prove that the beneficiary knew of and assented to, such sale, such testimony being against her interest.—Houston v. Crutchfield's Adm'r, 22 Ala. 76.

[c] (Ala. 1853) In an action at law, between the administrators of two estates, concerning the title to slaves, a woman who was the widow of both of the decedents is an incompetent witness for the administrator of the estate which has the smaller number of distributees.—Lay's Ex'r v. Lawson's Adm'r, 23 Ala. 377.

[d] (Conn. 1836) Where it appeared, in a suit on a note given to B. as administrator of A., that there was a memorandum on it in the handwriting of B., that it belonged to C., the widow of A., and administratrix of his estate, jointly with B., such memorandum was an admission by the party that C. was interested in the event of the suit, and she was therefore an incompetent witness for such party.—Cook v. Mix, 11 Conn. 432.

[e] (Ga. 1855) A widow, being entitled to provision for herself and family for one year out of her husband's estate, even if insolvent, is in no case a competent witness for the administrator in a suit to recover lands for the estate. —Johnson v. Worthy, 17 Ga. 420.

[f] (Ill. 1864) The widow of an intestate is a competent witness in an action of ejectment brought by the heirs against a purchaser at a sale by the administrator.—Lockwood v. Mills, 39 Ill. 602.

[g] (Ind. 1856) Part of the heirs of A. sued the heir and legatee of A.'s administrator for an account of administration, charging a failure on the part of the administrator to account for assets, and to make final settlement, and alleging the amount of assets to be greater than the debts. Plaintiffs offered A.'s widow as a witness to prove maladministration. Held that, the suit not being for her benefit, A.'s widow was competent.—Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 692.

[h] (Ind. 1856) In a suit against A. as surviving partner, B., the other partner, having died insolvent, the wife of B. is a competent witness to prove the liability of A.—Jack v. Russey, 8 Ind. 180.

[i] (Ky. 1858) The testimony of a widow, to facts of her own knowledge, is competent to show that a conveyance by the husband was made in fraud of creditors, but not to diminish the husband's liability to creditors to whom the conveyance was made.—Short v. Tinsley, 58 Ky. (1 Metc.) 397, 71 Am. Dec. 482.

[j] (Me. 1841) A widow, being entitled to a distributive share of the personal estate of her husband, is not a competent witness in a bill brought to establish a mortgage, by which notes, belonging to his estate, are secured.—Felch v. Hooper, 20 Me. (2 App.) 159.

[k] (Me. 1844) As a widow is not entitled to dower in a tract of unimproved wild land, she is a competent witness for the heirs of her deceased husband, in relation to such land.—Wallingford v. Fiske, 24 Me. (11 Shep.) 386.

[l] (Miss. 1848) The wife of a deceased principal in a note is not a competent witness for the surety, in an action on the note against him, to prove payment of the note.—Payne v. Devinal, 19 Miss. (11 Smedes & M.) 400.

[m] (Mo. 1854) The widow of a decedent may be a witness for or against the administrator or executor of the estate of her deceased husband, whether solvent or insolvent, as to all such facts as the policy of the law does not require to be kept sacred and secret between husband and wife during the marriage.—Stein v. Weidman's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 17.

[n] (Mo. 1857) The widow of a testator is a competent witness to show that goods were received by the executor, for which he has not accounted.—Sherwood's Adm'r v. Hill, 25 Mo. 391.

[o] (Mo. 1860) A widow is a competent witness for her children, in a suit brought by them for the recovery of land, notwithstanding that she will be entitled to dower therein in case they succeed in the suit.—McCullough v. McCullough, 31 Mo. 226.

[p] (Mo. 1860) That the judgment in their favor may be evidence for her in a future action will not disqualify her, under the seventh section of the act concerning witnesses.—McCullough v. McCullough, 31 Mo. 226.

[q] (N. H. 1859) Where the estate of a deceased person is interested in the result of a suit, his wife, if she have no interest in the estate, is a competent witness, unless the facts to which she testifies came to her knowledge through confidential communications from her husband.—Jackson v. Barron, 37 N. H. 494.

[r] (N. H. 1859) If the estate of a person deceased is interested in the result of a suit, and his wife, being entitled to a distributive share of the surplus after the payment of debts, is offered as a witness, evidence may be received by the court to show the condition of the estate to be such that the wife can receive nothing from it in any event of the suit on trial; and if the evidence satisfies the court of that fact, she is a competent witness.—Jackson v. Barron, 37 N. H. 494.

[rr] (N. Y. 1837) A widow is not competent to prove that what purports to be an absolute deed, given by herself and her husband, of land in which she was otherwise entitled to dower, is in fact a mortgage.—Eckford v. De Kay, 6 Paige, 565.

[s] (N. C. 1824) The widow of a grantor in a deed of conveyance, who joined her husband therein, is a competent witness to prove that the deed was intended as a mortgage, as in either event her right of dower is gone.—Price v. Joyner, 10 N. C. 418.

[ss] (Pa. 1823) Where grants are made of the same land to contending claimants, with general warranty, the widow of the grantor is a competent witness in the suit between the claimants.—Brindle v. McIlvaine, 10 Serg. & R. 282.

[t] (Pa. 1824) The testator's widow, who has no interest in the result, is a competent witness for the executors.—Gebhart v. Shindle, 15 Serg. & R. 235.

[tt] (Pa. 1865) A widow who has conveyed to her sons after her husband's death, without covenant or warranty of title, land purchased for and conveyed to her in the lifetime of her husband, is a competent witness, in their behalf, in an ejectment suit brought by them against one buying the land at a sheriff's sale, under an execution against the husband.—Thomas v. Maddan, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 261.

[u] (Pa. 1888) The widow of a decedent in making claim for the widow's exemption is a competent witness to prove the family relation. —In re Burkett's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 501.

[uu] (Pa. 1896) In an action by a widow to set aside as fraudulent the forfeiture of an insurance policy issued on the life of her husband, and forfeited by the company in order to issue a substituted policy to a bank to secure a debt due from the husband, the widow is not rendered incompetent as a witness for the reason that her husband, if alive, would be a party in interest.—Matlack v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (Com. Pl.) 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 526, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 113.

[v] (S. C. 1838) The widow of a testator, who is not interested in a will, is admissible to prove that property was a gift or sold.—Gist v. Rodgers, Rice, 79.

[vv] (Tenn. 1844) A widow is not a competent witness, in a suit by the heir for a portion of the real estate of her deceased husband, where a recovery by the heir would increase her dower interest, or a loss reduce it.—Wade v. Johnson, 24 Tenn. (5 Humph.) 117, 42 Am. Dec. 422.

[w] (Tenn. 1860) A widow who would become entitled to dower in the event of a recovery by the heirs at law of her deceased husband is not a competent witness for them. — Chaney v. Moore, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 48.

[x] (Tex. 1871) Plaintiff sued for a wagon or its value, claiming to have bought it from C., who was since deceased. Defendants had purchased it from the widow of C. after his decease, and offered her testimony to prove that the pretended purchase by plaintiff was never consummated. Held, that she was a competent witness, and it was error to exclude her testimony on the ground of interest.—Keys v. Baldwin, 33 Tex. 666.

[xx] (Vt. 1833) A widow will not be rejected as a witness because her husband was interested, unless she has herself an interest in the suit.—Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 534.

[y] (Vt. 1833) The widow has an interest to increase the personal fund and prevent debts coming against her husband's estate; but to show such interest, it must appear that he died in the state, leaving personal property to be administered upon her.—Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 534.

[yy] (Vt. 1845) The widow of a mortgagor, being directly interested to defeat the mortgage, is not a competent witness for parties claiming under him, on a bill to foreclose the mortgage, to prove that he was insane when it was executed.—Day v. Seely, 17 Vt. 542.

[z] (Vt. 1855) A widow may testify in a case in which her husband was interested, if she does not disclose his confidential communications.—Smith v. Potter, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 304, 65 Am. Dec. 198.

[zz] (Va. 1811) The widow of one of two joint obligors is a competent witness in support of a plea of infancy, in a suit against the other, or his representatives, although her husband died intestate.—Braxton's Adm'x v. Hilyard, 2 Munf. 49.

14. TRANSFER, RELEASE, OR EXTINGUISHMENT OF INTEREST OR LIABILITY, AND INDEMNITY AGAINST LIABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL, §§ 425-429.
(b) NATURE OF INTEREST OR LIABILITY IN GENERAL, §§ 430-440.
(c) INTEREST ARISING FROM PARTICULAR OBLIGATIONS OR TRANSACTIONS, §§ 441-448.
(d) INTEREST ARISING FROM STATUS OR RELATION OF PARTIES IN GENERAL, §§ 449-461.
(e) BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT, ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE FOR CREDITORS, AND CREDITORS, §§ 462-465.
(f) PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, INDEMNITORS, AND RECEIPTORS, §§ 466-471.
(g) EXECUTORS OR ADMINISTRATORS, AND LEGATEES, DEVISEES, OR HEIRS, §§ 472-475.

Evidence as to transfer or release of interest, see post, §§ 540, 543.

Authority of attorney, to release client's debtor to make him a competent witness, see "Attorney and Client," vol. 5, c. 1657, § 213.

Release of party as guarantor to make him competent witness, constituting maintenance, see "Champerty and Maintenance," vol. 9, cc. 1974, 1975, § 10.

(a) IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 425.
SUFFICIENCY OF ASSIGNMENT OR RELEASE IN GENERAL, § 426.
TIME OF MAKING, INTENT, AND GOOD FAITH, § 427.
ASSENT AND DELIVERY, § 428.
INDEMNITY AGAINST LIABILITY IN GENERAL, § 429.

§ 425. In general.

[a] A release of all interest by a witness will render him competent, if there are no other objections but interest.

—(Iowa, 1856) Ayres v. Campbell, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 582;

(Ky. 1810) Gillespie v. Gillespie's Heirs, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 89;

(Mo. 1828) Evans v. Hays, 2 Mo. 97;

(S. C. 1845) City Council of Charleston v. Welkman, 1 Rich. Law, 240.

[b] If the witness is protected from liability by the act of limitations, he is a competent witness without a release from the party to whom he was liable.

—(U. S. 1835) Waller v. Stewart, Fed. Cas. No. 17,109 [4 Cranch, C. C. 532];

(Pa. 1815) Ludlow v. Union Ins. Co., 2 Serg. & R. 119.

[c] (Conn. 1792) The judgment will be erroneous, if a witness, discharged of his interest, is not permitted to testify.—Humes v. Day, 1 Root, 466.

[d] (Conn. 1814) A witness who had received a release, but who, upon being asked if he did not expect to pay the judgment and expenses, provided the plaintiff recovered, replied, "I certainly do," was incompetent to testify for defendant.—Skillenger v. Bolt, 1 Conn. 147.

[e] (Ind. 1853) The interest of a witness in the event of a suit after executing a release goes to his credibility, and not to his competency.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Lostutter, 4 Ind. 558.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) After a release given to render a witness competent has been executed and ruled sufficient by the court, there is no error in a refusal to allow defendant to introduce other testimony, showing an interest in the witness existing prior to the release.—White v. Tucker, 9 Iowa, 100.

[g] (Md. 1831) It was no objection to the competency of a witness that he had been heard to say, some months before the trial, that he felt himself bound to pay plaintiff the amount of the controversy, if plaintiff did not recover, the witness having been since released by plaintiff.—Stimmel v. Underwood, 3 Gill & J. 282.

[h] (Miss. 1843) It is error for the court to refuse a release of interest offered by a witness in order that he might be competent to testify.—Englehard v. Slater, 8 Miss. (7 How.) 538.

[i] (Miss. 1859) Where a person has released, by deed, all his interest in a suit in which he is offered as a witness, it is error to reject him; and such error is not afterwards cured by permitting him to testify, as a person interested, under Rev. Code, p. 510, art. 190.—Fairly v. Fairly, 38 Miss. 280.

[j] (N. H. 1839) Where an individual is collaterally interested in the event of a suit, in any given sum, so as to render him incompetent as a witness, such incompetency may be removed by the payment of the amount of the liability.—Dearborn v. Dearborn, 10 N. H. 473.

[k] (N. Y. 1812) If a witness have a present beneficial interest in the subject-matter of the suit, although the reducing it into possession be future and contingent, he may extinguish it by release.—Woods v. Williams, 9 Johns. 123.

[l] (Pa. 1854) A person having a chose in action cannot, by any sale of his claim, or by any other means whatever, make himself a competent witness to support it.—Appeal of Hottenstein, 2 Grant, Cas. 301.

[m] (Pa. 1854) One interested in a chose in action at the time of its origin cannot, by assigning his interest to a mere volunteer, become a competent witness for the assignee as to matters which preceded the assignment.—Lindsley v. Malone, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 24.

[n] (Pa. 1854) A witness, not a party to the original contract and cause of action, who subsequently bought an interest in it, which he afterwards resold, with an agreement that he was to be cleared from the same, is not incompetent.—Beaver v. Beaver, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 167.

[o] (Pa. 1856) When the interest of a witness is collateral, his competency may be restored by a release or transfer of it.—Commonwealth v. Ohio & P. R. Co., 1 Grant, Cas. 329.

[p] (S. C.) Where a witness, supposed to be interested, gives a release of his interest, he is placed on the same footing with other witnesses, and is not confined to any particular point.—(1798) Luyten v. Haygood, 2 Bay, 177; (1802) Carroll v. McWhorter, Id. 463.

[q] (S. C. 1830) The general rule is that no one can be admitted as a witness who, at the time when he is called to testify, has a direct and certain interest in the event of the suit, whether the interest arise from a benefit or a liability dependent on its determination. If of benefit alone, then the witness may render himself competent by releasing that interest; but if of liability, a release from those to whom he is liable is absolutely necessary to remove the disability.—Pickett v. Cloud, 1 Bailey, 362.

[r] (S. C. 1834) The competency of a witness may be restored as well by an assignment without warranty as by a release of his interest.—Cates v. Wacter's Heirs, 2 Hill, 442.

[s] (Va. 1823) The interest of a witness in a suit may be released by the party calling him.—Richardson v. Carey, 2 Rand. 87.

[t] (Va. 1826) An interested witness, who has been examined on a former trial, without being released, may be rendered competent on a subsequent trial by a release, and the objection will only go to his credit.—Jones v. Raine, 4 Rand. 386.

§ 426. Sufficiency of assignment or release in general.

[a] (U. S. 1826) A release of a witness may be executed by the party, leaving a blank for the name of the witness to be filled up by the party's attorney.—Hall v. Fox, Fed. Cas. No. 5,932 [3 Cranch, C. C. 64].

[b] (Ala. 1835) A release entered on the minutes of the court, not signed, sealed, or delivered to the witness, and implying a mere discharge as to witness' interest in the particular suit, is not sufficient to render an interested witness competent.—Kennon v. McRae, 2 Port. 389.

[c] (Ala. 1848) A technical release, to make an interested witness competent, must be under seal.—Governor v. Daily, 14 Ala. 469.

[d] (Cal. 1859) A release of property by the witness, after his deposition has been taken, does not render the deposition admissible, as he still may have a claim for damages to the property which accrued previous to the release, and because he was interested when his testimony was given, which is the material time.—Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27.

[e] (Cal. 1859) Where the purchaser of wheat in order to render his vendor a competent witness released him from all damages by reason of any implied warranty of the title, which was then in litigation between the vendee and a third party, nonpayment of the consideration expressed in the release did not render it invalid.—Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

[f] (Del. 1858) Property was sold under a junior judgment, and the money brought into court, and on an issue framed to try what amount was due on the older judgment defendant was offered as a witness to prove that it had been paid. Held, that a release to him, stipulating that, in case it should be found that he was bound on the older judgment for any sum whatever, he should be discharged from a corresponding amount on the junior judgment, was not a proper release, but merely an indemnity, and did not render him competent.—Union Bank of Delaware v. Prettyman, 2 Houst. 16.

[g] (Ga. 1854) A general release of all actions will make the person released a competent witness.—Bond v. Carter, 14 Ga. 697.

[h] (Ky. 1842) A witness incompetent from interest cannot be made competent by parol.—Richardson v. Bartley, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 328.

[i] (Me. 1839) A release of a witness of his interest in the suit, signed only by one of several defendants, discharges the joint interest, and renders the witness competent.—Haley v. Godfrey, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 305.

[j] (N. Y. 1817) A witness on the part of plaintiff was objected to on the ground that the witness and A., one of the defendants, were separately liable for plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff thereupon released the witness from all claim which he had against him, either alone or in conjunction with defendant A., but excepting such claims as he might have against the witness in conjunction with all the defendants. Held, that such release rendered the witness competent.—Bulkley v. Dayton, 14 Johns. 387.

[k] (Pa. 1832) Where one has not assigned all his interest in the suit, remote as well as immediate, he cannot become a witness.—Kimball v. Kimball, 3 Rawle, 469.

[l] (S. C. 1829) An attorney of record cannot, without special authority, execute a valid release to one who is liable over to his client, in order to render him a competent witness.—Marshall v. Nagel, 1 Bailey, 308.

[m] (S. C. 1859) A paper, not under seal, in the nature of an acquittance or acknowledgment of satisfaction, is sufficient to make a witness competent, who was liable over to defendant, in case plaintiff should recover.—Boland v. Greenville & C. R. Co., 12 Rich. Law, 368.

[n] (Tenn. 1856) A mere technical release without consideration must be under seal in order to remove the incompetency of an interested witness.—Smith v. Harris, 35 Tenn. (3 Sneed) 453.

[o] (Tenn. 1858) Where releases are necessary to render a witness competent, they are insufficient, unless moving from all the parties interested on the record.—Ingram v. Smith, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 411.

[p] (Vt. 1854) To remove the interest of a witness, he must be released from all liability for costs for the money recovered, and from all claims in discharge of which the money recovered in the suit would go.—Wills v. Judd, 26 Vt. 617.

§ 427. Time of making, intent, and good faith.

[a] A colorable assignment to make a plaintiff a witness does not devest his interest. And every assignment is deemed colorable until the contrary appears.

—(Md. 1855) Pegg v. Warford, 7 Md. 582;
(Pa. 1843) Post v. Avery, 5 Watts & S. 509; (1844) Leiper v. Peirce, 6 Watts & S. 555; (1845) Phinney v. Tracey, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 173, 44 Am. Dec. 116.

[aa] A release of a witness' interest in a suit, made after his testimony has been given, does not legalize such testimony.

—(Ala. 1823) Wynn v. Williams, Minor, 136;
(N. Y. 1830) Ten Eyck v. Bill, 5 Wend. 55.

[b] (U. S. 1826) An interested witness who has been sworn in chief and examined, and whose interest is disclosed upon cross-examination, may be released, and re-examined.—Hall v. Fox, Fed. Cas. No. 5,932 [3 Cranch, C. C. 64].

[bb] (Ill. 1860) A release in good faith, though for the express purpose of rendering the witness competent, makes him competent.—Robbins v. Butler, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 387.

[c] (Md. 1855) The practice of witnesses restoring their competency by deed executed at the trial is firmly established by long custom.—Pegg v. Warford, 7 Md. 582.

[d] (Md. 1860) A release to qualify a witness must be given before the testimony is closed, or it comes too late; but, if the trial is not over, the court will permit the witness to be re-examined after he is released.—National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289.

[e] (Md. 1860) The fact that a party transferred his interest for the purpose of becoming a witness does not disqualify him, however it may affect his credibility.—National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289.

[f] (Md. 1860) Where one of the defendants is released by plaintiff after he has testified in the latter's behalf, he may be re-examined, and it will generally be sufficient to ask him if his testimony, already given, is true, the circumstances under which it was given going only to his credibility.—National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289.

[g] (Mass. 1804) The court cannot refuse to give a release full effect in making a witness competent, merely because it is given at the time of trial, and under circumstances making it of little effect, so far as the witness' credibility is concerned.—Barnes v. Ball, 1 Mass. 73.

[h] (N. Y. 1817) A release, given after the examination of an interested witness, is too late to validate his testimony; and where an objection is made to the sufficiency of a release, the judge ought not to allow the witness to proceed, and to direct that his testimony should be relied on, if the party should afterwards give a sufficient release; but where an objection has been made on account of some informality in the release, the judge may allow the examination to proceed, while a new release is preparing, no objection being made by the opposite party.—Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. 378.

[i] (N. Y. 1831) Where, on the examination of a witness in chief, it is discovered that he is interested in the event of the suit, his interest may be removed by a release, and then he may be re-examined.—Tallman v. Dutcher, 7 Wend. 180.

[j] (N. Y. 1838) Where the former holder of an unpaid note has guarantied its payment, and is afterwards released by the guaranty of another person, he is a competent witness in an action to recover the note, although the release was obtained for the express purpose of making him a witness, and by his procurement.—Mott v. Small, 20 Wend. 212, affirmed Small v. Mott (1839) 22 Wend. 403.

[k] (N. Y. 1855) An assignor is not a competent witness, except as a party, when the assignment of the claim is merely colorable, made only for the purpose of enabling him to testify, and with the clear intent that he shall receive the benefit of the recovery.—Bell v. Drew, 4 E. D. Smith, 59.

[l] (N. Y. 1856) The fact that the claim in suit was assigned to plaintiff merely to enable the assignor to testify does not render him incompetent, but merely goes to his credibility.—Nelson v. Smith, 3 Abb. Prac. 117.

[m] (Pa. 1812) The nominal plaintiff, in an action of book account, who had assigned the account for a valuable consideration before the action was brought, was a competent witness, though he admitted that the assignment was made for the purpose of rendering him competent.—Wistar v. Walker, 2 Browne, 166.

[n] (Pa. 1845) The assignor of a chose in action for which suit is brought cannot be a witness for the assignee, on the trial of the cause, unless the assignment was made in the usual course of business, and without any intention, either expressed or understood, at the time of supporting the claim by the oath of the assignor.—Phinney v. Tracey, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 173, 44 Am. Dec. 116.

[o] (Pa. 1846) To render an assignor of a chose in action, not party to the record, incompetent as a witness, it must appear that the assignment was for the purpose of making him a witness to support the claim; and if there are circumstances of that character, it lies on the party objecting to show them.—Roshing v. Chandler, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 375.

[p] (Pa. 1847) Where a person, for a nominal consideration, releases her interest in the fund sought to be recovered, although for the purpose of becoming a witness, she is competent.—Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 315.

[q] (Pa. 1854) The assignment of a chose in action, which must be supported by the oath of the assignor, is to be deemed colorable so as to exclude the assignor's testimony, unless some other motive for it is clearly shown.—Beidler v. Miller, 1 Woodw. Dec. 223.

[r] (Tenn. 1822) A witness whose interest is released is competent, though he states on his voir dire that he feels himself bound in honor to indemnify the person calling him, and intended to do so should judgment go against him.—Tilford v. Hayes, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 89.

[s] (Vt. 1853) A witness who assigned all claim and interest in a suit which he was prosecuting, by consent of plaintiffs, for his own benefit, for a consideration, before the hearing, is admissible, notwithstanding he assigned the same but a day or two before trial, and with the intent of being a witness to the claim.—Bank of Woodstock v. Clark, 25 Vt. 308.

[t] (Vt. 1853) A witness is admissible when discharged from all interest, though interested up to the time of the trial, and then discharged for the purpose of being a witness.—Fletcher v. Cole, 26 Vt. 170.

§ 428. Assent and delivery.

[a] A witness must know that he is released before he gives his testimony.

—(Ala. 1858) Fitzpatrick's Adm'r v. Baker, 31 Ala. 563;

(N. Y. 1843) Seymour v. Strong, 4 Hill, 255.

[b] (Ala. 1843) The release of a witness' interest need not be delivered personally; it is sufficient to deposit it in court.—Brown v. Brown, 5 Ala. 508.

[c] (Ala. 1846) When a release is proved to have been made before a deposition was taken, and that the witness knew it, the fact that the release is on file, among the papers in the case, is prima facie evidence of its delivery.—Kyle v. Bostick, 10 Ala. 589.

[d] (Ala. 1853) Although it is not necessary that a release should be delivered personally to a witness, in order to restore his competency, yet it is necessary that he should be apprised of its existence when his deposition is taken; and where the release is attached to the deposition by the commissioner, but there is no proof that the witness ever saw it or knew of its existence, it is not sufficient to restore his competency.—Gray's Ex'rs v. Brown, 22 Ala. 262.

[e] (Ga. 1866) The assignment of a plaintiff's interest may be completed by depositing the instrument in court in the absence of the assignee; acceptance will be presumed.—Smith v. Bell, 35 Ga. 238.

[f] (Ind. 1853) A release, executed by a person to render him competent as a witness, is available if filed in court, and need not be delivered to the person released.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Lostutter, 4 Ind. 558.

[g] (Ind. 1857) A release, deposited in court for the use of a witness disqualified by reason of interest, is sufficient to restore his competency.—Petro v. Cassiday, 9 Ind. 63.

[h] (La. 1857) The usual and proper course is for the release to be tendered to the witness before he is sworn in the cause; and when the testimony is taken under commission, to insert it in the return, with the commissioner's certificate that it was so tendered.—Delee v. Sandel, 12 La. Ann. 208.

[i] (Miss. 1857) A release by a grantee to the grantor, appearing in the deposition of the latter taken in behalf of the grantee, will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, to have been duly delivered to the grantor so as to make him a competent witness.—Cooper v. Granberry, 33 Miss. 117.

[j] (N. H. 1839) A delivery of a release, by a witness, to the attorney employed to conduct the cause, is a good delivery to the party who employed him. If the witness employed the attorney, such delivery would be a delivery to himself; but where, upon such delivery, the witness is admitted to testify, it may be shown to the court, after verdict, that the attorney was, in fact, employed by the plaintiff of record. —Stevenson v. Mudgett, 10 N. H. 338, 34 Am. Dec. 155.

[k] (N. H. 1839) If a witness who appears to be interested executes a release which is not well delivered, his testimony, upon being admitted, that he never had any interest in the suit, cannot be received to show his competency.—Stevenson v. Mudgett, 10 N. H. 338, 34 Am. Dec. 155.

[l] (N. C. 1818) If before trial a witness removes his interest by releasing it, or files a release in a clerk's office, the party not being present to receive it, his competency is restored. —Perry v. Fleming, 4 N. C. 344.

[m] (N. C. 1838) A party cannot, by refusing his assent to a release or surrender tendered by a witness on the other side, exclude his testimony. The depositing the release in the clerk's office will be sufficient to enable the witness to testify.—Mathews v. Marchant, 20 N. C. 33.

[n] (Pa. 1845) An acknowledgment by a witness, in his deposition, that a release had been delivered to him before he was sworn, does not remove a well-founded objection to his competency.—Myre v. Ludwig, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 47.

[o] (Tex. 1866) The mere filing of a release of a witness from all liability, without any showing that the witness had notice thereof before deposing, is not such a delivery, either actual or constructive, to the witness as will remove the objection of interest.—Evans v. Pigg, 28 Tex. 586.

[p] (Vt. 1832) The production of a release in court, where the witness is objected to, in order to qualify him, amounts to a delivery to him which will bind the releasor, though he immediately destroyed it on the rejection of the witness; and where such release is fraudulent as to both parties thereto, the releasor will not be relieved from it.—Walker v. Ferrin, 4 Vt. 523.

[q] (Vt. 1850) Where one offered as a witness is incompetent through interest, and he executes a release of his interest to the party calling him, and the act is apparently for the advantage of the party, the law will presume his assent to it, and a delivery of the instrument to his attorney will be sufficient.—Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191.

[r] (Vt. 1854) Nothing appearing to the contrary, a delivery of the assignment of the interest of a witness will be presumed.—Hough v. Patrick, 26 Vt. 435.

§ 429. Indemnity against liability in general.

[a] (Ala. 1845) Where a party offers a witness who will be liable over, if he is unsuccessful, he cannot divest the witness' interest, and make him competent, by depositing with the clerk of the court a sum of money equal to what would be the amount of the recovery against him. The common law or statute neither confer upon the clerk of a court, virtute officii, the authority to receive money which may be recovered upon a suit afterwards to be brought; and such payment cannot be pleaded in bar of action.—Ball v. Bank of State, 8 Ala. 590, 42 Am. Dec. 649.

[b] (Ga. 1860) A bond of indemnity, to protect a witness from all liability of whatsoever kind, will not remove his incompetency on account of interest.—Molyneaux v. Collier, 30 Ga. 731.

[c] (Me. 1840) Giving a bond to an interested witness, to indemnify him against his liability, does not render him competent.—Paine v. Hussey, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 274.

[d] (S. C. 1858) A bond of indemnity from a third person will not make an interested witness competent.—Josey v. Wilmington & M. R. Co., 11 Rich. Law, 399.

[e] (Wis. 1853) An offer of indemnity from the consequences of the suit will not render a party to the record a competent witness.—Eaton v. White, 2 Wis. 292.

(b) NATURE OF INTEREST OR LIABILITY IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 430.
PARTIES IN GENERAL, § 431.
LIABILITY FOR COSTS IN GENERAL, § 432.
REPRESENTATIVE OR OFFICIAL CAPACITY, § 433.
INTEREST IN PROPERTY IN GENERAL, § 434.
OWNER OF VESSEL OR CARGO, § 435.
GRANTOR OR VENDOR AND WARRANTOR, § 436.
LANDLORD AND TENANT OR TERRE-TENANT, § 437.
INTEREST IN MORTGAGE OR OTHER SECURITY, § 438.
INTEREST IN INVENTION, § 439.
INTEREST IN PENALTY OR FINE, § 440.

§ 430. In general.

[a] (Ala. 1853) When a debtor delivers property to one of his creditors to be sold, and the proceeds to be appropriated, first, to the payment of his own debt, and the balance to a debt due another creditor, and the latter creditor brings suit against the former to recover this balance, the debtor may be rendered a competent witness for plaintiff by a release.—Loftin v. Lyon, 22 Ala. 540.

[b] (Ga. 1857) A stakeholder who has transferred the thing wagered, after notice not to do so from the loser, and has received a bond of indemnity, is a competent witness in a suit between the parties.—Leverett v. Stegall, 23 Ga. 257.

[c] (Ill. 1861) A defendant in an execution, upon which property has been seized, and which property has been replevied, who has been released from the judgment against him, is a competent witness for defendant in the replevin suit, without producing his release.—Gray v. Morey, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 409.

[d] (Ind. 1851) Where the account against an assignor, pleaded in set-off, is larger than the amount of the note, plaintiff cannot release the assignor from liability upon the assignment, so as to render him a competent witness.—Sample v. Lamb, 3 Ind. 180.

[e] (Ky. 1864) An assignor, who is not liable on his assignment of his interest, and who has been released from "all responsibility in every way," on account of the debt he had transferred, is not incompetent to testify in favor of the assignee.—Price v. Caperton, 62 Ky. (1 Duv. 207.

[f] (Me. 1834) T. sued M. and summoned H. as his trustee, against both of whom he recovered judgment—the latter on disclosure. No execution issued, the trustee promising to pay on that condition. About three years afterwards, the note on which H. was adjudged the trustee of M., not being negotiable, was sued in the name of M. for the benefit of another, to whom it had been bona fide assigned. After the commencement of this suit, H. gave his note to T. for the amount of his (T.'s) judgment. Held, that T. was a competent witness for H. in a suit against the latter.—Matthews v. Houghton, 11 Me. (2 Fairf.) 377.

[g] (N. H. 1826) In a foreign attachment, the principal, having from plaintiff a release of all the debts due plaintiff except so much as may be found in the hands of the trustee, is a competent witness for plaintiff, on the trial of the issue between plaintiff and the trustee.—Wallace v. Blanchard, 3 N. H. 395.

[h] (N. Y. 1807) Where a common right of fishery is in all the inhabitants of a place, a release, by one of them, of all his interest in the right, to any person whatever, is inoperative, such interest being a personal right not assignable, and does not render him a competent witness to prove such common right.—Jacobson v. Fountain, 2 Johns. 170.

[i] (N. Y. 1829) A release by one to the other of two parties jointly liable to the payment of a sum of money renders the party released a competent witness for the releasor.—Bagley v. Osborn, 2 Wend. 527.

[j] (N. Y. 1848) A release of the personal liability of one of several defendants, on a judgment in favor of the releasor, executed in pursuance of the New York act of April, 1838, for the relief of partners and joint debtors, but which release leaves the judgment, and the debt for which it was recovered, in full force against the other defendants, will not render the defendant thus released a competent witness for plaintiff, in such judgment, in a suit in which plaintiff claims title to premises under such judgment; but to render him competent, the other judgment debtors should also be released from their contingent liability for the judgment debt.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[k] (N. C. 1805) Where a witness states that he has been promised a part of the recovery by plaintiff, a release will not render him competent.—Anonymous, 3 N. C. 340.

[l] (Pa. 1831) A person who at the time of the commencement of a suit was entitled to a portion of the money sued for, and was liable for costs, was incompetent as a witness, although he released his interest to plaintiff of record.—Gallagher v. Milligan, 3 Pen. & W. 177.

[m] (Pa. 1845) Where a person has acquired an interest in a debt by assignment, he is an incompetent witness in a suit for its recovery, even though he has reassigned his interest, and pays all the costs into court.—Clover v. Painter, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 46.

[n] (Pa. 1870) In an action of attachment against a garnishee, a release of the judgment debtor by plaintiff by an agreement not to seek to recover against him, except by the attachment then trying, renders him a competent witness.—Knerr v. Hoffman, 65 Pa. (15 P. F. Smith) 126.

[o] (Vt. 1831) An execution debtor is disqualified by interest as a witness for one claiming under a levy against him; and this, though defendant claim under a warranty deed from him of the same premises. But plaintiff, though suing as administrator of the levying creditor, may qualify him by discharging him from any liability on account of the judgment.—Seymour's Adm'r v. Beach, 4 Vt. 493.

[p] (Vt. 1854) A judgment held by assignment may be reassigned so as to render a witness competent.—Hough v. Patrick, 26 Vt. 435.

§ 431. Parties in general.

[a] A plaintiff, who has assigned his interest in a chose in action before suit, cannot be a witness for the defendant, as to his demands, so as to impair the assignee's rights.
—(Me. 1831) Hackett v. Martin, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 77;
(N. Y. 1822) Frear v. Evertson, 20 Johns. 142;
(S. C. 1797) Canty v. Sumter, 2 Bay, 93.

[b] A defendant in a suit in chancery, against whom no decree was sought, and none could properly be passed, was offered by his codefendant as a witness, after he had executed a release of all claim for costs, and he thereupon gave material evidence. Held, that he was not incompetent, either by reason of his character as a party on the record, or as being interested in the event of the suit.
—(Del. 1834) Ridgeway v. Newbold, 1 Har. 385;
(Ky. 1845) Oldhams v. Jones, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 458.

[c] (U. S. 1816) One of the plaintiffs in a suit may be examined as a witness, who had assigned all his interest in the subject in controversy, to his coplaintiff, after the costs of the suit, as estimated by the clerk of the court, had been deposited with the clerk and an offer made to pay to the clerk any further sum, which he or the counsel for the defendant might require to cover the costs, and a release executed by the remaining plaintiffs, of all claims on him for the costs which had or might accrue, and for any claims for contribution to any sum which the defendant might recover against those who executed the release, and also a covenant, by the remaining plaintiffs, to indemnify him against all costs, charges, and damages which might accrue, in prosecuting the suit.—Willings v. Consequa, Fed. Cas. No. 17,767 [Pet. C. C. 301].

[d] (U. S. 1827) In an action against several defendants where one of them is released by plaintiff, he is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Patriotic Bank v. Coote, Fed. Cas. No. 10,807 [3 Cranch, C. C. 169].

[e] (U. S. 1847) The court can, against the consent of the libelant in admiralty, discharge a claimant from the action, and render him admissible as a witness, where he has parted with all his interest, holds security from his co-claimants against liability for costs, and new stipulators are substituted.—Lane v. The Buck, Fed. Cas. No. 8,048.

[f] (U. S. 1847) A person, while remaining a party claimant upon the proceedings in court, cannot, by an arrangement with his co-claimants, discharge himself from liability to the libelant, so as to become a competent witness for them.—Lane v. The Buck, Fed. Cas. No. 8,048.

[g] (U. S. 1853) A party who, pending an interference proceeding, assigns all his interest in the subject-matter, and remains merely a nominal party, is nevertheless incompetent to testify therein.—Yearsley v. Brookfield, Fed. Cas. No. 18,131 [1 McArthur, Pat. Cas. 193], following Scott v. Lloyd (1838) 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 145, 9 L. Ed. 1033.

[h] (Fla. 1852) A party to the record is not a competent witness, even though, before his examination, he has surrendered all his right, title, and interest, both at law and in equity, to the sums of money sued for.—Patterson v. Cobb, 4 Fla. 481.

[i] (Ga. 1855) A joint defendant, upon being released from liability to certain parties, cannot be permitted to testify that a judgment is dormant, as the result would be the release of all parties from liability on the judgment, and he would, therefore, be interested.—Neal v. Lamar, 18 Ga. 746.

[j] (Ga. 1856) A party to the record, if at the time of the trial he has parted with all interest in the event of the suit, is a competent witness.—Central R. & Banking Co. v. Hines, 19 Ga. 203.

[k] (Ga. 1866) A plaintiff who pays into court the costs, and assigns all interest in the action, becomes a competent witness.—Smith v. Bell, 35 Ga. 238.

[l] (Ind. 1858) In an action for land, and its detention, a defendant who has released to his codefendants may yet be interested in the damages for the detention, and therefore incompetent.—Dearmond v. Dearmond, 10 Ind. 191.

[m] (Ky. 1820) A defendant who conveys the matter in dispute, pendente lite, and takes a bond of indemnity for costs from his grantee, does not thereby make himself a competent witness.—Shelby v. Smith's Heirs, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 504.

[n] (Ky. 1837) A party who has transferred all his interest to another without recourse is a competent witness for the latter.—Blackerby v. Holton, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 520.

[o] (La. 1831) A party to a suit is incompetent from interest; if that cease, the objection is removed.—Spencer's Syndics v. Lee, 2 La. 472.

[p] (Me. 1841) Where one of the plaintiffs was stricken out of the bill by amendment, and subsequently released and assigned his interest to the other plaintiffs, which release was accepted by their guardian (they being minors), such person was a competent witness.—Hanly v. Sprague, 20 Me. (7 Shep.) 431.

[q] (Mich. 1856) In an action of assumpsit brought against two, one, who was not served with process, and did not appear, is not, though released by the other, made a competent witness by chapter 102 of the Revised Statutes.—Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 Mich. 316.

[r] (N. C. 1835) Where a bill claims a conveyance from several persons charged to be jointly interested, a release, pendente lite, by one of them, of all his interest to the others, will not make him a competent witness against plaintiff.—Falls v. Carpenter, 21 N. C. 237, 28 Am. Dec. 592.

[s] (Pa. 1811) A plaintiff is a competent witness who has, after the commencement of a suit, made a voluntary assignment of all his property for the benefit of creditors, and been released by his assignees from all interest in the money to be collected in the suit, and all costs are paid by the assignees before he is sworn.—Steele v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 3 Bin. 306, overruled Post v. Avery (1843) 5 Watts & S. 509, and McClelland v. Mahon (1845) 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 364.

[t] (Pa. 1835) Where a party has devested himself of interest so that he cannot resume his title by compulsion of law, he is a competent witness.—Dellone v. Rehmer, 4 Watts, 9.

[u] (Pa. 1838) The nominal plaintiff of record who had assigned his claim before suit brought for the consideration of $1 is a competent witness to support the claim, though not released by the assignee.—Martin v. Stille, 3 Whart. 337.

[v] (Pa. 1845) Where the nominal plaintiff, before suit brought, had, in good faith, assigned a claim for personal services, alleged by him to have been admitted by the defendants at a general settlement of their accounts, which was valueless in his own hands because he could make no proof thereof except by his own testimony, his testimony was not admissible to sustain it after the assignment, notwithstanding the assignee had executed a release to him.—McClelland v. Mahon, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 364.

[w] (S. C. 1837) On appeal from the decree of the ordinary, establishing a will, after the appellants had commenced their case and examined several witnesses, they moved to strike from the record one of their number, who had released to the other appellants all of his interest, with a view of examining him as a witness. Held, that the motion was properly refused.—Boyd v. Boyd, 3 Hill, Law, 341.

[x] (Vt. 1854) One of several plaintiffs is a competent witness for defendant, when fully released from all interest and willing to testify, though others object who are interested on the part of plaintiffs.—Wills v. Judd, 26 Vt. 617.

[y] (Va. 1808) A party appellee cannot be received as a witness for his co-appellees, either upon his releasing to them his interest in the subject in controversy, or upon his or their depositing with the clerk a sum of money sufficient to cover the costs.—Cogbill v. Cogbill, 2 Hen. & M. 467.

[z] (W. Va. 1874) Where the assignor and assignee of a chose in action are both parties to a suit thereon, and the debtor is not living, a release by the assignee to the assignor does not make him a competent witness.—White v. Heavner, 7 W. Va. 324.

§ 432. Liability for costs in general.

[a] (U. S. 1809) If a witness be surety for costs, the court will permit other security to be substituted, so as to remove his interest.—Virginia v. Evans, Fed. Cas. No. 16,969 [1 Cranch, C. C. 581].

[b] (Ark. 1843) A new bond for costs may be substituted for the old, in order to render the original obligor competent to testify for the plaintiff.—McLain's Adm'x v. Churchill, 5 Ark. (5 Pike) 239.

[c] (Ark. 1847) Where the surety in a cost bond is needed as a witness, plaintiff may substitute a new bond, release such surety, and use him as a witness.—Hoys v. Tuttle, 8 Ark. (3 Eng.) 124, 46 Am. Dec 309.

[d] (Ill. 1863) A defendant in chancery, desiring to call his codefendant as a witness in his behalf, sought to remove his interest in the suit, which arose by reason of his liability for costs, by giving him a bond of indemnity against loss. Held, that this did not avail; such indemnity was not regarded a release.—Kennedy v. Evans, 31 Ill. 258.

[e] (Ind. 1844) A person for whose use a suit is brought, being liable, by statute, for costs, if the suit fails, is not a competent witness for plaintiff; nor can he be rendered competent, in such case, by his release of his interest in the cause of action to plaintiff.—Ellison v. Johnson, 7 Blackf. 217.

[f] (Ky. 1863) In a suit by partners for a debt in the court below, the name of one of the plaintiffs was stricken from the action, and security was found for the costs. Held, that the party so released was still liable for past costs, and therefore incompetent as a witness, on the ground of interest.—Dougherty v. Smith, 61 Ky. (4 Metc.) 279.

[g] (La. 1820) A party to a suit cannot make himself competent by assigning his interest to his partner, and depositing in court the amount of costs which, if condemned, he would probably have to pay.—Meeker's Assignee v. Williamson's Syndics, 8 Mart. (O. S.) 365.

[h] (La. 1823) A surety for costs may be made competent by the substitution of another, and his release which the court may order.—Butler v. De Hart, 1 Mart. (N. S.) 184.

[i] (La.) A witness responsible for costs, but secured for their payment, is competent.—(1824) Collins v. McCrummen, 3 Mart. (N. S.) 166; (1832) Trenchard v. Elderkin, 3 La. 294.

[j] (La. 1861) One of several plaintiffs cannot release his coplaintiffs from the payment of costs, in order to make them disinterested witnesses.—Roselius v. Barelli, 16 La. Ann. 386.

[k] (Me. 1832) The incompetency of the indorser of a writ, to testify as a witness for plaintiff, arising from his liability for costs, may be removed by plaintiff, by depositing with the clerk such sum as the court shall deem sufficient for the purpose, out of which defendant's costs are to be satisfied, in case he should finally prevail.—Roberts v. Adams, 9 Me. (9 Greenl.) 9.

[l] (Me. 1850) The interest of a witness as indorser of a writ for a nonresident plaintiff for costs may be removed by the deposit with the clerk of a sufficient amount to cover the costs, though made by a stranger to the action, without plaintiff's knowledge.—Ammidown v. Woodman, 31 Me. 580.

[m] (Md. 1831) The undertaking of a security upon the record may be struck out, and a new one substituted, in the discretion of the court, to make the first security a competent witness. —Stimmel v. Underwood, 3 Gill & J. 282.

[n] (Md. 1848) A legal plaintiff on the record is not a competent witness, even though the party for whose use the suit is brought offers to deposit in court any sum which the court may direct, to cover the liability of such plaintiff for costs.—Owings v. Emery, 7 Gill, 405.

[o] (Mass. 1834) An indorser of a writ is a competent witness for plaintiff where a sum of money sufficient to indemnify him against his liability for costs has been placed in his hands. —Beckley v. Freeman, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 468.

[p] (Mo. 1846) It is in the discretion of the court to refuse or to permit a party to give a new bond for costs, for the purpose of using the surety in the old one as a witness, after witnesses have been examined on the trial.—Matthews v. Coalter, 9 Mo. 705.

[q] (N. Y. 1837) A party liable for the costs of the defense, in case plaintiff fails to recover, is a competent witness for plaintiff, if he hold a bond of indemnity against such costs from a solvent obligor.—Lake v. Auborn, 17 Wend. 18.

[r] (Pa. 1868) A person who is beneficially interested under a will at the commencement of a proceeding to test its validity is substantially a party to the issue, although not so named, and cannot, by a subsequent release, discharge himself from liability for costs, and is not thereby restored to competency as a witness.—Montgomery v. Grant, 57 Pa. (7 P. F. Smith) 243.

§ 433. Representative or official capacity.

[a] (Ala. 1841) A plaintiff of record cannot, although he is shown to be a mere trustee, be made competent by the deposit of a sum of money sufficient to cover the costs of the suit, although he at the same time releases all his interest in the sum to be recovered to the person beneficially entitled to it.—Stone v. Bibb, 2 Ala. 100.

[b] (Ind. 1841) A prochein ami may be discharged for the purpose of using him as a witness in the suit.—Harvey v. Coffin, 5 Blackf. 566.

[c] (Ind. 1858) A suit against a guardian on a contract made by him touching his ward's estate is personal against the guardian, and hence he cannot, by resigning, cease to be a party to the suit and become a competent witness.—Stevenson v. Bruce, 10 Ind. 397.

[d] (Ky. 1811) The court may suffer the prochein ami of an infant plaintiff to be changed, and the first friend, being thereby released from responsibility for costs, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Burks v. Shain, 5 Ky. (2 Bibb) 341, 5 Am. Dec. 616.

[e] (Md. 1830) Where a suit is brought by next friend, he may be discharged, and another appointed, for the purpose of making him a witness, on securing the costs which have accrued. —Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, 544, 20 Am. Dec. 402.

[f] (Md. 1864) Plaintiff on the record is incompetent to testify for his cestui que use, and a release to his cestui que use, devesting himself of all interest in the cause, will not restore his competency.—Wade v. Lynch, 21 Md. 534.

[g] (Md. 1864) Where it is discovered, during the hearing upon a caveat to the probate of a will filed for infant heirs by their prochein ami, that such prochein ami is a material witness for the infant caveators, he may, upon petition, be discharged, and another appointed in his place, and it is error in the orphans' court to refuse the application.—Humes v. Shillington, 22 Md. 346.

§ 434. Interest in property in general.

[a] (U. S. 1864) A man may lawfully transfer all his interest in property which is about to become the subject of a suit for the purpose of making himself competent as a witness in such suit.—Tobey v. Leonard, 69 U. S. (2 Wall.) 423, 17 L. Ed. 842.

[b] (Cal. 1863) In an action of trespass against T. "and the other owners" of a certain lode, T. alone was served with process and appeared. At the trial he offered a witness who stated that at the commencement of the suit he owned an interest in said lode, but that before trial he had sold it contingently upon his giving a good title, that T. had released him from all liability in said action. Held, that T. was the only defendant whose release was necessary, and that the witness had no interest to disqualify him from testifying, as it did not appear that judgment in this action would affect his title to the interest thus sold.—Real Del Monte Consol. G. & S. Min. Co. v. Thompson, 22 Cal. 542.

[c] (Ga. 1852) A purchaser of a lot fronting on an alleged street is a competent witness to prove the dedication after a conveyance of the lot to a third person with or without a warranty.—City of Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239.

[d] (Ill. 1865) In an action by a mortgagor against his mortgagee, to recover back money paid upon the mortgage, upon the ground of a failure of the consideration of the mortgage, a subsequent purchaser from the mortgagor, who had sold the premises to the mortgagee and taken the mortgage as a part payment therefor, is a competent witness for plaintiff, since he has no interest in the result of the suit.—Town v. Wood, 37 Ill. 512.

[e] (Ind. 1859) In a suit to cancel a deed, defendant, after suit, but before trial, conveyed. Held, that the purchasers, now joined as defendants, could not use him as a witness while he was a party to the record.—Dearmond v. Dearmond, 12 Ind. 455.

[f] (Ky. 1816) A coparcener who has executed a deed of release to another coparcener is a competent witness for the latter in a contest for the possession of the land released.—Rogers v. Turley, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 355.

[g] (Ky. 1842) A witness offered by a plaintiff in ejectment had purchased of him part of the land in contest in case of success. On his testimony being objected to, he was released from his notes given for the price of the land. Held, that he was thereby rendered competent.—Taylor's Heirs v. Whiting's Heirs, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 268.

[h] (Ky. 1867) M., nine years before his death, advanced and conveyed lands to four of his children, upon their parol agreement to pay at his death to W. and sister, two other children, as much pro rata in money as would equalize the advancements in land. Held, that in an action by W. to enforce the promise making the sister a defendant, she having conveyed away her interest to an only child, and not answering, was a competent witness for the defendants who had joined issue.—Mason v. Mason, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 35.

[i] (Me. 1852) In a suit by one having a special property in goods, against a common carrier, for negligence, the general owner, having released plaintiff, may be a witness for him.—Moran v. Portland Steam Packet Co., 35 Me. 55.

[j] (Md. 1850) A vendee, having sold the land, is a competent witness for his vendor in a proceeding by the latter against the purchaser to enforce the vendor's lien, to show notice of such lien to the purchaser.—Ringgold v. Bryan, 3 Md. Ch. 488.

[k] (Mass. 1840) Where, in a suit to recover pay for goods sold, plaintiff offers a witness whom defendant proves that plaintiff has declared to be jointly interested with him in the goods, a release to plaintiff by the witness of all his interest in the goods renders him a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bemis v. Charles, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 440.

[l] (N. Y. 1845) Where A. and B. are joint lessees, and A. sells out his interest to C. and D., who agree to pay the arrears of rent, but fail to do so, and the joint property on the premises is sold under a distress, and C. and D. buy in the property, and one of them procures a renewal of the lease, and C. and D. then sell the whole property to E., excluding B., A. and E. will both be competent witnesses for B. in a suit in equity against C. and D.—Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. 15.

[m] (N. C. 1860) A party became interested in a covenant of warranty of a slave, by purchasing an interest in the slave, and had such interest at the time the suit was brought, but sold it to plaintiff previously to the examination. Held, that he was competent as a witness for plaintiff.—Henderson v. Crouse, 52 N. C. 623.

[n] (Tex. 1863) A remainderman may execute a release of his interest to the owner of the life estate, and thereby render himself a competent witness for the latter in a suit for injury to the property.—Clark v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 27 Tex. 100.

§ 435. Owner of vessel or cargo.

[a] (U. S. 1822) An owner of a vessel who has settled with his co-owner may testify against a passenger in a suit for passage money, where his co-owner has released him.—Massoletti v. Miller, Fed. Cas. No. 9,264 [2 Cranch, C. C. 313].

[b] (U. S. 1846) The sale by a part owner (who is also master) of his interest in a vessel before suit brought, and a release to him by his co-owners of all liability to them, because of any recovery of wages against them or their vessel, render him a competent witness in an action for wages against the vessel.—The Osceola, Fed. Cas. No. 10,602 [Olcott, 450].

[c] (Mass. 1807) A. and B. jointly ship goods, and consign them to the master for sales and returns, A. only being known to the master. After the ship's departure, A. and B. agree to sever their interest in the adventure, and A. gives B. a written direction to the master to account to B. for a moiety. Upon the ship's return, B. shows the direction to the master, and demands payment of him. The master, not having brought the proceeds in the ship, refuses to account with B., but, at the same time, says he is ready to account with the right owner, and, when the proceeds arrive, he will pay them to B., if they belong to him. In assumpsit by B. against the master for the moiety, held, that A. is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Austin v. Walsh, 2 Mass. 401.

[d] (Mo. 1853) An owner of the boat at the time of a collision, and when suit was commenced and the boat attached, who sold his interest with the understanding that the purchasers should run the risk of the suit then pending, is incompetent to testify.—Patrick v. The J. Q. Adams, 19 Mo. 73.

[e] (N. Y. 1831) A person, owning part of a cargo of a vessel, standing by and permitting another who owns the residue to sell the same, agreeing to look to such other for payment, and subsequently being paid for the same, is a competent witness to prove the contract of sale.—Outwater v. Dodge, 6 Wend. 397.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) A master of a vessel, who had agreed with the owner to become a joint owner on paying a certain sum, but who had never fulfilled the agreement, and worked the vessel for a certain part of the profits, was a competent witness for the owner on executing to him a release of all his rights under the contract.—Ward v. Whitney, 5 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Sandf.) 399, affirmed (1853) 8 N. Y. (4 Seld.) 442.

§ 436. Grantor or vendor and warrantor.

[a] A grantor in a deed with general warranty is a competent witness after the covenant of warranty has been released.

—(Conn. 1812) Clark v. Johnson, 5 Day, 373;
(Ill. 1865) Fash v. Blake, 38 Ill. 363;
(Ky. 1823) Wall v. Nelson, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 395;
(Mass. 1849) Field v. Snell, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 504;
(Miss. 1857) Cooper v. Granberry, 33 Miss. 117;
(Pa. 1839) Summers v. Wallace, 9 Watts, 161;
(Tex. 1870) Ellis v. Ponton, 32 Tex. 434.

[b] (U. S. 1850) Where an auctioneer, without the knowledge of the vendor, bids at the sale, enhancing the price, a release by the purchaser of all claims against the auctioneer for the latter's misconduct, so as to make him a competent witness, will not release the vendor.—Veazie v. Williams, 49 U. S. (8 How.) 134, 12 L. Ed. 1018, reversing (1845) Fed. Cas. No. 16,907 [3 Story, 611].

[c] (Cal. 1859) After the vendee has released the vendor from all damages for breach of a warranty of title, the vendor is a competent witness for the vendee in a suit against him by a subvendee for a breach of the warranty.—Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483.

[d] (Conn. 1793) A discharge to a grantor of lands, who conveyed with covenants of seisin to the grantee and his assigns, given by the grantee, after he has conveyed part of the premises to other persons, will not remove the interest of the grantor.—Sherwood v. Hubbel, 1 Root, 498.

[e] (Conn. 1809) A. conveyed to B., with covenants of seisin and warranty, a piece of land containing 13 acres, bounded east by the land of C., and west by that of A. In an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, brought by B. against C., the defendant pleaded title, and claimed that the dividing line between his land and that conveyed to the plaintiff was west of the locus in quo. The grantor was offered as a witness to disprove the defendant's claim, having been released by the plaintiff from the covenants in his deed. Held, that the grantor was an incompetent witness, being interested to establish the dividing line as far eastward as possible, and that the release did not restore his competency, the covenants in his deed running with the land.—Abby v. Goodrich, 3 Day, 433.

[f] (Ga. 1854) In an ejectment by A. against B., both parties deriving title from C., C., being released by defendant from his liability over, on account of his warranty, is a competent witness to prove plaintiff's deed a forgery. Nor is defendant obliged to resort first to the ostensible witnesses to plaintiff's deed. —Jordan v. Faircloth, 14 Ga. 544.

[g] (Ill. 1861) Where a quitclaim deed of land is obtained from the owner by fraud, and he afterwards releases his interest in the land to another person, he is a competent witness in a suit between the two grantees to prove the fraud.—Lloyd v. Higbee, 25 Ill. (15 Peck) 603.

[h] (Ky. 1845) Where a person had transferred his interest in a tract of land to A., with notice, and subject to a prior conveyance to B., he is a competent witness for B.; or, if he had sold to A. without notice of the previous sale, he would be competent, as his interest would lie on the other side.—Waller v. Logan's Heirs, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 515.

[i] (La. 1823) Defendant may, by a release, make his vendor competent to prove the loss of a bill of sale to witness from plaintiff.—Vannorght v. Foreman, 1 Mart. (N. S.) 352.

[j] (Me. 1849) On a writ of entry, where defendants vouched in their immediate warrantors, who appeared and defended, the fact that they executed a release to the original warrantor of all liability on his covenant of warranty will not render such original warrantor a competent witness.—Crooker v. Jewell, 29 Me. (16 Shep.) 527.

[k] (Me. 1854) A grantor of land, having been released from his covenants of warranty, is a competent witness for the grantee, although the grant contain a reservation of a right in behalf of the grantor to resume the land in case he should fall into need; his rights not being affected by the result of the suit.—Gilbert v. Curtis, 37 Me. 45

[l] (Mass. 1835) The grantee of land, which had been previously attached in an action against the grantor, conveyed it with covenants of warranty. Held, that he was an incompetent witness for the grantor in such action, notwithstanding the grantee testified, on his voir dire, that he considered himself fully indemnified against his covenants, and felt no interest in the action.—Pond v. Hartwell, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 269.

[m] (Miss. 1856) In a suit between parties claiming under two conveyances from the same grantor, one of which contains an implied warranty and the other does not, a release to the grantor will make him competent as a witness for the party claiming under the former.—Fatheree v. Fletcher, 31 Miss. 265.

[n] (N. H. 1822) A. conveys land to B. with a covenant of warranty, and B. conveys the same land to C. with a covenant of warranty. A release, by C., of A.'s covenant, is in law a release of B.'s covenant, and such release makes A. a competent witness for C. in a writ of entry brought by C. to recover the land.—Leighton v. Perkins, 2 N. H. 427.

[o] (N. H. 1843) Prior to the sale of land to plaintiff, the vendor informed him that defendant had no right to float the land, and the deed to plaintiff contained covenants of warranty. Held, that the vendor was a competent witness for plaintiff in the subsequent action for flowing the land, on being released from his covenants, though at the date of the release some damage had been done by the water.—Sargent v. Gutterson, 13 N. H. 467.

[p] (N. H. 1846) P. conveyed land to W., and W. conveyed to M., taking a mortgage back for the purchase money. Held, that M.'s written admission that he was tenant at will to W., and W.'s release of covenants of warranty to P., rendered the latter a competent witness in an action against M., to recover the land.—Bellows v. McCartee, 20 N. H. 515.

[q] (N. J. 1820) In an action by the vendee of goods, against a mere depository of such goods, for the recovery of them, the vendor is a competent witness for plaintiff, if released by him.—Hendricks v. Mount, 5 N. J. Law (2 Southard) 738, 8 Am. Dec. 623.

[r] (N. Y. 1820) A grantor who has given a deed with full covenants is a competent witness for a person deriving title under him, but not as his immediate grantee, on being released; the release precluding the party from resorting to him as his immediate grantor.—Jackson v. Root, 18 Johns. 60.

[s] (N. Y. 1836) Though in an action of ejectment it appeared that the deed, under which plaintiff claimed, was void as to third persons under the statute to prevent champerty and maintenance, plaintiff's grantor was nevertheless a competent witness for plaintiff when duly released from liability on his covenants, as the deed was valid between the grantor and plaintiff.—Van Hoesen v. Benham, 15 Wend. 164.

[t] (N. Y. 1838) In an action of ejectment against a husband, to recover real estate belonging to his wife, he may release a witness objected to as incompetent on the ground of his liability to the wife under a covenant for quiet enjoyment.—Ford v. Walsworth, 19 Wend. 334.

[u] (N. Y. 1847) A. conveyed land to B., B. conveyed the same land to C. with warranty, and C. to D., also with warranty. In a suit for dower of the land, brought by the widow of A. against D., held, that B. was a competent witness for defendant, on being released by him.—Cunningham v. Knight, 1 Barb. 399.

[v] (N. C. 1860) The grantor of a slave, by deed, can, by means of a release from his grantee, be made competent to testify for him.—Buie v. Wooten, 52 N. C. 441.

[w] (Pa. 1809) A grantor, when released from liability, and without interest in the suit, may be a witness in favor of one claiming under him.—Balliot's Lessee v. Bowman, 2 Bin. 162, note.

[x] (Pa. 1852) A grantor with general warranty, being released from the warranty, and not interested, is a competent witness for the grantee, in favor of his title, and against a conveyance previously made by him to a grantee in trust.—Dayton v. Newman, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 194.

[y] (Tenn. 1816) A release of a warrantor, where the covenant is merely personal, makes him a good witness, without registration, on the trial of an ejectment by the vendee.—Pile v. Benham, 4 Tenn. (3 Hayw.) 176.

[yy] (Vt. 1846) A witness, offered on the part of plaintiff, in an action of ejectment, had formerly been a joint owner with plaintiff's grantor of a lot of 100 acres of land, and had agreed with him, within 15 years before the trial of the action, upon the division of the lot into moieties by a line running east and west, and had conveyed the north half of the lot by metes and bounds, warranting it to contain 56 acres, and plaintiff became the owner of the south part of the lot, and this action was brought to recover a strip of land lying upon the west side of his lot, to a line, which he claimed had been acquiesced in by his grantors and defendant for more than 15 years before the commencement of the action; and if plaintiff recovered to this line, his lot would contain 50 acres, and otherwise less than that. Held, that if these facts disclosed any interest in the witness, that interest was fully removed by a release executed by plaintiff to him, discharging him and his assigns from all rights of action accruing at any time to plaintiff, by reason of the division of the original lot between the witness and plaintiff's grantor.—Ackley v. Buck, 18 Vt. 395.

[z] (Vt. 1853) A witness who was the assignee of defendant and had conveyed with warranty a part of defendant's real estate, which had been attached by plaintiff, the witness holding a sufficient indemnity to meet the judgment if recovered, is too remotely interested to be incompetent.—Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

[zz] (Va. 1855) Where one conveys with covenant of warranty, and in a suit brought against those claiming under his grantee a release from his covenant is executed to him by the administrator of his grantee, he is thereby made a competent witness (although some of the defendants did not join in such release), since the personal representative alone can maintain an action for breach of covenant.—Unis v. Charlton's Adm'r, 12 Grat. 484.

§ 437. Landlord and tenant or terre-tenant.

[a] (La. 1864) One party leased a livery stable and premises to two parties in partnership, and one of the lessees purchased the interest of the other, and gave a warranty against all liability, and the lessor recognized the sale and the release of one of the lessees by the other, by receiving the rent and giving him written notice that his lease would terminate at a certain date. Held, that the lessee who was released was a competent witness to testify in a suit for damages between the lessor and lessee.—Crane v. Harris, 19 La. Ann. 114.

[b] (Me. 1844) The lessor of plaintiff, in an action of trespass quare clausum, wherein soil and freehold in the premises are pleaded by defendant in himself, on being released from all claims under the covenants of the lease, is a competent witness for plaintiff to disprove the title set up by defendant.—Jordan v. Symonds, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 407.

[c] (Pa. 1818) A release, by a tenant in possession, of all his interest, will not make him a competent witness for the landlord, nor will he be competent if the title is proved not to be in his landlord.—Vincent v. Huff's Lessee, 4 Serg. & R. 298.

[d] (Pa. 1826) A release by two lessees will not bar a third from an action against a landlord, unless the covenant was joint, so as to render the landlord competent to testify for the former.—Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 Serg. & R. 153.

[e] (Pa. 1852) A person who had an interest in the property when scire facias was brought to enforce a mechanic's lien, and was notified of the suit as terre-tenant, but who sold out his interest before the trial, is a competent witness for defendant, the proceeding being in rem.—Holden v. Winslow, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 449.

[f] (Pa. 1868) A firm, the lessees of a coal mine, confessed judgment to three creditors for themselves and in trust for other creditors, and under this judgment the fixtures, mining machinery, tools, teams, etc., were levied upon and sold to the judgment creditors. Subsequently the lessees sold and surrendered to the lessors the lease and all their interest in the "colliery," and the latter took possession of the fixtures, etc., to recover which the sheriff's vendees brought trover. Held that one of the lessees, who had released to plaintiffs all his interest in the property in controversy, was not a competent witness for them. His release could only reach his right to the surplus after the object of the trust had been accomplished, and left him still as directly interested as before in increasing or preserving the fund so as to discharge by means of it his personal liability to his creditors.—Carey v. Bright, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 70.

§ 438. Interest in mortgage or other security.

[a] (U. S. 1845) In a suit in equity, brought by the vendor of land, to set aside the conveyance for fraud, a mortgagee of the vendee was brought in to defend, but it was shown that the mortgage was discharged before the bill was filed, and there was no evidence of any collusion. Held, that the mortgagee was a competent witness for the respondent, but that he would not have been if he had remained interested.—Warner v. Daniels, Fed. Cas. No. 17,181 [1 Woodb. & M. 90].

[b] (Ala. 1849) Where a note is made by A. and indorsed by B. and C. for the exclusive benefit of D., and C. at the time of the transaction agrees to be bound equally with the maker and first indorser, and D. afterwards, with the assent of the parties, executes a deed of trust to A. to secure them, and the property conveyed is levied on and claimed by the trustee under the deed, C. on the trial of the right of property is an incompetent witness for the claimant, nor is his competency restored by a subsequent release to the claimant and B. of all his interest in the security and a bond of indemnity from them to him against all further losses on account of D.—Scales v. Dersha, 16 Ala. 308.

[c] (Ark. 1856) In a suit by the trustee to recover possession of the trust property, it appeared that one of the notes secured by the deed was for the benefit of a person summoned as a witness. He swore that he had no interest in the result of the suit, and that he had delivered the note to a third person, who was security for the debt, had given his own note for the amount, who was solvent, and to whom alone he looked for payment. Held, that the witness was competent.—Hempstead v. Johnston, 18 Ark. 123, 65 Am. Dec. 458.

[d] (Ill. 1863) The holder of notes secured by a mortgage obtained insurance on the mortgaged premises, and afterwards assigned the notes and mortgage, and the policy of insurance, and while the interests were thus held by the assignee the house on the premises was destroyed by fire. Held, in an action in the name of the party originally insured to recover the insurance money, that his assignee, holding the interests at the time of the loss, having, in the meantime, assigned the notes and mortgage and the policy to the insurers, in compliance with one of the conditions of the policy, thereby became divested of his interest in the suit, and was a competent witness therein, on behalf of the party suing.—New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221.

[e] (Ill. 1865) The competency of a witness who is an interested party by reason of the assignment of a note and mortgage, the validity of which is at issue, may be restored by a release from all liability by defendant, who is the holder and assignee.—Smith v. Newton, 38 Ill. 230.

[f] (Ky. 1848) A father, who has assigned a mortgage to his son, in consideration of natural affection, and who intended to charge it as an advancement, if realized, is a competent witness to sustain the mortgage, however his position might affect his credibility.—Vanmeter v. McFaddin, 47 Ky. (8 B. Mon.) 435.

[g] (Me. 1827) In a writ of entry by the mortgagee against a stranger, the mortgagor will be admitted a competent witness for the mortgagee, the latter having released him from so much of the debt as should not be satisfied by the land mortgaged, and covenanted to resort to the land as the sole fund for payment of the debt.—Howard v. Chadbourne, 5 Me. (5 Greenl.) 15.

[h] (N. H. 1844) Upon the trial of a writ of entry, brought by a mortgagor against a person to whom the mortgagee had conveyed the land with warranty, the mortgagee upon being released from his covenants is a competent witness for the tenant.—Smith v. Smith, 15 N. H. 55.

[i] (N. J. 1826) A purchaser of a portion of mortgaged premises from the mortgagor executed a bond to pay the mortgage, and afterwards mortgaged the land to a third person. The mortgagor subsequently conveyed the remaining portion of the mortgaged premises to another person with covenants of warranty. Held, that the mortgagor on being released by the second purchaser from his covenants was a competent witness to show that the purchaser from the first grantee took with notice of the agreement on the part of such grantee to pay the entire mortgage.—Black v. Morse, 7 N. J. Eq. (3 Halst. Ch.) 509.

[j] (N. Y. 1828) A mortgagor, who is insolvent, by whom all his interest in the mortgaged premises has been sold to plaintiff, is competent to prove payment of the mortgage debt, on receiving from plaintiff a release of all claim against him on account of the mortgaged premises.—McLaren v. Hopkins, 1 Paige, 18.

[k] (Pa. 1852) A. gave a mortgage to B. without warranty or bonds, and subsequently released the land to C. On a scire facias being issued on the mortgage naming A. as defendant, C. appeared, showed title, and had himself substituted as defendant in place of A. Held, that A. was a competent witness for C. to show that the mortgage had been paid; the action being in rem and not in personam.—Perkins v. Johnson, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 510.

[l] (Vt. 1846) A. purchased goods professedly for B., and took a bill of sale of them to B., but in reality paid for them himself, and made the purchase for his own benefit. Subsequently A. sold the goods to C., and procured C. to execute a receipt, acknowledging that he had received the goods of B., and agreeing that they should remain the property of B. until paid for. An action of trover was commenced by the holder of the receipt of C. in the name of the original nominal owner of the goods, against one who held the goods under C., and a witness was offered on the part of plaintiff, who had been an intermediate owner of the receipt, and who had conveyed the same to plaintiff in interest, as collateral security for a debt which plaintiff in interest held against him, and, upon an objection being taken to the witness on the ground of interest, the bill of exceptions showed that plaintiff in interest executed a discharge, which was held by the county court sufficient to remove the interest of the witness, and which was acquiesced in by defendant, and the discharge was not produced on the trial in the supreme court. Held, that the latter court would presume that the discharge executed was a release of the debt, for the security of which the conveyance of the receipt by the witness was made, and that the witness could not be held incompetent, by reason of its having been shown, on his cross-examination, and by other testimony, that a third person had in fact a claim upon the debt in favor of plaintiff in interest against the witness, and that, upon the conveyance of the receipt by the witness to plaintiff in interest, it was agreed between such third person and plaintiff in interest, that such third person should hold the receipt in lieu of his claim upon the other debt, it not appearing that the witness was aware of this last agreement.—Lord v. Bishop, 18 Vt. 141.

[m] (Vt. 1846) A. and B. agreed to mortgage certain real estate owned by them jointly, and also certain real estate owned by them individually, to secure the mortgagees for signing a note with them to a third person, it being understood that A. was to secure one-third and B. two-thirds of the amount, and, by mistake, a portion of B.'s real estate, intended to be mortgaged, was not included in the mortgage deed, and A. had paid to the mortgagees his portion of the mortgage debt, and had received from them a release of his individual real estate. Held, in a suit in chancery brought by the mortgagees, against B., to reform the mortgage, that A. was a competent witness for complainants, especially as no objection had been taken by defendant for want of parties.—Blodgett v. Hobart, 18 Vt. 414.

§ 439. Interest in invention.

[a] (U. S. 1853) Two witnesses who had owned an interest in an invention claimed to have sold out about a month before testifying. But one of them admitted that if the machine proved successful part of the proceeds were to be applied to the payment of certain debts of theirs, and the other stated that if it were successful he might or might not get a pecuniary benefit therefrom. Held, that both were disqualified, as interested parties.—Marshall v. Mee, Fed. Cas. No. 9,129 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 229].

[b] (U. S. 1857) An inventor who is a party to the record, and who has a real interest in the case until a short time before he is to be examined as a witness, cannot become a competent witness by assigning his invention.—Hill v. Dunklee, Fed. Cas. No. 6,489 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 475].

[c] (U. S. 1860) An assignor who has sold his invention is not a competent witness to prove priority upon an interference declared.—Barstow v. Swan, Fed. Cas. No. 1,065.

§ 440. Interest in penalty or fine.

[a] (U. S.) The owner of the goods stolen, after having released to the United States and to the prisoner all his interest in the fine, is a competent witness for the United States, and may be examined generally.—(1801) United States v. Clancey, Fed. Cas. No. 14,800 [1 Cranch, C. C. 13]; (1802) Same v. Hare, Fed. Cas. No. 15,302 [1 Cranch, C. C. 82]; (1804) Same v. Brown, Fed. Cas. No. 14,657 [1 Cranch, C. C. 210]; (1804) Same v. McCann, Fed. Cas. No. 15,655 [1 Cranch, C. C. 207]; (1805) Same v. Tolson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,530 [1 Cranch, C. C. 269]; (1824) Same v. Carnot, Fed. Cas. No. 14,726 [2 Cranch, C. C. 469].

[b] (N. H. 1843) Although upon the trial of an indictment for larceny the party injured is not a competent witness for the prosecution, if he be entitled to treble the value of the property stolen upon the conviction of the prisoner, yet, as the payment of treble damages is a part of the sentence, and as there is no mode of enforcing it if it be not included in the sentence, if the witness agree to release all claim to it, and an entry be made on the record accordingly, the court would not be warranted in including it in the sentence, and the competency of the witness will be restored.—State v. Pray, 14 N. H. 464.

[c] (Pa. 1782) An informer is not a competent witness if he release his interest as to the part of the penalty given him by statute; he being liable for the costs in any event.—Rapp v. Le Blanc, 1 Dall. 63, 1 L. Ed. 38.

[d] (Pa. 1800) On prosecution for violation of election laws, the prosecutor, who was entitled to a moiety of the fine, was a competent witness on executing a release.—Respublica v. Ray, 3 Yeates, 65.

[e] (S. C. 1820) An informer is a competent witness if he release his interest as to the part of the penalty given him by statute.—City Council v. Haywood, 2 Nott & McC. 308.

[f] (S. C. 1820) Where on an indictment it is discovered after a witness has testified that he is interested in the penalty, he may release his interest and be re-examined.—State v. Van Evour, 2 Nott & McC. 309.

[g] (S. C. 1836) A witness, who may be incompetent from being interested in an action to recover a penalty, may restore his competency by a release of his interest to plaintiff.—City of Charleston v. England, Riley, 50.

§ 441. Interest in contract in general.

[a] (Ill. 1864) A. sold B. a quantity of corn under an agreement that he should be credited for its value upon his indebtedness to B., and B. gave him such credit. Held, that A. was a competent witness for B. in a suit by him to recover the price of the same corn which he had subsequently sold to defendant.—Hodgen v. Latham, 33 Ill. 344.

[b] (Me. 1825) A party who had contracted to furnish a quantity of goods afterwards admitted another to aid him in supplying the requisite quantity, for which he was to receive the same price, and was paid accordingly. Held, that the person thus subsequently admitted was a competent witness for the party with whom he had contracted, in a suit brought by the latter to recover the price of the goods sold.—Barstow v. Gray, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 409.

[c] (Me. 1854) A physician, who by his contract with a town receives all fees they recover of other towns for his attendance on paupers, is a good witness in a suit for such fees and other supplies if he have previously received said fees from the town.—Inhabitants of Richmond v. Inhabitants of Thomaston, 38 Me. 232.

[d] (Mass. 1835) In an action on a book account, defendant introduced a witness, who testified that, upon the sale of a horse by him to plaintiffs, it was agreed between them that a portion of the price should be applied in part payment of this account, and that defendant should pay the amount of such portion to the witness, and that it was paid accordingly. Held, that the witness was competent.—Burt v. Nichols, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 560.

[e] (Mass. 1846) B. contracted with a railroad corporation to construct a section of the road, and afterwards underlet the section to C., D., and E. jointly, and not jointly and then severally, and C. underlet it to D. and E., who proceeded in the work for a short time, and then stopped; the corporation then assumed the work, and finished it, and were sued by S. for articles furnished, under a contract with C. and D., for the completion of the work, and used by the corporation. S. released B. and C. from all liability for the articles, and introduced the testimony of D. in support of the claim. Held, that D. was a competent witness.—Stiles v. Western R. Corp., 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 376.

[f] (Mass. 1851) Since Rev. St. c. 92, §§ 12, 13, one of several joint contractors, who by reason of his absence from the commonwealth is not served with process in an action brought against them on the contract, cannot be rendered a competent witness for the others, by a release from them of his liability to contribute toward the payment of the debt, in case plaintiff should recover against them, and they should be obliged to pay it.—Jennings v. Fisher, 61 Mass. (7 Cush.) 239.

[g] (N. C. 1856) As one of two persons jointly entitled to damages for a deceit in a sale of property cannot release or assign his interest to the other so as to enable him to sue alone, such release to a joint purchaser will not render him a competent witness for his co-purchaser.—Scott v. Brown, 48 N. C. 541, 67 Am. Dec. 256.

[h] (Pa. 1852) Money in process of collection by an attorney was claimed by four persons. It was agreed by them that it should be received by three of them. The other brought suit against the attorney after he collected and paid over the money. Held, that the three were competent witnesses to prove the agreement, they having been released by defendant from liability over to him.—Strohecker v. Hoffman, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 223.

[i] (Pa. 1861) A county proposing to build a bridge, G. agreed to pay $150 toward it if placed at his mill, at which place it was built by R., the contractor, who, having agreed to take G. for payment for so much of the sum due by the county, received from the commissioners an order on G. for $150 and the balance in money; the order not being accepted or paid, it was returned, and afterwards suit brought for that amount against the county by R., on the trial of which G., to whom the money recovered was to go in payment for a lumber bill, was rejected as a witness, though released by the plaintiff. Held, that G., though released by R., was still interested, and was not competent, until he had released plaintiff.—Rhoads v. Armstrong County, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 92.

[j] (Tex. 1863) A party to an action directly interested in the contract upon which the cause of action arises wherein he is called to testify cannot have his competency as a witness restored by release, substitution, or deposit.—Gould v. Beal, 26 Tex. 665.

[k] (Vt. 1840) A witness who had no interest in a contract when made, and who was discharged of all interest at the time of trial, is admissible, though he was part owner of the contract shortly after it was made and up to the day of the trial.—Moore v. Rich's Adm'r, 12 Vt. 563.

[l] (Vt. 1850) Plaintiff furnished money to be expended by S. in the purchase of flour, and S. was to repay the money, with interest, and to allow plaintiff a barrel of flour for every 100 barrels purchased; and the flour was purchased and invoiced in the name of plaintiff and was to remain his until sold and paid for. In an action brought by plaintiff to recover the price of the flour, when sold, S. having released to plaintiff all claim which he had in the suit, both to the damages and costs, and plaintiff having released to S. all claim on account of the costs, and expenses in the suit, and the attorney who commenced the suit having released his lien upon the costs for his services and expenditures, held, that S. was thereby rendered a competent witness for plaintiff.—Heald v. Warren, 22 Vt. 409.

§ 442. Proceedings to enforce mechanic's lien.

[a] (N. Y. 1844) In an action by the claimant of a mechanic's lien against the owner, the builder is a competent witness for the former, on being released by him.—Hoyt v. Miner, 7 Hill, 525, affirming Miner v. Hoyt (1843) 4 Hill, 193.

[b] (Pa. 1841) In a proceeding on a mechanic's lien against the owner of a building and contractor, in which it appeared that the contractor had been fully paid for his work and materials, he is a competent witness for the owner on being released by the owner from his liability over to him for costs.—Dickinson College v. Church, 1 Watts & S. 462.

[c] (Pa. 1842) In scire facias upon a mechanic's lien against the owner and contractor, the latter may be made a competent witness by a release, from his sureties and the owner, from all personal liability for the sum claimed by plaintiff.—Church v. Dickinson College, 3 Watts & S. 221.

[d] (Pa. 1850) On the trial of a scire facias on a mechanic's lien filed against a reputed owner and two contractors, such owner and one contractor cannot make the other a competent witness by a release, as they have no power to release him from his liability to plaintiff's costs.—Haworth v. Wallace, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 118.

[e] (Pa. 1859) The interest of a contractor who constructed a building would stand balanced on a sci. fa. on a mechanic's lien were it not for his liability to indemnify the owner against the costs of the action, and he may consequently be rendered a competent witness for the defense by release of the obligation forming his disqualification.—Spackman v. Caldwell, 3 Phila. 375.

§ 443. Interest in bill or note.

[a] (Ala. 1852) When an accommodation indorser of a note, on which judgment is recovered against him, files his petition for a supersedeas of an execution issued thereon, alleging satisfaction of the judgment, and issue is taken on the facts set forth in the petition, the party for whose accommodation he indorsed the note may be rendered a competent witness for the petitioner by the execution of a release to him by the latter previous to the trial; and it is no objection to the release that it was delivered to the witness by the petitioner's attorney, when it is shown that after its delivery the petitioner acknowledged that he had released the witness.—Branch Bank at Mobile v. Coleman, 20 Ala. 140.

[aa] (Ala. 1855) The exception contained in section 12 of the Code will be so construed in connection with section 2290 as to authorize the transferrer of a note to be a witness for his transferee on his receiving a release.—Hiscox v. Hendree, 27 Ala. 216.

[b] (Ill. 1861) In a replevin suit, a person to whom plaintiff has given a note for his advance of money with which to purchase the property replevied, and out of the proceeds thereof to pay the note, and which note has been paid, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Gray v. Morey, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 409.

[c] (Ill. 1866) Where M. agreed to aid three persons, who were about to form a partnership, in purchasing a certain factory, at a specified price, in consideration of the surrender to him of his notes, held separately by two of them, and having performed his agreement, one of them surrendered the note held by him, but the other assigned his before maturity, and the assignee recovered judgment thereon against M., the one who surrendered his note was a competent witness in an action by M. against the other for breach of his agreement to prove the agreement.—Pollock v. McClurken, 42 Ill. 370.

[d] (Ky. 1829) One obligor on a joint and several note cannot, by releasing his co-obligor from contribution, render him a competent witness, although the suit has abated as to the latter.—Pendleton v. Speed, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 508.

[e] (N. H. 1857) A witness testified on the trial that he did not know whether he was interested in the suit or not; that he owned the note on which the execution was founded; that the suit on the note was brought by his direction, in plaintiff's name as indorsee, with his consent, against the principal alone, one M. being surety on it; that the witness had agreed with M. that he might manage the suit on the note, and the judgment and execution which might be recovered therein, in his own way, as the witness looked to M. alone for his pay, and was sure of it from him; that M. had taken the direction and control of the suit on the note, and of the execution which issued therein; had instituted this suit in plaintiff's name by the consent of the witness, and had agreed to conduct it at his own expense. Held, that on these facts the witness had no interest to exclude him from testifying for plaintiff.—Benson v. Ela, 35 N. H. 402.

[f] (N. Y. 1832) The holder of a note, if he has parted with his interest, is a competent witness for the assignee.—Soulden v. Van Rensselaer, 9 Wend. 293.

[g] (N. Y.) A. assigned a note to B., and received in exchange B.'s note of the same date and amount, and payable at the same time, without any understanding that the payment of B.'s note was to depend on the payment to him of the assigned note. Held, that it was an exchange of the notes, and that the title of the assigned note was vested in B., and that A. was not incompetent to testify in an action brought by B. on the assigned note, by reason of Code 1848, § 352. Where a party has no interest in the event of the suit, the assignment of the note in suit, even for the purpose of procuring his competency, does not affect his competency.—(1849) Evarts v. Palmer, 7 Barb. 178; (1850) Everts v. Same, 3 Code Rep. 51.

[h] (N. C. 1856) A subscribing witness to a negotiable instrument, who acquires by his own act an interest therein, either legal or equitable, may devest himself of that interest, and thus restore his competency in regard to it.—Purvis v. Albritton, 49 N. C. 170.

[i] (Pa. 1844) Where defendant, sued alone on a note signed by him and another, pleaded in abatement the nonjoinder, the other signer, though released from liability for costs or damages, was not a competent witness on the issue presented.—Graham v. Eichbaum, Brightly, N. P. 439.

[j] (Pa. 1849) On a feigned issue to try the right of claimants to the proceeds of a sealed note, which has been successively assigned, an assignor, having been released, is a competent witness for his assignee.—Taylor v. Gitt, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 428.

[k] (Pa. 1851) No one who, at the happening of the right of action on notes, is a party in interest to the transaction, can, by transferring his interest to a mere volunteer, become a witness in the action in order to enforce the right.—Miley v. Todd, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 101.

[l] (Pa. 1860) In an action on a note, a party who had been the holder of it before maturity, but had passed it by delivery, without his indorsement, is a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the consideration.—Evans v. Dela, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 451.

[m] (Pa. 1866) Y. purchased land, and, as part of the consideration, agreed to pay a note of R., the vendor, to S. Y. had already paid a judgment upon the note, but he did not have satisfaction entered upon it, or give up the note to R. Four years afterward Y. had the judgment assigned by S. to B. Held, in an action upon the judgment against R.'s estate, that Y. was not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Selover v. Rexford's Ex'r, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 308.

[n] (S. C. 1831) Where a note was taken for a debt due to the subscribing witness, and was made payable to a third person for the purpose of enabling the real creditor to become a witness, a release of his interest to the nominal payee rendered the subscribing witness competent to prove its execution, and an objection to his testimony went only to his credibility.—Crosby v. Floyd, 2 Bailey, 133.

[o] (Tex. 1852) A witness is competent, on being released by the payor, to prove that a note, sued on by a subsequent holder, who claims under the payee's indorsement in blank, was transferred by the payee to him, the witness, and that the payor settled it with him in full.—Shackelford v. Wheeler, 7 Tex. 553.

[p] (Vt. 1831) One having a beneficial interest in a note, but not the plaintiff of record in the suit on it, in order to qualify as a witness at the trial, assigned his interest to a third person. Held, that this did not qualify him.—Jarvis v. Barker's Adm'r, 3 Vt. 445.

[q] (Vt. 1841) Witness had covenanted with defendant to pay certain notes which were pleaded as an offset to plaintiff's demand. Held, although plaintiff had acquired an interest in the testimony of the witness before the making of the covenant, yet, if the covenant was made by the consent or procurement of plaintiff, the witness was still incompetent, notwithstanding releases from the witness to the parties.—Newton v. Booth, 13 Vt. 320, 37 Am. Dec. 596.

§ 444. —— Maker or drawer.

[a] In an action by the indorsee of a note against the indorser, the maker, when released by defendant, is a competent witness for him.
—(Me. 1850) Franklin Bank v. Pratt, 31 Me. 501; Same v. Dennis, Id. 521;
(Mass. 1847) Wheaton v. Wilmarth, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 422;
(Pa. 1848) Bank v. Fordyce, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 275, 49 Am. Dec. 561.

[b] (U. S. 1845) The prayer of the bill being that the purchaser should take up and pay certain notes given by A. and B., jointly for the purchase money, which were in the hands of an indorsee, a covenant by the indorsee to A. not to sue him on the notes will not render him a competent witness, for he would be liable over to the indorser on his taking up the notes.—Ferson v. Sanger, Fed. Cas. No. 4,751 [2 Ware (Dav. 252) 256].

[c] (Ark. 1860) In a suit against one of several makers of a note, one of the makers having received a release from defendant of all liability on account of the suit, held, that his interest was not thereby discharged, so as to render him a competent witness for defendant, under the statute.—Gould v. Tatum, 21 Ark. 329.

[d] (Me. 1842) In an action by an indorsee against an indorser of a note for the accommodation of the maker, the latter, on being released by the indorser from all claim for costs, is a competent witness for him.—Darling v. March, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 184.

[e] (Me. 1850) In an action by the holder of a draft against the acceptor, the drawer, if released by defendant, is a competent witness for him.—Franklin Bank v. Pratt, 31 Me. 501.

[f] (Mass. 1838) By St. 1779, c. 57, upon the death of one of two makers of a joint note, the promise becomes several; and in an action upon such a note against the executor of the deceased promisor the survivor is a competent witness for the executor, being first released by him.—Reed v. Boardman, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 441.

[g] (Mo. 1880) Where a note secured by a trust deed was paid, but transferred to the owner of the land to protect the maker against an outstanding judgment, and the judgment was paid, and an action was brought for the cancellation of the note, the maker of the note, who was a party defendant, was a competent witness.—Dolan v. Kehr, 9 Mo. App. 351.

[h] (N. H.) In an action on a note against one of several makers, another of the makers is a competent witness for defendant, being released by defendant from all claim to contribution.—(1824) Ames v. Withington, 3 N. H. 115; (1830) Carleton v. Whitcher, 5 N. H. 196.

[i] (N. Y. 1828) One of several makers of a note, who has been discharged as an insolvent and released from all liability by the joint makers, but is a party on the record, is incompetent as a witness.—Schermerhorn v. Schermerhorn, 1 Wend. 119.

[j] (Pa. 1845) Where, in a suit against one of two persons whose names are signed to a note, there is a plea in abatement for nonjoinder of the other party to the note, he is not a competent witness, though released by the signer from all costs or damages growing out of the suit.—Graham v. Eichbaum, 4 Clark, 28, 6 Pa. Law J. 280.

[k] (Pa. 1846) A., B., and C. drew a note payable to the order of D., which was regularly discounted and the proceeds paid to D. The note was protested, and a suit commenced, and judgment recovered against the drawers. B. paid the judgment, and obtained an assignment of it. A. and B., who were partners, then brought a suit against D., who was also one of the indorsers of the note. Held, that C. was not a competent witness to prove that D. was to pay the note when it became due, and that they became drawers on that condition; that the note was the written engagement of the drawers to pay its amount at maturity, and it was not competent for one of them to relieve himself from contribution by his own testimony, in direct opposition to such engagement; and that on the ground of public policy no release to C. from A. and B. could make him a competent witness to invalidate his own written engagement.—Alexander v. Alexander, 8 Pa. (3 Barr) 56.

[l] (Pa. 1847) In an action against one of two joint and several makers of a sealed note, the maker not sued is a competent witness for defendant on being released by him.—Cameron v. Paul, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 322.

[m] (Pa. 1850) In a suit by a holder of a draft against an acceptor, the drawer, having been released from the costs of the suit and from responsibility on the draft, is a competent witness for the acceptor to prove facts, occurring after the negotiation of the draft, tending to show that the holder was not the owner of the draft and was making a fraudulent use of it.—Snyder v. Wilt, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 59.

[n] (Pa. 1851) In a suit on a note given by defendant in lieu of another note signed by defendant and another person, whose name was omitted in the making of the note in suit, the party whose name was omitted, on being released by defendant, was a competent witness in his favor to prove failure of consideration of the original note.—Kirkpatrick v. Muirhead, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 117.

[o] (Pa. 1852) In a suit by the holder against the indorser of a note which had been discounted for the accommodation of the maker, the latter, if released from liability over for costs, may be a witness for defendant to testify that the date, which had been altered, was not altered when he negotiated it, and also that the alteration was made without the knowledge or consent of the indorser.—Kennedy v. Lancaster County Bank, 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 347.

[p] (Pa. 1860) One of the makers of a note, whose liability thereon has been barred by the statute of limitations, is a competent witness to prove an assumption by defendants of the firm debts of the makers of the note, in consideration of an assignment to them of the property of the firm.—Breitenbach v. Houts, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 153.

[q] (Va. 1860) An agreement by plaintiff, in a suit on a note against the maker and indorsers, not to take judgment against the last indorser unless he recovered against all, does not release him, so as to render the maker a competent witness when released by the prior indorsers.—Hogshead v. Baylor, 16 Grat. 99.

§ 445. —— Indorser and indorsee.

[a] The indorser of a note, having been released from all liability on the indorsement, is a competent witness for the indorsee in an action on the note.

—(N. H. 1838) Lock v. Noyes, 9 N. H. 430;
(N. Y. 1843) Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Griffith, 5 Hill, 476; (1845) Bay v. Gunn, 1 Denio, 108.

[b] (Ala. 1836) An indorsee of a note, whose liability has in any event ceased, is competent to prove the execution of the note.—Carroll v. Meeks, 3 Port. 226.

[c] (Ala. 1839) An indorser of any instrument whose liability has been in any way discharged is a competent witness in an action by the holder against the maker.—Todd v. Hardy, 9 Port. 846.

[d, e] (Ill. 1844) An indorser of a bill of exchange was sued by the third indorsee. At the trial the first indorsee was called as a witness, his name still remaining on the bill. Being objected to by defendant, plaintiff's counsel erased his name by permission of the court, and defendant excepted, because plaintiffs were not present, and the counsel produced no authority to erase his name. Held, that he became a competent witness, and, not being liable to defendant, the latter could not object to the erasure, nor call for the authority of counsel to make it.—Bradshaw v. Hubbard, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 390.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) A. assigned a note to B. October 24, 1841, and on the 18th of December following B. assigned the same to C. without recourse. Some time after C. assigned it in the same way to D., from whom the note came to the possession of E. Held, that as D. had no recourse upon C., and C. none upon B., and B. was not responsible to any subsequent indorsee, and as A. had been discharged from all liability as an indorser to all the indorsees, except E., by lapse of time and negligence to collect, A. was a competent witness for E. in a suit upon the note, upon being released by E. —Wilkerson v. Daniels, 1 G. Greene, 179.

[g] (Ky. 1816) In a suit by the indorsee of a note against the maker, who pleaded accord and satisfaction, the indorsee introduced the indorser to prove that the accord and satisfaction were not made before notice of the indorsement. The indorsee had executed a release of the indorser, but the indorser, being examined on his voir dire, said that he felt bound in honor to compensate the indorsee in case he did not recover, and also that, if the maker had the demand to pay, he expected to reimburse him. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Duncan v. Pindell, 7 Ky. (4 Bibb) 330.

[h] (La. 1830) An indorser, discharged for want of notice, may prove payment for the maker.—Bourg v. Bringier, 8 Mart. (N. S.) 507.

[i] (Me. 1852) An indorser "without recourse" of a negotiable note, having been released from all liabilities in relation thereto by the indorsee, is a competent witness to prove a payment of part of it before the indorsement.—Evans v. Smith, 34 Me. 33.

[j] (Me. 1853) One who has indorsed a note with qualifications, and under circumstances rendering his liability to the indorsee doubtful, may compound with such indorsee for his release, and so become a competent witness for the latter in an action against the maker, and without acquiring an interest in the result of the action by reason of the money paid for such release.—Hankerson v. Emery, 37 Me. 16.

[k] (Miss. 1870) Where the indorsee of a note has not been notified of its dishonor, he is competent as a witness for either party.—Partee v. Silliman, 44 Miss. 272.

[l] (N. H. 1836) The indorser of an accommodation note, which was made for his benefit, having a release from the maker, is a competent witness to prove that it has been paid by the maker to the indorsee.—Greenough v. West, 8 N. H. 400.

[m] (Pa. 1788) In an action by the indorsee of a bill of exchange against the first indorser, plaintiff's immediately preceding indorser cannot be made a witness by striking his name off the first and third bills of the set, although it is suggested that the second bill is lost.—Steinmetz v. Currie, 1 Dall. 270, 1 L. Ed. 132.

[n] (Pa. 1819) Where a note is indorsed by three, and afterwards given up to one of them, on taking a bond from the three, on a suit for the benefit of the indorser to whom the note was given, the other indorser is a good witness. —Juniata Bank v. Brown, 5 Serg. & R. 226.

[o] (Pa. 1820) One whose interest is removed may be called as a witness to impugn a note which he has indorsed.—Hepburn v. Cassel, 6 Serg. & R. 113.

[p] (Pa. 1832) One of two plaintiffs, in assumpsit brought by them as indorsees of a note, having on trial assigned all his interest in the suit to the other, who has paid into court all the costs of the suit, is a competent witness for plaintiff, to whom he has assigned.—Hart v. Heiiner, 3 Rawle, 407.

[q] (Pa. 1840) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, the indorser is a competent witness, on being released by defendant, to prove an agreement between plaintiff and himself, after the note had come into plaintiff's hands, whereby plaintiff agreed that he would not sue or trouble defendant, whom he knew to be merely an accommodation party, if the indorser would give him (plaintiff) a judgment bond for the amount of the note and other money due by the indorser to him, and to prove that the bond was accordingly given by him (the witness) and accepted by plaintiff.—Mitchell v. Conrow, 5 Whart. 572.

[r] (Pa. 1840) The indorser is incompetent, in a suit between the holder and drawer of a note, though the note was not protested, provided this arose from agreement between the holder and indorser.—Hinckly v. Walters, 9 Watts, 179.

[s] (Pa. 1850) A. transmitted a bill of exchange to B., his agent, for collection, who indorsed it to C. In an action by A. against C. for the money received on the bill, held, that B. was a competent witness for A., after having been released by him, to prove that he gave the bill to C. merely for collection, and not to pay his indebtment to C.—Weaver v. Beckett, 15 Pa. (3 Harris) 248.

[t] (Pa. 1851) An indorsee of a note, by transferring the same to an indorser, who, after being discharged for want of demand and notice, takes up the note, does not become a competent witness in an action thereon brought by his transferee, who is a mere volunteer.—Miley v. Todd, 17 Pa. (5 Harris) 101.

[u] (Pa. 1853) In an action on one of two notes taken by the holder of a former note, which had been indorsed to him, the indorser of the original note is a competent witness for plaintiff to show that it was not received by plaintiff as collateral security, as alleged by defendant, but was indorsed to him in payment of an existing liability; the indorser having been discharged from liability by reason of an extension of time having been allowed by the receipt of the substituted notes, as well as by the omission of one of the makers of the original note to sign the one in suit.—Muirhead v. Kirkpatrick, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 237.

[v] (Pa. 1866) An indorser who has been compelled to pay part of the amount due on a note is incompetent from interest to testify in a suit by a subsequent indorser against the maker, although plaintiff has released him from liability to him.—Ward v. Tyler, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 393.

[w] (Va. 1856) The last of several indorsers of an accommodation note, being obliged to take it up at maturity, sued his immediate indorser, who at the trial offered as a witness the indorser immediately preceding him on the note to prove that all the indorsers had agreed at the time of executing the note to be liable as joint securities only. The court below ruled that, whether plaintiff recovered or not, the witness' interest would be the same, except as to the costs of the action, and that a release by defendant for costs only would render him competent. While the release was preparing it was discovered that in consequence of the time elapsed since the payment of the money on the note by plaintiff the witness was protected by the statute of limitations against any recovery on his part, and the witness was not permitted to testify. Held that, though the right of the witness to plead the statute in such an event disturbed his equality of interest in the suit and rendered him incompetent to testify, yet his competency might be restored by an entire release to him by defendant of all claim against him on account of his indorsement.—Chapman v. Hiden, 2 Pat. & H. 91.

§ 446. — Payee or acceptor.

[a] (U. S. 1824) The acceptor of an inland bill of exchange is a competent witness to prove that the bill was drawn by defendant for the accommodation of plaintiff, without any consideration, after being released by defendant from liability for the costs of this action in case plaintiff should recover.—Knowles v. Stewart, Fed. Cas. No. 7,900 [2 Cranch, C. C. 457].

[b] (Ind. 1838) In an action by the assignee of a note against the maker, the payee, on being released, is a competent witness to prove the execution of the note.—Matheny v. Westfall, 4 Blackf. 491.

[c] (Me. 1853) The indorsee of a note, on which one has signed his name and thus made himself liable as an original promisor, may, after releasing the payee, call him as a witness in a suit against such original promisor.—Leonard v. Wildes, 36 Me. 265.

[d] (Pa. 1867) In a suit by the indorsee of a note against the maker, the payee cannot testify, although released from the liability of his indorsement.—Foreman v. Ahl, 55 Pa. (5 P. F. Smith) 325.

§ 447. Usurious transactions.

[a] (U. S. 1838) Where the grantor of an annuity by deed has conveyed all his interest in the property charged therewith, and an allegation of usury in the granting thereof is afterwards made, he is a competent witness on the question of usury, if he is not a party to the suit and has become devested of all his interests and liability for costs therein.—Scott v. Lloyd, 37 U. S. (12 Pet.) 145, 9 L. Ed. 1033.

[b] (U. S. 1814) In an action against a surety on a bond, the principal obligor is a competent witness for the surety to prove the bond usurious, where it appears that the surety has released such obligor from the costs of the suit.—Peirce v. Reintzel, Fed. Cas. No. 10,908 [2 Cranch, C. C. 101].

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where one of two partners makes a usurious contract without the knowledge of his copartner, and this debt becomes merged in the individual debt of the other partner, who assumes to pay it and relieves the partner who contracted the debt, in an action on such individual debt, the partner contracting the usurious debt is a competent witness for his copartner.—Jackson v. Jones, 13 Ala. 121.

[d] (Conn. 1814) A party to a negotiable instrument, who is devested of his interest therein, is a competent witness to prove it usurious in its inception.—Townsend v. Bush, 1 Conn. 260.

[e] (Ga. 1846) The maker of a usurious note is a competent witness for defendant to prove the usury, in an action by an indorsee against an indorser, on being released.—Winkler v. Scudder, 1 Ga. (1 Kelly) 108.

[f] (Ga. 1850) In an action against the security of a note, to which the defense was usury, the maker, upon being relieved from all liability, was a competent witness for defendant.—Barnett v. Troutman, 9 Ga. 36.

[g] (Ill. 1861) The payee of a usurious note, who has assigned it, is a competent witness, in a suit by his assignee against the maker, to prove the usury.—Harvey v. Ellithorpe, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 418.

[h] (Me. 1841) The surety on a note, which has been paid, is competent to prove usury, in an action to recover back the amount paid on the ground of usury.—Webb v. Wilshire, 19 Me. (1 App.) 406.

[i] (Mass. 1810) The maker of a usurious note is not a competent witness to defeat a recovery against an indorser on the ground of usury, although he has been released from liability.—Widgery v. Munroe, 6 Mass. 449.

[j] (Mass. 1810) In an action by an indorsee of a note against one of two joint and several promisors, the other promisor is not competent as a witness to prove usury, though defendant has released him.—Jones v. Coolidge, 7 Mass. 199.

[k] (Mass. 1832) In an action by a plaintiff against the payee of a note, the maker, being released by defendant, is competent to prove usury.—Van Schaack v. Stafford, 29 Mass. (12 Pick.) 565.

[m] (N. Y. 1840) A mortgagor cannot be made a competent witness, in a suit to foreclose, to prove the mortgage usurious, in favor of a subsequent mortgagee, by a release from all liability in that suit; the mortgagor still remaining liable on his bond.—Bardwell v. Howe, 1 Clarke, Ch. 281.

[n] (N. Y. 1841) The maker of a note and his accommodation indorser were sued together. Held, that the maker, after a release from all costs and charges, was a witness for the indorser to prove the note usurious.—Starkweather v. Mathews, 2 Hill, 131.

[o] (S. C. 1828) In an action against the surety on a note, the principal, on being released by the surety, is a competent witness to prove the note usurious.—Harmon v. Arthur, 1 Bailey, 83.

[p] (Tenn. 1821) The maker of a note, who has been released by defendant, the payee and first indorser, is a competent witness to prove that the note was usurious in its inception.—Stump v. Napier, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 35.

§ 448. Transactions fraudulent as to creditors.

[a] (U. S. 1839) The grantee of a deed alleged to be fraudulent is a competent witness in support of the deed, in an action against the person to whom he has conveyed the property, upon receiving from him a release.—Linthicum v. Remington, Fed. Cas. No. 8,377 [5 Cranch, C. C. 546].

[b] (N. H. 1838) A person had made a voluntary note and mortgage with intent to defraud creditors, and subsequently conveyed the same premises to a bona fide purchaser, and, being released from the covenants in the latter deed, was offered as a witness. Held, that he was competent to show that, before the making of this deed, the note upon which the mortgage was predicated was given up to be canceled: and that the mortgagee, after he had executed the latter deed, induced him to give a new note, similar to the first, in order to set up the mortgage against the subsequent purchaser.—Marston v. Brackett, 9 N. H. 336.

[c] (N. Y. 1810) A grantor in a deed which is impeached as fraudulent, on being released by the grantee from all claims and demands whatsoever on account of the covenants, is a competent witness to prove as well as disprove the fraud: The objection goes to his credit, not to his competency.—Jackson v. Frost, 6 Johns. 135.

[d] (N. Y. 1838) In a contest between a vendee and the creditors of the vendor respecting the validity of the sale, the release of the vendor by the officer sued for the taking of the property at the instance of the creditors did not render the vendor a competent witness.—Rea v. Smith, 19 Wend. 293.

[e] (Pa. 1847) Where a vendor of chattels has been released from his warranty of title to them, he is a competent witness to support his title, in a contest between his vendee and creditors of his vendor, who are seeking to avoid the sale to him on the ground that it was fraudulent as to them.—Cadbury v. Nolen, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 320.

[f] (S. C. 1833) A debtor who has delivered property to another in order to defraud his creditors, and afterwards sells the property to a bona fide purchaser, on being released, is a competent witness to sustain the purchase.—Caston's Ex'rs v. Ballard, 1 Hill, 406.

HUSBAND OR WIFE, § 460.
WIDOW, § 461.

§ 449. Trustee and beneficiary.

[a] (Ark. 1856) After the execution and termination of a trust, the trustee is a competent witness in an action relating to the title to the trust property.—McNeill v. Arnold, 17 Ark. 154.

[b] (Ky. 1851) A trustee of property, from whom the property has passed under a decree in chancery, is a competent witness to prove a demand against the cestuis que trust.—Southard v. Cushing's Adm'r, 50 Ky. (11 B. Mon.) 344.

[c] (Ky. 1872) A trustee is made a competent witness by substituting his beneficiary as plaintiff in his stead and giving a bond for costs.—Arnold v. Bryant, 71 Ky. (8 Bush) 668.

[d] (Miss. 1840) A trustee in a deed of trust cannot release his interest in the deed to his co-trustee without the consent of the cestui que trust, so as to make him a competent witness for his co-trustee.—Ferriday v. Selser, 5 Miss. (4 How.) 506.

[e] (N. Y. 1841) A person holding the legal title to land in trust, who sold the land and took mortgages to himself with the assent of the cestui que trust, was a competent witness, after assigning the mortgages, to prove the facts connected therewith, as against an agent to whom one of the mortgages had been assigned, in pursuance of a previous agreement, as a compensation for his services in effecting the sale.—Douglass v. Peele, Clarke, Ch. 563.

[f] (Pa. 1834) A person for whom a tract of land was conveyed in trust, and who paid a small part of the purchase money, was present and made no objection when the trustee conveyed the property to another. Held, in an action of ejectment by the grantee of the trustee against one who claimed under the same trust, that the trustee, on being released by plaintiff, was a competent witness.—Taylor v. Taylor, 2 Watts, 357.

[g] (Pa. 1848) Cestuis que trust brought suit for the use of the trustee, who afterwards, with the consent of cestuis que trust, conveyed the trust estate to another, paid all the costs which had accrued and a sum into court sufficient to cover future accruing costs, and released all claim for commissions. Held, that he should be allowed to have his name stricken from the record, and that he was a competent witness for plaintiff.—King v. Cloud, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 467.

[h] (Tex. 1855) The beneficiary of a resulting trust in lands, who has conveyed his interest by quitclaim, is a competent witness for the vendee in a suit by the latter to establish the trust.—Hodges v. Johnson, 15 Tex. 570.

§ 450. Partners.

[a] (U. S. 1829) In an action commenced against A. & B., as partners, upon an alleged engagement by the firm, and where A., who was not found or served with process, was offered as a witness in favor of B., having been released by B., held, that A. was a competent witness, inasmuch as he was hostile to the party in whose favor he testified. The rule excluding witnesses interested did not apply.—Le Roy v. Johnson, 27 U. S. (2 Pet.) 186, 7 L. Ed. 391.

[b] (Cal. 1858) One of two partners in an adventure may release in the name of both, so as to make the releasee a witness in trespass against one who has seized the goods.—Perlberg v. Gorham, 10 Cal. 120.

[c] (Cal. 1859) A demand for the price of goods sold is an "unliquidated" demand, within Prac. Act, § 4, as amended by St. 1855, p. 303, so that one partner cannot assign his interest therein to his copartner and then become a witness for him.—Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 40.

[d] (Conn. 1797) A partner with the defendant in the transaction for which he is sued cannot be qualified to be a witness by a discharge from defendant, being still liable to plaintiff.—Tomkins v. Beers, 2 Root, 498.

[e] (Conn. 1831) A release by one of two partners, who are sued, of all claims against a third partner not sued, will not render such third partner a competent witness for the others.—Bill v. Porter, 9 Conn. 23.

[f] (Ga. 1862) D. sued P. & R. as partners. It was shown that R. had executed to P., who was only a nominal partner, a release of partnership obligation and a bond of indemnity as to the consequences of this suit, and had deposited in court a sum in Confederate money sufficient to cover the plaintiff's demands. Held, that by these acts, under section 3785 of the Code, P. was made a competent witness for the defendants.—Fleming v. Dorn, 34 Ga. 213.

[g] (Ind. 1840) On the trial of an action for work and labor, defendant offered a person, who was his partner at the time the work was done, as a witness, after executing a release to him of all claims for contribution. Held, that the witness was incompetent.—Cline v. Little, 5 Blackf. 486.

[h] (Iowa, 1856) A third party cannot so release a party to a suit as to render him a competent witness for his copartners.—Wise v. Patterson, 3 G. Greene, 471.

[i] (Iowa, 1859) Plaintiff brought suit upon a claim which at the commencement of the suit belonged jointly to him and his partner. Held, that proper mutual releases, executed between plaintiff and his partner, would render the latter a competent witness for the former.—White v. Tucker, 9 Iowa, 100.

[j] (La. 1826) A partner, who has sold his interest to his copartners and received their release from partnership obligations, may prove a partnership claim.—Meriam v. Worsham, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 198.

[k] (La. 1845) Defendant, sued as a dormant partner, on releasing the ostensible partner, who as an insolvent had placed plaintiff on his bilan, may prove by him that there was no partnership.—Lacaze v. Séjour, 10 Rob. 444.

[l] (La. 1859) The liquidating partner, to whom the assets have been assigned, cannot, by a release in favor of his late partner, render him a competent witness in his favor.—White v. Jones, 14 La. Ann. 681.

[m] (Me. 1836) A partner, who sells partnership property, is a competent witness for the purchaser, where the title to the property is brought in question, on being released by him; for the release discharges all the liability of the witness, whether it does that of the copartner or not.—Churchill v. Bailey, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 64.

[n] (Md. 1862) In replevin by the vendor of goods against an assignee of the vendee, holding in trust for the benefit of creditors, when mutual releases have been executed between the assignee and a member of the vendee firm, such member is made a competent witness for the assignee.—Ratcliffe v. Sangston, 18 Md. 383.

[o] (Miss. 1834) A partner can never be so far devested of his interest in the partnership, by any act of himself and copartners, as to be a competent witness in a matter relating to the partnership while he was a member.—Collins v. Flowers, 2 Miss. (1 How.) 26.

[p] (N. Y. 1824) A dormant partner, not a party, may release his interest to his copartner, and be a competent witness for him.—Clarkson v. Carter, 3 Cow. 84.

[q] (N. Y. 1828) In an action on a limit bond against one of two defendants and the surety of the one for his escape from a ca. sa. issued on a judgment against him and his partner, held, that his codefendant in the original suit, the partner, was not a competent witness for defendant, unless released, being liable to contribute if the plaintiff recovers; and a release from the surety is not enough, but it must be directly from the defendant, to whom he is liable.—Ransom v. Keyes, 9 Cow. 128.

[r] (N. Y. 1834) Where a suit is brought by one of two attorneys, who are partners, against a client, for the recovery of the taxable costs of a suit prosecuted in the name of one of the attorneys alone as attorney of record, the other is a competent witness for plaintiff, on executing to him a release.—Ward v. Lee, 13 Wend. 41.

[rr] (N. Y. 1839) One of several partners is a competent witness in an action against the firm, in which he is not made a defendant, for a debt claimed of the firm, on being released by his copartners.—Lefferts v. De Mott, 21 Wend. 136.

[s] (N. Y. 1840) One partner, who had sold his interest in the firm to a copartner and had been released by the other members of the firm, was a competent witness for plaintiff in a suit to recover a debt due the firm before the witness retired.—Hosack's Ex'rs v. Rogers, 25 Wend. 313, affirming (1840) 8 Paige, 229.

[ss] (N. Y. 1841) Where partners are sued on a contract ex delicto, but really ex contractu, one of the firm cannot be a witness, unless he is released by all the other members.—Curtis v. Monteith, 1 Hill, 356.

[t] (N. Y. 1857) A witness offered at the trial was not a party to the action, and was only rendered incompetent on account of an agreement, made subsequent to the transactions which were the subject-matter of the trial, whereby he became a partner of one party as of a date earlier than the transactions. For the purpose of making him competent, he assigned all his interest in the suit and in the partnership down to the time of his actually becoming a partner, and was released by his partner from all liability on account of the claim, the subject of the action, and was indemnified from any liability on account of the claim and action. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Wilmot v. Richardson, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 328.

[tt] (N. Y. 1858) Laws 1838, c. 257, p. 243, provides that, whenever any partnership shall be dissolved, any one or more of the partners may make a separate composition or compromise with any one or all of the creditors, which shall be a full discharge to the debtor making the same of all liability to the creditors with whom the same is made. Held, that this statute had no application to a suit by one partnership against another partnership, in which plaintiff claimed that the two partnerships had engaged in a joint venture, in which plaintiff had suffered a loss which defendant ought rightfully to share, and therefore one of the members of defendant firm, after effecting a separate compromise with plaintiff under said act, was not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Lewin v. Stewart, 17 How. Prac. 5.

[u] (Ohio, 1832) Where a contract to perform certain work was in fact a partnership agreement, but was executed under the seal of one partner alone, so that he alone was liable, the other partner was incompetent as a witness, notwithstanding a release from his copartner.—James v. Bostwick, Wright, 142.

[uu] (Pa. 1826) One who is interested in the profits, but is not liable for the losses, of a firm, may be a witness for the firm, after he has released all his interest in the suit.—Curcier v. Pennock, 14 Serg. & R. 51.

[uuu] (Pa. 1830) A partner is not a competent witness for his copartner in a partnership transaction, nor can he be made so by a release.—Black v. Marvin, 2 Pen. & W. 138.

[v] (Pa. 1836) One who is interested as a partner, though not named in the record, cannot be made a witness merely by release of his interest in the subject-matter of the action, being still liable for costs.—Culbertson v. Alexander, 5 Watts, 496.

[vv] (Pa. 1843) In assumpsit by three partners, where defendant pleads a set-off, one of the partners cannot be made a witness for plaintiffs by releasing all his interest in the suit to his coplaintiffs, and paying all costs which had accrued, or which might accrue, in the suit. He would still be interested to make plaintiff's claim exceed the set-off.—Church v. Hampton, 6 Watts & S. 514.

[w] (Pa. 1852) The declaration in assumpsit against two as partners alleged that a third partner had retired from the concern and surrendered his interests therein to the other partners, in consideration that they should pay certain debts of the firm including the plaintiff's debt. Held, that such third partner was not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bellas v. Fagely, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 273.

[ww] (Pa. 1854) In an action for a partnership debt against the executors of a deceased partner, the testimony of another member of the same firm, to whom defendants had executed a release, was rightly excluded.—Wells v. Peck, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 155.

[x] (Pa. 1856) In assumpsit on a quantum meruit for work done by two partners under a contract made by one of them prior to the formation of the partnership, one of them cannot be a witness for the other, though he has been fully paid, and has no interest.—Schnader v. Schnader, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 384.

[y] (Pa. 1861) One who is incompetent as a witness by reason of a partnership interest in the suit is not rendered competent by a release by plaintiff, until the costs up to date are paid.—Rhoads v. Armstrong County, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 92.

[yy] (Vt. 1841) Where two partners have assigned their joint and separate property to pay their joint and separate debts, and a suit is brought by the assignee to recover a debt due one of the partners, the other partner is interested, and cannot be a witness for plaintiff; and his release of the surplus will not render him competent, since the costs of the suit would be a charge upon the fund in the hands of the assignee.—Cummings v. Fullam, 13 Vt. 441.

[z] (Vt. 1853) A witness who is interested as a member of a firm may be rendered competent by releasing all claims which he had as an individual or a partner of the firm.—Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

[zz] (Vt. 1854) Where a partner is coplaintiff on the record and interested in the result of the suit, he cannot remove his interest by his own act and become competent against the consent of defendant.—Loomis v. Loomis, 26 Vt. 198.

§ 451. —— Actions on bills and notes.

[a] (U. S. 1826) A partner upon whose individual check firm moneys have been paid, and who has been released from all liability by the other members of the firm, is not a competent witness for the bank in an action by the partnership to recover the amount of the money paid on the individual check; for, if defendant should succeed, it would relieve such partner from his liability to the bank for the amount of his individual check charged to the firm.—Coote v. Bank of United States, Fed. Cas. No. 3,203 [3 Cranch, C. C. 50].

[b] (Miss. 1844) Where a bill is drawn and accepted by two partners individually for the benefit of the partnership, in an action against the acceptor, upon the bill, the drawer is not a competent witness for defendant, on receiving a release of contribution from him.—Scott v. Watkins, 10 Miss. (2 Smedes & M.) 255.

[c] (Mo. 1850) Where an action against A. and B. as partners, upon a note signed in the partnership name, is discontinued as to A., B. may release A. and call him as a witness to prove that the note, which was made after the dissolution of the partnership, was given on the individual account of A.—Long v. Story, 13 Mo. 4.

[d] (Pa. 1841) In an action against a partnership, on a note made by one partner in the name of the firm after its dissolution, the partner signing the partnership name, if willing to testify, is a competent witness for plaintiff, if released from any other action on the note.—Whitehead v. Bank of Pittsburgh, 2 Watts & S. 172.

[e] (Pa. 1854) In an action on a note made by defendant to a partnership, and by it indorsed to plaintiff, who was a member of the firm, another member, who stated on his voir dire that he was a member of the firm at the time when the note was given, but had assigned it, and with it all his interest in the partnership property, was not incompetent on the ground of interest.—Patterson v. Fay, 1 Phila. 473.

[f] (Vt. 1850) A note was assigned to a firm as collateral security for a debt due to the firm from the payee, and, on the trial of a suit instituted by the firm in the name of the payee on the note, one member of the firm executed to his copartners an assignment of all his interest in the note, or suit, and in the debt due to the firm from the payee of the note, and his copartners thereupon released him from all liability for costs, etc., in the suit. Held, that he was thereby rendered a competent witness on the part of plaintiff.—Blake v. Buchanan, 22 Vt. 548.

§ 452. Public officers.

[a] (U. S. 1821) Defendant in replevin, who justifies under an execution directed to him as a constable, if indemnified by plaintiff in the execution, and having no other interest than the possibility of receiving commissions and fees upon an execution which may be issued again in the same cause, is a competent witness for defendant.—Wise v. Bowen, Fed. Cas. No. 17,905 [2 Cranch, C. C. 239].

[b] (U. S. 1824) If defendant in replevin be the bailiff of the landlord, and is indemnified by him, he may be examined as a witness in the cause.—Dixon v. Waters, Fed. Cas. No. 3,936 [2 Cranch, C. C. 527].

[c] (U. S. 1830) In replevin for goods taken by defendant, a constable, he may testify for himself, upon being indemnified by plaintiff in execution.—Hilton v. Beck, Fed. Cas. No. 6,509 [4 Cranch, C. C. 107].

[d] (Del. 1848) The sheriff is a competent witness in a suit on a replevin bond assigned by him.—Lambden v. Conoway, 5 Har. 1.

[e] (Me. 1832) In an action on the official bond of a collector of taxes, where the point in issue was whether the money collected had been paid over to the treasurer or not, the treasurer, being released by the town, was a competent witness to disprove the payment.—Ford v. Clough, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 334, 23 Am. Dec. 513.

[f] (Md. 1867) In an action by the board of school commissioners against one to whom a levy for the benefit of the school funds had been intrusted for collection as collector of county taxes to recover a balance of the amount collected, plaintiff by a release may remove an objection to its treasurer as a witness on the ground of his interest in the controversy.—O'Neal v. Washington County School Com'rs, 27 Md. 227.

[g] (N. J. 1795) The keeper of a jail, after release from the sheriff, is a competent witness for him in an action for an escape.—Patten v. Halsted, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 277.

[h] (Ohio, 1844) In an action on the bond of a township treasurer for default in failing to account for moneys received by him, his successor in office cannot be rendered a competent witness by the township trustees releasing him from liability for the sums for which, as such successor, he was liable.—State v. Williams, 13 Ohio, 495.

[i] (Pa. 1838) In an action against the bailee to recover the amount of an execution for which a constable became liable, the constable, on being released from liability to defendants, is a competent witness.—Willard v. Wickham, 7 Watts, 292.

[j] (Vt. 1845) If an officer takes from the receiptor of property attached a note in discharge of the receiptor's liability for permitting the property to be wasted, if such note be sued in the name of a mere trustee, for the benefit of the officer, the officer, by an absolute and unconditional conveyance of his interest in the note to such trustee, taking back from the trustee a release from all liability on account of the suit, although such conveyance and release are wholly without consideration, is so devested of interest in the suit as to become a competent witness for plaintiff.—Boardman v. Roger, 17 Vt. 589.

§ 453. —— Deputies.

[a] In an action against a sheriff for the misfeasance of his deputy, the latter, when released, is a competent witness.

—(Me. 1831) Jewett v. Adams, 8 Me. (8 Greenl.) 30; (1842) Rice v. Wilkins, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 558; (1843) Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 85;

(Mass. 1819) Turner v. Austin, 16 Mass. 181;

(Vt. 1843) Hopkinson v. Holmes, 18 Vt. 18.

[b] (Ala. 1833) On a motion against a sheriff for failure to return an execution, a release by him to his deputy, who had given the sheriff a bond, rendered the deputy a competent witness, notwithstanding the declaration of the deputy that his principal should not suffer by his acts, and that he felt in honor bound to secure him from injury.—McCausland v. Neal, 3 Stew. & P. 131.

[c] (Me. 1841) A deputy sheriff, who has been released by the sheriff, is a competent witness in a suit against the sheriff for his default, notwithstanding his sureties may have given a new bond, conditioned to indemnify the sheriff against the alleged default to which his testimony applies.—Jenney v. Delesdernier, 20 Me. (2 App.) 183.

[d] (Me. 1843) In an action of trespass against a sheriff for goods attached by his deputy on a writ, and removed, in favor of a third person claiming to be the owner, the deputy, on being released by the sheriff, is a competent witness for him.—Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 85.

[e] (Mass. 1839) A deputy sheriff delivered attached goods to a third person, who gave him an accountable receipt therefor, and then delivered them to the defendant in the action. Held, that his consequent incompetency as a witness for defendant was not removed by a release from the high sheriff.—Pollard v. Graves, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 86.

[f] (Tenn. 1870) A formal release by a sheriff of all liability of his deputy to him for official misconduct or negligence is sufficient to remove the disabilities of the deputy, as a witness for the sheriff, in an action against the latter for the official failure of the deputy. But the deputy, at the time he is offered as a witness and does testify in the case, must know that he has been released. The mere fact that a release has been properly signed cannot make him competent, unless that knowledge is brought home to him before his testimony is taken in the cause.—State v. Mosely, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 576.

[g] (Vt. 1842) In an action against a sheriff for the default of his deputy in not taking bail, and for making a false return in a suit, where he returned that he had taken "sufficient bail," no person's name being indorsed on the writ or bail, the deputy, having been duly released by the sheriff, was a competent witness to prove that, when the writ was delivered to him for service, plaintiff directed him not to take bail.—Ordway v. Bacon, 14 Vt. 378.

[h] (Vt. 1843) In an action against a sheriff for the default of his deputy, a release from the sheriff to the deputy of all liability on account of such default will render the deputy a competent witness for the sheriff; and, if the sheriff have received an indemnity from a third person for giving such release, a release from such third person to the deputy of all liability to him will render the deputy a competent witness for the sheriff.—Hutchinson v. Lull, 17 Vt. 133.

[i] (Vt. 1846) A release by a sheriff to his deputy for a default releases the surety of the deputy. Therefore, in a suit against the sheriff for the default, the deputy, after receiving such release, is a competent witness for the sheriff, notwithstanding he may not have received a release from the person who is surety for him to the sheriff.—Hutchinson v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 614.

[j] (Vt. 1846) But if it appear, when the deputy is thus offered as a witness, that he has thus far defended the suit, and that he has employed attorneys, and is still holden to pay them, this will render him an incompetent witness; for his attorneys, if judgment is recovered against the sheriff, will have a lien upon that judgment for their fees, and the deputy will thus be relieved pro tanto upon his liability to them.—Hutchinson v. Pettes, 18 Vt. 614.

§ 454. Member, stockholder, or officer of corporation.

[a] (U. S. 1879) A transfer of stock in a corporation which is prosecuting a suit against the government does not leave the transferror in the character of an assignor of a claim, within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1079, which declares that no claimant, nor any person from or through whom such claimant derives his claim against the United States, shall be a competent witness in the court of claims in supporting the same.—Kellogg Bridge Co. v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 111.

[b] (U. S. 1879) A shareholder in a corporation ceases to be disqualified as a witness in an action in the court of claims the moment he transfers his stock.—Kellogg Bridge Co. v. United States, 15 Ct. Cl. 111.

[c] (Ala. 1857) The secretary of a corporation, who was also a stockholder, but had transferred all his stock after the institution of the suit, is a competent witness for the corporation in an action against a delinquent stockholder, though the corporation was indebted at the time of the transfer and at the date of the trial.—Smith v. Tallassee Branch of Central Plank Road Co., 30 Ala. 650.

[d] (Cal. 1856) In an action against a corporation, a witness, who was a member of the corporation when the liabilities were incurred on which the action is brought, but who had sold his shares before the commencement of the action, is incompetent for interest.—McAuley v. York Min. Co., 6 Cal. 80.

[e] (Cal. 1858) A stockholder, who has sold out before suit brought, is a competent witness for the company.—Tuolumne County Water Co. v. Columbia & S. R. Water Co., 10 Cal. 193.

[f] (Cal. 1859) A member of a corporation at the beginning of a suit by it cannot become a witness for it by selling his stock; but he is personally liable for his proportion of the costs, and his competency as a witness can only be restored by actual payment of the entire costs of the case.—Mokelumne Hill Canal & Mining Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 265.

[g] (Ill. 1844) A stockholder in a bank or insurance company may sell out his stock after the commencement of the suit, and thereby become a competent witness.—Illinois Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Marseilles Mfg. Co., 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 236.

[h] (Me. 1841) Where a corporation was organized under an act of the legislature to collect and sell logs, the title to which was unascertainable from lack or defacement of mark, and the corporation as such derived no benefit from the sale of the logs, but the benefit was received by those members only who were owners of logs floating to market, the president of the corporation, who had sold all his logs after the commencement of the suit and before the trial, was a competent witness for the corporation in an action by it against the purchaser to recover the purchase price.—Kennebec Log Driving Co. v. Burrill, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 314.

[i] (Me. 1841) If the transfer of bank stock, for the purpose of making the owner a witness, be unconditional, the contingency that he might again become the owner of the same is not such an interest as goes to his competency.—Snow v. Thomaston Bank, 19 Me. (1 App.) 269.

[j] (Miss. 1837) The release by a member of a corporation of his interest in it renders him a competent witness for the corporation.—Smith v. Natchez Steamboat Co., 2 Miss. (1 How.) 479.

[k] (N. H. 1840) Where an individual is shown to have been a stockholder in a bridge built by a corporation, which bridge went to decay and a new one was built, it is not sufficient evidence that the interest of the stockholder has ceased that he has been called on for no payment toward the new bridge and supposes his stock to have been sold. Such a fact must be clearly shown before he can be a witness in a suit in which the corporation is a party.—Ameriscoggin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H. 102.

[l] (N. J. 1852) A stockholder of a company is made a competent witness, if, at the trial, he transfers his shares by an instrument in writing, although the regulations of the company require that, before the transfer is complete, it should be entered on the books of the company.—Delaware & A. R. Co. v. Irick, 26 N. J. Law (3 Zab.) 321.

[m] (N. Y. 1829) It is no objection to a witness, in an action by a moneyed institution, that, a few days before the trial, he had bona fide sold out his stock, although he stated that he supposed he could purchase it back if he chose; there being no agreement to repurchase at the time of the sale.—Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell, 3 Wend. 296.

[n] (N. Y. 1837) In an action by a bank to recover a note, it is no objection to the competency of a witness that he had been a stockholder, and had sold out his interest to avoid an objection to his competency, though he expects to repurchase the stock at the price at which he sold, where there is no understanding between him and his vendee that the stock should be retransferred.—Stall v. Catskill Bank, 18 Wend. 466.

[o] (N. Y. 1849) Code 1848, § 352, providing that the assignor of a thing in action for the purpose of making him a witness, was incompetent, does not apply to stockholders in corporations, to whom the common-law rule, that by an assignment of their interest they become competent witnesses, applies.—Hamilton & D. Plank Road Co. v. Rice, 7 Barb. 157.

[p] (Pa. 1834) A stockholder in a bank, who had assigned his stock to the bank in payment of a debt due by him, is a competent witness in an action by the bank.—Bank of Swatara v. Green, 3 Watts, 374.

[q] (Pa. 1853) Parties who have sold their stock and given up the policies they had obtained upon their own lives in a life insurance company are competent in behalf of the company in a suit against it.—Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co., 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 466.

[r] (Pa. 1855) A stockholder may, after suit brought, assign his stock and testify in favor of the corporation.—Meighen v. Bank, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 288.

[s] (Tenn. 1843) A stockholder, who sells his interest in the stock of a bank after a suit is instituted by the bank, is a competent witness in such suit. Acts S. C. 1821, c. 66, § 3, does not embrace such a case.—Union Bank v. Owen, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 338.

[t] (Vt. 1846) A bona fide sale and transfer by a stockholder of his stock to the corporation, which is authorized to take the same, devests him of all interest arising from his ownership thereof, so as to render him a competent witness for the corporation.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co., 18 Vt. 131.

§ 455. —— Cashier of bank.

[a] (Me. 1850) The cashier of a bank, being released, is a competent witness for the bank to prove that through a mistake he had given too large a credit to a depositor in the bank book made for him by the cashier.—Lewis v. Eastern Bank, 32 Me. 90.

[b] (Vt. 1846) In a suit by a bank against a carrier to recover for the loss of bills intrusted to the carrier, the cashier of the bank, who was, at the time of the delivery of the bills to defendants, a stockholder in the bank, was a competent witness for the bank; it appearing that the bank had executed and delivered to the cashier a release of all liability to them on account of the loss of the bills in question.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co., 18 Vt. 131.

[c] (Vt. 1846) In an action brought by a bank against a common carrier to recover for a package of bank bills intrusted to the carrier and lost, the cashier of the bank, who at the time of the delivery of the bills to the carrier was a stockholder, is a competent witness for the bank upon a showing that he had sold his stock.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Champlain Transp. Co., 18 Vt. 131.

§ 456. Members of religious society.

[a] (Me. 1825) In trespass quare clausum by the deacons of a society of Shakers for an injury to the common property, the members of the same society are competent witnesses, on releasing to plaintiffs their interest in the action and receiving releases from plaintiffs of all obligation to contribute to the costs of the suit.—Anderson v. Brock, 3 Me. (3 Greenl.) 243.

[b] (Me. 1826) In an action against the deacons of a society of Shakers, the members of the society are competent witnesses, on releasing to the plaintiffs their interest in the action, and receiving releases from the plaintiffs of all obligation to contribute to the costs of the suit.—Waite v. Merrill, 4 Me. (4 Greenl.) 102, 16 Am. Dec. 238.

§ 457. Principal or agent.

[a] (U. S. 1845) An agent was given a power of attorney to purchase a vessel and to draw bills on the principal for the amount of the purchase money. The agent, contrary to the power of attorney, made himself one of the joint purchasers of the vessel. An action was instituted by the seller of the vessel against the principal, and the declaration contained special counts as to the bills of exchange and also the common counts for goods sold, etc., and the agent was offered as a witness for plaintiff. Held, that he was incompetent on the ground of interest, although he had been released from liability on the special counts, as it appeared that he had not been released from liability on the common counts.—Peckham v. Lyon, Fed. Cas. No. 10,899 [4 McLean, 45].

[b] (Ala. 1840) A principal is a competent witness, his interest having been released, to prove the object and purpose of sending an agent from Mobile to the country.—Kirksey v. Bates, 1 Ala. 303.

[c] (Cal. 1858) A commission merchant sued out an attachment in behalf of his employer, and gave the sheriff a bond of indemnity. Afterwards he procured the bond and all rights of action against him to be released by the sheriff. Held, that he would be allowed, in trespass against the sheriff by an adverse claimant of the property, to testify for plaintiff.—Perlberg v. Gorham, 10 Cal. 120.

[d] (Iowa, 1848) A. drew a bill as agent upon B., and obtained funds thereby for the use of his principal, C. Held, that A., on being released by B., was a competent witness for B. in a suit against C.—Thurston v. Mauro, 1 G. Greene, 231.

[e] (Ky. 1845) An agent of a turnpike road company, entitled to a commission on the amount of stock collected, by releasing such interest, is thereby rendered a competent witness for the company, and the attorney at law of the company is competent to receive such release.—Bardstown & G. R. Turnpike Co. v. Duncan, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 395.

[f] (La. 1860) Where a suit is brought on a duebill signed by an agent, and the answer specially denies the agency, the agent, being released from personal responsibility by plaintiff, may be heard as a witness to prove the fact that the money borrowed, for which the duebill was given, was applied to the payment of the debts of his principal.—Garland v. Scott's Estate, 15 La. Ann. 143.

[g] (N. H. 1851) Where an agent for plaintiff is interested in the event of the suit to the extent of a reasonable compensation for his services as agent, the assignment of his interest to plaintiff for a proper consideration obviates that objection.—Bailey v. Shaw, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 297, 55 Am. Dec. 241.

[h] (N. Y. 1811) In trespass for taking and impounding the beasts of plaintiff, defendant proved that he acted as the agent of G., and offered G., after having released him, as a witness to show that they were taken damage feasant. Held, that G. was a competent witness.—Hasbrouck v. Lown, 8 Johns. 377.

[i] (N. Y. 1816) In an action by a plaintiff, who was a nonresident, the party's attorney was offered as a witness, and objected to, on the ground that no security had been filed for the costs and the attorney might be liable for them. A bond was thereupon executed, and tendered to defendant's counsel, who admitted the sufficiency of the obligors, but refused to receive it, whereupon it was filed with the clerk. Held, that defendant might have availed himself of this bond, had the verdict gone in his favor, and that the competency of the witness was thereby restored.—Brandigee v. Hale, 13 Johns. 125.

[j] (N. Y. 1827) The attorney for a nonresident plaintiff, though liable for costs, if he be indemnified, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Chaffee v. Thomas, 7 Cow. 358.

[k] (N. Y. 1846) A solicitor for a nonresident complainant being liable for costs, and his testimony being required, a bond for costs was executed by a surety, who justified ex parte. The defendants had 19 days within which to except to the surety, at the time the solicitor testified in favor of the complainant. Held, that he was presumptively a competent witness.—Van Wezel v. Wyckoff, 3 Sandf. Ch. 528.

[l] (Vt. 1853) The deposition by an agent who had lost money in gaming, which he had borrowed on his principal's credit, taken after his release by the principal and the latter's assignee, is admissible in evidence in an action for money had and received, brought by the principal against the winner.—Burnham v. Fisher, 25 Vt. 514.

§ 458. Employé.

[a] (Ill. 1865) The clerk of a person to whom a package of money was sent by express receipted for the package, supposing at the time he was receipting for some other articles, and did not in fact receive the money package. The loss of the money being discovered, and also that the clerk, who was a minor, had receipted for it, his father, upon being apprised of the facts, voluntarily paid to the owner the amount of the loss. In a suit subsequently brought by such owner against the express company to recover the money lost, his clerk was a competent witness in his behalf to prove that the money was not received. His liability to plaintiff was discharged, and he assumed none to his father, who paid the money voluntarily.—American Exp. Co. v. Haggard, 37 Ill. 465, 87 Am. Dec. 257.

[b] (Mass. 1837) A hired laborer, who has performed his work under the eye and immediate direction of his employer, if responsible to any one for negligence or unskillfulness, is responsible only to his employer; and, being released by him, he is a competent witness in an action for negligence and unskillfulness in the performance of contract under which the work was done.—Downer v. Davis, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 72.

[c] (Mass. 1852) In an action of assumpsit, a person in the employ of plaintiff, whose compensation is fixed at a certain percentage of net profits, is rendered a competent witness for plaintiff by a release of all interest in the amount which may be recovered in the suit; it not having been made to appear, by examination of the witness on the voir dire or otherwise, that plaintiff, if he should lose his case, would have a legal right to charge the costs and expenses thereof on the general fund, and thus diminish the compensation of the witness.—Rich v. Jones, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 329.

[d] (Pa. 1817) A clerk of the intestate, who is afterwards his administrator and plaintiff in the suit, may prove that he kept certain books for the intestate, after being released from all costs incurred and to be incurred in the suit.—Ash v. Patton, 3 Serg. & R. 300.

[e] (Tenn.) Though Code, § 1169, in actions against railroad companies, excludes as witnesses those employés whose tortious act or acts are drawn in question, and for which they would be liable over to the railroad company if the latter should be held responsible for the injury, the railroad company, by executing a proper release to such employés, restores their competency and may examine them as witnesses.—(1860) Horne v. Memphis & O. R. Co., 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 72; (1866) Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Fugett, 43 Tenn. (3 Cold.) 402.

§ 459. Captain, master, or crew of vessel.

[a] (U. S. 1844) The master of a vessel who hypothecated her on bottomry is a competent witness in favor of the holder of the bottomry, particularly if released by him.—Furniss v. The Magoun, Fed. Cas. No. 5,163 [Olcott, 55].

[b] (U. S. 1854) In a suit in rem against the vessel to recover the value of the goods lost or damaged, the master is an interested witness; but a release from some of the part owners renders him competent.—The Peytona, Fed. Cas. No. 11,058 [2 Curt. 21], affirming (1839) Fed. Cas. No. 11,059 [1 Ware, 541].

[c] (Ala. 1859) A release under seal, by a steamboat company, to the captain, mate, and engineer, makes them competent witnesses for the company in a collision case.—Weaver v. Alabama Coal Min. Co., 35 Ala. 176.

§ 460. Husband or wife.

[a] (U. S. 1809) In an action on a note signed by one person where plaintiff seeks to charge another as a secret partner, the wife of the former is not a competent witness for plaintiff to prove the existence of the secret partnership, although it appears that her husband has been discharged under the insolvent act.—Bank of Alexandria v. Mandeville, Fed. Cas. No. 851 [1 Cranch, C. C. 575].

[b] (Ala. 1846) A husband of a distributee, who releases his wife's claim to an unpaid portion of her distributive share, is a competent witness for the administrator in a suit against him by a creditor of the estate.—Hall v. Alexander, 9 Ala. 219.

[c] (Ga. 1859) If a husband and wife convey to their children all their interest under a devise to the wife, they are competent witnesses to sustain the will.—Meredith v. Hughes, 28 Ga. 571.

[d] (Ga. 1859) Where husband and wife convey all their interest under a devise to the wife, he is not a party to, nor interested in a proceeding to establish the will, and therefore he is a competent witness therein.—Meredith v. Hughes, 28 Ga. 571.

[e] (Me. 1842) Where a mortgage, with the note secured thereby, was given causa mortis by one to another, in an action on the mortgage by the administrator, the husband of the donee, having released all claim upon defendant, reserving his claim on the administrator for any money recovered, is a competent witness for defendant.—Borneman v. Sidlinger, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 185.

[f] (Md. 1824) A. having intermarried with B., who was the administratrix of C., the personal estate of C. came into his possession; and upon a settlement of their administration account a distributive share of the balance against them was due to D., to whom A. was appointed guardian. Held, in an action on A.'s bond as guardian, that, B. and her sureties being exonerated from all liability on account of the default of A., B. was a competent and admissible witness.—Seegar's Ex'rs v. State, 6 Har. & J. 162, 14 Am. Dec. 265.

[g] (Md. 1863) Where the probate of a will is resisted on the ground of the testator's unsoundness of mind, a husband's release of a legacy to his wife under said will renders him a competent witness for the executor.—Weems v. Weems, 19 Md. 334.

[h] (N. Y. 1812) In an action by the administrator of the wife, a release by the husband of all right to any sum or sums of money which might be recovered in the cause renders him a competent witness in the cause.—Woods v. Williams, 9 Johns. 123.

[i] (N. Y. 1829) The wife of a special bail is an incompetent witness for defendant; but defendant has a right to avail himself of the testimony of special bail by substituting new bail.—Leggett v. Boyd, 3 Wend. 376.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) A husband is a competent witness, in behalf of a new plaintiff, in a suit which was commenced by a wife on an agreement for the payment of moneys, alleged in the complaint to be her separate property, which allegation was denied in the answer, and the claim assigned by her, with the consent of the husband, to a new plaintiff, who was substituted for her on the record.—Hastings v. McKinley, 1 E. D. Smith, 273.

[k] (N. Y. 1852) The rule that excludes a wife from being a witness applies only where she can be a witness for or against her husband, when he is a party to the suit. It does not apply when he has assigned the thing in action and has no interest in the claim.—Farley v. Flanagan, 1 E. D. Smith, 318.

[l] (Pa. 1795) A feme covert, in the absence of her husband, who has been released from all claims under an implied covenant of warranty, is a competent witness.—Peaceable v. Keep, 1 Yeates, 576.

[m] (Pa. 1849) A release for a nominal consideration by a husband of his wife's interest in a suit brought by the administrator of an intestate's estate, of which she is one of the distributees, will not render her competent as a witness for the administrator of the estate.—Mishler v. Merkle, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 509.

[n] (Pa. 1849) The wife of the payee of a note, who has indorsed it to a third party and is released from liability thereon, is a competent witness for the holder.—Bisbing v. Graham, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 14, 53 Am. Dec. 510.

[o] (Pa. 1863) Where the husband of an heir was called as a witness, his release does not render him competent; for he is incompetent, because of his wife's interest, which he cannot release.—Buchanan v. Buchanan, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 186.

[p] (Pa. 1863) The incompetency of a married woman, also an heir, cannot be removed by her own release, without the joinder of her husband, and, where the release was in the nature of an assignment of her interest, it was invalid as well before as under the act of 1848; nor was the disability of coverture removed by Act April 11, 1856, for the assignment was not such an instrument as is referred to in the act.—Buchanan v. Buchanan, 46 Pa. (10 Wright) 186.

[q] (S. C. 1833) Under an assignment by a husband of his wife's chose in action, the assignee may release the claim, and thereby make her a competent witness in relation to the claim during the life of the husband.—Capehart v. Huey, 1 Hill, Eq. 405.

[r] (S. C. 1846) In an action against an administrator, a joint release to the administrator by husband and wife of all her interest as one of the distributees, and of all liability to account, will render them competent witnesses for such administrator.—Sheer v. Austin, 2 Rich. Law, 330.

[s] (Tenn. 1838) If husband and wife join in a conveyance, releasing her dower in the land of her first husband to his heir, the second husband is a competent witness for the heir of the first husband, or the heirs of such heir, though they be the children of such second husband, in an ejectment brought by them to recover the land.—Ross v. Blair, 19 Tenn. (Meigs) 525.

[t] (Tenn. 1860) Y. and wife, tenants for life in a slave, brought an action against K. for conversion, to recover the full value of the slave. Held, that W., the husband of one of the daughters who had a remainder interest, was a competent witness in behalf of plaintiffs, he, together with his wife, having executed a release of all their interest in the subject-matter of the suit; and this, although the release was inoperative as to her.—Kirk v. York, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 446.

[u] (Vt. 1854) The interest of a witness, caused by a mortgage to his wife, can be removed by an assignment of the mortgage.—Hough v. Patrick, 26 Vt. 435.

[v] (Va. 1890) Where a right of action against a carrier has been assigned, the fact that the suit is thereafter prosecuted in the name of the assignor, a married woman, for the benefit of the assignee, does not disqualify the husband of the assignor from testifying, as the latter parted with all her interest in the action by the assignment.—Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Read, 87 Va. 185, 12 S. E. 395.

§ 461. Widow.

[a] (Ala. 1846) The widow of a deceased person cannot, by conveying her interest in the estate to the other distributees, render herself a competent witness for them in a suit against the executor or administrator.—Powell v. Powell, 10 Ala. 900.

[b] (Ky. 1838) Where, in a suit to establish a will alleged to have been destroyed, the widow of the testator, being made a defendant, admitted that she had destroyed the will, but desired it to be established, and filed a release of all claim under it, she was a competent witness in support of the will.—Allison's Devisees v. Allison's Heirs, 37 Ky. (7 Dana) 90.

[c] (Ky. 1848) A widow, to whom her husband had devised his whole estate, in order to become a competent witness in an action on a note made by her husband, executed a release of her rights to her husband's estate to the amount of the note and costs. Held, that the release was insufficient to render her a competent witness.—Tyler v. Nelson, 48 Ky. (9 B. Mon.) 71.

[d] (Md. 1834) In replevin by executors for a negro, the wife of the deceased was offered to prove that such negro was loaned to defendant by her husband many years before, and that he declared he never would give the slave to defendant or any of his family. It appeared that the widow, in a contract with the executors, had renounced her rights in the real and personal estate of the deceased, and agreed to accept a compensation from the executors for such renunciation. The will of the testator was not in evidence, nor did it appear to the court that the widow had any special interest in such slave, and her contract with the executors was personal to them, and not binding on the assets of the estate. Held, that she was a competent witness.—Callis v. Tolson's Ex'rs, 6 Gill & J. 80.

[e] (Md. 1835) In replevin by A., as executor of B., to which, upon the death of A., the administrator de bonis non of B. was admitted as party plaintiff, the widow of B., who was entitled to one-third of the property in dispute, was offered as a witness for plaintiff. Held, that a release by her to plaintiff and the distributees of her husband of all claim to any part of the property replevied, and a release by plaintiff to her of any claim for costs, and a deposit at the same time in court by plaintiff, of a sum of money equal to the costs which had accrued while the suit was conducted by A., rendered her a competent witness.—Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. 20.

[f] (Md. 1850) A widow, who has received her dower by consent of the heirs, is a competent witness for the latter to prove seisin of her husband.—Morris v. Harris, 9 Gill, 19.

[g] (N. Y. 1825) Where a grantor of land with warranties dies insolvent, his widow, who joined with him in the deed, is a competent witness to support the title of the grantee, on being released by him, though her interest in the husband's personal estate is not released.—Jackson v. Delancey, 4 Cow. 427.

[h] (N. Y. 1827) The widow of a deceased partner is not a competent witness for the surviving partner, in an action by him as such; nor will a release from her to plaintiff of all her interest in the particular claim in suit render her competent.—Allen v. Blanchard, 9 Cow. 631.

[i] (N. Y. 1853) The widow of a mortgagee, who had acquired a title to the mortgaged premises, having released her right of dower, may be a witness in a suit between the heir of the mortgagor and the heirs of the mortgagee to redeem the premises.—Dobson v. Racey, 8 N. Y. (4 Seld.) 216.

[j] (N. C. 1833) A widow, who dissented from her husband's will and had her dower allotted, may state declarations made to her by her husband about a paper offered as his will, in an issue of devisavit vel non to which she is no party.—Hester v. Hester, 15 N. C. 228.

[k] (Pa. 1862) In a suit by R. against J., as surviving partner, for money sent by R. to his sister and by her loaned to C. on his individual note, and by him loaned to the firm of C. & J., held, that the widow of C. was a competent witness for plaintiff, after she had released her interest in her husband's estate.—Donnally v. Ryan, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 306.

[l] (Pa. 1874) In a suit to have a deed absolute on its face converted into a mortgage, by offering parol evidence that it was taken as a mere security for a loan of money, a widow who was no party to the issue, and who had released her interest in the estate, was a competent witness at common law.—Perry v. Perry, 31 Leg. Int. 372.

[m] (Tenn. 1858) By St. 1852, c. 17, the personal representative of one whose death is caused by the act of another may recover damages for the benefit of the widow and next of kin of deceased. Held that, if the widow make a valid release of her interest to the other beneficiaries, she is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Gayle v. Morrissey, 37 Tenn. (5 Sneed) 445.

(e) BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT, ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE FOR CREDITORS, AND CREDITORS.

BANKRUPT OR INSOLVENT, § 462.
—— NATURE OF INTEREST, § 462.
ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE OR TRUSTEE FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, § 464.
CREDITORS, § 465.

§ 462. Bankrupt or insolvent.

[a] (U. S. 1847) If a person is declared a bankrupt when a suit is pending to which he is a party, his discharge would not be a bar to his liability for costs upon a judgment obtained subsequently to his discharge. Such liability, therefore, excludes him from being a witness in such suit, on the ground of interest.—Bridges v. Armour, 46 U. S. (5 How.) 91, 12 L. Ed. 64.

[b] (U. S. 1801) In an action by the United States against one who had received property belonging to a certificated bankrupt, the bankrupt is not a competent witness to prove the time of his insolvency; debts to the United States not being barred by a certificate.—United States v. King, Fed. Cas. No. 15,536 [Wall. Sr. 13].

[c] (Conn. 1846) On the trial of an action brought by A., the assignee of a bankrupt's estate, under the bankrupt law against B., to whom C., the bankrupt, had, previous to the proceedings in bankruptcy, conveyed estate, real and personal, with covenants of warranty, to recover the value of such estate, C. was offered as a witness for plaintiff. He was objected to by defendant as being interested in the event of the suit. To obviate this objection, plaintiff introduced C.'s certificate of discharge; and to rebut the effect of this, and to show that C. was still interested, defendant read in evidence C.'s schedule of property, which did not include the property in question. Held, that this omission did not show such fraud or willful concealment as would destroy the effect of C.'s certificate.—Steene v. Aylesworth, 18 Conn. 244.

[d] (Ill. 1848) Bankrupts, who by their discharge have been devested of all liability or interest in the subject-matter of a suit, are competent witnesses in such suit, even though the demand on which it is founded was not scheduled by them, unless it was fraudulently omitted.—Strong v. Clawson, 10 Ill. (5 Gilman) 346.

[e] (Ind. 1844) A bankrupt is not a competent witness, in trover, by his assignee, to prove property in the latter, unless he release to plaintiff all claim to an allowance out of his estate, as well as to the surplus.—Cully v. Ross, 7 Blackf. 312.

[f] (Ind. 1844) To render a certified bankrupt a competent witness for his co-debtor in an action for the joint debt, the bankrupt must release to his assignees all claim to surplus and allowance.—Dean v. Speakman, 7 Blackf. 317.

[g] (Ind. 1847) To render a bankrupt competent as a witness to increase the assets in the hands of his assignee, it must appear, not only that he had no claim to a surplus of the estate, but also that he had received his allowance. —Oldham v. McCormick, 8 Blackf. 387.

[h] (Iowa, 1850) A joint debtor, who has been discharged in bankruptcy, is a competent witness for his co-debtor in an action to recover the joint debt.—Frentress v. Markle, 2 G. Greene, 553.

[i] (La. 1816) An insolvent is incompetent for the syndics, unless he release any surplus after paying all the debts.—Clay's Syndics v. Kirkland, 4 Mart. (O. S.) 405.

[j] (La. 1846) One who had made a cessio bonorum under the state law, and was afterwards discharged as bankrupt under the act of congress of August 19, 1841, is a competent witness to prove the correctness of the debts acknowledged by him in his schedule, filed at the time of his cession, unless disqualified on account of his personal relationship to his creditor, or where the debt is due to his wife. —West v. His Creditors, 1 La. Ann. 365.

[k] (Md. 1830) A certificated bankrupt, who has released all future claims upon his estate, is a competent witness.—Glenn v. Von Kapff, 2 Gill & J. 132.

[l] (Md. 1845) In an attachment suit against the goods of A., in which B. appears and claims the goods as his, A., having been discharged under the bankrupt law of the United States, and not being liable for costs, is a competent witness for B. to show that the goods are not his property; but otherwise, if it is shown that B. is a creditor of A. residing in England, that the debt to B. was contracted in England and so not discharged in bankruptcy, and that A.'s title to the property was hypothecated to B. to secure such debt.—Lizardi v. Cohen, 3 Gill, 430.

[m] (Mass. 1850) An insolvent debtor, who has obtained his discharge, is a competent witness for his assignee, on releasing the latter from all claim against him as such.—Greene v. Durfee, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 362.

[n] (N. Y. 1809) A., a discharged bankrupt, whose estate will pay not more than 25 per cent., is a competent witness in a suit brought by the assignees of B., a bankrupt, against whom A. had proved a debt under the commission.—Phœnix v. Dey, 5 Johns. 412.

[o] (N. Y. 1809) A. proved a debt against B. in bankruptcy, and afterwards was himself discharged under the bankrupt act; his estate paying about 25 per cent. Held, that he was a competent witness to prove that a preference given by B. was in fraud of creditors.—Phœnix v. Dey, 5 Johns. 412.

[p] (N. Y. 1817) A bankrupt, who has been discharged in Great Britain and against whose property in New York an attachment has issued under the absent and absconding debtor act, cannot be a witness in favor of his trustees under that act, although he has released his interest in the surplus of his estate to his assignees in Great Britain and to his trustees here.—Graves v. Delaplaine, 14 Johns. 146.

[q] (N. Y. 1826) An insolvent debtor, who has released all claim to a surplus, is a competent witness for his assignee.—Jaques v. Marquand, 6 Cow. 497.

[r] (N. Y. 1844) The incompetency of a witness for interest in the subject-matter of a suit, though he has been declared a bankrupt, is not removed until he has received his discharge. —Dickinson v. Codwise, 1 Sandf. Ch. 214.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) A bankrupt, after his discharge, is a competent witness for plaintiffs in an action brought by his sureties to avoid a note given by him and them on the ground of usury. —Morse v. Cloyes, 11 Barb. 100.

[t] (N. Y. 1851) To exclude the bankrupt as a witness, it must be shown that at least there may be a surplus of his estate to which he will be entitled.—Morse v. Cloyes, 11 Barb. 100.

[u] (Pa. 1804) The bankrupt, on obtaining his certificate, might have been a witness in a suit brought by himself before bankruptcy, though the names of the assignees were not substituted immediately, as his assignees by their own act over which he had no control, in not being substituted as parties, could not make him responsible for costs.—Browne v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 4 Yeates, 119.

[v] (Pa. 1843) If one of several defendants be discharged in bankruptcy after suit brought, this does not render him competent to testify in the suit.—Given v. Albert, 5 Watts & S. 333.

[w] (Pa. 1846) An insolvent debtor, in whose name a suit is brought by his assignee, is not rendered a competent witness by releasing his surplus to his assignee.—Bittinger v. Keys, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 459.

[x] (Pa. 1847) A release by an insolvent debtor of his claim to the surplus of his estate does not render him competent, in a suit in behalf of the assignee in insolvency as such.— Wilkinson v. Pittsburgh Farmers' & Mechanics' Turnpike Co., 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 398.

§ 463. —— Nature of interest.

[a] (U. S. 1792) In an action against the acceptor of a bill, plaintiff, who had become a certificate bankrupt, might be admitted as a witness to prove a parol acceptance; he having released his interest at the bar, and the suit being prosecuted by his assignees, who had given security for costs.—McEwen v. Gibbs, 4 Dall. 137, 1 L. Ed. 774.

[b] (U. S. 1792) A certificated bankrupt is a witness to prove the parol acceptance of a bill of exchange, in an action brought by him against the acceptor before his bankruptcy.— McEwen v. Gibbs, 4 Dall. 137, 1 L. Ed. 774.

[c] (U. S. 1803) A bankrupt, who indorsed a note before his bankrupty and who has obtained his certificate, is a competent witness for the indorsee.—Murray v. Marsh, Fed. Cas. No. 9,965 [Brunner, Col. Cas. 22].

[d] (Ala. 1846) A certificated bankrupt is discharged from all surety debts, though paid by the surety after the bankrupt obtains his discharge, and is therefore a competent witness for the surety in a suit between him and the creditor.—Kyle v. Bostick, 10 Ala. 589.

[e] (Ala. 1846) A defendant in execution, though he is a certificated bankrupt, is not a competent witness upon a trial of right of property.—Carville v. Stout, 10 Ala. 796.

[f] (Ala. 1847) A bankrupt vendor, who has received his certificate, and who offers to release all his interest to his grantee and assignees, and to whom a release is offered by his grantee, is a competent witness.—Frow v. Downman, 11 Ala. 880.

[g] (Ala. 1851) The maker of a deed of trust may be made a competent witness to sustain it, by showing his certificate of discharge under the bankrupt act, obtained subsequently to the execution of the deed, and also his release to the assignee in bankruptcy of all interest which he may have in the suit.—Kirksey v. Dubose, 19 Ala. 43.

[h] (Ala. 1852) Where a bill is filed by the secured creditors for the settlement of a deed of trust, the maker of the deed, although he is a defendant to the bill, is a competent witness for one of complainants to prove the bona fides of his debt and his assent to the deed; it being shown that after the execution of the deed he had obtained his discharge in bankruptcy.—Colgin v. Redman, 20 Ala. 650.

[i] (Ark. 1847) A release by a surety to his principal, a discharged bankrupt, renders the principal a competent witness for the surety.—Pogue v. Joyner, 7 Ark. (2 Eng.) 462.

[j] (Ind. 1849) One of several makers of a note, who has taken the benefit of the bankrupt law, is not, while the proceedings in bankruptcy are still open, a competent witness for the other makers to prove fraud in obtaining the note, in a suit against them by the payee.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 384.

[k] (Ind. 1849) A certificated bankrupt, who has not released his claim to the surplus and allowance out of his assigned estate, and where the proceedings in bankruptcy have not been closed, is not a competent witness in an action against his co-makers of a note.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, Smith, 228.

[l] (N. Y. 1826) Where one has transferred a note, and has subsequently been discharged from his debts under the insolvent act, he is a competent witness for the holder in an action on the note.—Murray v. Judah, 6 Cow. 484.

[m] (N. Y. 1843) A principal debtor, who has been discharged under the bankrupt law from the debt upon which his sureties are sued, is a competent witness for them to show usury in the contract.—Morse v. Hovey, 1 Sandf. Ch. 187, affirmed (1846) 1 Barb. Ch. 404; Fellows v. American Life Ins. & Trust Co., 1 Sandf. Ch. 203.

[n] (N. Y. 1850) Complainants, together with one A. and as his sureties, executed a note to B., alleged to be void for usury. An action at law was brought on the note in the name of C. against all the makers, and they pleaded thereto. A., the principal, after issue joined, obtained a discharge as a bankrupt, which he thereupon pleaded puis darrein continuance, and issue was taken on that plea. Complainants thereupon filed their bill for the purpose of procuring the evidence of A. in order to establish the usury and obtain relief against the note, alleging, among other things, that neither the usurer nor the borrower could be called as a witness at law. Held, that A., the borrower, being still a party to the action on the note, and not having released the surplus of his effects in bankruptcy, was interested, and incompetent as a witness to sustain the bill or action.—Morse v. Crofoot, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 114.

[o] (Ohio, 1844) Where one partner, not served with process, has been discharged in bankruptcy, he is a competent witness for his copartner in an action for goods sold to defendant.—Searington v. Ellison, 1 Ohio Dec. 74.

[p] (S. C. 1844) A person sued as executor is not a competent witness for the estate, though he is a bankrupt and has obtained his discharge as such.—Osborn v. Black, Speers, Eq. 431.

[q] (Tenn. 1843) A party to a note, who was sued on it and afterwards obtained his discharge under the bankrupt law, is a competent witness, after such discharge, to prove the note usurious.—Carman's Ex'r v. White, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 301.

[r] (Tenn. 1850) A surety upon a bill single, who is a certificated bankrupt, is not a competent witness in behalf of his co-surety; for, though discharged from liability as to the holder, yet he is liable to make contribution to his co-surety.—Keer v. Clark, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 77.

§ 464. Assignor and assignee or trustee for benefit of creditors.

[a] (La. 1845) One of the parties to a policy sued on, who has assigned his interest therein for the benefit of his creditors, is not competent for the others, where the assignment, stipulating his release, is not shown and cannot be presumed to have been accepted by his creditors.—Wellington v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 11 Rob. 222.

[b] (La. 1845) Nor can such witness make himself competent by abandoning his interest in open court to his creditors. He is still interested that those who have not released him should receive their portion of the amount sued for; and he cannot release himself.—Wellington v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 11 Rob. 222.

[c] (Mass. 1833) In an action by an indorsee against W. on two notes, one of which was made by W. and indorsed by J., and the other was made by J. and indorsed by W., where it appeared that, after the execution of the notes, but before their maturity, J. had failed, and assigned his property for the benefit of his creditors, and W. had in consequence released J. from all claims, demands, and causes of action, J., who was offered as a witness by plaintiff, was not incompetent.—Eastman v. Winship, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 44.

[d] (Miss. 1850) A trustee who takes no benefit is generally a competent witness on the trial of the validity of a trust deed; but one who does take an interest is incompetent in equity. Thus, where a trustee has an interest under a trust deed directly and as security to other creditors, he cannot, by a release to a co-trustee, make himself competent, as he cannot release, and his co-trustee has no power to take a release.—Selser v. Ferriday, 21 Miss. (13 Smedes & M.) 698.

[e] (N. Y. 1808) Where a debtor has assigned his property to A. for his benefit and for the benefit of his other creditors, A. may execute a release to the debtor of all his interest in the fund, and thus become a competent witness.—Main v. Newson, Anth. N. P. 11.

[f] (Pa. 1847) Where a debtor assigns property to his creditor, he is a competent witness for the creditor in respect to such property, on being released by him.—Faunce v. Lesley, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 121.

[g] (Pa. 1857) In an action by an assignee for the benefit of creditors to recover lands alleged to belong to the assignor, the assignor is not a competent witness; he being interested in making the fund for his creditors as large as possible, though he releases his right to any surplus.—Sharp v. Long, 28 Pa. (4 Casey) 433.

[h] (Pa. 1861) An assignee for the benefit of creditors, having settled his account and been discharged from his trust, and a successor having been appointed, is a competent witness to prove that property standing in the name of the assignee was purchased with the trust funds and is a part of the estate for the payment of the assignment creditors.—Appeal of Robb, 41 Pa. (5 Wright) 45.

§ 465. Creditors.

[a] (Conn. 1836) In an action on a bond for the jail limits, defendant offered a witness to prove that W., one of the joint creditors, gave a parol license to leave the limits. Plaintiff, to disprove such testimony, offered W. himself as a witness, accompanied by releases from plaintiff and his attorney. W., being examined as to his interest, said that, while the cause was on trial, he had agreed by parol with Y., the other joint creditor, that Y. should have the whole demand against the debtor, and should pay him (W.) one-fourth part of the amount; that it was W.'s understanding that Y. should defray all the expenses of the suit, but that no writing had been signed, and nothing paid or delivered by either party. Held, that W. was not a competent witness; for it was doubtful whether there was a legal assignment of his interest, and, if there was, that it was not clearly shown that W. was discharged from the costs which had accrued in the cause.—Seymour v. Harvey, 11 Conn. 275.

[b] (Conn. 1846) In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy against one to whom the bankrupt had conveyed land prior to the bankruptcy proceedings to recover the same, the testimony of a witness for plaintiff was objected to on the ground of his interest as a creditor of the bankrupt, and the only proof of such fact was that his name appeared as a creditor in the bankrupt's schedule of debts. Such witness testified, however, that, although he had been a creditor, he had assigned the debt. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Steene v. Aylesworth, 18 Conn. 244.

[c] (Md. 1860) A creditor of an estate to the amount of $900 assigned his claim to a person of no property for two notes of $300 each, one of which the assignee had paid, He made the assignment for the purpose of making himself a competent witness for the estate in a suit about to be brought by the administrator, the loss of which would leave the estate unable to pay more than $200 on his claim. On the voir dire he testified that if the suit was lost he did not intend to collect the second note, and that the assignee knew of that intention, but that there was no agreement to prevent him from collecting it, and that he might change his mind. Held, that his interest in the suit was at most honorary, not legal, and therefore that he was a competent witness.—Reynolds v. Manning, 15 Md. 510.

[d] (Pa. 1844) One who becomes interested in the prosecution and recovery of a claim after suit brought, and devests himself of that interest before trial, is a competent witness.—Orphans' Court v. Woodburn, 7 Watts & S. 162.

[e] (Pa. 1844) A creditor who assigns his claim, a few months before the commencement of suit upon it, for the purpose of being a witness for the assignee, is incompetent.—Cochran v. McTeague, 8 Watts & S. 272.

[f] (Pa. 1846) In an issue formed to try whether a judgment was fraudulent as to creditors, a judgment creditor of defendant, who is not a party to the issue, may become a competent witness by disposing of his judgment, provided the act was bona fide, and not dictated by necessity to give it effect by his testimony.—Gates v. Johnston, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 52.

(f) PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, INDEMNITORS, AND RECEIPTORS.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, § 466.
—— SURETY IN GENERAL, § 467.
—— SUBSTITUTION OF NEW SURETY, § 468.
—— ON NOTE, § 469.
INDEMNITORS, § 470.
RECEIPTORS, § 471.

§ 466. Principal and surety.

[a] (U. S. 1837) One of the principals of a bond, released by his co-obligors, is competent to prove that one of the principals had agreed to sign the bond, on condition that another person should also sign it, which had been done.—United States v. Leffler, 36 U. S. (11 Pet.) 86, 9 L. Ed. 642.

[b] (Ala. 1847) A constable is not a competent witness for his sureties, though released by them.—Robertson v. Coker, 11 Ala. 466.

[c] (Ala. 1849) Where a principal places in the hands of his surety the note of a third person as an indemnity against his liability, and the surety, after suing the note to judgment, without the consent of the principal, settles said judgment by taking from defendant therein the note of another person, indorsed by him, the principal is a competent witness for the surety in a suit against the said defendant as indorser of the note so assigned by him in discharge of said judgment.—Herndon v. Givens, 16 Ala. 261.

[d] (Ky. 1825) The principal, with a release from a surety and a covenant never to demand indemnity from either him or his co-sureties in any event, is a competent witness for the surety at the action of the obligee.—Bank of Limestone v. Penick, 18 Ky. (2 T. B. Mon.) 98, 15 Am. Dec. 136.

[e] (Ky. 1848) A release of the principal by the surety to an obligation which is joint and several renders him a competent witness in an action against the surety.—Field v. Davidson, 48 Ky. (9 B. Mon.) 77.

[f] (La. 1860) The release of one of the principal debtors by the surety from all liability to himself as surety renders such debtor a competent witness for the surety.—Jones v. Fleming, 15 La. Ann. 522.

[g] (N. Y. 1851) Where an attachment against a nonresident is issued, and the property attached has been discharged on a bond given by sureties for defendant in the attachment, such defendant cannot be made a competent witness for the makers of the bond, in a suit on it, by a release from them.—Mitchell v. Weed, 6 How. Prac. 128, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 196.

[h] (N. C. 1840) If the surety to a bond or note be sued alone, the principal debtor will be incompetent as a witness for him, because, if plaintiff succeed, he will be liable to the surety for the costs of the action; but the principal may, in such action against the surety, be made competent by a release from the surety before he is called to testify.—Moffit v. Gaines, 23 N. C. 158.

[i] (N. C. 1845) An obligor in a bond is a competent witness for defendant, in an action on the bond against a co-obligor, especially if he is released by defendant.—Ligon v. Dunn, 28 N. C. 133.

[j] (Pa. 1842) If, in proceedings on a mechanic's lien against the owner and the contractor, the sureties of the contractor make defense, and procure a release from the owner to the contractor, and use it to make him a competent witness, it is tantamount to a release from themselves; and the witness is thereby made competent, without a direct release by the sureties.—Church v. Dickinson College, 3 Watts & S. 221.

[k] (Pa. 1845) In proceedings by the commonwealth against the surety of a defaulting officer, the principal becomes a competent witness by being released by defendant from his liability for costs.—Commonwealth v. Reitzel, 9 Watts & S. 109.

[l] (Pa. 1849) A principal is a competent witness in an action against his surety, when released from all liability growing out of the action.—Miller v. Stem, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 383.

[m] (Vt. 1848) In an action against a surety, the principal, who has been released by the surety as to costs which the surety might be compelled to pay, is a competent witness, since the record in the suit against the surety would not aid him in a suit to recover from the principal.—Austin v. Dorwin, 21 Vt. 38.

[n] (Va. 1857) A co-obligor is not, nor can he be made by a release, a competent witness for defendant in an action against the personal representative of a deceased obligor. — Brown's Adm'r v. Johnson, 13 Grat. 644; Isbell's Ex'r v. Same, Id.

[o] (Va. 1857) His liability for contribution is more direct and immediate than his liability on the bond to the obligee.—Brown's Adm'r v. Johnson, 13 Grat. 644; Isbell's Ex'r v. Same, Id.

§ 467. — Surety in general.

[a] (U. S. 1811) A surety in a replevin bond is not a competent witness for the plaintiff in replevin, although he has an indemnifying bond. —Thompson v. Carbery, Fed. Cas. No. 13,945 [2 Cranch, C. C. 35].

[b] (Ala. 1841) Where a bond is executed in pursuance of the act of 1828, "the better to provide for the trial of the right of property and for other purposes," it operates "as a release by the claimant of damages against the sheriff or other officer" taking the property claimed in execution, and consequently operates as a discharge of the sureties in a bond to indemnify the sheriff; and they are, therefore, competent witnesses for plaintiff.—Towns v. Alford, 2 Ala. 378.

[c] (Ala. 1847) When a bank moves for judgment against two defendants, one, though a surety, and released by his principal, is not a competent witness for the other.—Colgin v. State Bank, 11 Ala. 222.

[d] (Ala. 1849) The sureties in a bond for the forthcoming of a slave seized by virtue of an attachment, and which slave is afterwards levied upon under an execution issued on the judgment rendered in the same suit, and claimed by a third person, are competent witnesses for plaintiff in the trial of the right of property.—Greene v. Tims, 16 Ala. 541.

[e] (Ala. 1857) Where the principal alone files a bill in equity to enjoin an action at law against himself and his surety, he may render his surety a competent witness for him by paying all costs of the action at law, and depositing with the surety a sum of money sufficient to cover any liability in that action.—Williams v. Mitchell's Adm'r, 30 Ala. 299.

[f] (Ala. 1867) Where an attachment was levied on slaves in 1859, which were replevied, and the trial of the cause was had in 1866, held that, compliance with the bond having become impossible on account of the abolition of slavery, the surety on the bond could not be held liable for a failure to deliver the property, and was therefore not incompetent from interest as a witness in the cause.—Glover v. Taylor, 41 Ala. 124.

[g] (Cal. 1863) A witness, who is incompetent because of his being surety on a bond given in the action, can be rendered competent, either by substituting another surety or by a deposit in court of a sufficient sum of money.—Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160.

[h] (Del. 1869) While a suit is pending, an injunction bond is under the control of the court, and a surety may be discharged for reexamination as a witness, when his previous examination was inadvertently held without the removal of that disqualification.—Hall v. Livingston, 3 Del. Ch. 348.

[i] (Ky. 1820) The court cannot discharge the surety on a bond given for the due prosecution of a traverse, and thereby render him a competent witness.—Holeman v. Carneal, 9 Ky. (2 A. K. Marsh.) 602.

[j] (Ky. 1830) To render a surety on a bond a competent witness, his responsibility must be released.—Wallace's Heirs v. Twyman, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 457.

[k] (Ky. 1830) Payment by a surety on a bond to a receiver appointed by the court does not discharge the bond or release the surety, so as to render him a competent witness in an action on the bond.—Wallace's Heirs v. Twyman, 26 Ky. (3 J. J. Marsh.) 457.

[l] (Ky. 1852) A surety, who has been released by his co-surety from all liability to contribute to his co-surety, is a competent witness in an action brought by the co-surety against one who has promised to indemnify him against his liability on the bond.—Jones v. Letcher, 52 Ky. (13 B. Mon.) 363.

[m] (Me. 1851) In a replevin suit, the interest of a surety on the replevin bond is removed by a deposit for his use, made with the clerk of the court, by plaintiff, of an amount equal to the penalty of the bond.—Cooper v. Bakeman, 33 Me. 376.

[n] (Me. 1853) In an action on a bail bond, one who was a surety was offered as a witness, but objected to, whereupon a friend of defendant deposited with the clerk $100 of his own money, "for the benefit of the witness, in case of his liability on the bond." The witness was sworn, judgment was rendered on the bond, and plaintiff moved that the money deposited should be applied to satisfy the judgment. Held, that the motion ought not to be granted. —Stuart v. McDougald, 35 Me. 398.

[o] (Md. 1843) The surety of an administrator may, under circumstances, become a competent witness for his principal to maintain an action at law to recover money due the intestate's estate, although at one period the administrator may have been guilty of a devastavit in relation to the same claim, as where, from lapse of time, after due notice to creditors to assert their claims, they are presumed to have been satisfied, and none appear to exist, and where the sole distributee of the deceased had released both the administrator and sureties from all claims.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 1 Gill, 66.

[p] (Mass. 1833) Where the principal in a replevin bond deposited in the hands of his surety a sum of money equal to the amount of the penalty to secure him against his liability, the surety was thereby rendered a competent witness.—Hall v. Bayliss, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 51.

[q] (N. C. 1860) A surety to a prosecution bond is not discharged by a second bond, given as security upon a rule obtained at the instance of defendant; and therefore an obligor in the former bond is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Buie v. Wooten, 52 N. C. 441.

[r] (Pa. 1866) Under a statute requiring two sureties to a replevin bond, such sureties cannot be released, so as to make them competent witnesses for plaintiff, by the substitution of money under order of court. — Cummings v. Gann, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 484.

[s] (S. C. 1836) Where a witness on the part of defendants, in trover for slaves, had become their surety, the judge will permit his bond to be canceled on the delivery of the negroes, to restore his competency.—Spann v. Brown, Riley, 177.

[t] (S. C. 1846) The act (6 St. at Large, p. 337) requires defendant in trover "to enter into bonds with sufficient security to the sheriff," etc., "for the production of the chattel sued for to satisfy plaintiff's judgment." Held that, as the bond is discharged and the sureties thereon released by a delivery of the property by defendant to plaintiff, the sureties are thereafter competent witnesses for defendant. —Bowen v. Coker, 3 Rich. Law, 142.

[u] (Tenn. 1837) A party to a suit, who has given a surety for the costs, cannot, by taking the poor debtor's oath, have the surety discharged or released, for the purpose of examining him as a witness.—Black v. Crain, 18 Tenn. (10 Yerg.) 516.

[v] (Tex. 1848) A surety on a bond to obtain the release of sequestered property is discharged by the delivery of the property into the hands of the sheriff, as well before as after verdict, and is thereby rendered competent to testify between the parties.—McClenny v. Floyd, 3 Tex. 114.

[w] (Vt. 1846) Plaintiff, in an action brought by a surety against his co-surety for contribution, had assigned his claim for contribution from defendant to three persons, who had incurred liabilities as sureties for him, and had been decreed a bankrupt after the commencement of his action for contribution. His assignee in bankruptcy had entered and prosecuted the suit, and it did not appear that he entered at the request of the assignees of the claim. One of those assignees, after having transferred his claim in the demand to his co-assignees, was offered as a witness on the part of plaintiff. Held, that the co-assignees of the witness not having executed to him a release of their right to call upon him for contribution, in case they should eventually be compelled to pay upon their liability for plaintiff, the witness was incompetent.—Hayden v. Rice, 18 Vt. 353.

[x] (Va. 1840) One of two sureties in a bond, having received from the creditor a covenant not to sue him thereon, is a competent witness for the creditor in a suit to enforce a mortgage given to secure the bond, by the principal, as against one claiming under a prior deed or mortgage.—Waggener v. Dyer, 11 Leigh, 384.

§ 468. —— Substitution of new surety.

[a] While a trial in a replevin suit is in progress, a new bond may be substituted, in order to release a surety on the bond and make him a competent witness.

—(Ark. 1860) Patterson v. Fowler, 22 Ark. 396;

(Ill. 1843) Amos v. Sinnott, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 440; (1855) Charlesworth v. Williams, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 338; (1861) Gray v. Morey, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 409;

(Ind. 1845) Brewer v. Murray, 7 Blackf. 567;

(N. M. 1854) Ward v. Broadwell, 1 N. M. 75.

[aa] When a surety on the appeal bond is needed as a witness in the appellate court, he may be released and a new surety substituted.

(N. C. 1805) Lavender v. Pritchard, 3 N. C. 337; (1823) McCulloch v. Tyson, 9 N. C. 836;

(Pa. 1817) Salmon v. Rance, 3 Serg. & R. 311.

[b] (Ala. 1847) A surety to an attachment bond, who is a necessary witness for the party, may be made competent by the execution of a new bond, with other sufficient surety; and it is the duty of the court to permit such substitution to be made.—Drinkwater v. Holliday, 11 Ala. 134.

[bb] (Ala. 1848) A surety to a bond for the trial of the right of property may be rendered a competent witness for his principal by the substitution of another surety, and the refusal of the court to permit this to be done may be revised on error.—Taylor v. Branch Bank at Huntsville, 14 Ala. 633.

[c] (Ala. 1861) A surety may be a witness for his principal, where a new and sufficient bond is executed, putting a different surety in his place; but it is not permissible to erase his name from the bond and supply his place with another surety.—Webb v. Kelly, 37 Ala. 333.

[d] (Ala. 1861) An obligor in a detinue bond cannot make a surety thereon a competent witness in his favor, by erasing the surety's name and substituting another with the approval of the court, but without the consent of the obligee. A new bond should be given.—Webb v. Kelly, 37 Ala. 333.

[e] (Ga. 1852) Where, in an action of trover, a possessory warrant for the property is sued out against the plaintiff and a bond given to have the property forthcoming to answer any judgment for the same, a surety on such bond cannot be removed from the bond by the court, so as to make him a competent witness, on an offer to substitute other sureties.—Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125.

[f] (Ga. 1866) Where a material witness is a surety on the bond of a tenant given under the act of 1866, the court hearing the case should allow another surety to be substituted to make the witness competent.—Dudley v. Love, 35 Ga. 148.

[g] (Ky. 1868) A surety in a bond to release attached property is liable until the court has ordered his discharge. Until then he is not a competent witness for the defendant in attachment, although another surety has been substituted.—Rucker v. Pritchett, 66 Ky. (3 Bush) 689.

[h] (La.) When no liability is shown under an attachment or sequestration bond, or bond to release a provisional seizure, the principal may restore his surety's competency by substituting another.—(1828) Vance v. Martin, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 673; (1836) Tyson v. Lansing, 10 La. 444; (1843) Comstock v. Paie, 3 Rob. 440.

[i] (La.) Plaintiff in injunction may, on a proper showing, restore his surety's competency by substituting another. Such is the usual practice as to sureties in attachment and for costs. The original surety may be then examined, though by Act March 25, 1831, No. 48, § 3, a party to the suit, and liable in solido with plaintiff for damages and interest.—(1844) Brashear v. White, 9 Rob. 55; (1845) Williams v. Planters' Bank of Mississippi, 12 Rob. 125.

[j] (Md. 1864) Courts have no authority to discharge a surety on an injunction or appeal bond and substitute another, so as to make the former a competent witness. Such a power may be very convenient, but it impairs the obligation of contracts and violates our organic law.—Artz v. Grove, 21 Md. 456.

[k] (Mass. 1849) Where several actions of replevin are tried together before the same jury, a party offering a surety on a replevin bond as a witness in one of the cases in which the surety is not interested cannot be required, before calling him, to substitute a new surety in his place on the replevin bond.—Kimball v. Thompson, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 441, 50 Am. Dec. 799.

[l] (Miss. 1845) In a trial of a right of property claimant can substitute new sureties, so as to discharge the old ones and render them competent witnesses.—Moore v. McKie, 13 Miss. (5 Smedes & M.) 238.

[m] (N. H. 1856) On the trial of a cause in which defendant was held to bail, he moved the court to change the bail, so that the person originally taken might be a witness. Plaintiff made no objection to the responsibility of the new bail offered, but the court ruled that it was not within their discretion to grant the motion. Held, that the ruling was erroneous.—Walker v. Kennison, 34 N. H. 257.

[n] (N. Y. 1811) Where a material witness for defendant is holden as his bail, he should be discharged by the court and new bail taken. —Irwin v. Caryell, 8 Johns. 407.

[o] (N. Y. 1842) Where the surety in a bond given upon the allowance of an injunction is a material witness for plaintiff, the court will allow the bond to be canceled, and a new bond to be given, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by a master.—Pomeroy v. Avery, 9 Paige, 591.

[p] (N. C. 1856) The signer of a prosecution bond may become a competent witness, by the substitution of a new bond, under the order of court that a new one be substituted and the former one canceled, although the latter is not in court to be canceled.—Otey v. Hoyt, 48 N. C. 407.

[q] (Ohio, 1838) On an appeal from the common pleas to the supreme court, this court cannot discharge the surety in the appeal bond, to allow him to testify for the appellant, on the substitution of other security.—Stanbery v. Mitten, 8 Ohio (8 Ham.) 546.

[r] (Pa. 1842) Where a cause is remitted from the common pleas of one county to a special court in another, the latter may discharge a recognizor from his recognizance and receive another surety, in order to make the former a witness.—Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. 362.

[s] (Pa. 1842) Where an action has been remitted from the common pleas of one county to the special court in another county, and the special court has discharged a surety from his recognizance and received another surety, that the first might testify as a witness, the first surety remains liable for the costs up to the time of his discharge, unless the recognizance otherwise provides, and is therefore an interested party and incompetent as a witness.—Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. 362.

[t] (Tenn. 1838) A surety for the prosecution of a suit may be made a competent witness for the party for whom he stands bound by releasing him of record and substituting another in his place.—Craighead v. State Bank, 19 Tenn. (Meigs) 199; Ross v. Blair, Id., 525.

§ 469. —— On note.

[a] (Ala. 1848) The principal in a note is a competent witness against one who signed the note as his surety, with whom he had deposited corn sufficient to indemnify him against liability.—Gayle v. Bishop, 14 Ala. 552.

[b] (Ala. 1850) Where the surety on a note extinguishes it, by giving a new note with a third person as principal and himself as surety, the principal in the original note is a competent witness for such third person, to show that the substituted note was given for the accommodation of the surety, and under the promise that he would pay it.—Wright v. Lewis, 18 Ala. 194.

[c] (Ga. 1857) The principal in a joint and several note, against whom process is sued out but not served, and who is released from liability for costs, is a competent witness in a suit against the sureties on said note for them. —Holland v. Chambers, 22 Ga. 193.

[d] (Ky. 1827) The principal in a note, released by the surety, is a competent witness for him.—Bank of Limestone v. Penick, 21 Ky. (5 T. B. Mon.) 25.

[e] (Mo. 1849) The maker of a note bearing interest at 10 per cent. was defaulted, and released by his sureties in the note, from all claims which they might have as sureties, and from all claims for interest above the legal rate of 6 per cent. Held, that he became thereby a competent witness.—Hogg v. Breckenridge, 12 Mo. 369.

[f] (N. H. 1840) In a suit by a bona fide indorsee of a note against the surety, the principal, being released by the surety, is a competent witness to prove that the words "or order" had been inserted in the note, after its execution and without his knowledge, by the principal, at the request of the payee.—Haines v. Dennett, 11 N. H. 180.

[g] (S. C. 1847) Where a surety on a note executes a release to the maker of all liability to him, in case of a recovery, such release will render the maker a competent witness for the surety, in a suit upon such note against the surety.—Dogan v. Ashby, 1 Strob. 433.

§ 470. Indemnitors.

[a] (Me. 1843) In an action of trespass against a sheriff for goods attached by his deputy, the sheriff executed a release to the deputy in order to render him a competent witness. Held, that by virtue of the release a person who had promised to indemnify the deputy for attaching and taking the goods became a competent witness for the sheriff.—Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 85.

[b] (Mass. 1834) Where plaintiff, in an action upon a debt against which he and a third party had covenanted to indemnify defendant, released such third party, he was a competent witness. —Whitaker v. Salisbury, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 534.

§ 471. Receiptors.

[a] (Me. 1853) A receiptor of property attached may be qualified to testify as a witness for defendant in the suit, on receiving a sum of money from the party calling him, or from the attorney of such party, sufficient to indemnify him.—Jordan v. Young, 37 Me. 276.

[b] (Mass.) A receiptor of property may be a witness, on having a sufficient sum of money put into his hands as an indemnity.—(1832) Allen v. Hawks, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 79; (1834) Beckley v. Freeman, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 468.

[c] (Vt. 1845) Where the receiptor of property attached has suffered it to remain in the defendant's possession, the court has no authority to allow defendant to pay to the clerk of the court a sum equal to the receiptor's liability to the attaching officer, and then discharge the attachment, or the attaching officer's liability, so as to render the receiptor a competent witness.—Haskins v. Smith, 17 Vt. 263.

(g) EXECUTORS OR ADMINISTRATORS, AND LEGATEES, DEVISEES, OR HEIRS.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, § 472.
—— PROCEEDINGS TO ESTABLISH WILL, § 473.
LEGATEES AND DEVISEES, § 474.
HEIRS AND DISTRIBUTEES, § 475.

§ 472. Executors and administrators.

[a] (Ala. 1846) The administrator is not a competent witness to prove that he had funds in his hands sufficient to pay all the claims of creditors, for the purpose of enabling the distributees of the estate to testify; but if the distributees execute releases to him previous to being admitted to give evidence, as his testimony could not prejudice, it will not be an error available in the supreme court.—Hall v. Alexander, 9 Ala. 219.

[b] (Conn. 1846) A., one of two administrators, after becoming bankrupt, sold a nonnegotiable note to C., contrary to the orders of B., the other administrator; C. having full knowledge of the bankruptcy of A. Defendants claimed that they had paid the money due on the note to B., and that he had paid it over to the legatees, who were entitled thereto, and it was shown that at the time B. received the money from defendants he gave them a bond of indemnity; but it also appeared that, before he was offered as a witness in an action on the note of C. in the names of A. and B., defendants had given up such bond to him for the purpose of qualifying him as a witness. Held that, since B.'s interest was extinguished, he was a competent witness for defendants.—Beecher v. Buckingham, 18 Conn. 110, 44 Am. Dec. 580.

[c] (Del. 1838) Where an executor had long ago settled the estate, and any action on the testamentary bond was barred, he was a competent witness to prove facts resting in his knowledge before the will, though such facts went to controvert the title of his testator.—Phillips v. Short, 2 Har. 339.

[d] (Ill. 1853) An administrator is a competent witness to show when money was received from him by a guardian, if it appears that he has settled up the estate and distributed the proceeds among the heirs.—Clark v. Burnside, 15 Ill. (5 Peck) 62.

[e] (Ind. 1857) An executor was empowered by the will to sell certain real estate devised on a condition subsequent, if the condition should be broken. The condition being broken, the executor sold and conveyed the estate by a deed reciting the breach of the condition, but without covenants. The executor, being also a legatee under the will, released by writing all interest in the premises except as trustee of the power to sell. Held that, the recitals in the deed relating to the breach of condition being only representations for the truth of which he was not bound, the executor was a competent witness for the plaintiff in an action of ejectment brought by the vendee to recover possession of the lands.—Doe v. Cassiday, 9 Ind. 63.

[f] (La. 1827) A discharged executor is competent for his coexecutor.—Taylor v. Hollander, 5 Mart. (N. S.) 295.

[g] (Md. 1793) An executor is not a competent witness in an action for the estate, though he releases all his interest therein.—Beard v. Cowman's Ex'r, 3 Har. & McH. 152.

[h] (Md. 1811) In replevin by A.'s executor against B.'s administrator for a negro boy, defendant, for the purpose of proving a gift of the negro boy by A. to C., whose administratrix B. was, in her lifetime, offered in evidence D., who was the daughter and one of the representatives of C. and B., and, to restore her competency, gave in evidence a receipt given by the husband of D. to B., as the administratrix of C., of his wife's share of her deceased father C.'s estate. Held, that D.'s testimony was inadmissible.—Dunnington's Ex'r v. Dunnington's Adm'r, 3 Har. & J. 279.

[i] (Mass. 1834) In an action by an executor, he is not a competent witness for defendant, although released by him, and though the action was brought for the benefit of the residuary legatee, who had indemnified the executor against costs.—Page v. Page, 32 Mass. (15 Pick.) 368.

[j] (Mass. 1842) Under St. 1839, c. 107, § 2, an executor, who is plaintiff in a suit in which he has no interest, except such as arises from his liability for costs and expenses of the suit, may be a witness in such suit, if there be first tendered to him such security for his liability for costs as is sufficient, in the opinion of the court, to indemnify him on account thereof; and he need not also release his right to recover costs of defendant in such suit, in order to enable him to testify.—Dascomb v. Davis, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 335.

[k] (N. H. 1844) If an executor have any interest as heir or creditor, he may make himself competent to testify, by assigning such interest to the nominal plaintiff, and taking from him a release from all liability for costs.—Barker v. Barker, 16 N. H. 333.

[l] (N. Y. 1855) A renunciation, by one named as an executor and devisee in trust in a will, of all right to act as executor or trustee under it, renders him a competent witness to prove its validity, upon an application for probate.—Burritt v. Silliman, 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 93, 64 Am. Dec. 530, affirming (1853) 16 Barb. 198.

[m] (Pa. 1813) An administrator cannot be a witness, by releasing his interest and paying costs, when there is an issue on the plea of plene administravit.—Heckert v. Haine, 6 Bin. 16.

[n] (Pa. 1814) An administrator with the will annexed, who has made a void deed of lands, and who might perhaps thus be liable to heirs for having pretended to sell what he had no right as such administrator to sell, is a competent witness for defendant, who claims against the heir; he being released by such defendant from liability on his warranty, and his testimony in favor of defendant, if having any effect on his rights, being only to his own injury.—Moody's Lessee v. Fulmer, 3 Grant, Cas. 17.

[o] (Pa. 1835) Plaintiff cannot make himself a witness by instituting his suit in the name of a former transferee. Therefore an administrator cannot testify on secretly assigning his interest to the heir of his intestate; the legal plaintiff's interest not being diminished, nor the assignee's title enhanced thereby.—Sypher v. Long, 4 Watts, 253.

[p] (Pa. 1858) An executor, who has renounced and been discharged, is a competent witness for his former co-executor.—Burkholder v. Lapp's Ex'r, 31 Pa. (7 Casey) 322.

[q] (S. C. 1827) Where a coexecutor, who is a plaintiff in a suit, releases all his interest in commissions and in the estate, and offers to pay the cost of the suit into the court, he is not thereby rendered competent as a witness.—Christie's Ex'rs v. Furman's Ex'rs, Harp. 553.

[r] (S. C. 1844) An executor cannot be discharged by the ordinary, so as to render him a competent witness in favor of the estate of his testator.—Osborn v. Black, Speers, Eq. 431.

[s] (Tex. 1853) In a suit by an administrator, he is incompetent to testify in behalf of the estate, though he has filed a release of all claims against the estate for commissions.—Dial v. Crain, 10 Tex. 444.

§ 473. —— Proceedings to establish will.

[a] (Ala. 1853) The proponent of a will is an incompetent witness to sustain it, and cannot render himself competent by renouncing as executor.—Gilbert v. Gilbert, 22 Ala. 529, 58 Am. Dec. 268.

[b] (Ala. 1856) An executor, who is shown by the record to be a proponent of a will, cannot, after issue joined contesting the same, demand as a matter of right that he shall be discharged, that he may testify as a witness.—Deslonde v. Darrington's Heirs, 29 Ala. 92.

[c] (Ala. 1859) A person named as executor, who has resigned the trust, after propounding the will and then dismissing the proceedings without paying the costs, is a competent witness to sustain the will on a second application.—Blakey's Heirs v. Blakey's Ex'x, 33 Ala. 611.

[d] (Del. 1891) A legatee and executor, having renounced his rights as executor, is a competent witness in a contest of the will.—Ethridge v. Bennett, 9 Houst. 295, 31 Atl. 813.

[e] (Mass. 1856) Under St. 1839, c. 107, § 2, an executor named in an instrument offered for probate as a will was a competent witness in support of it, on releasing his right to recover costs.—Baxter v. Abbott, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 71.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) An executor is not a competent witness to prove a will, but his competency is restored by renouncing.—Burritt v. Silliman, 16 Barb. 198, affirmed (1855) 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 93, 64 Am. Dec. 530.

[g] (N. C. 1844) An executor offered a will for probate in the county court. An issue of devisavit vel non was there made up and tried, and an appeal to the superior court taken. In the superior court the executor by permission of the court renounced all right to the executorship and withdrew from the suit; one of the legatees in the will having intervened as a party and agreeing to be responsible for all the costs. Held, that the executor under those circumstances became a competent witness in support of the will.—Sawyer v. Dozier's Heirs, 27 N. C. 97.

[h] (Pa. 1850) An executor and legatee, by renouncing his executorship and assigning the legacy, becomes a competent witness to prove the execution of the will, although the words "for valuable consideration" be inserted in the assignment of the legacy.—Appeal of Search, 13 Pa. (1 Harris) 108.

§ 474. Legatees and devisees.

[a] (U. S. 1826) A release by a party to make him a competent witness in favor of an executor is sufficient, if it releases all claim to the estate of the deceased, although by mistake the executor's name is omitted in the release.—Oliver v. Vernon, Fed. Cas. No. 10,501 [4 Mason, 275].

[b] (U. S. 1843) A paid legatee is a competent witness, where payment has been made by the executor voluntarily, with knowledge of the claim sued upon, and without a refunding bond, and a long time has elapsed since the death of the testator. The length of time is regulated by analogy to the statute of limitations.—Wilcocks v. Phillips, Fed. Cas. No. 17,639 [1 Wall. Jr. 47].

[c] (Ala. 1845) A co-legatee cannot make herself a competent witness to increase the distributive sum of her co-legatees, by releasing to them the legacy; and her deposition, under such circumstances, may be properly suppressed.—Powell v. Powell, 7 Ala. 582.

[d] (Ala. 1851) Testator bequeathed a negress and her increase to his grandchildren, and provided that the negroes should remain undivided until the youngest child arrived at the age of 21 years, and should then be divided among those then living. A division was made among the children before the youngest had attained his majority. Held, in a suit by such legatee to set aside the division, one of the legatees, who disclaimed all interest in the negroes, having sold his interest to another legatee before division was made, was a competent witness for defendant to prove his minority at the time the division was made.—Johnson v. Culbreath, 19 Ala. 348.

[e] (Ala. 1861) Executors voluntarily paid B. his legacy and took from him his receipt in full, and the solicitors of the defendants afterwards, with the view of restoring his competency as a witness in proceedings for the purpose of setting aside the will, repaid the money, with interest, to the executors in discharge of any claim they might have on B., and released B., the executors, and the estate from all liability to repay or account for the money, and B. approved and adopted the payment, and released the executors from any claim on account of the legacy, and the executors accepted the payment, and released B. from all liability to pay back or refund the money paid to him as legatee. Held, that he was a competent witness.—Hall's Heirs v. Hall's Ex'rs, 38 Ala. 131.

[f] (Conn. 1807) A residuary legatee cannot be admitted as a witness to increase the fund on which the residuum depends, and a release by such witness of a particular thing appertaining to this fund, which may be the subject of the suit on trial, does not discharge his interest.—Austin v. Bradley, 2 Day, 466.

[g] (Ga. 1850) Upon an issue founded on an affidavit of illegality, filed by an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed, to a general judgment against the precedent executor to the will, which was levied on the property of the estate in the hands of the administrator, legatees under the will, who have been paid their legacies, are competent witnesses for the administrator.—Johnson v. Lewis, 8 Ga. 460.

[h] (Ga. 1859) The release by a legatee of his interest to his children, affects his credit only, and not his competency.—Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382.

[i] (Ga. 1859) A legatee who has released his interest is a competent witness for the will.—Martin v. Mitchell, 28 Ga. 382.

[j] (Ky. 1836) That a legatee who has released the executor from all claim on the estate of the testator is still liable to the creditors of the estate does not destroy his competency as a witness.—Higgins v. Morrison's Ex'r, 34 Ky. (4 Dana) 100.

[k] (Md. 1849) In an action of replevin for a negro, plaintiff, suing as executor, offered the will of a testator, by which the negro was bequeathed to the witness "for her sole and separate use, exclusive of the control of her husband, during her natural life," and a release by witness and her husband. Held, that she was not thereby rendered a competent witness.—Smith v. Morgan, 8 Gill. 133.

[l] (Md. 1856) A legatee may render himself a competent witness to support the will, by conveying away by deed for a valuable consideration, his interest in the property, for that purpose.—Wampler v. Wampler, 9 Md. 540.

[m] (Miss. 1854) One who has transferred to her colegatees as much of her portion of the legacy as may suffice to pay her just share of such judgment as may be recovered in an action pending is not thereby made competent to testify in that action in favor of the administrator of the estate.—Dunbar v. Chevalier, 28 Miss. (6 Cushm.) 161.

[n] (N. J. 1851) A devisee, whose share of the estate as one of the heirs at law will be greater than the share devised to him cannot testify, though he has deeded away all his interest in the estate, either as heir or devisee, if it appears that the deed was without consideration, and was made with an understanding between him and the grantee that a reconveyance should be made to him.—Canfield v. Ball, 8 N. J. Eq. (4 Halst. Ch.) 582.

[o] (N. Y. 1849) Legatees in a will, who appeared by counsel before a surrogate to dispute the account of the executor, were incompetent witnesses, though they had assigned all their interest, inasmuch as they might be liable for costs; but a legatee, who had been paid his legacy and given a receipt in full, and was not a party to the proceedings before the surrogate, was a competent witness.—Mesick v. Mesick, 7 Barb. 120.

[p] (Pa. 1827) A devisee who has released his interest is a competent witness for the trustee appointed by the will.—Cook v. Grant, 16 Serg. & R. 198, 16 Am. Dec. 564.

[q] (Pa. 1846) A legatee and incumbent of a solvent estate having received her legacy and released and assigned the annuity, is a competent witness for the executor.—Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 364.

[r] (Pa. 1846) The court will not undertake to judge whether a release and assignment by a legatee and annuitant of a solvent estate of her interest therein, so as to admit of her being a witness, was colorable, when she is not a party to the record.—Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 364.

[s] (Pa. 1847) A devisee, made a party to an action against the executor to charge the lands devised, is an incompetent witness for defendant, although he has released his interest under the will.—Norris v. Johnston, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 287.

[t] (Pa. 1847) The owner of a graveyard directed by his will that the lot should continue to be used for that purpose, and that A., who had acted as sexton, under authority from the testator, under which charges were made by him for interments, should be sexton during his life. After the death of the testator, A. continued to act as sexton, and received fees paid for interments. On a feigned issue to try the validity of the alleged will, held, that A. was not a competent witness to support the will, although he had released all his interest under it to the persons named as executors, as, if the will is not sustained, he would be liable to the heirs for the fees received.—McNeil v. Conwell, 7 Pa. (7 Barr) 368.

[u] (Pa. 1862) The daughter and residuary legatee of a testator is a competent witness for the executor, upon her assignment to him individually of her interest in the cause of action in suit; he agreeing that no part of the costs of the suit shall become chargeable upon her residuary share.—Steininger v. Hoch's Ex'r, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 432.

[v] (Pa. 1862) Though such an agreement would not be binding upon him as executor, as the estate would be liable for costs in case of loss, without regard to it, and thus diminish her residuary interest, yet as the ultimate liability of her share would depend upon the contingency of a failure to recover, and of the insufficiency of the other two-thirds of the residuary estate to pay the costs in case of loss, the liability for costs was too remote and contingent to exclude her as a witness.—Steininger v. Hoch's Ex'r, 42 Pa. (6 Wright) 432.

[w] (Tenn. 1847) An infant's release of his legacy does not render him a competent witness for the executor.—Langford v. Frey, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 443.

[x] (Tex. 1857) A legatee becomes a competent witness by an assignment of his interest in the suit.—Saunders v. Duval's Adm'r, 19 Tex. 467.

§ 475. Heirs and distributees.

[a] An heir or distributee of an estate is rendered a competent witness, either by an assignment to another, or by a release to the administrator of all his interest in the suit.

—(Ala. 1851) Herndon v. Givens' Adm'r, 19 Ala. 313; (1858) Robinson's Adm'rs v. Tipton's Adm'r, 31 Ala. 595;

(Ky. 1834) Boon v. Nelson's Heirs, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 391;

(S. C. 1827) Christie's Ex'rs v. Furman's Ex'rs, 1 Harp. 553;

(Tex. 1857) Saunders v. Duval's Adm'r, 19 Tex. 467;

(Vt. 1848) Sylvester v. Downer, 20 Vt. 355, 49 Am. Dec. 786.

[b] In an action by an administrator to recover a debt due the estate, the heir is not a witness on his releasing his interest in the debt; the administrator should also release him from costs.

—(Ala. 1844) Williams' Ex'rs v. Temple, 6 Ala. 656;

(Vt. 1838) Baxter v. Buck, 10 Vt. 548.

[c] (Ala. 1838) An assignment or release, by a distributee and heir of an estate, of all his interest in a particular suit, the proceeds of which would go to increase the assets of the estate, does not qualify him to be a witness in the suit.—Maury's Adm'r v. Mason's Adm'r, 8 Port. 211.

[d] (Ala. 1844) The heirs or distributees are not competent witnesses for the administrator to establish a claim in favor of the estate, though they executed releases of all their interests in the demand in suit, as the releases of interest in such demand did not alter the fact that, if recovery was had, it would be a fund in the hands of the administrator to pay debts, and thus increase the fund in which they had a distributive share, and if it went against the administrator, he would be compelled to pay costs and thus diminish the fund of which they were distributees.—Williams' Ex'rs v. Temple, 6 Ala. 656.

[e] (Ala. 1846) A distributee, who has received a portion of his distributive share, and releases to the administrator all claim on the residue, is a competent witness for the administrator, in a suit against him by a creditor of the estate.—Hall v. Alexander, 9 Ala. 219.

[f] (Ala. 1847) A husband and wife, releasing to their children all their interest in the estate of the father of the wife, are not thereby rendered competent witnesses in a contest upon the validity of the will of the wife's father.—Locke v. Noland, 11 Ala. 249.

[g] (Ala. 1850) One distributee of an estate, who after the division has sold his portion to another, may by release be made a competent witness for the latter, in a controversy involving the title to the property.—Dent v. Portwood, 17 Ala. 242.

[h] (Ala. 1851) A distributee of an estate is not a competent witness to prove the execution of a release of his interest, so as to render him a competent witness for the administrator.—Herndon v. Givens' Adm'r, 19 Ala. 313.

[i] (Ala. 1853) A distributee of an estate who has released and abandoned all interest therein, which release has been entered of record, is a competent witness for the administrator, to prove an advancement to another distributee.—Grey's Heirs v. Grey's Adm'rs, 22 Ala. 233.

[j] (Ala. 1861) Under the Code, in a suit by an administrator, a distributee of the estate who has released his interest in the subject-matter of the suit to the other distributees is not an incompetent witness for plaintiff as a transferror, to establish a right transferred by him; but he is incompetent on the ground of interest where he has not released his entire interest in the estate.—Coate v. Coate's Adm'r, 37 Ala. 695.

[k] (Conn. 1826) On the hearing of an appeal from a decree of the court of probate, finding an advancement made to appellant by his father, the appellee offered as a witness a brother of the appellant, who, according to said decree, had received his full share of his father's estate, and had not appealed from such decree, who had not appeared as an appellee, and who had executed to the administrator a discharge from all claims against his father's estate. Held, that his interest had been extinguished by the probate decree and by his discharge, and that he was a competent witness.—Bailey v. Bailey, 6 Conn. 308.

[l] (Ind. 1855) M., administrator of S., deceased, filed his account for final settlement, etc. Among the items was the account of one C., verified by the claimant in accordance with the statute (Rev. St. 1843, p. 524). M. had paid it and taken C.'s receipt on the back, and filed it as a voucher. To this item alone the heirs objected. M. and the heirs appeared, and by agreement the issue joined was submitted to the court. One of the heirs, the record stated, "released his interest," and was offered as a witness by the other heirs. Held, that such witness was incompetent.—Stout v. Morgan, 6 Ind. 369.

[m] (Ky. 1843) A distributee is not made a competent witness by release of all his interest in a particular demand, sought to be recovered by the administrator. — Kennedy's Adm'rs v. Conn's Adm'r, 42 Ky. (3 B. Mon.) 321.

[n] (Me. 1851) One of several heirs, to whom land and personal estate descended, may be a witness for the administrator, after having conveyed his interest in the land, and released to the administrator, as such, his interest in the personal property.—Reed v. Gilbert, 32 Me. 519.

[o] (Md. 1849) Where an action of replevin is brought by an executor for an article of property claimed as the property of the testator, a release, by a distributee, of all his interest in said article, does not render her a competent witness.—Smith v. Morgan, 8 Gill, 133.

[p] (Mass. 1835) In an action by an administrator on a note payable to the intestate, the administrator, having called as a witness a son of the intestate, who has released to the administrator all his interest as one of the heirs in the note, executed and delivered to him an instrument in writing, not under seal, by which, in consideration of the sum of $50, alleged to have been received of the witness, the administrator agreed to pay all the costs of such action, and to make no claim therefor in any settlement of his administration account, or otherwise. Held, that the son was thereby rendered a competent witness.—Ford v. Ford, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 418.

[q] (Mass. 1850) An heir at law of one deceased, whose administrator had brought an action of trespass for taking the personal property of the intestate, released and transferred to the administrator all his interest in such property, and thereupon received from the administrator a written promise to indemnify him from all costs and charges on account of the suit. Held, that this promise would operate to prevent the administrator from obtaining an allowance of the costs from the judge of probate, if such allowance would affect the heir, or reach his distributive share of the estate; and, consequently, that it was effectual to render the heir a competent witness in such action.—Dunham v. Branch, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 558.

[r] (N. J. 1852) In a suit by the administrator of a deceased mortgagee to foreclose the bond and mortgage, defense of payment being made, one entitled to a distributive share of the personal estate of the decedent can become a competent witness by releasing his interest as distributee in the bond and mortgage, and by the administrator releasing him or his interest in the estate from all liability for costs of suit.—King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 44.

[s] (N. Y. 1834) In a suit against an administrator for a debt due from the intestate, the heirs of the intestate, who had sold a portion of the real estate descended, before the commencement of the suit, released to the administrator the residue of their interest in the estate. They were not thereby rendered competent witnesses for the administrator.—Scott v. Young, 4 Paige, 542.

[t] (N. C. 1842) In an action by an administrator to recover a debt due to his intestate, a release by a distributee to the administrator of all his interest in the debt if recovered, and a release by the administrator to the distributee of all claim in him for any part of the costs of the suit if he should fail, renders the distributee a competent witness for the administrator.—Moffit's Adm'rs v. Lane, 24 N. C. 254.

[u] (N. C. 1852) On the trial of a collateral issue between the administrators and heirs as to assets in a suit by a creditor, one of the heirs is an incompetent witness for the administrator, though he may have released to him all his interest in the personal estate, and also an amount supposed to be the value of the real assets descended to him.—Carrier v. Hampton, 35 N. C. 436.

[uu] (Pa. 1830) In a suit by administrators to recover the purchase money of land sold by them, in pursuance of an order of court, one of the heirs who had released all his interest to another heir was a competent witness for plaintiffs.—Cox v. Norton, 1 Pen. & W. 412.

[v] (Pa. 1846) On the trial of an issue between the devisee and one of the heirs at law, the residue of the heirs, although they have conveyed their interest in the subject-matter of the suit, before its commencement, to the sole party of record, are incompetent witnesses against the devisee.—Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 21, 45 Am. Dec. 713.

[vv] (S. C. 1839) In an action by an administratrix for the recovery of a debt due to the intestate, a distributee, who had received his share and settled with the administratrix, on releasing all interest in the recovery, was a competent witness in the absence of any proof of outstanding demands, or deficiency of assets in the hands of an administratrix.—Spann v. Ballard, 1 Rice, 440.

[w] (Tenn. 1846) Acts 1821, c. 66, § 3, providing that no person shall, under pretext of having transferred his interest to real estate or obligations for the performance of contracts or notes for money during the pendency of any suit at law, be permitted to give testimony in favor of those who held a joint interest with him at the commencement of the suit, or by which he himself could be released from any liability to perform contracts or pay money, does not preclude a party of record to an issue devisavit vel non from withdrawing and assigning his distributive interest in the estate, in the event of the setting aside of the will, and testifying in the cause for his former co-parties. —Patton v. Allison, 26 Tenn. (7 Humph.) 320.

[ww] (Tenn. 1846) A party of record to an issue devisavit vel non withdrew and assigned her distributive interest in the estate, in the event of the setting aside of the will, and was offered as a witness in the cause by her former co-parties. Held, that the fact that the assignment was not binding on her because of coverture, and that the assignment of her husband, who joined with her, would not bar her right to a settlement of a portion of her share upon her should she choose to bring her bill for that purpose, or should the assignee come into a court of chancery to recover it, did not render her incompetent to testify.—Patton v. Allison, 26 Tenn. (7 Humph.) 320.

[x] (Tenn. 1860) In an action by an administrator, for the benefit of his intestate's estate, a distributee, to make herself competent as a witness for plaintiff, executed a release of all her interest in any judgment which might be rendered in the case. Objection was raised that the witness still had an interest, as in the event of a judgment against plaintiff the estate would be liable for costs. Held that, as there was no evidence that the intestate left any property, the release was sufficient.—Lea v. Henderson, 41 Tenn. (1 Cold.) 146.

[xx] (Vt. 1847) Where a suit is prosecuted by an administratrix for the benefit of the heirs at law of the estate, the heirs, in case of failure to recover, are liable to contribute for the payment of the costs incurred; and one of the heirs, who has received a portion of the estate in land, is not rendered a competent witness for plaintiff by executing to her a release of all his interest in any portion of the estate growing out of the claim in controversy, his liability for costs being thereby in no manner affected.—Hopkinson v. Guildhall, 19 Vt. 533.

[y] (Va. 1820) The release by an heir and distributee, to the administrator, of all interest in the matter in controversy and in the contract, does not restore his competency.—Rowt's Adm'r v. Kile's Adm'r, Gilmer, 202.

[yy] (Va. 1840) In an action against an administrator, a distributee being offered as a witness for defendant, and objected to by plaintiff, a deed was produced from the distributee to the administrator, releasing his interest in the benefit of any judgment which might be rendered in favor of the administrator in that action so far as such recovery might increase the distributable surplus, and also releasing his interest in the decedent's estate so far as the distributable surplus might be increased by the failure of plaintiff to recover. Held, that the objection to the witness was not removed by such release.—Reynolds' Adm'r v. Stephenson's Adm'x, 11 Leigh, 369.

[z] (Va. 1841) In an action of trespass for taking and carrying away a slave, defendant claimed the slave as part of his father's estate, of which he was administrator, and, in order to prove that title, he offered his brother as a witness. He was objected to on the ground that he was interested as a distributee, and, to obviate this objection, defendant offered a deed of the witness, whereby he conveyed to defendant, for a valuable consideration, all his (the witness') right, title, and interest in his father's estate, and warranted the same free from the claims of all persons. Held, that as the witness had parted with all his interest in his father's estate, whatever that was, and had not warranted that the particular slave in question was part of that estate, he had no interest in the controversy, and was competent.—Parrish v. Parrish, 11 Leigh, 626.

[zz] (Va. 1889) A distributee, though a party to a suit for accounting, who has released the administratrix from all liability by reason of disbursements complained of, can testify in her behalf on the question of allowance of the disbursements, as such a release would remove his disqualification at common law; and Code 1873, c. 172, §§ 21, 22, providing that, with certain exceptions, a party to or interested in an action can testify in his own behalf, was intended to widen, and not to narrow, the common-law rule.—Radford v. Fowlkes, 85 Va. 820, 8 S. E. 817.

15. DETERMINATION OF LIABILITY OF CODEFENDANT BY DISMISSAL, DEFAULT, OR SEPARATE VERDICT OR JUDGMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL, §§ 476-481.
(b) NATURE OF INTEREST, §§ 482-490.

(a) IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 476.
DEFAULT, § 477.
CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT, § 478.
DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE, § 479.
INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE IN GENERAL, § 480.
DIRECTION OF VERDICT, § 481.

§ 476. In general.

[a] (U. S. 1806) One of several defendants, who has judgment upon demurrer to his separate plea of bankruptcy, may be a witness for the others, upon releasing all rights in his estate.—Hurliki's Adm'r v. Bacon, Fed. Cas. No. 6,921 [1 Cranch, C. C. 340].

[b] (Ark. 1839) A verdict of acquittal or conviction, provided he is not thereby rendered infamous, renders a defendant a competent witness as to his codefendants.—Ballard v. Noaks, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 45.

[c] (Cal. 1858) If a party be improperly joined as defendant, the court or jury, upon application, should first pass upon his case; and after he is discharged, he can then be examined as a witness for the other defendant.—Domingo v. Getman, 9 Cal. 97.

[d] (Conn. 1796) If, in an action of trespass against several, one is acquitted, he may be a witness for the others in a petition for a new trial, notwithstanding plaintiff has brought a petition against him.—Ranny v. Church, 2 Root, 420.

[e] (Ga. 1855) Under the act of 1839, one of several defendants who has been defaulted, or against whom a verdict has been rendered, and who does not appeal, is not rendered a party to an appeal taken by the others, and may be admitted as a witness for them, provided he be disinterested.—Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609.

[f] (Ga. 1858) Where of two codefendants one appeals from a verdict and the other does not, the one not appealing is no party to the issue, and is in no manner interested in the event of the suit, so far as it remains yet to be determined, and is therefore competent as a witness.—Wellborn v. Rogers, 24 Ga. 558.

[g] (Ill. 1843) In an action ex contractu against several defendants, if judgment is given in favor of one, in matter set up in defense personal to himself, the cause is adjudicated as to him, and he is not an incompetent witness by reason of his having been a party to the suit.—Brooks v. McKinney, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 309.

[h] (Ill. 1844) One of several joint defendants, when discharged by the judgment of the court, becomes a competent witness for the other defendants.—Barnes v. Barber, 6 Ill. (1 Gilman) 401.

[i] (Ill. 1867) In an action of trover against three defendants, N., one of the defendants, was found not guilty, and judgment entered on the verdict. W. and S., the codefendants, were found guilty, and from the judgment on that verdict they appealed. N. did not unite in the appeal, and the judgment was reversed and a new trial had. Held that the judgment against N. was not affected by the reversal, and that N. was a competent witness on the new trial for W. and S.—Wells v. Miller, 45 Ill. 382.

[j] (Ind. 1839) If, in a trial of two defendants for an assault and battery, one of them has been separately tried and acquitted, the other may, on his trial, examine the acquitted defendant as a witness.—Carpenter v. Crane, 5 Blackf. 119.

[k] (Iowa, 1859) In an action of contract against two codefendants, one of them, who has withdrawn his defense, and had judgment rendered against him, is a competent witness for his codefendant, to disprove his liability.—Greenough v. Shelden, 9 Iowa, 503; Gates v. Gould, Id. 599; Arms v. Stockton, 12 Iowa, 327.

[l] (Md. 1853) One of several defendants is a competent witness, where the suit is ended as to him, and he has no direct interest in its result as to the others.—Barker v. Ayers, 5 Md. 202.

[m] (Mass. 1847) On the trial of an action of trover against H. and E., the jury disagreed as to H., but found a verdict in favor of E., on which judgment was rendered. Held, on a second trial of H., that E. was a competent witness for him.—Lackey v. Holbrook, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 131.

[n] (Miss. 1854) In trespass, after all the admissible evidence had been heard, the jury, on motion of defendants, were permitted to retire, and determine on the guilt or innocence of one of them, that he might, if innocent, be sworn as a witness. They found him guilty, but assessed no damages. Held, that this could not be considered a judgment against defendant, and that he was an incompetent witness against plaintiff.—Bell v. Morrison, 27 Miss. (5 Cushm.) 68.

[o] (N. Y. 1842) A judgment in favor of one of several defendants, in a suit ex contractu, on the ground of a bankrupt discharge, will not render him a competent witness for his codefendants.—Mills v. Lee, 4 Hill, 549.

[p] (N. Y. 1848) One of several defendants, jointly sued for a tort, may be acquitted, and sworn as a witness for his codefendant, whether they have united in the plea of not guilty or not.—McMartin v. Taylor, 2 Barb. 356.

[q] (Ohio, 1849) In an action upon a joint contract, where one of the defendants interposes a plea of infancy, such defendant, if the issue is found for him, may be examined as a witness.—Rohrer v. Morningstar, 18 Ohio, 579.

[r] (Pa. 1848) Where judgment is recovered against two jointly, and it is opened as to one only, who is let into a defense, the other is a competent witness for him, his own liability being determined.—Talmage v. Burlingame, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 21.

[s] (Vt. 1847) A defendant who has been discharged on his plea of bankruptcy is a competent witness for plaintiff, in the same case, against his codefendant, unless interested; and it makes no difference that plaintiff consented to his discharge.—Onion v. Fullerton, 19 Vt. 317.

§ 477. Default.

[a] A defendant in assumpsit, though defaulted, cannot be a witness for his codefendant.
—(N. H. 1820) Pillsbury v. Cammett, 2 N. H. 283;
(Vt. 1829) Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 138.

[b] (Ark. 1839) A joint trespasser, who has suffered judgment to go against him by default, is not a competent witness for plaintiff.—Ballard v. Noaks, 2 Ark. (2 Pike) 45.

[c] (Colo. 1873) Prior to the act of 1870, relating to the competency of witnesses, a defendant who had suffered judgment of default to pass against him was not a competent witness for his codefendant, upon the trial of an issue of fact joined by the latter.—Good v. Martin, 2 Colo. 218.

[d] (Ind. 1848) One of joint defendants in assumpsit, who has suffered judgment by default, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Kincaid v. Purcell, 1 Ind. (1 Cart.) 324.

[e] (Ind. 1848) Where one of two defendants in assumpsit makes no defense, plaintiff may call him as a witness, if he is willing to testify, on the trial of the issue with the other defendant, provided he has no interest in favor of a recovery by plaintiff.—Kincaid v. Purcel, Smith, 164.

[f] (La. 1858) A defendant who has allowed a judgment by default to be made final against him is incompetent to testify upon the trial of the case as to his codefendant, who has answered, he being interested in the question of costs.—Bank of Louisiana v. Hudson, 13 La. Ann. 600.

[g] (Me. 1849) In a complaint for flowage, under the statute, one of two respondents, after being defaulted, cannot be used as a witness for the other.—Wood v. Kelley, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 47.

[h] (Me.) A codefendant, in an action ex contractu, who has been defaulted, is not a competent witness for the party defending.—(1852) Smith v. Chase, 34 Me. 592; (1853) Thornton v. Blaisdell, 37 Me. 190.

[i] (Mass. 1832) In an action on a contract against two defendants, one of them, who has been defaulted and is willing to testify, is not a competent witness against the other without his consent.—Columbian Mfg. Co. v. Dutch, 30 Mass. (13 Pick.) 125.

[j] (Mass. 1835) Since St. 1834, c. 189 (Rev. St. c. 100, §§ 6, 7), enables the plaintiff in an action on contract against several persons to take judgment against one or more of the defendants, a defendant who has been defaulted is, with his consent, a competent witness in favor of his codefendants.—Bradlee v. Neal, 33 Mass. (16 Pick.) 501.

[k] (Mass. 1836) If one of several defendants in assumpsit be defaulted, he is not a competent witness for his codefendants; being interested, not so much to throw on his codefendants a portion of the demand in suit, as to reduce plaintiff's recovery to a nominal sum.—Vinal v. Burrill, 35 Mass. (18 Pick.) 29.

[l] (Mass. 1844) Where, in an action on a contract alleged to be joint, one of the defendants is defaulted, and the other goes to trial, the defaulted party is not, since the repeal of St. 1834, c. 189, and the substitution of Rev. St. c. 100, §§ 6, 7, a competent witness for the other, to prove that the contract was not joint.—Bull v. Strong, 49 Mass. (8 Metc.) 8.

[m] (Mass. 1849) Where one of two defendants in an action of trover is defaulted, he is incompetent as a witness on the trial of the other, on the ground of interest, even though called to testify to matters not connected with the question of damages.—Gerrish v. Cummings, 58 Mass. (4 Cush.) 391.

[n] (N. H. 1839) Since the statute of July 4, 1834, by which judgment may be rendered against one or more of several defendants, in an action founded upon contract, a defendant who is defaulted, and who has no interest in the controversy between plaintiff and a codefendant, may be a witness for the latter.—Blake v. Ladd, 10 N. H. 190.

[o] (N. H. 1841) In an action on a contract against two or more, if one defendant is defaulted, and another, under the general issue, sets up and maintains a defense which negatives plaintiff's right to recover against either of the defendants, and shows that he had no cause of action, plaintiff will not be entitled to judgment against the one who is defaulted, and he cannot, therefore, be a witness for the other.—Bowman v. Noyes, 12 N. H. 302.

[p] (N. H. 1841) Where one defendant sets up several matters of defense, some of which are personal to himself, and others go to show that plaintiff has no cause of action against any of the defendants, one who is defaulted cannot be a witness to sustain any of the matters of defense.—Bowman v. Noyes, 12 N. H. 302; George v. Sargent, Id. 313.

[q] (N. H. 1849) A defendant, who has suffered a default, may testify for plaintiff, in an action against the codefendant, if he have no interest in the cause to charge him.—Manchester Bank v. Moore, 19 N. H. 564.

[r] (N. H. 1853) In the trial of an action against two for a joint trespass, one of the defendants, who has been defaulted, but has had no assessment of damages against him, is not a competent witness to prove that he did not act, in making the trespass, as the servant of the other defendant.—Chase v. Lovering, 27 N. H. (7 Fost.) 295.

[s] (N. H. 1859) One of several defendants in an action upon a contract, who has been defaulted, is a competent witness, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, for a codefendant in any matter of defense personal to such codefendant, if released from liability for costs already accrued.—Bean v. Walker, 38 N. H. 359.

[t] (N. H. 1859) Where one of two defendants who was defaulted in an action on a contract was liable for costs of subsequent litigation between plaintiff and his codefendant, he is a competent witness therein if he would be liable whatever would be the result of the litigation.—Bean v. Walker, 38 N. H. 359.

[u] (N. Y. 1826) One of two defendants sued jointly for the same trespass cannot be a witness for his codefendant, even though he suffered judgment to pass against him by default.—Bohun v. Taylor, 6 Cow. 313.

[v] (N. Y. 1850) Where, in an action of trover against the defendants, one of them pleads, and the other suffers judgment by default, the latter is a competent witness, under the Code of Procedure, for plaintiff against his codefendant.—Thompson v. Blanchard, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 303.

[w] (N. C. 1841) In an action on a contract, a defendant cannot be admitted as a witness for his codefendants, even after he has suffered judgment by default to be taken against himself.—Walton v. Tomlin, 23 N. C. 593.

[x] (Pa. 1814) In an action of trespass for false imprisonment against four defendants, only two of whom pleaded, no judgment by default being taken against the other two, the latter are not interested in the verdict, and are therefore competent witnesses.—Wakely v. Hart, 6 Bin. 316.

[y] (Pa. 1865) Where, in an action on a joint contract, judgment is taken by default against one of the defendants, and a trial had against the other on a plea common to both, the defendant defaulted is not incompetent as a witness for plaintiff on the ground of interest, but he is incompetent, as being a party to the record, except by consent of the other parties.—Swanzey v. Parker, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 441, 88 Am. Dec. 549.

§ 478. Confession of judgment.

[a] (U. S. 1813) One joint defendant, in an action of assumpsit, cannot confess judgment so as to enable him to testify in behalf of the other defendants.—Patton v. Janney, Fed. Cas. No. 10,836 [2 Cranch, C. C. 71].

[b] (D. C. 1890) In an action by an executrix on a joint or joint and several promise, one defendant cannot, by confessing judgment without the consent of plaintiff, make himself competent to testify in behalf of his codefendant.—Hutchinson v. Brown, 19 D. C. 136.

[c] (Ky. 1854) When two or more persons are sued, if a judgment has been confessed against one, he is then a competent witness for another defendant.—Allen's Ex'r v. Shelby, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 320.

[d] (Mass. 1864) A defendant in equity, against whom the bill had been taken for confessed, and who had no interest in the matter in controversy, might be examined as a witness for plaintiff, before the passage of the statutes making parties competent witnesses.—Pingree v. Coffin, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 288.

[e] (Mo. 1845) In an action on a bond against A. and B., B. confessed judgment, and a recovery was had against A. On appeal by A., in which B. did not join, held, that B. was a competent witness to prove that A. did not execute the bond.—Coons v. Green, 9 Mo. 198.

[f] (N. Y. 1840) In a suit upon contract, against two defendants, where one cannot be charged without the other, the fact that one has suffered the bill to be taken pro confesso will not make him a competent witness for the other.—Holgate v. Palmer, 8 Paige, 461.

[g] (N. Y. 1848) Where a joint judgment against two defendants is rendered on the confession of one, the other not having been served with process, in a proceeding founded on such judgment to charge him not served with process, the other defendant is not a competent witness.—Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 7.

[h] (Pa. 1855) A party defendant cannot remove the objection to his competency as a witness by offering to confess judgment against himself.—Marshall v. Franklin Bank, 25 Pa. (1 Casey) 384.

[i] (Pa. 1863) In account rendered after judgment of quod computet confessed by defendant, he is not a competent witness in his own behalf before the auditor, appointed to ascertain the amount due and make report.—Tutton v. Addams, 45 Pa. (9 Wright) 67.

[j] (Pa. 1865) Two defendants who have confessed judgment are not competent witnesses for their codefendant.—Noble's Adm'r v. Laley, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 281.

§ 479. Dismissal or discontinuance.

[a, b] (U. S.) The federal courts will, upon motion, and for good cause shown, authorize the name of a party to be stricken from the pleadings; and he can then be examined as a witness, subject to all legal objections.—(1846) The Osceola, Fed. Cas. No. 10,602 [Olcott, 450]; (1847) The Neptune, Fed. Cas. No. 10,-120 [Olcott, 483].

[c] (Ind. 1859) Where the party whose name is sought to be stricken from the record as a party, so he may be a witness, has made costs, and the motion to strike is not accompanied by an offer to pay costs or let judgment be rendered against him for costs, it is not error to refuse to discharge him.—Dearmond v. Dearmond, 12 Ind. 455.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) An action of tort against two was dismissed by plaintiff as to one. Held, that plaintiff therefore became liable for costs to that one at any event, and that he therefore was not interested in the result, and was a competent witness for his codefendant.—Hill v. Rogers, 2 Iowa (2 Clarke) 67.

[e] (La. 1832) A witness having sworn he had no interest in the result, is competent after the suit is discontinued as to him.—Strong v. Courcelle, 4 La. 232.

[f] (N. H. 1857) Where, under the act of 1852, an action against two or more defendants is referred to a commissioner to state the facts, the commissioner has no power to discharge one of the defendants, so as to make him a witness for the others.—Dole v. Erskine, 35 N. H. 503.

[g] (N. Y. 1848) Where one of several plaintiffs in a suit in equity, who has no interest in the subject-matter, is a material witness for his coplaintiffs, his name may, on their motion, be stricken out as plaintiff, and he may then be examined as a witness.—Leavitt v. Steenbergen, 3 Barb. 155.

§ 480. Insufficiency of evidence in general.

[a] (U. S. 1859) A separate verdict as to one defendant in tort, to enable him to be a witness, can only be taken when it appears that he has been improperly joined; therefore it cannot be taken when there is any evidence to charge him.—Castle v. Bullard, 64 U. S. (23 How.) 172, 16 L. Ed. 424.

[b] (Ala. 1848) Where there are several defendants in an action for a tort, if there is absolutely no evidence against any one of them, he may be discharged and made a witness for his codefendants; but if there is any evidence against him, he cannot be discharged for that purpose.—Harris v. Mauldin, 13 Ala. 674.

[c] (Ala. 1858) Under Code, § 2288, a defendant, against whom there is no evidence, is a competent witness for a codefendant.—Rabby v. O'Grady, 33 Ala. 255.

[d] (Ala. 1862) A defendant may be allowed to testify in favor of his codefendant, after plaintiff has closed his evidence.—Hurter v. Buford, 38 Ala. 243.

[e] (Conn.) If plaintiff includes several as defendants in a suit, and offers no testimony against some of them, they may be witnesses.—(1789) State v. Shaw, 1 Root, 134; (1793) Barney v. Cuttler, Id. 489.

[f] (Del. 1839) In an action against several defendants for an assault, where no proof was produced against a codefendant, and it appeared that he had been made a party in order to exclude his testimony, the court will recommend to the jury his immediate acquittal, and admit him to testify for the others.—Prettyman v. Dean, 2 Har. 494.

[g] (La.) One co-trespasser is a good witness for another, and where they are codefendants, if there is slight evidence or none against one, he may be sworn for the other; a fortiori, if he has been named as a party and not cited. —(1822) Curtis v. Graham, 12 Mart. (O. S.) 289; (1824) Bouligny v. Dormenon, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 455.

[h] (Mo. 1843) Where there is not evidence to justify a verdict against one of several defendants in trespass, a separate verdict may be found for him, and he may then be admitted to testify for the other defendants.—Brown v. Burrus, 8 Mo. 26.

[i] (Mo. 1863) One of several defendants can testify for his codefendants if there be no evidence against him; but the court cannot submit his case to the jury separately, in order that he may be a witness if acquitted.—The Prairie Rose v. Cross, 34 Mo. 109.

[j] (N. Y. 1817) Defendant, against whom no evidence has been produced, may be examined as a witness for his codefendant.—Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. 119.

[k] (N. Y.) Where, on the trial of an action against two persons for a joint assault, no evidence appears against one of them, he is entitled to be discharged for the purpose of being examined as a witness for his codefendant. —(1818) Van Deusen v. Van Slyck, 15 Johns. 223; (1851) Labar v. Koplin, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 547.

[l] (N. Y. 1851) In an action against two for a joint assault, if there be any evidence, however slight, against the defendant sought to be discharged, it must go to the jury along with the evidence against the other defendants, instead of discharging him for the purpose of examining him as a witness.—Labar v. Koplin, 4 N. Y. (4 Comst.) 547.

§ 481. Direction of verdict.

[a] (U. S. 1821) In an action for a malicious prosecution, there not being the slightest evidence against two of the defendants, the court will direct the jury to find them not guilty, that they may be examined as witnesses for the other defendants.—Wilmarth v. Mountford, Fed. Cas. No. 17,774 [4 Wash. C. C. 79].

[b] (Ill. 1855) Where persons are sued to prevent their being used as witnesses, or where there is no evidence against them, the court, on motion, after the evidence is closed, will direct a finding by the jury, and those not guilty may testify for their codefendants.—Cochran v. Ammon, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 316.

[c] (Me. 1880) In assumpsit the court will not allow a verdict to be rendered for one defendant, to enable him to testify in favor of his codefendants, the plaintiff objecting thereto.—Berry v. Stevens, 71 Me. 503.

[d] (Mass. 1847) On the trial of a writ of entry against the defendants, it was not error to refuse to direct the jury to return a verdict for one of them in order that he might be a witness for his codefendant, when there was any evidence against such defendant.—Warner v. Bull, 54 Mass. (13 Metc.) 1.

[e] (Mo. 1836) In an action of trespass against three, plaintiff could not have a verdict directed for one of the defendants merely in order to render him a competent witness.—Gearhart v. Smallwood, 3 Mo. 452.

[f] (Mo. 1840) If there is an entire want of evidence against one of several defendants, whether sued in tort or not, the court may direct the jury to find a verdict for him, and he may then be used as a witness.—Campbell v. Hood, 6 Mo. 211.

[g] (Mo. 1855) Where an action is brought against two defendants, and the evidence against one is not such as to authorize a verdict against him, the court cannot direct a verdict in his favor, that he may be examined as a witness for his codefendant, if there is any manner of evidence at all against him.—Hood v. Mathis, 21 Mo. 308.

[h] (N. Y. 1842) Where several are sued in trover, and there is no evidence against one of them, the judge, if requested, should advise the jury to acquit him, that he may become a witness for his codefendant.—Moon v. Eldred, 3 Hill, 104.

[i] (Pa. 1844) In an action of trespass against two or more defendants, if there be no evidence against one of them, the court may direct a verdict to be rendered for him, and he may be sworn as a witness for the other defendants. —Over v. Blackstone, 8 Watts & S. 71.

[j] (Pa. 1860) In an action against two persons, as joint trespassers, it is error to direct a verdict in favor of one of the defendants, upon the close of the plaintiff's testimony, in order that he may be examined as a witness for his codefendant, unless there be no evidence that appears to affect him, and no probability that any such will arise before the whole evidence in the cause is closed.—Morley v. Coolbaugh, 35 Pa. (11 Casey) 237.

[k] (Tenn. 1852) Where it clearly appears that plaintiff has resorted to the fraudulent artifice of joining as defendant in the action one who would be an important witness for another defendant, for the purpose of preventing his examination as a witness, the court may direct a verdict to be rendered for that defendant, and permit him to be introduced as a witness in behalf of the other defendant.—Beasley v. Bradley, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 180.

[l] (Wis. 1845) A defendant in an action for tort against whom no evidence was introduced when plaintiff closed his case will be discharged by a verdict in his favor, and he may then be a witness for the other defendants, but he cannot be discharged if there is even slight evidence against him. If it appears that he was made a party arbitrarily to prevent the use of his testimony, he may be discharged by the court without a formal verdict.—Wood v. Folmer, 1 Pin. 509.

[a] (U. S. 1813) If several actions against several underwriters upon the same policy are submitted to the same jury at the same time, and the jury find verdicts against some of them, but wish to reconsider as to the others, those underwriters against whom the verdicts are found cannot be examined as witnesses for the others.—Patton v. Janney, Fed. Cas. No. 10,836 [2 Cranch, C. C. 71].

[b] (U. S. 1821) In ejectment against two, if there be no evidence whatever of any possession by one, the jury may find a verdict for him at the bar, so as to authorize the other to examine him as a witness.—Lanning v. Case, Fed. Cas. No. 8,072 [4 Wash. C. C. 169].

[c] (Cal. 1861) A complaint alleged a conspiracy, between defendants, to defraud plaintiff of goods, which was successfully carried out, wherefor damages were sought. One defendant made a voluntary appearance, but interposed no defense; the other answered and joined issue. Held, that the first-mentioned defendant was a competent witness for plaintiff, especially if he made no objection to testifying.—Rosenbaum v. Hernberg, 17 Cal. 602.

[d] (Ind. 1843) In debt against a constable for a false return, a claimant of the property taken, who executed the delivery bond, which was discharged by a judgment in his favor, on a trial of the right of property, is a competent witness for the constable.—Limpus v. State, 7 Blackf. 43.

[e] (Ind. 1859) Where a defendant to a suit to cancel a deed conveyed his interest in the property after the suit was begun but before the trial, the striking of his name from the record as a party to the suit, in order that he might be called as a witness for his codefendants, is within the discretion of the court.—Dearmond v. Dearmond, 12 Ind. 455.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) After a bill in equity to foreclose a mortgage is dismissed as to one of the defendants, he, appearing as one of the makers of the note for which the mortgage was given, and interested in defeating a recovery upon the mortgage, is not a competent witness for the other defendants.—Wilkerson v. Daniels, 1 G. Greene, 179.

[g] (Ky. 1841) A plaintiff cannot dismiss his suit against a tenant in possession, and use the tenant as a witness against one who was admitted to defend with him.—Peters v. Allison, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 232, 36 Am. Dec. 574.

[h] (Ky. 1841) One of several heirs, in whose name a demise had been laid in the declaration, but which had been stricken out, is a competent witness for plaintiff in ejectment.—Cardwell v. Sprigg's Heirs, 40 Ky. (1 B. Mon.) 369.

[i] (Ky. 1845) One who has sued jointly with another for an alleged fraud in the sale of a slave, but who was not a citizen of the county where the suit was brought, and as to whom the suit had been abated, who had been released by defendant from all liability to him, and against whom any action was then barred by the statute of limitation, is a competent witness for defendant.—Grigsby v. Daniel, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 435.

[j] (N. H. 1844) A codefendant, against whom an issue in a real action on a plea of disclaimer is found, and who remains in possession, is not a competent witness for the other defendant, who has pleaded the general issue.—Merrill v. Gould, 16 N. H. 347.

[k] (N. Y. 1817) An executor, against whom the bill has been taken pro confesso in a suit by legatees, is a competent witness for the other defendants or devisees.—Lupton v. Lupton, 2 Johns. Ch. 614.

[l] (N. Y. 1840) A. sold land, and took a bond and mortgage for the purchase money, which he assigned to B. In a suit by the purchaser, against A. and B., to set aside the sale on account of alleged fraud or mistake in the conveyance, A., who had suffered the bill to be taken as confessed against him, was competent to prove that B. had taken the assignment in good faith, and with the assent of the purchaser.—Holgate v. Palmer, 8 Paige, 461.

[m] (Pa. 1852) In a scire facias on a mortgage, the mortgagor, against whom a judgment by default had been rendered, is a competent witness for a terre-tenant to prove that a single bill from mortgagor to plaintiff, and the mortgage, were given for advances; the mortgaged premises having been sold under a judgment on the bill and bought by the terre-tenant.—Ridgway v. Longaker, 18 Pa. (6 Harris) 215.

[n] (Pa. 1853) Mortgaged premises were sold at sheriff's sale, on a subsequent judgment. In a sci. fa. on the mortgage, issued against the mortgagor and the purchaser as terre-tenant, judgment by default was taken against the mortgagor, and the terre-tenant made defense. Held, that the obligor in the mortgage bond, who was the mortgagor, was not a competent witness for the plaintiff, the mortgagee, to prove that the mortgage debt was not paid.—Hansell v. Lutz, 20 Pa. (8 Harris) 284.

[o] (Pa. 1864) Where suit is brought in the name of an individual for the use of a borough, for charges due to the borough alone, and on the trial in court the individual's name is stricken from the record, he is not incompetent as a witness.—Prescott v. Borough of Duquesne, 48 Pa. (12 Wright) 118.

[p] (Pa. 1865) A defendant in ejectment who is tenant for years of his codefendant is not rendered a competent witness for such codefendant by the entry of judgment in his favor by the court, on the ground that he was not in possession of the premises in question, except certain of them, for which he confessed judgment.—Helfenstein v. Leonard, 50 Pa. (14 Wright) 461.

[q] (S. C. 1830) On the trial of a feigned issue wherein the garnishee in an attachment was plaintiff, and the attaching creditors were defendants, held, that an order could not be granted to strike from the record the name of one of the defendants, in order to make him a witness for the others, although he assigned over the judgment which he had recovered against the absent debtor to a third person, who gave him a release.—Westmorland v. Tippens, 1 Bailey, 514.

§ 483. Parties to notes.

[a] (U. S. 1822) In a joint action of debt on a note, if one of the defendants suffer judgment to go against him by default and a writ of inquiry be executed, he is not a competent witness, on the issue joined by the other defendant.—Franklin Bank v. Hipkins, Fed. Cas. No. 5,056 [2 Cranch, C. C. 315].

[b] (Ala. 1848) G. and two other makers of a note were all sued, G. pleading non est factum, and the suit as to him was dismissed by plaintiff, judgment being confessed by the other two. Held, that the dismissal as to G. did not affect the competency of such other makers as witnesses in a subsequent action against G.—Gayle v. Bishop, 14 Ala. 552.

[c] (Cal. 1855) It is proper to exclude the testimony of a defendant who has suffered default to prove that he was authorized by his codefendant to sign a note, as he would thereby reduce the amount of a judgment against himself.—Washburn v. Alden, 5 Cal. 463.

[d] (Cal. 1856) In an action on a note against the maker and indorser, after judgment against the maker, it is not a valid objection to his competency as a witness for the indorser that the maker is a party, as the action is ended as to him, and his competency must be tested by his interest.—Vance v. Collins, 6 Cal. 435.

[e] (Cal. 1856) In an action on a note against the maker and indorser, the maker of a note, after judgment against him, is a competent witness for the indorser, because his interest is equally balanced.—Vance v. Collins, 6 Cal. 435.

[f] (Ind. 1861) In a suit on a note against A. and B., they answered separately, setting up usury and want of consideration. Afterwards A. withdrew his answer and was defaulted. Held that, since the defense of B., if sustained, would preclude plaintiff from any benefit by reason of A.'s default, therefore A.'s withdrawal of his answer did not make him a competent witness for B.—Sutherlin v. Mullis, 17 Ind. 19.

[g] (Iowa, 1860) In a suit on a joint note, one of the codefendants allowed judgment to be entered against him for the amount of plaintiff's claim. Held, that though a competent witness for the other defendant as to the separate issue between him and plaintiff, yet his evidence, as applying to reduce the amount which he himself had confessed or was willing to confess, as between himself and plaintiff, was inadmissible.—Keys v. Holmes, 11 Iowa, 139.

[h] (La. 1832) After trial and verdict in favor of one of three obligors on a note who are bound in solido, but sever in their trials, he is a competent witness in behalf of his codefendants.—Row v. Richardson, 4 La. 551.

[i] (Md. 1824) In an action against the indorser of a note, the maker has no such direct interest in the event of the suit as to exclude him from giving testimony on behalf of plaintiffs, they having recovered a judgment against him on the note.—Bank v. Columbia v. Magruder's Adm'x, 6 Har. & J. 172, 14 Am. Dec. 271.

[j] (Miss. 1842) The maker of a note, against whom the holder has obtained judgment, is a competent witness in a suit brought by an indorsee against an indorser to prove payment.—Routh v. Helm, 7 Miss. (6 How.) 127.

[k] (Mo. 1862) A maker of a note, against whom judgment by default has been taken, is a competent witness for an indorser made codefendant in the same suit.—Kleinmann v. Boernstein, 32 Mo. 311.

[l] (S. C. 1817) In an action on an indorsed note, which had been protested, the drawer, against whom a verdict had been rendered on the same note, was an incompetent witness.—Haig v. Newton, 1 Mill, Const. 423.

[m] (Va. 1825) Where a joint action of debt is brought against the drawers and indorsers of a note, under the act of assembly, one of the indorsers cannot render himself, by confession of judgment, a competent witness to invalidate the note.—Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316.

[n] (Va. 1860) In an action against the maker and indorsers of a note, after the defendants had united in the pleas of nil debent and usury, and issue had been joined, the maker confessed judgment, and final judgment was entered against him separately. Held, that conceding for the purpose of this case that the maker, under Code, p. 653, § 49, ceased to be a party to the record as to all subsequent proceedings, yet that he was incompetent as a witness in behalf of the defendants, although two of them had released him from all liability to them, as under Code, p. 587, c. 146, § 6, he continued responsible to two later indorsers for the amount recovered against them and 5 per cent. damages, his liability for these damages being over and above his liability upon the judgment confessed by him.—Mills v. Central Sav. Bank, 16 Grat. 94.

§ 484. Principal and surety.

[a] (Ind. 1860) In a suit against a justice of the peace and his sureties, on his official bond, for failure to pay over money collected, the justice was defaulted; the sureties answered, and, on the trial, offered to prove by their principal that the claim for which suit was brought was not left with him in his official character, but merely as an agent. Held, that as this was a joint suit, upon a joint and several bond, and the testimony proposed tended to prove that there was no cause of action against the defendants, or either of them, it was matter in which they were all interested, and could not therefore be proved by a codefendant.—King v. State, 15 Ind. 64.

[b] (Ky. 1844) A principal in a note sued on in conjunction with his surety, who has received his discharge as a bankrupt, and as to whom the suit has been dismissed, and he released by his principal from all responsibility, is a competent witness for the surety.—Lamb v. Fox, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 94.

[c] (Ky. 1857) A. brought an action against B. and C. to recover money, which he alleged that he had paid for them as surety. Judgment by default was rendered against B. C. answered, denying that plaintiff was his surety, or that the debt paid by plaintiff was his (C.'s) debt, or that he was liable for it. On trial of the issue so made up, plaintiff offered B. as a witness. Held, that B. had no direct and certain interest in the event of the suit, and was a competent witness.—Todd v. Luckett, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 125.

[d] (Me. 1872) In an action on a joint and several note against a principal and surety, the defaulted principal is not a competent witness, at common law, for the surety, to prove that after the note became due, the payee, for a valuable consideration paid by the principal, extended its time of payment, without the knowledge or consent of the surety.—Wing v. Andrews, 59 Me. 505.

[e] (Mass. 1837) In an action on a note against principal and surety, the principal, after being defaulted, is a competent witness to disprove the surety's liability.—Chaffe v. Jones, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 260.

[f] (Mo. 1867) Where the principal and surety were jointly sued upon their bond, the principal let judgment go against him by default, and was then adjudged a competent witness to testify in favor of the surety, as his interest in the suit had thus been released.—State to Use of Southern Bank v. Atherton, 40 Mo. 209.

[g] (Ohio, 1853) The principal in a note, sued jointly with his sureties, against whom judgment was entered on default, is a competent witness for such sureties upon the issue joined between them and plaintiff.—Preble County Branch Bank v. Russell, 1 Ohio St. 313.

[h] (Ohio, 1854) In an action on a note against principal and sureties, the principal, having been defaulted, is not a competent witness for a party pleading to the action, where a separate judgment has not been rendered against such principal.—Crowell v. Western Reserve Bank, 3 Ohio St. 406.

[i] (Ohio, 1867) In an action against the makers of a note, one being principal and one surety, the principal, making no defense, may testify, in behalf of the surety, to an extension of time of payment.—Bell v. Wilson, 17 Ohio St. 640.

[j] (Pa. 1842) After judgment against a surety in a replevin bond, he is a competent witness in an action against the sheriff for taking insufficient sureties.—Myers v. Clark, 3 Watts & S. 535.

[k] (Pa. 1846) A co-obligor defendant, as to whom a nolle prosequi has been entered after a plea of discharge as a bankrupt, and who has released any surplus to his assignees, is incompetent as a witness for the other defendants in an action on the bond.—Irwin v. Shumaker, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 199.

[l] (Pa. 1848) In an action on a note, plaintiff may call one of the defendants who has been defaulted, as a witness, with his consent, to prove that he is the principal debtor, and that the signatures of the other defendants, who are sureties, are genuine.—Mevey v. Matthews, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 112.

[m] (Va. 1828) If the principal in a recognizance be bound in a particular sum, and the sureties be separately bound in a like sum, and the principal be defaulted, he is not a competent witness for them on a rule to show cause why a scire facias should not be awarded against them.—Commonwealth v. Craig, 6 Rand. 731.

§ 485. Usurious transactions.

[a] (Ky. 1880) In a suit against a principal and surety, the principal made no defense, and judgment was rendered against him. The surety, however, raised the defense of usury. Held, that the principal was a competent witness by whom to establish this defense.—Mix v. Marder's Ex'r, 79 Ky. 131.

[b] (Me. 1853) A codefendant, who sets up usury, cannot prove it by a defaulted codefendant, although a defendant may, in general, do so by his own oath.—Thornton v. Blaisdell, 37 Me. 190.

[c] (N. Y. 1841) A mortgagor, who has suffered a bill to foreclose to be taken pro confesso against him, is a competent witness on behalf of a judgment creditor, party to the suit, to prove the mortgage usurious.—Post v. Dart, 8 Paige, 639.

[d] (N. Y. 1845) A defendant who has put in his answer, setting up the defense of usury, cannot be made a competent witness for a codefendant, to establish the alleged usury, by giving a stipulation abandoning his defense to the suit, and consenting that the bill may be taken as confessed against him for the amount he may prove to be due. The proper course is to apply to the court, upon notice to complainant, for leave to withdraw his answer and be examined as a witness for his codefendant, on which application the court might impose such terms as would be equitable.—Mann v. Cooper, 1 Barb. Ch. 185.

§ 486. Partners.

[a] (U. S. 1879) In an action against A. and B. charging them as partners, and, as such, liable for bills drawn by A. in his own name, but for the benefit of the partnership, A. cannot be examined as a witness for B., upon an issue joined by B. alone, although judgment should have been rendered A. by default.—Nicholson v. Patton, Fed. Cas. No. 10,250 [2 Cranch, C. C. 164].

[b] (Ala. 1843) In an action against several as partners, where one was defaulted, he was a competent witness for the other defendant to prove that they were not partners.—Scott v. Jones, 5 Ala. 694.

[c] (Ala. 1845) Where three persons are sued as partners on an open account, in assumpsit, one against whom a judgment by default has been taken is a competent witness to prove that one of the defendants was not a partner, he having pleaded the general issue.—Gooden v. Morrow, 8 Ala. 486.

[d] (Ala. 1862) An alleged copartner, and one of the defendants in the case, against whom judgment by default has been rendered, is a competent witness for his codefendant to prove that they were not partners.—Aicardi v. Strang, 38 Ala. 326.

[e] (Cal. 1856) One partner, sued for an injury done to partnership property, made his copartner, who refused to join as plaintiff, a defendant, and he was defaulted. Held that, as plaintiff would be obliged to account with his partner for the amount which might be recovered, the latter was not a competent witness.—Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 506, 65 Am. Dec. 525.

[f] (Cal. 1863) A defaulted defendant is not a competent witness to prove that he was a partner of his codefendant, in the purchase of the property, for the price of which the suit is brought.—Fairchild v. Amsbaugh, 22 Cal. 572.

[g] (Ga. 1860) In a suit upon a note signed by a firm, two of the partners were defaulted, and another pleaded non est factum. Held, that the former were incompetent to prove the liability of the latter.—Cody v. Cody, 31 Ga. 619.

[h, i] (Ill. 1873) If two are sued as partners, and the partnership is put in issue by one only, and the other defendant is defaulted, the latter is a competent witness for his codefendant, to show that no partnership existed. The admission by his default cannot affect his codefendant.—Smith v. Knight, 71 Ill. 148, 22 Am. Rep. 94.

[j] (Iowa, 1858) One sued as a partner, and defaulted, but against whom damages have not been assessed, nor a final judgment rendered, is not a competent witness to prove that his codefendant, on trial, was not a partner.—Williams v. Soutter, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 435.

[k] (Ky. 1827) Where a decree has been rendered against one of two partners, made defendants by a third, and he is no longer a party to the cause, he is a competent witness for his copartner.—Sharp v. Morrow, 22 Ky. (6 T. B. Mon.) 300.

[l] (Ky. 1847) In a suit against A. and B. as partners, A. denied that he was a partner, and B. made no defense, although no judgment was entered against him. Plaintiff dismissed the suit as to B. conditionally, to be absolute if the issue was found for A. Held, that B. was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Campbell v. Todd, 46 Ky. (7 B. Mon.) 316.

[m] (Ky. 1863) Where partners sue to recover a debt, one of them cannot, pending the action, transfer his interest to his coplaintiffs, and become a witness for them, by having his name stricken from the action. Code, § 32, does not authorize it.—Dougherty v. Smith, 61 Ky. (4 Metc.) 279.

[n] (Ky. 1869) A partner, against whom a judgment by default has been rendered, is a competent witness to prove that the bill sued on was made by him in the name of two members of the firm, and indorsed by a third, to raise money for the benefit of the firm, and that the money so raised was so used and applied.—Bacon v. Hutchings, 68 Ky. (5 Bush) 595.

[o] (La. 1851) One partner, against whom a separate judgment has been rendered, is incompetent for plaintiff against another.—Glasscock v. McRae, 6 La. Ann. 284.

[oo] (Md. 1834) In an action against A. and B. as joint obligors of a single bill, signed and sealed in their partnership name, B., who had suffered judgment by default, upon the plea of non est factum by A., was offered as a witness by plaintiff to prove the execution of the single bill by B. in the presence of, and by consent of, A., and also to prove another bill in the handwriting of A., and to which he had affixed the partnership name. Held, that B. was not a competent witness, being interested to fix A.'s liability.—Albers v. Wilkinson, 6 Gill & J. 358.

[p] (Md. 1853) In assumpsit against two, as partners, and upon the joint plea of non assumpsit, one defendant is not a competent witness for the other to disprove the partnership, and show that the witness alone was responsible for the claim; but after withdrawing his plea and confessing judgment for the full amount of the claim, with interest and costs, he is no longer interested in the event of the suit, and his competency for the purpose mentioned is restored.—Barker v. Ayers, 5 Md. 202.

[q] (Md. 1866) Where judgment by default, in an action of assumpsit against two partners, has been entered against one for nonappearance and said judgment is stricken out by subsequent appearance and motion of such party, and judgment by confession entered for the amount claimed in the declaration with interest and costs, defendant confessing is a competent witness on the trial of the cause in favor of his codefendant, to show that the latter was not a partner in the transaction from which the action arose, and did not share in the profits of any such transaction.—Thomas v. Mohler, 25 Md. 36.

[r] (Mo. 1861) A. and B. were partners. A. sold out to B., the latter assuming all the liabilities and indebtedness of the firm. To secure A., B. gave him a bond, with C. as surety. A. sued B. and C. on the bond. Both were served, but B. did not answer, and judgment by default was entered against him. C. answered, and on the trial introduced B., his codefendant, as a witness in his behalf, to prove that the sale of merchandise by A. to B. took place three or four days previous to the execution of the bond, and that full possession was given to B. at the time of sale. Held, that B. was a competent witness in behalf of C.—Robertson v. Findley, 31 Mo. 384.

[s] (N. Y. 1844) Two defendants were partners, and one of them was discharged under the bankrupt act, and a nolle prosequi entered as to him. Held, that he was a competent witness for his copartner, on releasing his interest in the surplus of the partnership effects.—Butcher v. Forman, 6 Hill, 583.

[t] (N. Y. 1850) One of two copartners, sued for an alleged partnership debt, who has given his individual note for the debt, is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, under the act of 1847, or the Code of Procedure, although he has suffered a default. He is interested in favor of plaintiff against his codefendant.—Rich v. Husson, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 115.

[u] (Pa. 1857) In an action by a creditor, against the representatives of a deceased partner, to recover a debt due him by the firm, a surviving partner, against whom the creditor had already obtained judgment for the same debt, is a competent witness on behalf of the creditor.—Collier's Ex'rs v. Leech, 29 Pa. (5 Casey) 404.

[v] (Vt. 1847) Where the action was for money had and received, and defendant, who was called as a witness by plaintiff, after having been discharged upon his plea in bankruptcy, testified that he had been in partnership with his codefendant, and that, at the request of his codefendant, he borrowed of plaintiff, for the use of the firm, the money which plaintiff claimed to recover in this action, and that he informed plaintiff at the time that he was obtaining the money for the firm, held, that this disclosed no interest in the witness, which should exclude his testimony from the consideration of the jury.—Onion v. Fullerton, 19 Vt. 317.

§ 487. Defendants in criminal prosecutions.

[a] Where a nolle prosequi is entered as to one of several defendants to an indictment, such defendant is a competent witness against the other defendants.

—(Ill. 1896) Love v. People, 160 Ill. 501, 43 N. E. 710, 32 L. R. A. 139; (Mo. 1852) State v. Clump, 16 Mo. 385; (1887) State v. Chyo Goom, 92 Mo. 418, 4 S. W. 712; (1887) State v. Beaucleigh, 92 Mo. 490, 4 S. W. 666.

[b] (Mo. 1888) Witnesses jointly indicted with defendant for murder, one of whom has been acquitted, and a nolle prosequi entered as to the others, are competent for the prosecution, though another joint indictment is pending against them and defendant for the murder of another man, at the same time and in the same transaction as that for which defendant is on trial.—State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133.

[c] (Mo. 1891) To render a codefendant a competent witness for the state, it was not necessary that he be acquitted or discharged before defendant was put on trial. It was sufficient that the indictment was dismissed as to him prior to the closing of the state's evidence, which is expressly permitted by Rev. St. 1889, § 4217.—State v. Steifel, 106 Mo. 129, 17 S. W. 227.
